LEWIS E. MORSE stands at the head of a prosperous livery and transfer business in Hood River. His ability as a business was is well known and his stirring and energetic qualities have won for him a lucrative business. He was born in Otisco county, Michigan, on August 5, 1858. His father, Charles F. Morse, was born in New York and followed farming. Three brothers of the Morse family came to the colonies in 1704 and from them descended the present large family of Morses, who have been prominent in all the struggles from colonial days down to the present. They have produced many men of note, and one, known all over the world, is Prof. S. F. B. Morse, the inventor of the telegraph. Many men of prominence in the professions and the leading walks of life have been numbered in this family. Charles F. Morse married Anabel Belding, a native of Massachusetts and from a prominent colonial family of New England. Her mother was an Ellis, also a leading family. Both of these families, whose genealogy our subject possesses, were prominent in all the wars on American soil and always on the side of the rising nation, now so great. Our subject was reared in Michigan until sixteen, when he went to Kansas, whence in 1889, he came to Hood River. His education was secured in the public schools and he was well trained in business ways. He took a timber claim here and two years later opened up a livery business in Hood River. Two years after this he sold this and accepted the postmastership under Cleveland, holding the same for four years. Then came two years in general merchandising in White Salmon, Washington. After that venture, he sold out and bought the business where he is operating today. He does a good business and also owns other property besides a good residence and three lots.

On August 3, 1879, Mr. Morse married Miss Dora Markley, the wedding occurring at Beloit, Kansas. Mrs. Morse was born in Illinois, and died in September, 1890, leaving two children. In 1893, Mr. Morse married Frances McCoy, at Hood River, who was born in Texas, the daughter of Isaac and Mary McCoy, natives of Virginia. The father is now living with our subject. Mr. Morse has two brothers, Charles L., and Fred, and one sister, Mrs. Nellie D. Raines. Mrs. Morse has one brother George, and two sisters, Mrs. California Wolford and Mrs. Rebecca Taylor. Mr. Morse has two children, Theresa, the wife of Charles Castner, of Hood River, who is mentioned elsewhere; and Charles with his father. Mr. Morse is postmaster of Hood River, No. 105, A. F. & A. M.; is past grand Idlewild, No. 107, I. O. O. F.; high priest of the Encampment; and past patron of the O. E. S. Mrs. Morse is past noble grand of Laurel lodge of the Rebekahs.

LAURENCE N. BLOWERS was a prominent business man of Hood River for fifteen years, but tiring of the exacting and arduous life of a merchant, sold his business here in March, 1904, and was appointed Deputy United States Marshall upon the recommendation of United States Senator Charles W. Fulton and Representative J. N. Williamson. He is therefore residing temporarily at Portland. His birth occurred in Iowa, on April 18, 1867, his parents being Amby S. and Ellen (Damon) Blowers, who are particularly mentioned elsewhere in this volume.

When an infant, our subject was taken by his parents to Minnesota and thence, with the family, which consisted of his parents and eight children, he came to Oregon. His education was received from the schools in the various places where he had resided and when fifteen years of age, he embarked in business with his father. In 1889, they came to Hood River, and soon thereafter, they bought out E. L. Smith, a leading merchant, and since that time they have continued at the head of a large business. However, our subject has spent one year in Sumpter, Oregon, where he was in the mercantile business and while in that town, he was elected mayor. He was also, the second mayor of Hood River, and in these public capacities, as in private life, the same care and faithfulness characterized his acts. For three years, Mr. Blowers served as lieutenant of Company D, Oregon National Guards, his father being captain.

At Hood River, on August 29, 1891, Mr. Blowers married Miss Bertha Mifflin, a native of Washington, D. C. Her father, Charles H. Mifflin, was born in Lancaster, Pennsylvania, coming from a family well known in history for worth and prominence. One of the family, Major General Thomas Mifflin, was president of the Continental Congress and later, first governor of Pennsylvania. The county and town of Mifflin, Pennsylvania were named from this family. Charles H. Mifflin married Miss Alice Lipscomb, a native of Washington, D. C., and descended from a leading Virginia family. Mrs. Blowers has one sister, Elizabeth, wife of W. J. Parker, a merchant in Denver, Colorado. Four children have been born to Mr. and Mrs. Blowers, namely Paul Mifflin, Loyd Mifflin, Ellen and Ruth. Mr. Blowers is a member of the A. F. & A. M., and a man of excellent standing and prestige in the community.

ASA G. STOGSDILL, who at the present time is assessor of Wasco county, is one of the leading and substantial men of the county and is well and favorably known to nearly every inhabitant of this part of the state. He is a man of integrity, has inspired in the people a confidence in his ability and worth and has so conducted himself that he is eminently worthy of this legacy.

Asa G. Stogsdill was born in Illinois, on September 17, 1862, the son of Asa G. and Keziah (Collins) Stogsdill. The father was born in Indiana, his parents in the same state, and his grandparents were among the earliest settlers in that country. They were Scotch people and followed farming. For three years the father fought for the stars and strips in Company B, Second Illinois Light Artillery. He was a prominent and influential Republican and in 1876 brought his family to Oregon. He purchased land in Clackamas county and his death occurred at Canby, in 1898. The mother of our subject was born in Ohio and her parents were natives of Virginia. Her marriage occurred in Illinois. Our subject completed his education in the Monmouth Normal and then taught school for ten years, two in Clackamas county and the balance in Wasco county. He was five terms the teacher in the first school on Juniper flat. In 1881, Mr. Stogsdill took land on this flat, which is his home at this time, the same being two miles from Victor. The farm consists of three hundred and sixty acres, and a third of this is producing grain. Mr. Stogsdill has paid considerable attention to raising cattle and also until this year, has annually turned off many hogs. He has always taken an active and intelligent interest in political and educational affairs and is a man of ability and wide research.

At the residence of the bride's parents, on Juniper flat, Mr. Stogsdill married Miss Kate J. Gordon, on December 25, 1888. Mrs. Stogsdill was born in Wasco county, her parents being Thomas M. and Mary (Foreman) Gordon, natives of Scotland and Illinois, respectively. The father came to Oregon in early days, there being but two houses at The Dalles when he arrived.

He had previously been in California and his trade was shoemaking. His death occurred in California, in 1893. The mother died in Portland the next year. Mr. Stogsdill has two brothers, Hezekiah K., Don, and one sister, Mrs. Mary A. Cassidy. Mrs. Stogsdill has two brothers, William, George, and three sisters, Mrs. Maggie A. Gordon, Mrs. Susan Bickford, and Mrs. Mary Gibson. Six children have been born to Mr. and Mrs. Stogsdill, Viva, Frances, Willis, Guy, Ruby, and Eula. Mr. Stogsdill is a member of the I. O. O. F. He and his wife are progressive and popular people and have hosts of friends.

FRANK GINGER, an industrious fruit raiser and farmer, resides at Mosier, where he handles a half section of land. One quarter of this is his own property and the balance is owned by his mother. He was born in Indiana, on April 14, 1867, and was there reared until twelve. Then he came with his mother and stepfather to the Black Hills, Dakota. His stepfather, Thomas Harlan, was timber agent for the government. Three years later the family went to Nebraska where they bought land. Frank remained with his parents until twenty-two; then they all removed to Jackson county, Oregon, and he there proved up on a preemption, which he still owns. After that he went to Lagrande, Oregon and followed various callings until 1892, when he came hither. His stepfather and brother had claims near the depot and in 1901, he purchased the one owned by the former and since then has given his attention to the cultivation and improvement of the same. He has a nice cherry orchard and various other fruits growing and his place is a good farm.

Fraternally, Mr. Ginger is affiliated with the A. F. & A. M., the I. O. O. F., the Encampment, and is politically, with the Socialists, but is not active in the promulgation of these political doctrines, although he is well informed on these questions.

ALVIRA McATEE, who resides one mile west from Tygh valley, is one of the pioneers of this section and is a lady whose life has been such that she is the recipient of great respect and esteem from all. She was born in Logan county, Illinois, on March 4, 1836. Her father, James Hieronymus, a native of Kentucky, came from an old and prominent family of great renown. The first record of the family is from Syrian history where we see General Hieronymus, who operated some three hundred years before Christ. The next important one we mention, is the saint familiarly known as Jerome, who was Eusebius Hieronymus, and who is one of the most learned men known to those times. He was private secretary to Pope Damasus and later translated from the original tongues the version of the Scriptures commonly known as the Vulgate, from which comes the Douay Bible, the one now used by the English speaking portion of the great Roman Catholic church. The family came on down through the ages and in 1765, Henry Hieronymus migrated to the American colonies from Germany and became the founder of the American branch of the family, many members of which have been prominent in various offices and leading positions. Mrs. McAtee's father married Miss Melinda Thompson, a native of Tennessee, where also her parents were born. Her father fought in the War of 1812. The family is a large one and mostly given to agriculture, being wealthy. Mrs. McAtee was educated in the public schools in the start, but has been a careful reader and student all her life and is now well informed and abreast of the questions of the day. When eighteen she married James F. M. Steers, a native of Kentucky, and the son of Hugh and Elizabeth (Darnell) Steers. She came west with her husband across the plains with horse teams in 1865. They experienced great trouble with the Indians, had much sickness and several deaths in the train. They spent the first winter in the Willamette valley and the next year came over to Wapinitia flat, where they spent a year. Then they settled in Tygh valley, being the first white settlers there. Mr. Steers was ill when he settled here and shortly afterward, he died. Mrs. Steers was called upon to meet great hardship with a family and in a new country with slight means. In the fall of 1867, she married Benjamin C. McAtee, a native of Illinois and from Scotch ancestry. He had crossed the plains with ox teams in 1852, accompanied by his mother. He took the homestead where Mrs. McAtee now resides, it being a very rich and valuable piece of land. In October, 1893, Mr. McAtee went to the Grande Ronde country to collect a large sum of money on his brother's estate, and it is supposed he was murdered for his money, as he has not been heard of since. Mrs. McAtee has three brothers, Benjamin R., John P., and Thomas H. Mr. Steers had one brother, Henry P. Mr. McAtee had one sister, Mrs. Drusilla Robinson. By her first marriage, Mrs. McAtee has the following named children: Alson W., a preacher of the Adventist church in Vancouver, British Columbia; Vincent P., a farmer near Tygh valley; Marion L., a stockman in Grant county, Oregon, and Melinda, the wife of Edward C. Fitzpatrick, who is mentioned in this work. By her second husband, Mrs. McAtee has two children; William H., with his mother; and John B., with Johnston Brothers in Dufur, Oregon.

HORATIO F. DAVIDSON stands at the head of the Davidson Fruit Company, one of the important enterprises of the Hood River country. He is president and manager of the same and owing to his genius and energy it is making an unbounded success. He is one of the most successful young business men of the county and has demonstrated his ability in many ways. The company handles fruit, owns sixty acres of fruit producing grounds, twenty-five of which are devoted to strawberries and the balance to apples, peaches, and so forth. The company does a general manufacturing business in fruit lines, making vinegar, jams, jellies, and so forth, besides canning much fruit for export. They manufacture and sell to the trade, fruit boxes of all kinds, besides handling all kinds of farm implements in the line of Studebaker wagons, Parin plows, cultivators, and in fact all articles needed in the fruit culture business. In addition to this, Mr. Davidson has made a special study of the chemistry of the soil in this part of the country and ascertaining the salts lacking, has supplied a complete line of fertilizers to make up the various deficiencies. In all these lines mentioned, he has shown a spirit of progression which has done more good than can be told in upbuilding and improving the country and bettering the conditions to make fruit raising remunerative.

Horatio F. Davidson was born in Ohio, on July 20, 1868, the son of Charles and Elizabeth (Rice) Davidson, natives of Knox county, Ohio. The mother died at Canton, Illinois, in 1900. The father followed carriage painting for many years and is now secretary of the Davidson Fruit Company. He comes from an old American family of Scotch extraction. The first thirteen years of our subject's life were spent in Ohio and then he went with the balance of the family to Canton, Illinois. After completing the high school course, he entered the employ of the Parlin & Orendorff Plow Company. For three years he wrought and it is of interest that Mr. Davidson is now selling the same brand of plows that he used to paint and handle at that time in the shop. After leaving this company he came west and spent two years in traveling about. In the spring of 1891, he selected Hood River as a proper location and settled down, and gave his attention to carpentering. Three years later he assisted to organize the fruit growers' union and was installed secretary and manager. It is interesting to note the increase in values, that at that time he purchased forty acres of land for thirty dollars per acre, which was sold the other day for three hundred dollars per acre.

Mr. Davidson was one of the prime movers in the formation of the Valley Improvement Company, which does irrigation, and has been responsible for much of the increase of values in this country. He has bought and sold much land in the vicinity of Hood River and has always been active in the establishment of proper values.

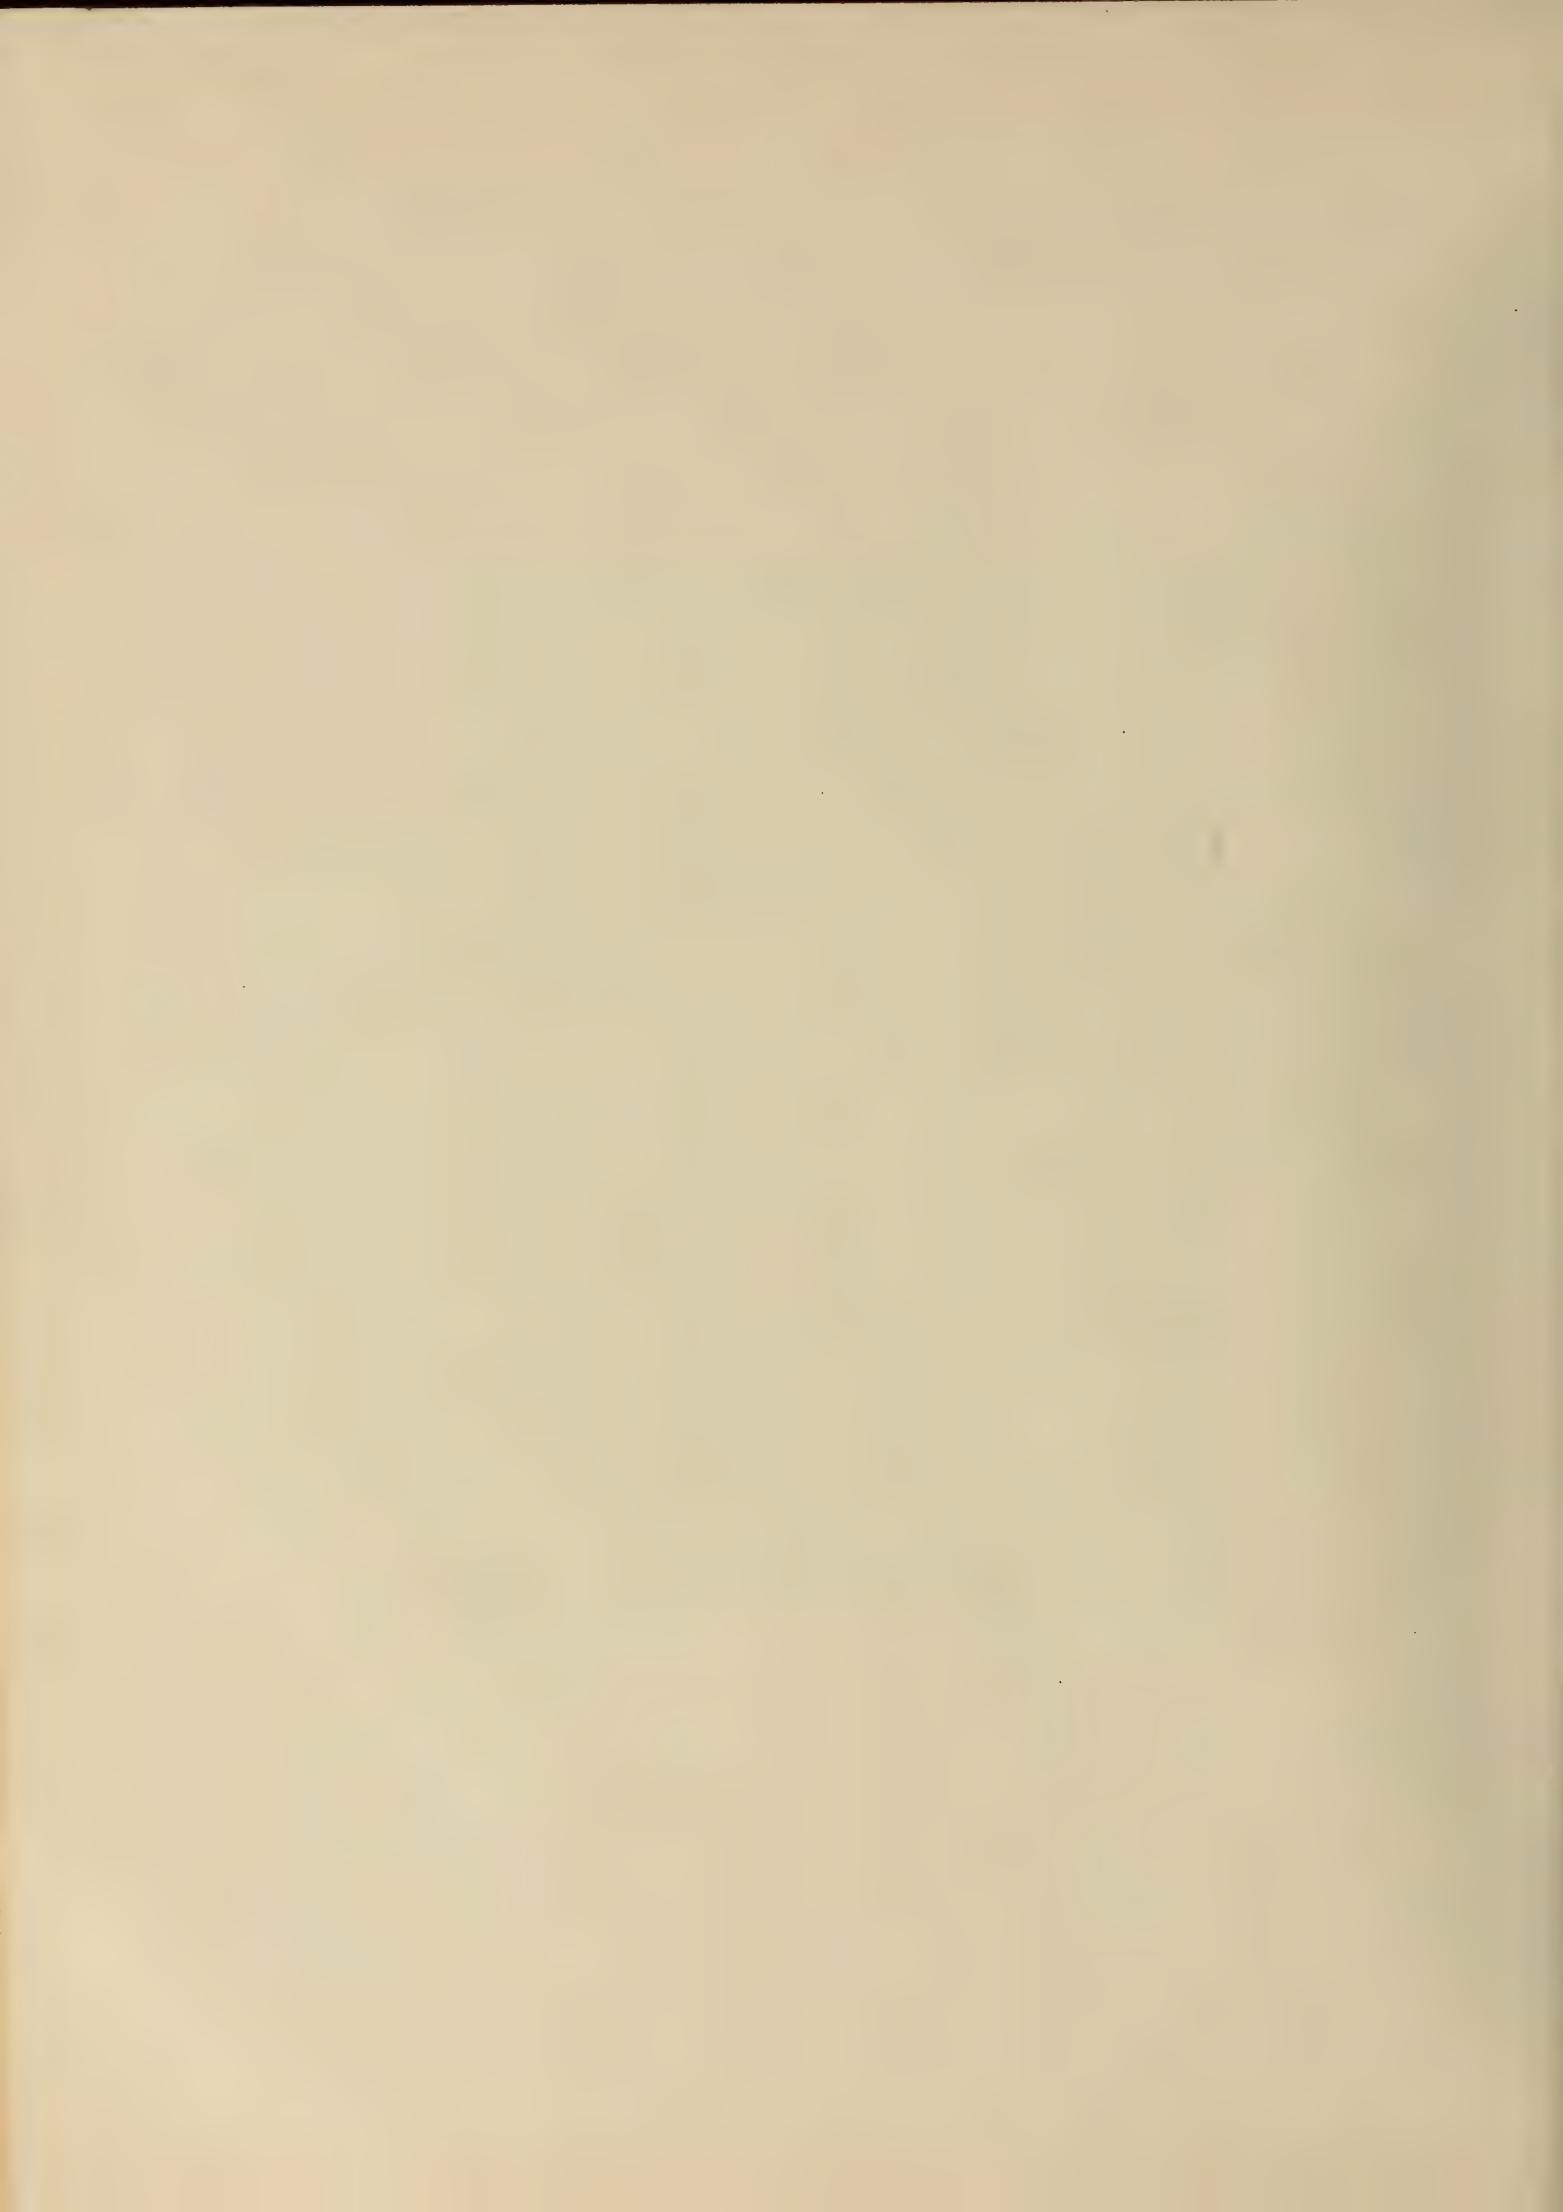

At Canton, Illinois, on September 14, 1893, Mr. Davidson married Miss Mary Brewin, who was born near Canton. Her father, William Brewin, was a native of England and died when she was small. Her mother, Julia (Winegar) Brewin, was a native of Virginia and lives with her daughter. To Mr. and Mrs. Davidson three children have been born, Helen, Harry, and Merrill, the last two having died in infancy. Mr. Davidson is a member of the A. F. & A. M., of the R. A. M., of the O. E. S., and of the A. O. U. W. He has passed the chairs of these orders and his wife is past matron of the O. S. Mrs. Davidson has one brother, William and the following named sisters, Jennie Miner, Emily Sosey, and Minnie King. Politically, Mr. Davidson is independent and reserves for his own decision the questions of the day. He has frequently been a member of the city council.

In August, 1904, the cannery and warehouse were consumed by fire. Owing to subject's many and varied interests, in business lines, he will probably not rebuild. He is erecting a cold storage plant and will continue the manufacture of fruit boxes and the handling of fresh fruits. Mr. Davidson is president of the Hood River Electric Light Company and the Hood River Water Company, which he recently reorganized, being a heavy stockholder in these enterprises.

CLARENCE L. MORRIS is a representative citizen of Wasco county and is one of the earliest pioneers to the section where he now resides. Juniper flat. His labors here and in other portions of the state have made him well to do, and as he is now in the golden time of his life, he is entitled to the retirement that is so becoming to those who have toiled so hard for years previous. The home place is about five miles east from Victor and there Mr. Morris resides on the old homestead, having sold the balance of the large estate that he used to handle.

Horatio F. Davidson

Clarrence L. Morris was born in Illinois, on January 6, 1837, the son of Preston and Adaliza (Miller) Morris, natives of Kentucky, as also were the father's parents, Bourbon county being the home place. The parents were married in Quincy, Illinois and the mother died when our subject was a lad of eight. He attended the district schools until 1850, when the father with his family, he having married in the meantime, started across the plains with horse teams to Oregon. They were in the same train with Samuel Brooks, Henry Williams, and others who are mentioned in this volume. In due time they landed in Linn county and there the father took a donation claim, where he remained until his death, which occurred in 1863. Clarrence L. finished his schooling in Linn county and then started in life for himself. He rented land in the valley for three years, then came to this flat, where he remained three years and then returned to the valley for some time. Few settlers were here when he first came. In 1886, he came back and took as a homestead the place where he now resides and since then he has given his attention to farming and stock raising, and has been prosperous in his labors.

On December 27, 1857, Mr. Morris married Miss Catherine Thomas, who was born in Nodaway county, Missouri. The wedding occurred at the home of her parents, Turpine T. and Nancy (Curl) Thomas, natives of Virginia and Indiana, respectively. They crossed the plains with ox teams in 1851, and had great hardship, owing to the hostility of the savages, who stole all their cattle and harrassed them continually. When the cattle were stolen, all the wagons were abandoned but one or two to each family and the company had to walk. There were twenty or more young ladies in the camp and on one occasion an Indian chief came asking to purchase one of them. A would-be smart young man told him to take his pick and he could have her for twenty horses. The chief not doubting soon appeared with the twenty horses, and of course a row was precipitated, which resulted in all the cattle being stolen. The young man was banished from the train, which made its way amid the most trying hardships and deprivation to the end of their journey. Mrs. Morris was nine years of age at that time and well remembers how she used to cry from hunger and fatigue almost every day. Her father settled in the valley and in 1857 came to Eightmile creek. He died in Los Angeles, in 1872. The mother died in Waitsburg, Washington, in 1870. Mr. Morris has the following named brothers and sisters, Andrew B., Sarah J., Catherine, Nathaniel, Mrs. Josephine B. Marshall, and Mrs. Mary A. Powell who died in 1903. They all crossed the plains. Mrs. Morris has brothers and sisters, named below: Mrs. Caroline Shelton, Perry, Jasper, deceased; Marion, Newton, William, Mrs. Susan Bateman and Mrs. Lou Bilopps. The children born to our subject and his wife are mentioned below: Preston G., Milton M., William G., Harvey L., all on the flat; Callie, the wife of C. Bigbee, in Linn county; Mary E., wife of George Young, in Wasco county; Leonora, wife of John Nowlin, superintendent of schools in Pendleton; Marcia, wife of George Woodruff, on the flat; and Hattie A., the wife of James Davidson, also on the flat.

BENJAMIN L. FORMAN, who resides about two miles west from Wapinitia, is one of the representative and leading men of Juniper flat, and has one of the choice places to be found in that fertile region. He was born in Linn county, Missouri, on November 17, 1859, the son of Major Luther T. and Arminta (Brown) Forman, natives of Kentucky. The father was a native of Bourbon county and his parents, who were Scotch, were born in the same place. He fought all through the Civil war and held the rank of major when he was mustered out. He was a prominent stockman and merchant and died in Linn county, Missouri, in 1902. The mother's parents were born in Kentucky and she died when our subject was four years old. Benjamin L. grew up on the farm, gained his education from the district schools and assisted his father in the stock business, being closely associated with him in shipping stock from Texas. He remained at the home place until March, 1889, when he came to this county and took land where he now resides. He now owns twelve hundred acres, which is well provided with water, both living and that pumped from various wells with windmills. He has improvements of the best, a large story and one-half white residence, commodious barns and outbuildings and all the paraphernalia needed on a first-class farm. Mr. Forman winters about one hundred and fifty cattle, raises lots of horses and sells many hogs each year. He is one of the most successful men of the county and is a leading figure in the conventions and in public matters generally.

On July 4, 1890, at the Davis ranch, Wapinitia, Mr. Forman married Miss Eliza Abbott, who was born in Miami county, Ohio. Her parents, Curtis G. and Catherine (Dils) Abbott, were born in Ohio, the mother in Montgomery county. The father died here on June 29, 1901. The mother's father was native to Miami county, Ohio, and her mother was born in Virginia. Mr.

Forman has two brothers, Charles, John; two half brothers, Joseph, William, and five half sisters, Mrs. Kate Stanley, Lida, Mrs. Virginia Denboe, Stella, and Mrs. Maggie Hill. To Mr. and Mrs. Forman one child has been born, William, aged fourteen. Mrs. Forman's people removed to Indian in 1848, settling in St. Joseph county. In 1857, her father went to California and after mining some, raised hogs in Humboldt county. He brought the first sheep to this county and to Prineville and was one of the earliest settlers on the flat. He remained here until his death. He was a very prominent man and was one of the leading stock breeders in Oregon. He was known as a liberal, enterprising and good man. Mrs. Forman has two brothers, Joseph C., James P. and two sisters, Mrs. Mary Brown, Mrs. Sarah Washburn. Mr. Forman is a member of the Christian church, and he and his wife are highly respected people.

CHARLES N. CLARKE, one of the younger business men of the Hood River, is at the head of a prosperous drug trade which he owns and operates. He is a genial, upright and popular man, wide awake to the interests of the state and is to be classed among the substantial men of Wasco county. He was born in Kansas, on April 5, 1874, the son of Levi and Mary J. (Keys) Clarke. The mother was a native of Vermont and her parents were born in Ireland and Wales, respectively. The father was a native of New York and his father of England, while his mother was born in Pennsylvania, of old English Quaker stock. He was a tinner, gas fitter and plumber by trade and came to The Dalles about 1889 where he opened a shop and conducted it for eight years. After that, he sold his shop and came to Hood River where he is retired and living with our subject. Charles N. was educated in the graded schools of Eldorado, Kansas, and at The Dalles. In 1890, he came from Texas, where he had been one year with his sister. His oldest brother had come to Wasco county in 1888 and for seven years was in the employ of Snipes and Kinersly, druggists at The Dalles. Then he opened a store for himself and later moved to Aberdeen, Washington, engaging in the business where he was burned out in the fall of 1903. After finishing his education at The Dalles our subject entered the employ of Snipes & Kinersly. With them, and his brother later, he spent seven years in learning and following the drug business. In August, 1898, he came to Hood River and bought the business of J. H. Cradlebaugh and has since conducted the same. He has since increased his stock and business materially and is handling a large trade at the present time. Mr. Clarke is an up-to-date business man and carries a very fine stock of goods to supply his increasing trade. His genialty and faithfulness have won him an extensive trade besides hosts of friends. He is well known as a careful and accurate man.

At Dufur, Oregon, in 1890, Mr. Clarke married Miss Eva L. Slusher, a native of Portland. Her parents, Thomas and Arabel (Dufur) Slusher, were natives of Pennsylvania and Oregon, respectively. Her father is now deceased and her mother is married to William Staats, a farmer residing four miles west from Dufur. Mr. Clarke has three brothers: Frank J., a druggist in Portland; Frederick W., a jeweler and watchmaker in Hood River; and G. Arthur, the manager of a large cigar store at Portland; and one sister, Minnie, wife of W. O. Hadley, a jeweler, at Moro, Oregon. Mr. and Mrs. Clarke have two children, Beryl A. and Charles E., deceased. Our subject is affiliated, fraternally, with the A. O. U. W., the United Artisans, and the A. F. & A. M.

ROBERT A. LAUGHLIN is certainly entitled to be classed as one of the earliest pioneers of this country and also as one of the most substantial builders of it. He is now residing three miles west, some south, from Wapinitia, and there owns a fine estate of eight hundred acres of choice land. The same is well provided with improvements and Mr. Laughlin devotes his attention to general farming and stock raising. He is a man of influence in the community, has an excellent standing and is entitled to the encomiums and respect which he is accorded by all who know him.

Robert A. Laughlin was born in Lincoln county, Missouri, on April 19, 1846, the son of Alfred and Lucy (Kent) Laughlin, natives of Missouri. The father's parents were born in Virginia and descended from Scotch ancestry. The mother was of Pennsylvania Dutch stock and died in Missouri, in 1864. In Missouri our subject secured his education and there remained until 1865, when accompanied by his father, step-mother and the balance of the family, he came west, with ox teams, encountering much hardship en route. Settlement was made in Yamhill county and there he remained until 1872, when he came to Juniper flat and took land. He is the only one of the few settlers of that time who now remains. He took land by the government rights and then bought until his estate is of the proportions mentioned. Mr. Laughlin is now handling the farm and stock largely in partnership with his son, Fred G., who is one of the capable and leading young men of the vicinity. They winter about seventy-five cattle each year, sell about forty to fifty hogs and have some horses. The place is well handled and is one of the valuable estates of the county.

Here on the farm, on December 5, 1876, Mr. Laughlin married Miss Sallie J. Magill, a native of Missouri. Her parents were also born in that state. The father, Caleb Magill, died in California, on July 4, 1902, and is buried here. On October 12, 1887, here at the family home, Mrs. Laughlin was called away by death. She had been a good and noble woman and left many friends. The following named children were left with the devoted husband to mourn the departure of the beloved mother and wife: Fred G., on the farm with his father; Claud W., with W. H. Davis; Ralph R., at The Dalles; Kate M., wife of Alonzo Amen, at Wapinitia; May, wife of Henry Trowbridge, a stockman in Grant county; and Gertrude, unmarried and at home. Mr. Laughlin has one brother, John S., and two sisters, Mrs. Catherine Wright, and Mrs. Ellen Clark. Mrs. Laughlin had one brother, David.

JOHN I. WEST, a prosperous farmer and stockman, residing at Wapinitia, came to Juniper flat when a young man of eighteen. He was without means and had the capital of a riding cayuse and a saddle when he landed one day in Tygh valley. That was twenty-five years since. Perceiving the opportunities offered the industrious here, he took hold with his hands and thoroughly made up his mind to win the smiles of dame fortune. He has done it, and in a becoming manner, too, as the following sketch will testify. Having been a great benefactor to this country, and now being a leading citizen, it is with great pleasure we embrace the opportunity to epitomize his career.

John I. West was born in Yamhill county, Oregon, on January 6, 1861. His father, William M. West, was born in Missouri, Dade county, and when fourteen years of age crossed the plains, it being 1847, accompanying an elder brother. He made settlement in Yamhill county and his death occurred at Tygh Valley on December 15, 1902. He had married Miss Eliza Harris, a native of Dade county, Missouri, who crossed the plains with her parents when four years of age. She was in the same train with Mrs. Dr. Elwood's father and mother. She died when our subject was a lad of four years. Then he was bound out by his father to Mr. and Mrs. Johnson Basket, in Polk county, where he remained, receiving his education and working on the farm until he was eighteen. Then he started out for himself and in due time with his riding cayuse landed in this flat, as stated above. He soon went to work and for ten years he saved his wages until he was justified in starting into the stock business for himself. He secured land by homestead right and went to work. He now owns an estate of eighteen hundred acres, well improved and supplied with all the things necessary for a first-class stock and farm place. Mr. West associated with Mr. Davis, sent east for the best strains of Shorthorn and Hereford cattle and they introduced them into this neighborhood, which has resulted in great benefit to the people. He has been an enterprising stock breeder and has always the best. He winters about two hundred head, and also sells some hogs. Mr. West had one brother, James, who died in infancy, and no sisters.

On September 15, 1902, Mr. West married Miss Anna N. Horton, who was born in Indiana, on April 4, 1873. The wedding occurred at The Dalles. Mrs. West's father, Jeremiah Horton, was born in Indiana, and his parents came from Yorkshire, England. He married Miss Nancy Wallace, an Indiana maiden, whose parents were natives of Tennessee. Her father, William Wallace, was first cousin of General Lew Wallace, the famous writer. Mr. Horton dwells in Ness county, Kansas, and follows dairying. He is a veteran of the Civil war, having served in Company C, Twenty-sixth Indiana Volunteer Infantry, and was in many of the most hotly contested battles of the war, including the siege of Vicksburg, Shiloh, and others. He lost one brother and one brother-in-law in the siege of Vicksburg, one brother at Shiloh, and one brother-in-law at Corinth. He is a prominent and influential citizen. He carries a ball in his breast received at Vicksburg. Mrs. West has the following named brothers and sisters: Francis J., William J., Samuel G., Charles B., Mrs. Emma Zickefoose, Mrs. Elizabeth Schapher, Lenna A., and Mrs. Minnie Collins. Mrs. West is a normal graduate and an experienced teacher. She also did dressmaking and wrought as saleslady in a dry goods store. She belongs to the Rebekahs and the Women of Woodcraft. Mr. and Mrs. West are popular and genial people, and are valued members of society here.

To Mr. and Mrs. West one son has been born, Isham H., on August 3, 1903.

THOMAS J. McCLURE is one of the earliest pioneers of this section and he now is a heavy real estate owner in Wasco county. The old home place is situated about four miles east from Mosier, where he with his brother and sister own seven quarter sections and one eighty, making a total acreage of twelve hundred acres.

Thomas J. McClure was born in Buchanan county, Missouri, on November 20, 1846. In 1852, his parents, William C. and Amelia H. (Sullivan) McClure, who were married May 26, 1842, crossed the plains with ox teams. They started out from Missouri with twelve ox teams, making three outfits. When they arrived in the Willamette valley they had one ox and one cow, the latter having been bought en route. The father was born in Tennessee, of Scotch-Irish stock. His father, the grandfather of our immediate subject, participated in the War of 1812, his captain being James Bennett, and he drew a pension until his death, which occurred where our subject now lives, on December 31, 1878, he being aged eighty-two. He had crossed the plains with the son and was a pioneer of this country. William C. McClure died here at the old homestead on May 21, 1895. His widow, also of Scotch-Irish ancestry, died here on September 29, 1896. Thomas J. was reared and educated principally in Yamhill county, where the family settled first. In 1864, they sold out there and removed to The Dalles. They rented a place on Threemile creek until the fall of 1865, then removed to town and on May 12, 1866, they came to the place where our subject now lives and took a homestead. The grandfather took a claim also and when our subject was old enough, he took an adjoining quarter. He and his brother have bought since until they have the magnificent estate mentioned already. Mr. McClure gives attention to raising hay mostly, and also does some general farming. His brother, William T., lives near. His sister, Mrs. Amanda A., widow of Andrew Marsh, keeps house for Mr. McClure. She has one son, William A., who dwells with them. Mr. McClure is a Democrat and a man well posted in the questions of the day, and also well posted in the history of the country, having seen it developed from the wild state, in which it was when they came, to its present prosperous condition. He has done a good part in this work and is to be classed with the leading men of the county.

AMOS ROOT, a substantial farmer and fruit raiser, who resides about two miles east from Mosier, was born in Ohio. His parents, John and Sarah (Hurst) Root, were natives of Pennsylvania and from Dutch stock. They both died in Ohio. Our subject was raised in Ohio until twenty-one where he received his education, then journeyed west to Iowa. After four or five years' residence there he went to Colorado and worked in the mines about six years. Returning home, he spent two years in the Buckeye State and two in Indiana and in 1875, he came to Oregon. He spent several years in the Willamette valley, ranching and then came west of the mountains and raised sheep but was driven out of that business owing to the uprising of the Indians. In 1878, he bought the place where he now resides and since then has made it his home. The farm consists of one hundred and sixty acres, forty of which are under cultivation. Thirty acres of the forty are planted to apples, cherries, peaches, prunes and so forth. Mr. Root is a skillful and thrifty horticulturist and turns off many boxes of fruit each year.

In Indiana, Mr. Root married Miss Hannah Holderman, a native of that state. Her parents, Samuel and Sarah (Boyer) Holderman were born in Ohio and died in Indiana. Mrs. Root has several brothers and sisters and Mr. Root has the following named brothers and sisters, Henry, Samuel, William, and Elizabeth Zaner. To our subject and his esteemed wife eight children have been born; Elmer R., a farmer near The Dalles; Leo, with him; Leslie and Clyde, school boys; Alice, wife of Wallace A. Husband, living four miles east of Mr. Root's place; Zilla, the widow of Mr. Jones, residing with her father; Nora and Edna, at home.

Politically, Mr. Root has formerly been a Democrat and attends many of the conventions, but recently he has embraced the Socialist faith which he believes to contain the right principles for the settlement of the political questions. He takes a lively interest in school affairs and has been a director for many years.

LEANDER EVANS, one of the prominent fruit raisers of Wasco county, resides about a mile southeast from Mosier. He owns one hundred and seventy five acres on the home place, most of which is tillable and he has an orchard of about thirty acres. Last year, he shipped something over three thousand boxes of fruit and this year will probably dispose of over five thousand. In addition, Mr. Evans has a fine fruit drier with a capacity of five thousand pounds per day and he ships many tons of dried prunes and apples.

Leander Evans was born in Bloomington, Illinois, on November 6, 1849. His father, Samuel Evans, was a native of Ohio and was brought by his parents to Illinois when three years of age. They were also born in Licking county, Ohio. His father, the grandfather of our subject, laid out the city of Bloomington on his homestead and died there in 1869. He was a man of strong character and noted for his charity and public spirit. For many years, he was very wealthy but met with reverses late in life. He died when ninety-three years of age. The father of our subject came to this vicinity in 1898 and died in 1900. He had married Evaline King, a native of Illinois. Her father was born in Wales and her mother in England. She died here in 1901. After completing the high school in Bloomington, our subject was about to enter the normal school but was deterred on account of ill health. He went with his parents to Missouri and farmed for seven years, then he moved to Kansas where the parents remained until they joined our subject here in the west. He came with his family and one brother here about 1887 and homesteaded the place where he now resides.

On May 16, 1875, in Cowley county, Kansas, Mr. Evans married Miss Mary E. Swasey, who was born in Clark county, Missouri. Her father, George C. Swasey, was born in New York and his family was prominent for many years there.

Mr. Evans has five brothers, William H., Ira D., George E., Samuel E. and Oscar. He also has four sisters, Calista Depew, Mary E. Hunter, Louisa Graham, and Lillie E. Johnson. Mrs. Evans has one child. Two children have been born to our subject and his wife, Frederic E., a graduate of the Philomath college in 1903 and married to Carrie Gray, the daughter of H. J. Gray; George C., who received his education in the high school at Hood River and married Elva Coyle, mentioned elsewhere in this work. He is now living on the farm adjoining that of our subject.

Mr. and Mrs. Evans are members of the Methodist church as are also their sons. Politically, Mr. Evans is a Democrat but not active. He is well informed on the issues and questions of the day and keenly alive to the interests of education. Mr. Evans is one of the wealthy men of the country, having secured a fine holding by virtue of his skill and industry while also he has stimulated many to meritorious labor which has resulted in great good to this part of the state.

GEORGE D. CULBERTSON, of the firm of George D. Culbertson & Company, is one of the leading business men of Wasco county. He is established at Hood River as his headquarters and does a large business all over Wasco county, southwestern Washington and other portions of the country. The firm handles real estate and also does insuring and loaning.

George D. Culbertson was born in Denton county, Texas, on March 1, 1868, the son of Elijah H. and Helen H. (Curtner) Culbertson. The mother was born in Galatin, Missouri and her parents were natives of Crab Orchard, Kentucky. Her uncle, James Gerrard Curtner, was the second governor of Kentucky. The family were of Scotch descent and were early pioneers to Virginia. The father of our subject was born in Indiana, on December 28, 1824, and died on February 18, 1902, in Savanna, Indian Territory. He founded the village of Stringtown, Indian Territory, and was a merchant and mill owner there before railroads came. He also lived in Texas and raised stock and did contracting and building, when Tarrant, Denton and Wise counties were on the frontier. He built the first court house at Fort Worth and was there when it was a mere army post. In addition to his business career, the father was a noted Indian missionary, having for many years labored faithfully among the Indians and the whites and was instrumental in founding many Methodist churches. He was a man of power and eloquence and was known far and near in central United States. Being fearless and brave, he won the admiration of the savages and was enabled to reach them and on many occasions quiet them. At a good ripe age, having performed a noble work, he went to the reward that was waiting for him, sustained by the faith which had buoyed him over life's seas. The mother of our subject still lives at Savanna, Indian Territory. Her father was a pioneer of Wise county, Texas, and died there in 1878. George D. was educated in the district schools of Indian Territory and in an academy in north Texas. After graduating, he taught school in Choctaw and other nations for three years, having as pupils, Indian and white children. After that, we find him engaged as secretary and one of the faculty in the Fort Worth Business College, at Fort Worth, Texas, and later he engaged in the general merchandise business with his brother, at Savanna, Indian Territory. For three years, they did a nice business, then burned out. Next we see him in Oregon, where he resided for two years as head accountant of a dry goods house at Salem. After this, he returned home to attend to some personal business and remained there for several months, then he journeyed west to Portland. Here he accepted a position as chief accountant for a large wholesale boot and shoe house but finding the position too confining, he resigned and came to Hood River. He at once opened a real estate office, the year being 1901, and since that time has continued actively in business here. He handles property all over the country for hundreds of miles in every direction and does a large business. They confine their efforts to no particular line but handle farm, fruit, timber, grazing land and town property and in fact every kind of property in the business world. In February, 1905, Mr. Culbertson was chosen vice-president for Oregon of the National Real Estate Association at Des Moines, Iowa.

On November 26, 1903, at Hood River, Mr. Culbertson married Miss Caroline Booth, a native of The Dalles. Her parents, John P. and Mary L. (Kiggs) Booth, were natives of Michigan and are mentioned elsewhere in this volume. Mr. Culbertson has four brothers, William T., Charles E., Jesse W., and John M., who is partner with our subject; and four sisters, Mrs. Frances Robinson, Mrs. Dora J. Smith, Mrs. Anna Collard, and Mrs. Alice M. Ingram. Mrs. Culbertson has one brother and two sisters who are mentioned in another portion of this work. Our subject is a member of the M. W. A. and in politics is a staunch Democrat, and takes an active interest in party politics.

Mrs. Culbertson is a member of the Episcopal church. Mr. Culbertson's grandfather, Andrew J. Culbertson, went to Oregon in 1852 with ox teams and remained in Powell valley, Multnomah county, until his death.

JAMES McHARGUE, who is proprietor of the Hotel Shaniko at Shaniko, Oregon, was born in Linn county, this state, on February 5, 1851, being the son of James and Sarah J. (Montgomery) McHargue, natives of Kentucky and Missouri, respectively. The father's parents and grandparents were of Scotch ancestry and were among the early pioneers of the Blue Grass State. The mother's parents were born in Missouri and the Montgomerys were an old and prominent southern family. Our subject's parents were married in Missouri and in 1847 crossed the plains with ox teams to Linn county, Oregon, where they took donation claims. Our subject was born there and also was raised on the old home place, receiving his education from the public schools. The father died at Brownsville, Oregon, on October 18, 1897, aged seventy-five. The mother died at the old home place, on May 12, 1897, aged seventy-four. Our subject had followed farming on the old home place most of the time and continued there until 1902, when he sold out and came east of the mountains. Previous to that, however, he had been engaged in the Albany Woolen Mills for four years. After arriving east of the Cascades, he selected Shaniko as the place to invest and purchased equipments for the Shaniko hotel, leasing the building. Since that time, he has been conducting a first class hostelry and is favored with a very fine patronage. His house is made attractive and is very popular with the traveling public.

At Brownsville, Oregon, on March 25, 1874, Mr. McHargue married Mary E. Keeny, who was born in Linn county, on October 12, 1858, the daughter of Elias and Margaret J. (Hyatt) Keeny, natives of Missouri. The father crossed the plains in 1846 with ox teams, being accompanied by his brother. They selected donation claims in the Willamette valley and then returned to Missouri, married and in 1848, crossed the plains again. The mother died in the Willamette valley in 1861. Mr. McHargue has two brothers, living, George W. and Robert H., in Washington; and three sisters, Ida, wife of George Hansen, a mining man at Grant's Pass, Oregon; Catherine, the wife of Joseph Hume, a hop raiser at Brownville; and Elizabeth, wife of James A. McPheron, a custom house employe in Portland. Our subject and his wife have become parents of five children; William C., in Arizona; Lillie, the wife of William E. Reese, manager of Moody's Warehouse in Shaniko; John; with his father; Margaret J., the wife of Angus A. Shaw; and Flora, at home.

Mr. McHargue is a member of the W. W. and in politics is a Democrat. He and his wife both belong to the Methodist church and are highly esteemed people.

JOHN W. BROWN, a native son of the Webfoot State, has labored in Oregon for many years and is now living on his fine fruit farm about six miles southeast from Mosier. He has a very choice place of one quarter section, one hundred acres of which are fine fruit land. He has ten acres of this cleared and into orchard and various other improvements upon the place.

John W. Brown was born in Portland, Oregon, on October 30, 1856, the son of James and Sarah J. (Stanley) Brown, natives of Tennessee and Texas, respectively. The father's parents and grandparents were also born in Tennessee. He served in the Mexican war and now lives in Jefferson county, Washington and does farming. The mother of our subject died in 1884. In 1853 our subject's father went from Missouri to California and was all through the various Indian wars in Oregon and lost all he had at the Cow Creek Massacre, all his household goods being taken from him with his entire outfit. He was left entirely destitute with a wife and one child. In 1855, they came to Oregon and later took a donation claim about fifteen miles up the Columbia from Portland where our subject resided. In 1871 the family went to Umatilla county and two years later, moved to Southern California. After two years there, they went back to southern Oregon and then went to Nevada, where our subject started for himself. Mr. Brown was accompanied by his wife, who was not afraid of the Indians, having had much experience with them in Texas. Her father was all through the Black Hawk war and lost a hand in the struggle. After our subject began operations for himself in Nevada, he remained one year and then came back to Portland. After that, he went to Umatilla county and did wheat farming until 1894. He has taken a preemption there, which he sold and homesteaded the one hundred and sixty acres where he now resides.

On January 18, 1892, at The Dalles, Mr. Brown married Miss Martha E. Hurst, who was born in Idaho. Her parents, Joseph and Nancy J. (Cowser) Hurst, were born in Oregon. Mr. Brown has one brother, George W., but no sisters. His father has no brothers, but one sister residing in Independence, Oregon. He is an active Socialist, an industrious and enterprising man and is making a very fine place where he now lives.

SAMUEL E. BARTMESS, a leading business man of Hood River, is one of the respected and highly esteemed citizens of Wasco county. He stands at the head of a large furniture and undertaking establishment and also deals in all kinds of building material. His trade is far reaching and has been gained by his careful and upright business methods and constant attention to the interests of his patrons.

Samuel E. Bartmess was born in Dayton, Indiana, on September 15, 1853, the son of Oliver Cromwell and Sarah (Clark) Bartmess. The father was born in Preble county, Ohio, in 1819 and his father, Jacob Bartmess, the grandfather of our subject, was born in Maryland. He married Sophia Riser. In 1829, they moved to Indiana, being pioneer farmers of that country. Their ancestors came from Germany. The father is now living with our subject. The mother of our subject, was born in Butler county, Ohio, in 1823 of English parentage and is now deceased. Samuel E. grew up on a farm and after completing the graded schools, took a course in the Otterbein university at Westerville, Ohio, graduating in 1879. After that he turned his attention to farming near Dayton, Indiana until 1890 when he moved to Hood River. A few months later, he bought out Hanna and Zeigler, who were handling a furniture business. Since that time, Mr. Bartmess has given his attention to his business, which is increasing and has closely identified himself with this country. He is an energetic worker in all lines of building and progress and has done a lion's share in building up Hood River.

On January 27, 1880, at Dayton, Indiana, Mr. Bartmess married Miss Elda E. Crouse, a native of that town. Her father was born at Germantown, Pennsylvania, in 1812, and came of German ancestry. He was a physician and about the first one in Tippecanoe county, Indiana, where he practiced for forty years. He was a very prominent man and for two terms represented his county in the state legislature, his name appearing on the Republican ticket. He married Miss Rachel Baker, a native of Indiana and of English parents. They are both now deceased. Mrs. Bartmess is finely educated, having graduated from the Logansport academy in Indiana.

Mr. Bartmess is a member of the I. O. O. F., while he and his wife belong to the United Brethren church. He is a trustee of that denomination and was one of the organizers of the church in Hood River and has been a devout and zealous worker in it since. Mr. and Mrs. Bartmess are very active Sunday school workers and are esteemed and highly respected people. Their son, Earl K., is superintendent of the Sunday school. They have four children; Earl K., at home; Meigs, a graduate from the agricultural college at Corvallis, now a member of the faculty of Hill's Military Academy, Portland; Sallie A., a school girl, aged ten; and Marie Louise, six years of age, who shows marked talent in music.

Politically, Mr. Bartmess is a zealous Prohibitionist. He is a genial, bright minded man, always interested in public enterprises and one who lives out his faith in daily life, consequently, he has hosts of friends and stands exceptionally well in the community.

TRUMAN BUTLER, the junior member of the banking house of Butler & Company, at Hood River, is a careful and capable young business man, who is considered one of the rising men of Wasco county. He is associated with his father in the banking business and has shown himself possessed of ability that presages for him a bright future. He enjoys the confidence of the public, and his careful attention to the banking business, his courtesy, geniality, and integrity have made him one of the most popular young men of the county.

Truman Butler was born in Ottawa, Kansas, on January 4, 1872, the son of Leslie and Carrie (Bixler) Butler, who are especially mentioned in another portion of this volume. When ten years of age he came to The Dalles with his father and after attending the public schools entered the Wasco Independent academy. Later he graduated from the Lane University, at Lecompton, Kansas. He immediately returned to The Dalles, it being 1891, and for seven years subsequently, he was purser on the Regulator line of steamers. In 1900, he came to Hood River and was associated with his father in the banking business where he has remained since.

On October 23, 1895, Mr. Butler married Miss Ella Leamer, a native of Kansas. The nuptials were celebrated at Lecompton, Kansas. Mrs. Butler's father, William Leamer, was born in Pennsylvania, coming from the old Pennsylvania Dutch stock. He was a pioneer in Kansas, and for fifty years was a merchant in Lecompton, being one of the leading men of that part of the state and well and favorably known all over it. He married Miss Emma McCormick, a native of Pennsylvania. They are both living in Lecompton. Mrs. Butler has the following brothers and sisters, Edward B., Coates W., Henry G., and Mrs. Mary Snyder. Mr. Butler is member of the A. F. & A. M. and the A. O. U. W., being worshipful master of the former and receiver of the other.

LESLIE BUTLER, senior member of the firm of Butler & Company's bank, is one of the leading business men in northern Oregon. He has a wide and varied experience in many lines of enterprise and has accumulated a fund of wisdom and experience, which, added to his native talent, makes him strong, capable and upright in the financial field. The bank is established at Hood River and does a large business.

Leslie Butler was born in Randolph county, Indiana, on November 10, 1847, the son of Robert H. and Ann M. (Thompson) Butler, natives of Campbell county, Virginia, and Center county, Pennsylvania, respectively. The family is an old and prominent one and the grandfather of our subject, Jonathan Butler, was a patriot in the Revolutionary War. Robert H. Butler died in Kansas in 1869. His widow died at The Dalles in 1898. She was of Pennsylvania Dutch stock. When Leslie was seventeen years of age, the family moved to Kansas, where the father died soon after. Our subject being the only son, responsibilities of the family devolved upon him and he attended to matters until twenty-two when he went to work in a grocery store in Ottawa. He had been well educated in the schools where he had lived until his father's death and for eight years he continued in the store, gaining a large fund of experience and thoroughly mastering the details of the business. The last year in this service was spent on the road as commercial salesman. After that, he was three years in railroad work and in 1881, came to The Dalles and opened a grocery store. For twelve years he continued in that, and at the time of the big fire was very fortunate in that his property was not destroyed. He sold out at that time and opened a large grocery and wholesale establishment which he conducted for five years, then he closed out and became credit man, with Wadhams and Keer Brothers, one year at Portland. Then in company with his son, he opened a banking business at Hood River in April, 1900, and since that time they have done a fine business.

On November 10, 1867, at Peoria, Kansas, Mr. Butler married Miss Carrie Bixler, a native of Illinois. Her father, Noah Bixler, was a native of Peoria and from Dutch stock. He was a pioneer to Ohio, Indiana and Illinois and married Nancy Brown. They both died at Ottawa, Kansas. Mr. Butler had three sisters, Mrs. Lydia Raglan, Sarah and Martha. The last two are deceased. Six children have been born to Mr. and Mrs. Butler; Cora, wife of Hon. George Dysart, an attorney at Centralia, Washington; Truman, with his father in the bank; Nellie, wife of Dr. E. L. Kniskern, at Centralia, Washington; Carrie, wife of C. H. Vaughn, bookkeeper of the bank; Pearl and Jessie, deceased.

Politically, Mr. Butler is a staunch Prohibitionist. He is not a member of any church denomination but a liberal supporter of them all and a bright minded and public spirited citizen. Mr. Butler is a man that impresses one as being possessed of much wisdom and business ability, while his genialty and kindness are evident to every one. The result is that he is looked up to and advised with by all and his example and wise principles have done much to build up and assist him in this section.

GEORGE A. YOUNG is one of the leading stockmen of the state of Oregon. He has operated very extensively in the country adjoining Shaniko and is known both far and near as a successful stock breeder. At the present time, he is not so actively engaged as heretofore but is taking the deserved retirement that he has earned. He was born in Middlesex village, Massachusetts, on November 25, 1833. John H. Young, his father, was a native of New York state and his parents of the same place. They were of Welsh ancestry and early settlers in the colonies. John H. Young died at Westford, Massachusetts. He was a mechanic and also followed merchandising and hotel keeping. He married Nancy Nutting, whose father, Daniel Nutting, was the maternal grandfather of our subject. He had his thumb shot off while serving with the patriots in the battle of Bunker-hill. He fought all through the Revolution, being in action for eight years, and our subject has a detailed record of the same, together with his discharge which was signed by General Bancroft. Our subject's mother died in 1866 at Westford, Massachusetts. George A. was educated in the public schools of Lowell and then learned the carpenter trade. Afterwards he learned the butcher business and remained in Massachusetts until 1857. Then he came to Oregon in company with L. E. Pratt, journeying via the isthmus. Mr. Pratt had come out to take charge of erecting and operating the first woolen mill on the Pacific coast and Mr. Young assisted in constructing the same. It was completed and began operations in 1857. Then Mr. Koung wrought for the government in building the barracks at Fort Yamhill. Later, he was in charge of a hotel in Salem but burned out there in 1863. After that, he journeyed to Idaho City and mined for one season. In 1864, we find him at Boise, where he built the Overland hotel in partnership with B. M. Du Rell and Thomas Mallony. In 1866, Mr. Young sold his interests to his partners and prospected and mined until 1870. In that year he returned to Portland and took a meat contract on the Northern Pacific railroad where he was engaged until 1874, when he took up the sheep business with a partner here at Shaniko. While the partner attended the stock, Mr. Young conducted the Clarendon hotel in Portland. Later, he was proprietor of the Occidental there in company with Sam Smith. In 1880, Mr. Young came to this section to visit his sheep ranch and was so taken up with the country and prospects that he decided to locate. Accordingly he made arrangements for the same and in the spring of 1881, purchased his partner's interest and since that has been one of the leading stockmen in the state of Oregon. His son, Fred, was in partnership with him much of the time until 1904, when they sold their entire stock interests. At that time, they disposed of seven thousand acres of land, sixteen thousand sheep, fifty horses and about one hundred and fifty cattle. Since he sold, Mr. Young has been devoting his attention to investments and believes that this portion of Oregon is about to make some of the greatest strides of the entire western country. While in the stock business, the firm was known as George A. Koung and Son.

On June 12, 1859, at Brighton, Massachusetts, Mr. Young married Lydia B. Heald, who was born in Anson, Maine, on November 25, 1841, being just eight years younger than her husband, to a day. Her father, Andrew Heald, was a native of Maine and descended from an old and prominent colonial family. He married Mary Houghton, also a native of Maine and from an old and prominent family. Mr. Young has one sister, N. Jane, the wife of Henry S. Bemis, a general merchant at Graniteville, Massachusetts. Mrs. Young has two brothers, Llewellyn and Fred, in Wheeler county, this state, and three sisters, Dorcas, the wife of Joseph W. Twinkham, a farmer in Columbia county, Oregon, and Philena, the wife of John Raullett, a mining man in Oakland, California, and Elizabeth, wife of Charles Hilton, a stockman in Wheeler county and now residing in Portland. Mr. and Mrs. Young have three children: Fred A., for many years in partnership with his father; Agnes, wife of Sheridan W. Soule, a real estate man in Billings, Montana; and Georgië, wife of F. D. Shepherd, residing in Portland, Oregon. Mr. Young is a demitted member of the A. F. & A. M. and the R. A. M. Four generations previous have been members of the same order and at one time, three generations sat in the same lodge. He is also a member of the Elks, the A. O. U. W., the Sons of the Revolution, and the Oregon Pioneers. Politically, Mr. Young is a strong and influential Republican. He takes an active part, has been delegate to the conventions and commissioner of Wasco county. He was a member of the board of pilot commissioners in Portland. For many years, Mr. Young was president of the Oregon Wool Growers' Association and was one of the leading members in promoting the same. He is a man of stamina and wealth and the splendid success he has achieved in Wasco county in the stock business shows him a man of ability in business relations. He has labored faithfully for the improvement and building up of the country and many good things have been traced as the result of his labor and wisdom.

CHARLES V. CHAMPLIN resides three miles west from The Dalles, where he has a fine fruit farm. He is one of the thrifty and leading horticulturists of the county and his estate shows good taste and neatness in every detail. He handles twenty-five acres to bearing orchard and contemplates setting out more. Each year he ships about thirty tons of prunes, besides much other fruit. He also raises hay and some stock. His place consists of one hundred and fifty acres and he secured the same by purchase.

Charles V. Champlin was born in Illinois, on December 25, 1851 the son of John and Rachel (Wilcox) Champlin, natives of New York. The Champlin family is an old and prominent one in American affairs and hold leading interests in the commercial world in Illinois. The father died in Illinois, in 1868. The Wilcox family are from colonial days and were leading people in the professions and in the business world. Charles V. lived in Illinois until 1877, there securing his education. Then he went to California and for one year was engineer in a large mill, having learned that trade in Illinois. Later he went from Petaluma to New Orleans where he was with an uncle, who was a large planter there, for seven years. Mr. Champlin came here from California on a visit, not expecting to stay. But being pleased with the country, he engaged in the O. R. & N. shops and wrought for twelve years. Then he purchased the place where he now dwells and since then has been a leading fruit raiser of Wasco county.

On December 25, 1882, Mr. Champlin married Miss Lizzie Agnew, a native of Sonoma, California, where the wedding occurred. Her parents, Samuel and Emma (Champlin) Agnew, were born in Virginia and Illinois, respectively. The father comes from an old and prominent southern family. He has a brother of noted character, Jim Agnew, the well known sheriff of Ada county, Idaho, in early days. His son, Jim Agnew, is now sheriff of the same county. Mrs. Champlin has two brothers, Newton, Asahel, and four sisters, Ida Dunbar, Mollie Weyl, Ella Cooper, and Sadie. Mr. Champlin has three brothers, William, Horace, Frank, and one half brother, Orlando. Mrs. Champlin's parents are still residing at Petaluma, California. Two children have been born to Mr. and Mrs. Champlin, Leroy and Eddie, both at home. Mr. Champlin is a member of the W. W. He is a man of integrity and uprightness and has the confidence of all who may have the pleasure of his acquaintance.

FRAMTON C. BROSIUS, M. D., is too well known in Hood River and vicinity to need any introduction by us. He is a man of ability and has gained an extensive practice of medicine, wherein he has shown remarkable ability and achieved excellent success. His education was thorough and in one of the best institutions of the land and since his graduation he has kept well abreast of the advancing science of medicine by careful reading. He is a close student and a great devotee of his profession.

Framton C. Brosius was born in Beloit, Ohio, on August 26, 1859. His father, Amos P. Brosius, was a native of Alsace-Lorraine, and came to the United States in 1840. In 1863, he enlisted in the Fourteenth Pennsylvania Cavalry and served until captured at Cedar Creek, West Virginia, on the morning of Sheridan's famous raid. He was taken to Salisbury, North Carolina, and incarcerated in a war prison. The North Carolina records show that he mysteriously disappeared and no trace of him could be found. In 1884, our subject desired to sift the matter more carefully and through the efforts of the adjutant general at Washington, it was ascertained that he died at Andersonville prison. Thus it is supposed he made his escape and was retaken and died later. He had married Miss Mary A. E. Core, a native of Churchville, Pennsylvania. She died here in Wasco county, on November 19, 1893. Her father was a pioneer physician in Pennsylvania, and his father was a Church of England clergyman. Dr. Brosius has one half brother, Arkley Lindsay, and one sister, Mathalie Gordon. On November 19, 1889, at Kenesaw, Nebraska, Dr. Brosius married Miss Emma Williams, a native of Iowa. She has one brother, George E.

After his father's death, our subject moved with his mother to Tipton, Iowa, where he attended the high school. Then he took a course at the Millville academy, Pennsylvania. When seventeen he taught school and when nineteen he entered Rush Medical College, Chicago, whence on February 19, 1883, he was graduated with honors. He immediately began the practice of his profession in Omaha, Nebraska, then went to Kenesaw, the same state, and continued in practice until 1891. On November 16, of that year, he came to Hood River and since that time has continued uninterruptedly in his profession, with the exception of the time spent in the service of his country in the Spanish war. He enlisted in the Second Oregon United States Volunteer Infantry as chief hospital steward with the rank of captain and artillery surgeon. He served the full time and was mustered out at San Francisco, on August 7, 1899, having been fifteen and one-half months in active service in the Philippines. The doctor is now captain and artillery surgeon of the Oregon National Guards. He is a member of the A. F. & A. M., being past master; of the R. A. M., being past high priest; of the O. E. S., being past patron; of the I. O. O. F.; of the United Artisans, having been eight successive terms master; of the Order of Pendo, being past master; of the W. W., being past council commander; of the Women of Woodcraft; of the K. O. T. M., being past sir knight commander; of the A. O. U. W.; of the Fraternal Brotherhood; and of the Foresters of America, being president and financial secretary and past chief ranger. To Dr. Brosius and his estimable wife three children have been born, Ed Este, Florence A., and Frampton Williams. The first one was born in Nebraska, and the last two in Hood River.

ABEL Y. MARSH, who resides about four miles west from The Dalles where he owns an estate of four hundred acres, is one of the heaviest fruit producers in Wasco county. He has a model ranch which is made a place of beauty and value by his thrift and wisdom. Last year, he shipped over seven thousand boxes of fruit and tomatoes, being one of the heaviest shippers in the entire valley. In addition to his large fruit interests, he raises general crops and handles cattle and horses.

Abel Y. Marsh was born in Wapello county, Iowa, on March 12, 1849. His father, Josiah Marsh, was also a native of Iowa and crossed the plains in 1854, making settlement down the Columbia from The Dalles, where he took a donation claim. He married Elizabeth Bell, a native of Wapello county, Iowa, who is deceased. Our subject remained with his parents until twenty-five years of age, gaining a good education and a first class training as a farmer, stockman and fruit raiser. Then he rented a farm for himself until 1889, when he purchased the place where he now resides. It is a magnificent estate and Mr. Marsh is making it still more valuable. Our subject well remembers that in the early days the family had very much trouble with the Indians and many nights were forced to stay in the woods. The neighbors also suffered very much from their depredations but our subject's father was a man of courage and stability and weathered those days and assisted materially in building up the country.

On December 7, 1871, at The Dalles, Mr. Marsh married Miss Sally Lyle, who was born in Iowa and is now deceased. On May 19, 1891, Mr. Marsh contracted a second marriage, Marv E. Doyle, a native of Iowa then becoming his wife. Her father, Michael Doyle, was born in Illinois, came to Oregon in 1874 via the Isthmus and now resides on Chenoweth creek a few miles away. He married Selinda Beers, who resides with her husband. The other children of the family besides Mrs. Marsh are Ralph, Charles, Edna Kauffman, and Ina. By his first marriage, Mr. Marsh has four children; Effie, the wife of Michael Thornton a farmer in Klickitat county, Washington; Ina, the wife of E. C. Fitzgerald, who lives with our subject; Josiah, deceased; and Minnie, deceased. To the second marriage, two children have been born, Willie and Harold.

Mr. Marsh is a member of the W. W. and a good strong Democrat, though not particularly active. His farm requires from three to ten hands all the time besides many more during certain seasons. Mr. Marsh has shown his ability in making a fine success in fruit and stock raising and his labors have resulted in much good, both in building up the country and stimulating others to worthy efforts.

NORRIS M. LANE, a blacksmith and wagonmaker at Shaniko, Oregon, has one of the finest establishments in this part of the city and is known as a master mechanic. He was born in Eugene, Oregon, on August 26, 1866, being the son of Andrew W. and Indiana (Smith) Lane, who are mentioned elsewhere in this volume. Until ten years of age, our subject attended the public schools at Springfield, a little place three miles east from Eugene and studied there until eighteen, when the family moved to California. Then he learned wagonmaking and the blacksmith trade. After that, he wrought as a cooper making butter kegs at Buntingville for three years. He remained in Lassen county until twenty-four, then returned to the Willamette valley and worked a few weeks at Portland. It was 1891, when he landed at Bakeoven without a cent in his pocket, and an entire stranger. After looking the country over for three days, he bought a small shop, giving his note payable in one year for the property. The following June, he sent for his brother, Lewis, who was then in The Dalles for his health. Lewis joined our subject and together they wrought until fall, then they began partnership and for nine years they conducted a business both in Bakeoven and at The Dalles. They sold out at Bakeoven in 1894. When the railroad came to Shaniko, the Lane brothers dissolved partnership and our subject came here in March, 1900. He erected a little shop eighteen by twenty and the first job he did was on April first for the townsite company. Lewis remained in The Dalles, and our subject began at once to build up a good trade here at Shaniko. By June first, he commenced to erect a commodious building thirty by sixty feet, with an addition twenty by forty feet to be used as a harness shop. Mr. Lane employs three men all the time and sometimes has five. He is a splendid mechanic, having the reputation of being one of the best workmen in the country. The result is, that he is handling a large trade and is known as one of the substantial business men of the town.

On November 1, 1896, at the residence of the bride's parents, in Lane county, Oregon, Mr. Lane married Elizabeth A. Whitsett, who was born near Eugene, the daughter of George W. and Betty (Harlow) Whitsett. The brothers and sister of our subject are named in the biography of his father found in this volume.

Mr. Lane is a member of the K. P. and in politics, is Republican. He has been two years school director and councilman, since the town was incorporated.

Mr. and Mrs. Lane have one child, Floyd M.

GEORGE E. WILLIAMS, who is one of the busy men of affairs in Hood River, is at the head of a nice drug trade, which he owns. He is a man of experience in various walks of life and has shown himself worthy of the confidence of the people, which is generously bestowed. He was born in West Irving, Iowa, on October 23, 1871, the son of Josephus and Malceena (Conger) Williams, natives of Ohio and Illinois, respectively, and now dwelling in Kenesaw, Nebraska. They both came from old and prominent families. When our subject was seven, the family removed to Kenesaw, Nebraska, where he attended the public schools. When fifteen, he learned telegraphy and followed the same for several years. He was in the employ of the Burlington and the Santa Fe, principally as train dispatcher, until 1894, when he resigned his position and came west. Hood River attracted him and he soon bought an interest in the drug business owned by Dr. Brosius, which he had established two years previous. In 1896, Mr. Williams went to San Francisco and entered the University of California, taking the Pharmaceutical course, and graduated with distinction in 1898. Immediately upon graduation, he returned to Hood River and took up his business in the drug store. He continued as partner with Dr. Brosius until 1902, when he bought the doctor out and since that time has been handling the business alone. His carefulness and accuracy have commended him to the people, while his geniality and good principles have won him hosts of friends. Mr. Williams has a nice business and is well esteemed in the community.

At Hood River, on August 15, 1900, Mr. Williams married Miss Alice Graham, a native of Chicago, and a charming lady of refinement and culture. Her father, James Graham, was born in the Isle of Guernsey and came to the United States when a young man and married Miss Margaret Tostiven. They both dwell in Hood River, retired from active business. For many years he was an extensive contractor and builder in Chicago. Mrs. Williams has two brothers and two sisters, Albert, William, Carrie Pitch, and Grace Bartch. Mr. Williams is a member of the A. F. & A. M., the K. O. T. M., and the Foresters. Politically, he is a Republican, but is not active. Mr. and Mrs. Williams are excellent people and are among the leading citizens of Hood River.

EDWARD S. MAYES, of the firm of May Brothers, who handle an extensive meat business in Hood River, is one of the younger business men there, who have achieved an excellent success. He is a bright, energetic and up-to-date, and with his brother is handling a good business. He was born in Kansas on September 9, 1870, the son of Benjamin F. and Annis (Calvin) Mayes, natives of Illinois. The mother now lives at Hood River. The father's parents were born in New York and came from an old American family. The father and his father, served in the Civil War in Company E, Fortieth Illinois Infantry, also two of the father's brothers were in the same regiment. Benjamin F. Mayes served three years, and participated in some of the heaviest battles of the war, among which are Shiloh, Missionary Ridge, Lookout Mountain and various others. His time expired during the battle of Lookout Mountain. He was wounded at Shiloh, but not severely, and there his father was killed. Our subject's parents moved to Portland when he was eight years of age and his father was engaged in farming and stock raising for several years. In 1888, he was killed in the vicinity of Portland, by a falling tree.

Edward S. attended the graded schools in Portland until seventeen years of age and then engaged in the stock business and has been identified with that and in other business for himself ever since. In July, 1899, he located permanently in Hood River where he had had business relations for several years before, then he engaged in the meat business with his brother, Joseph W., who had, with their mother, come to Hood River previously. They bought out a shop and since then, have conducted a thriving business.

Mayes married Miss Susannah Cummings, a native of Nebraska. Her father, Robert Cummings, was a native of Canada and lives at St. Helens, Oregon. Mr. Mayes has the following named brothers and sisters: Esther J., the wife of James Watson, a railroad man at San Jose, California; Fanny, the wife of John E. Ross, in Portland; Lizzie, the wife of David Gee, at Portland; Mattie C., the wife of Clyde T. Bonny, of Brooks, Oregon; and Cora B., wife of Ben Theyson, at Hood River, Oregon. Our subject's partner is his only living brother and he is mentioned elsewhere in this work. To Mr. and Mrs. Mayes three children have been born, Vera M. I., Olive I. Z., and Annis S.

Fraternally, our subject is affiliated with the I. O. O. F., and the Order of Washington. He and his wife belong to the Methodist church and are consistent Christians, who believe in the faith that makes faithful and that is good for every day.

Politically, he is a good strong Republican and takes a keen interest in all matters of public import. Being genial and generous, he has won hosts of friends and his real integrity and worth hold them. Mr. Mayes deserves to be ranked with the most substantial of Hood River's business men and her best citizens.

HOWARD L. DUMBLE, M. D., has not spent so many years in Hood River as some of the pioneer men, yet he has so thoroughly identified himself with the country and its interests, that he deserves to be mentioned among its leading citizens. He stands at the head of a lucrative practice and is an energetic and progressive man, skilled in his profession, capable and up-to-date.

Howard L. Dumble was born in Ohio, on June 1, 1860. His father, Samuel Dumble, was a native of Pennsylvania and his parents came from Cornwall, England. For thirty years, the father was a newspaper man and editor of the Marion Independent at Marion, Ohio. In 1861, he enlisted in the Ninety-sixth Ohio Volunteer Infantry and served for three years with distinction and bravery. Then he was honorably discharged and returned to Marion and resumed his editorial work. He died at Marion, in 1895. Politically, he was one of the staunchest and best informed Republicans in his city and did much for the success of the party in many hotly contested campaigns. He married Miss Elizabeth Corn, a native of Ohio and descended from an old Maryland colonial family. She now lives at Marion. Our subject completed the high school course in 1878, then matriculated at the Wesleyan University at Delaware, Ohio. So thoroughly was he occupied with the spirit of his studies that in two years he successfully completed a three year course. After graduating, he taught for several years, then was appointed examiner for the pension bureau at Washington, D. C. In this capacity he served until 1890, when he entered the medical department in the National University, at Washington, D. C., and graduated therefrom in 1893, with the title of Doctor of Medicine. He continued some time as medical examiner in the pension bureau then accepted the position as physician in the Indian service at Fort Hall reservation, Idaho. He also served at Crow Creek, South Dakota, and Fort Yates, North Dakota, and Pendleton, Oregon, resigning from government service in 1901. In that year, Dr. Dumble was attracted to the beautiful town of Hood River and located at this point. He immediately opened an office and took up the practice of medicine, wherein he had become exceptionally skillful through long years of experience in active service. Since that time, the doctor has been favored with a fine practice and has won for himself hosts of friends throughout the country. His office is fitted up in a becoming manner. Owing to the doctor's studious habits, he has kept fully abreast of the science of medicine besides doing much original investigation.

At Marion, Ohio, on October 10, 1883, Dr. Dumble married Miss Kate C. Idleman, a native of that town. Her father, Silas Idleman, was a native of the same country, and his family had been pioneers in various sections of the United States and the colonies. He married Miss Catherine Poutens, a native of Ohio, descended from an old American family. Dr. Dumble has two brothers, Marion M. and Martin L., and one sister, Bessie. Mrs. Dumble has nine brothers and sisters, one of whom, C. N., was formerly attorney general of the state of Oregon.

Dr. Dumble is a member of the A. F. & A. M., the R. A. M., the O. E. S., the Order of Washington, the W. O. W., and the M. W. A. Mrs. Dumble belongs to the O. E. S. Mr. Dumble belongs to the Methodist church while Mrs. Dumble is a member of the Episcopal denomination. He is a good strong Republican, a well informed and an up-to-date man.

ALFRED C. SANFORD of the firm of Sanford & Sill, general merchants of Shaniko, is one of the leading business men in this part of Wasco county and has been active for many years in building up the country. He was born in Leavenworth, Kansas, on April 1, 1864, the son of Richard B. and Nancy B. (Corum) Sanford.

The father was born in Kentucky and his father, the grandfather of our subject, was a native of Scotland and died of yellow fever in the Mexican war. Richard B. Sanford followed tailoring in the east and now lives retired at Wamic, Wasco county. The mother of our subject was born in Missouri and there they were married. Later, the family moved to Kansas, and in 1862 the father tried to enlist but he was not accepted. They remained in Kansas all through the border struggles and were much harrassed by guerrilla forces. Once the father was held prisoner by the confederates two days. The mother had two brothers in the confederate army. Her father was a Kansas slave owner at the outbreak of the war and had a very large farm near Leavenworth. In 1876, our subject being about twelve years of age, the entire family came by rail to San Francisco, then by boat to Portland and the first winter was spent near Olex on Rock creek. The following spring they moved to Grass Valley canyon, near the present town of Moro. At that time, the families of Price, Eaton, Harrington, Miller, Pearson, Gordon, and Fulton were the only people living in what is now Sherman county. The elder Sanford took a homestead and engaged in raising stock. He had some capital and bought land and cattle and remained there eighteen months. He was very successful in his ventures and then removed the family to Wamic, to give his children school advantages. He purchased a quarter section there which was the family home until 1903, but now they live on a four acre tract in Wamic, retired. Our subject received the balance of his education in the Wamic schools, and assisted his father until sixteen years of age, when he started out for himself. He herded sheep two seasons, then sheared sheep and also worked at sawmilling and rode the range. He bought and sold horses, operated a stage line for three years and was in very many enterprises. His stage line was from The Dalles to Wapinitia and he took it from 1882 to 1885. Then he sold out and for two years he followed different employments. Following that he took the position of salesman for Fillon Brothers in The Dalles and remained with them five years or until they were burned out. Then he continued with the house of French & Co., bankers, for a year in settling up the affairs of his old employers. He was engaged in various other employments first, and then was on the road in Washington, Oregon, and Idaho for a large eastern hardware firm. After that, he was a year with M. Williams & Co., of The Dalles and went thence to Wasco, in Sherman county, being there one of the incorporators of the O. T. Company. He sold his interests there in a few months and went to Moro, during the building of the railroad and opened up a general merchandise store. When the road came, in 1900, to Shaniko, he opened the first store here and in May, 1903, he sold a one-half interest to Henry B. Sill and they now do a large business. They carry a stock of about twelve thousand dollars.

On October 11, 1888, Mr. Sanford married Effie Batty, who was born in Douglas county, Oregon. The wedding occurred at The Dalles. Mrs. Sanford's parents are Thomas and Alice Batty. Mr. Sanford has four brothers deceased, three who died in infancy, and James W. who was killed by the O. R. & N. cars at Deschutes Station in 1886, he being then twenty-four. He has two sisters living, Minerva, wife of James H. Gilmore, a blacksmith at Wamic; and Mary E., wife of Eugene Pratt, also of Wamic. He also has one sister, who died in infancy. To Mr. and Mrs. Sanford four children have been born, Gladys, Ulla, Ailene, and Fenda L.

Mr. Sanford is a member of the A. O. U. W., of the United Artisans. He is a Republican in politics, has been delegate to several county conventions and has served two terms as city councilman. He takes a great interest in school matters and was the first school director elected in Shaniko, which office he still holds. He has done much for the upbuilding of the cause of education and is an ardent supporter of everything that tends to forward these interests. On November 12, 1902, Mr. Sanford was appointed postmaster at Shaniko and has discharged the duties since with efficiency and to the satisfaction of all.

By way of reminiscences, we wish to note that during the days when Mr. Sanford rode the range, he was considered one of the best men in that business in the country. He was especially successful in subduing fractious horses, and on one occasion in company with another deputy sheriff, rode four hundred and twenty miles in four days and three nights in pursuit of the murderer Hawkins, whom they captured eighty miles south of Prineville. Mr. Sanford is a man well known and highly esteemed for his worth and integrity and is considered one of the leading citizens of this part of Wasco county.

HON. ANDREW A. JAYNE is well known through central Oregon as a man of ability and influence. He is one of the prominent attorneys of this portion of the state and has made a record for himself both enviable and brilliant. At the present time, he is residing at Hood River and is giving attention to the oversight of his property, and the practice of law. He was born in Washington, Iowa, on January 29, 1861.

His father, Daniel Jayne, was born in Pennsylvania and the family, of English extraction, dates far back before the colonies. He enlisted in Company A, Twenty-fifth Iowa Volunteer Infantry, in 1862 and served for six months to defend the flag of the nation. Then he was taken by disease and died at Napoleon, Arkansas, on January 18, 1863, a martyr to the cause of freedom. He had married Martha A. Young, a native of Fleming county, Kentucky, who was born on May 1, 1822 and died on June 6, 1901. Our subject spent the first twenty-five years of his life in Iowa, gaining a fine academic education, after which he went to Chicago and read law for two years in the office of his cousin, Edgar L. Jayne, being admitted to the bar at the expiration of that time. Next we see him in Colorado, located at Ouray. From that point, he moved to Arlington, Oregon and commenced the practice of law. In the spring of 1897, he went to The Dalles and had a private practice there for three and one half years. In June, 1894, he was elected prosecuting attorney for the Seventh Judicial district, which embraces Wasco, Sherman, Gilliam and Crook counties. In 1896, he was re-elected and in 1898, the people chose him the third time for the same position. This demonstrates beyond a doubt the popularity of Mr. Jayne who in such an important office could only be sustained by integrity and ability. In the fall of 1900, Mr. Jayne retired from public life and gave himself to the practice of law and farming. In that year, he removed to Hood River, which is his home at the present time. He owns one hundred and thirty-seven acres of very valuable land about seven miles southwest from Hood River and has there fifteen acres of orchard and two acres of strawberries. One hundred acres of land are tillable and the estate is being rapidly made by Mr. Jayne a very valuable piece of property.

On February 13, 1890, at Portland, Oregon, Mr. Jayne married Miss Minnie M. Sperry, who was born in Brownsville, Oregon, on July 18, 1868. Her father, John L. Sperry, came to Oregon in 1852 by ox teams and now lives at Portland. He is a mining man. Mr. Jayne has one brother, Robert A., a physician in Lane county, Oregon. Mrs. Jayne has three sisters, Mrs. Dollie Halvor, Mrs. Ettie I. Burke, and Mrs. Lou Lempeke. The home of Mr. Jayne has been gladdened by the advent of three children: Maurice R., born on February 13, 1891, in East Portland; Burton H., born on December 26, 1893, at Arlington, Oregon, and Andrew A., born on January 9, 1903, at The Dalles. They are very bright and interesting children and Mr. Jayne has a very happy home.

He is a member of the A. F. & A. M. and his wife belongs to the Episcopal church. Mr. Jayne is a man of education and ability and is one of the leading men of central Oregon. His wife is a lady of refinement and many virtues and they are exceptionally popular people.

In 1904, Mr. Jayne again determined to enter the political arena, being repeatedly solicited by his friends, and so allowed his name to appear on the Republican ticket for representative to the state legislature, and in June he was promptly elected at the polls, by a good strong party vote. His services in the halls of legislation are highly appreciated and his influence has always been on the side of such legislation as the interests and the best wisdom of the state dictate.

JAMES W. MARQUISS. The Edict of Nantes secured by Henry IV of France insured to the Huguenots of France political and civil liberty. In 1685 this precious law was repealed by Louis XIV of France and the resulting persecution drove those good people to all parts of the world. Many found refuge in the colonies and especially did they settle in South Carolina. Among these were the Marquiss families from whom comes the subject of this article. He was born in Missouri, on December 26, 1841, the son of Jacob and Esther (Ellis) Marquiss, natives of North Carolina. The father died when our subject was a year old. The mother then came across the plains with her sons in 1847, using ox teams. Her people were prominent in the early colonial days and fought in the Revolution and the other wars of those times. One of her progenitors came over in the Mayflower. Shortly after arriving in the Willamette valley, Mrs. Marquiss married Mr. George Jeffry, who had crossed the plains in 1846. They took a donation claim and our subject was reared on the same. In November, 1861, Mr. Marquiss enlisted in Company C, First Oregon Cavalry and served for three years. He was stationed in southern Oregon and was a non-commissioned officer. Following the war he located in what is now Morrow county, Oregon, then Umatilla, and farmed and raised stock from 1865 to 1879, having a homestead. He sold his homestead in 1879 and bought the place where he now dwells. He has two hundred and forty acres and tills about thirty-five acres. He has an orchard of seven acres and raises much stock.

In 1866, Mr. Marquiss married Miss Adeline Adams, a native of Germany. She died in 1901. On November 12, 1901, Mr. Marquiss married Mrs. Clara M. Allison, a native of Pennsylvania. Her father, James D. Shaw, was a native of Scotland, and came to the United States in 1840. He married a Scotch lass, who came to the United States in the early forties, the wedding occurring in 1845. Mr. Marquiss has no brothers living, but has three half sisters, Ellen Kuney, Jennie Stanley and Annie Maxfield. By his first wife, Mr. Marquiss has three children: Frank, a farmer near Goldendale, Washington; Lester, at home; and Ada, the widow of A. A. Urquhart, and living in The Dalles. Mrs. Marquiss has one child by her former marriage, Frank, an oil operator in West Virginia. Mr. Marquiss is a Republican and displays a zeal and activity commendable in the interests of his party. Mrs. Marquiss has the following named brothers and sisters, William A., Elmer, Howard, Ira C., Robert H., Ella Anderson, Sarah Kennedy, and Addie Kneeder. Mrs. Marquiss is a member of the O. E. S. Mr. Marquiss is a man of excellent standing and has wrought with industry and wisdom here for the general progress.

SAMUEL L. BROOKS, one of the earliest and most enterprising of the west coast pioneers of Oregon, is at present a retired merchant residing at The Dalles, Oregon. He was born November 8, 1830, at Burton, Geauga county, Ohio, the son of Linus and Eliza (Humiston) Brooks. The father was a native of the same town and county, and his father, Jonathan, came from Cheshire, Connecticut, with the first surveying party in 1798. With him he brought a quantity of apple seeds and raised the first apples in that county. The preserved genealogy of the Brooks family dates back more than two centuries.

Henry and John Brooks, brothers, came from Cheshire, England, in 1660, to New Haven county, Connecticut, where they located on lands given them by the Crown. Laying out a townsite on the tract they conferred upon it the name of Cheshire in honor of their old home. It is presumed that these brothers were unmarried on their arrival in the new world. Henry was united in marriage to Miss Martha Hotchkiss, and to them a son was born in 1679 to whom they gave the name of Thomas. Thomas Brooks, Jr., son of Thomas Brooks, Sr., was born in 1706. He married a Miss Desire ———, and to them were born Joshua, in 1730; Deborah, February 5, 1732; Thomas, December 2, 1733; David, July 7, 1736; Samuel, April 4, 1738; Desire, February 9, 1740; Jonathan, Sr., August 25, 1743; Isaac, August 24, 1745; Gideon, August 29, 1747. Jonathan Brooks, son of Thomas and Desire Brooks, was married, and to them were born Gideon, Joshua, Jonathan, Ichabod and Amadeas. Jonathan was born July 25, 1777. These of the Brooks family were born in the old home town of Cheshire, Connecticut. Jonathan Brooks, Jr., was married to Miss Rachael Clark, in Burton, Ohio, who was born July 22, 1789; their marriage took place in 1802. Their family consisted of three sons and one daughter; Selden, born April 2, 1803; Linus, born April 25, 1805, and married Miss Eliza Humiston, April 19, 1827; Lovira, born August 13, 1809, and died in 1891. Jonathan was born October 7, 1820. Miss Rachael Clark Brooks was the daughter of Captain Ephraim Clark, of Revolutionary fame, and died September 4, 1852.

The children born to Linus and Eliza Brooks were: Samuel Linus, on November 8, 1830, who is the immediate subject of this sketch; Eliza Maria, on February 20, 1835; Edgar Selden, on January 31, 1838; and Henry Jonathan, on March 7, 1842. Samuel Linus was married to Miss Anna Pentland, on August 7, 1872, and they have no children. Eliza Maria was married to William E. Brainard and they have two sons, Sherman Humiston and Linus Brooks. Edgar Selden, who died on July 26, 1900, married Miss Emma Perkins, on May 5, 1870, and to them were born two daughters; Iva C., on August 18, 1873, now the wife of Eugene J. Collins, of Dufur, Oregon; and Emma Seldena, on July 26, 1877, now deceased, having been the wife of William Hillis. Henry Jonathan married Miss Mary Rhodes, in 1870, and they were the parents of three children, named as follows: Wilson Henry Linus, born April 6, 1871, and died September 30, 1897; Lavina, deceased; and Esther Eliza, born June 20, 1882. Henry Jonathan Brooks died January 18, 1901. His wife, Mary, who was born October 8, 1854, died May 15, 1888.

The mother of our subject, Eliza (Humiston) Brooks, was born at Wallingford, Connecticut, and died October 11, 1888, at the age of eighty-four years. At different times, she journeyed from New Haven, Connecticut, by team, to the Pacific slope. Until he was seven years old Samuel L. Brooks was reared in Ohio, going thence with his parents to Illinois. With his parents, he crossed the plains in 1850 with ox teams, being six months on the road. Locating on the south part of French prairie, Oregon, the father filed on a section of land, and they were the second white family to settle in that vicinity. The town of Brooks, named in honor of our subject's father, stands today where their first house was built. Until 1863 our subject remained with his parents, with the exception of about a year passed in California, mining. Mr. Brooks was revenue collector for eastern Oregon of the district of Oregon, from March, 1866, to August, 1870. He then entered into a partnership with E. B. McFarland, now of Portland, engaging in the general merchandise business, which partnership was continued until about 1877. Owing to the failure of his health he sold out and with a partner purchased The Dalles city water works, later selling the same to the city. He has always taken a deep interest in educational affairs, and was one of the incorporators of the Wasco Independent Academy and a director during the twelve years of its existence. He was, also, the incorporator of the Wasco Warehouse Company and was interested in the same for several years. Between 1890 and 1892 he was prominently identified with the Portland & Astoria Navigation Company. At present Mr. Brooks is retired from active business life.

August 7, 1872, our subject was married, at The Dalles, to Anna Pentland, a native of England, born May 26, 1842. When eight years of age she came to the United States with her parents. Her father, Robert, was a native of England, who crossed the plains in 1845. He installed the first water works in the city of Portland, Oregon, and later, in 1862, removed to The Dalles, where he put in the original water system. He removed to the Willamette valley where he died July 5, 1887. Our subject and his wife are members of the Congregational church, and reside in a handsome, two-story residence at the corner of Third and Union streets.

JOSEPH W. WARD is to be numbered with the oldest pioneers of the Wasco country, and he is descended from a family of pioneers. He is at present handling a thriving business in Dufur, where he does undertaking and deals in building material. He is also interested in sawmilling, and owns seven hundred and sixty acres of choice wheat land besides two hundred and forty acres of timber land. He has a choice cottage residence in Dufur and a large one story business block, where he has his headquarters. Mr. Ward is a successful business man, as well as a substantial citizen and valuable member of society. He was born in Noble county, Ohio, on February 25, 1852, the son of William L. and Hannah (Potts) Ward. The father was born in Ohio, his parents was also natives of that state, and his grandparents were born in Ireland. The mother descends from an old and prominent Pennsylvania Dutch family. Pottsville, of that state, was named from Mr. Pott, who came from Germany and was a blacksmith for General Washington at Valley Forge, in Revolutionary days. The first coal in Pennsylvania was discovered on the old Pott homestead. Mrs. Ward was born in Ohio. Our subject was brought by his parents across the plains with ox teams in 1859. Settlement was made near where Dufur now stands, on Fifteenmile creek. Later they rented a farm on Eightmile, then they went to The Dalles. After that they spent some time in Vancouver, Washington, and later dwelt for seven years in the Hood River valley. The old homestead there is now owned by Mr. Button. Our subject attended the schools which his father helped to establish, assisting also to erect the buildings, both on Eightmile and Hood Rivers. Then the father took land ten miles out from The Dalles and there died, December 28, 1897. He was born on March 26, 1826. The mother now lives in The Dalles. In 1870, our subject started for himself and assisted to construct the telegraph line from Umatilla to Walla Walla, the first one in this part of the country. In 1873, he was one of six who took up land out from Dufur on the ridge. The stockmen laughed at them, but they soon demonstrated that the land would produce the best of wheat and the result is that Mr. Ward has continued in the enterprise, until he is today one of the well-to-do men of the county. In September, 1899, he took up his present business in Dufur and since then has resided here.

At The Dalles, on March 21, 1887, Mr. Ward married Mrs. Josephine E. Endersby, who was born in Iowa, on March 30, 1862, the daughter of Hamlin Starkey, a native of Pennsylvania and descended from an old and prominent American family. He died in Iowa, in 1898. He had married Sophia Fee, a native of Pennsylvania and descended from French Huguenots. She died in Oklahoma, in 1901. Mr. Ward has four brothers, Frederick H., John C., Samuel P., and Victor T., and two sisters, Mrs. Alice Kelly and Mrs. Margaret J. Neal, deceased. Mrs. Ward has four brothers and one sister, John L., William B., Grant F., George W., and Mrs. Anna Truitt. Mr. Ward is a member of the I. O. O. F. and the A. O. U. W., while his wife belongs to the United Artisans and the Women of Woodcraft. To Mr. and Mrs. Ward, four children have been born, Joseph W., Edward L., John S., and Violet M. By her former marriage Mrs. Ward has one child, Mary, the wife of James Robbins, who lives in Iowa.

WILL FITZPATRICK, a young and enterprising man of Shaniko, was born in San Joaquin county, California, on September 30, 1872. His father, William Fitzpatrick, a native of Illinois, came to California in 1850, crossing the plains with ox teams. He did mining a short time, then took up farming in Calaveras county, where he remained until 1887, and there our subject received the beginning of his education, the same being completed in Oregon. After leaving California at the date last mentioned, the family came to Douglas county, Oregon and did stock raising for two years. Then he came to the vicinity of Shaniko and engaged in sheep raising, renting land near Sherar's bridge. Later, they drove their flocks to Wallowa county where they bought land and continued until 1892. In 1899 they journeyed to Lewis county, Washington, and there the father lives on a ranch owned by our subject. The father married Sophronia Gaines, a native of New York, and living in Illinois at the time of her marriage. After finishing his school work, Will Fitzpatrick attended camp for his father for four years. In the same capacity he worked for George Young & Son about four years, and then rented sheep from H. C. Rooper of Antelope. A year later he took his share of the sheep to Washington and sold the same. In 1899 he bought a ranch of sixty acres in Lewis county and since that time, his father has been conducting that place. He was there one year himself and in the spring of 1904, came to Shaniko and bought a one fourth interest in the business Mr. Sanford owned. He had worked for Mr. Sanford some years previous. Later Mr. Fitzpatrick disposed of his interest in the establishment with Mr. Sanford.

On March 19, 1903, at Shaniko, Mr. Fitzpatrick married Margaret C. Moody, a native of North Carolina, whose father was born in North Carolina and mother in Tennessee. Mr. Fitzpatrick has one brother, George S., a farmer in Wallowa county, Oregon. Mrs. Fitzpatrick has three brothers, Frank, John and Grant in Tennessee. One child has been born to our subject and his wife, Elmer G.

Mr. Fitzpatrick is a member of the A. O. U. W. and the Degree of Honor. He is a Republican in politics and is a progressive, public spirited man.

ROY D. BUTLER is the present postmaster at Boyd, Oregon, where also he is doing a good business as a general merchant. He is one of the younger business men of Wasco county, who have achieved a good success here and he has shown a stamina and reliability that commend him to all. He was born in Warren county, Illinois, on January 10, 1874, the son of Polk and Dell (Coy) Butler, natives of Indiana. The father's parents were born in Ohio and came as early pioneers to Indiana. Our subject's parents now live at Dufur and own a fine farm a few miles southeast from that town. The family came to Wasco county when our subject was three years of age and he was educated in the graded schools of Dufur. After that, he taught in the Boyd district one year and then purchased an interest in a store which he now owns, from C. H. Southern. Later he bought out his partner entirely and since that time has been conducting a good store here. He has a well assorted stock of general merchandise and is an accommodating and substantial business man.

On November 14, 1902, Mr. Butler married Miss Ethel Southern, who was born in Wasco county, the daughter of C. H. and Emma (Rice) Southern, mentioned elsewhere in this volume. Mr. Butler has the following named brothers and sisters, Omer, Earl and Mrs. Maude Griffin. One child has been born to our subject and his wife, Agnes.

Mr. Butler is a member of the I. O. O. F. and his wife belongs to the Methodist church. He is a Democrat in politics and is frequently found at the conventions. He is now serving as clerk of the Boyd school board and is a progressive and public minded citizen.

CHARLES H. SOUTHERN is one of the pioneers of the Boyd country where he has dwelt constantly since coming to Oregon. He is a well known business man and property owner and one of the prominent citizens of the place. He was born in Iowa, on May 14, 1855, the son of Martin and Elizabeth (Bolton) Southern, natives of Virginia. The father's parents were also born in Virginia. The mother came from an old Virginia family. In the fall of 1871, the family came to Oregon and settled in Wasco county, near Boyd. The father died on November 8, 1877, in the house where our subject dwells at the present time. The mother died on May 5, 1900. Our subject always lived with his parents and upon his father's death he purchased the old homestead from his mother, which is a residence and eighty acres where he now lives, and four hundred acres of choice wheat land adjoining. Charles H. was educated in the place where the family lived in his early days and was married on November 4, 1878, at The Dalles. The lady of his choice was Miss Emma Rice, who was born in Lane county, Oregon. Her father, Horace Rice, was a native of Ohio and his father died when he was a small lad. He came to Oregon with his mother and brothers and sisters in 1851. His mother had married Beckwith Cook. She died in Polk county, Oregon, in 1874. Mr. Southern has no full brothers living, one half brother, William, two sisters, Mrs. Ella Rice and Mrs. Lenna Seeley, and two half sisters, Mrs. Jane Mann and Mrs. Minerva Wanamaker. Mr. and Mrs. Southern have two children, Ethel, wife of Roy D. Butler, a merchant at Boyd and mentioned elsewhere in this work, and Harry dwelling at home. Mrs. Southern has the following named brothers and sisters, George, Austin C., Mrs. Etta Waterman and Mrs. Nellie Mann.

Mr. and Mrs. Southern are both devout members of the Methodist church while he holds the office of trustee. He also belongs to the W. W. Politically, he is a Republican and active in the support of the principles of his party, being frequently at the conventions and also taking a keen interest in the campaigns. He has been school director many terms and is a zealous supporter of educational advancement. Mr. Southern laid out the townsite of Boyd in 1895 but he had been in business there since 1889 as a general merchant. About 1899, he sold his store to his son-in-law and now gives his attention to the oversight of his property interests.

JOSEPH W. MAYES is a popular young business man of Hood River, where he, with his brother, mentioned elsewhere in this work, is at the head of a nice butcher and meat market business. He is a man of excellent standing, and has won his position by virtue of his uprightness, his geniality and his integrity. In business, he is careful and a zealous worker and the wisdom of his methods is evident by the success he is winning. He was born in Kansas, on March 27, 1873 and came to Oregon with his parents, who are mentioned elsewhere in this work. His education was completed by a course in a Portland business college and he has since given close attention to business operations for himself. In 1893 he came to Hood River with his mother but did not take up permanent residence here until later. The meat business which he owns now with his brother, was started by Clyde Bonney, who sold to his father, A. A. Bonney. He, in turn, sold to the Mayes Brothers, in May, 1903 and since then they have personally operated the same. Previous to that, our subject had charge of the Byrnett dairy ranch at White Salmon, Washington.

On December 31, 1892, Mr. Mayes married Miss Myrtle Horner, the wedding occurring at Hood River. She was born in Heppner, Oregon, the daughter of Daniel and Alice (Baker) Horner, natives of Iowa, and now dwelling in Heppner, where the father conducts a saddle store. Mrs. Horner's father was for many years a Methodist preacher, but he and his wife have both gone to their rewards in the world beyond. They were faithful and devout Christians and were instrumental in doing much good in their pilgrim journey. Mrs. Mayes has two brothers, Charles and John, and three sisters, Mrs. Maggie Emmerson, Mrs. Belle Parsons, and Nellie. Mr. Mayes is a member of the M. W. A., while he and his wife both belong to the Methodist church. He is a local preacher in the work and a fervent exhorter. Mr. Mayes is a man of the true ring and believes in a religion that is for week days as well as Sunday, in fact the faith that makes faithful. He has hosts of friends and is a hard worker both in business and in church matters, while in public matters and educational affairs, he is progressive and always allied on the side of right and principle.

WILLIAM D. RICHARDS, a substantial and progressive farmer of Wasco county, resides about nine miles southeast from The Dalles on Ferry Canyon road. He was born in Easton, Pennsylvania, on August 8, 1844, the son of Daniel and Mary S. (Raub) Richards, natives of the same country as our subject. The father's family were of English extraction and the mother descends from Pennsylvania Dutch. She now lives in Kansas and her husband died in Kansas, in 1878, near Silver Lake. William D. was educated and reared in Pennsylvania and there remained until thirty-four years of age, having learned the carpenter trade in the meantime. He followed that craft and teaming and farming until he left Pennsylvania in 1879 for Kansas, where he operated his mother's farm for two years. Then he spent two years at carpentering and in 1883, came thence to Oregon, settling in The Dalles, where he worked at carpentering for five years. In the meantime, he had taken a government claim upon which the family resided. He gradually improved the same while he was continuing in town, until 1888 when he gave up carpenter work and came out to the ranch. Since that time, he has given his attention entirely to farming and has made a marked success of the same. He has purchased two farms adjoining the home place and owns altogether seven hundred and thirty-five acres, five hundred of which are good wheat land. The entire estate bears the marks of thrift and enterprise and in all the improvements, good taste is manifested. His residence is a tasty story and a half cottage in neat surroundings and everything comports with the same in neatness and good taste.

In 1867, while in Pennsylvania, Mr. Richards married Miss Abbie Hummel, a native of New Jersey. She died on May 30, 1879, in Kansas. Her father was Elijah Hummel, a native of Pennsylvania. On January 26, 1882, at Topeka, Kansas, Mr. Richards married Miss Abbie J. Adams, who was born in Loudon, new Hampshire, the daughter of Jonas Jefferson and Betsey K. (Foster) Adams. The father was a native of Carlisle, Massachusetts, and came from the old colonial Adams family, well known in American history. The mother was born in Tewksbury, Massachusetts, and came from an old and prominent colonial family of English extraction. Mr. Richards has two brothers, Jacob T. and Robert A., and one sister, Mary S. Frost. Mrs. Richards has three brothers, George F., Samuel F., and Daniel J. and three sisters, Julia A. Hayward, Mary A. Warren, and Emma E. Cutler. By his first marriage, Mr. Richards has five children; Mary C., wife of Clarence M. Sisson, a school teacher at Palouse, Washington; Susan E., wife of John M. Mann, a farmer in Wasco county; Lillie A., wife of Richard E. Howarth, at University Park, Portland; Harry R., who operates his father's farm; and Edith A., the wife of J. Frank Howarth, a printer at The Dalles.

Mr. and Mrs. Richards are both zealous and active members of the Methodist church and he is a steward and trustee for the past ten years in that denomination. Politically, Mr. Richards is a stanch Prohibitionist and ran for state senator in 1904.

PETER A. KIRCHHEINER is now handling a furniture business at Antelope, Oregon. He also handles general house furnishing goods and is doing a very nice business. He was born in Denmark, on September 25, 1862, the son of Alexis and Marie (Peterson) Kirchheiner, both natives of Denmark. The mother is still living there but the father died in 1901, aged seventy-one. He was a graduate of a teacher's seminary and followed the work of the educator during his life. After completing the public schools, our subject took a course in the Handelskole, a commercial college in Aalberg, Denmark, after which he served five years in the grocery business. Then he came to the United States in 1883 and journeyed from New York to California direct. Soon after, he came to Sherman county and took a pre-emption and timber culture at the head of Finnegan Canyon. Having no capital whatever, it was a time of much hardship and labor. Nine years later, he sold out and came to Antelope and engaged in the blacksmithing and wagonmaking business with his brother, Alexis M. F., who is now living in Prairie City. They were together two and one half years when he purchased the business and conducted it until 1902, in which year he sold out and engaged in his present business.

On December 15, 1895, at Portland, Mr. Kirchheiner married Mrs. Florence I. Glenn, who was born in the Willamette valley, the daughter of John and Diona (Strickland) Howell, natives of Oregon. The mother died at Wamic. Our subject has two brothers, Carl, a bookbinder in Chicago and Alexis M. F., an attorney at law in Prairie City. He also has four sisters; Agnetha, the wife of Nicolai Stalhr, a merchant in Forest Grove; Emma, wife of Jems Clausen, a farmer in Denmark; Gurli, a trained nurse in Denmark, and Vitta, with her mother in the old home. Mrs. Kirchheiner has four brothers and one sister; Delmar, who owns a livery stable at Shaniko; Sylvester, in Nome, Alaska; William, a farmer in Crook county; Alfred, a sheep man; Lizzie, wife of John Nester, Portland-Albina, O. R. & N. railroad conductor. Mr. and Mrs. Kirchheiner have no children by this marriage but by her former marriage she has one, Guy S., who is at home.

Our subject is a member of the A. F. & A. M., being junior warden and was secretary several years. He also belongs to the O. E. S. and is secretary. His wife is past matron of the same. In politics, Mr. Kirchheiner is a Republican and quite active. He takes keen interest in everything that is for the improvement and advancement of the country and is a good substantial citizen. He and his wife are both members of the Lutheran church.

MARTIN M. WATERMAN, who resides about seven miles southeast from The Dalles, is one of the most prominent and successful agriculturists, stockmen, and business men of Wasco county. Few men have made as brilliant a record as he has and an epitome of his career will be very interesting to the residents of this county.

Martin M. Waterman was born in Jefferson, Marion county, Oregon, on July 24, 1870, the son of Ezekiel and Nancy (Smith) Waterman, who are mentioned elsewhere in this volume. He was educated in the public schools in The Dalles, and then completed this important part of his life's training in the Wasco Academy and a Portland business college. At the early age of sixteen, he was permitted by his father to take charge of two farms on Eightmile creek, and such was his success in handling them that the father came from The Dalles to join him in the enterprise the next year. That venture marked the beginning of young Waterman's successful career and from that time until the present he has been known as one of the brightest and most successful of business operators in Wasco county. His tact, his ability, his energy and his untiring care of all enterprises under his hand account for this achievement which he has won so plainly, and it is not in any measure the result of "luck" or favorable circumstances as the idler would fondly dream. The next year after his success on the two farms of his father, young Waterman used the first thousand dollars which he had saved from his labors to purchase an estate of seven hundred acres, assuming an indebtedness for the balance of the purchase price. Thus at the age of seventeen, he started out as a farmer and land owner and he has added by purchase until he has now one thousand and fifty acres of choice land. The next year Mr. Waterman married Miss Etta Rice, who was born on Fifteenmile creek, on July 26, 1868, the sister of Mrs. C. H. Southern, who is mentioned elsewhere in this volume. Two children have been born to this union, Ira L. and Lelah. Together Mr. and Mrs. Waterman took hold of the enterprises at hand and they have wrought a work that deserves the best of credit. Mr. Waterman raises diversified crops and gives especial attention to the industry of hog raising and breeding. He captured every prize on swine in classes entered at the Oregon state fair at Salem in 1903, much to the discomfort of many of the older hog breeders in various sections of the state. He breeds the O. I. C. hogs and has the boar, Ohio, which weighs eight hundred and sixty pounds, and is one of the finest animals in the west. He markets about three hundred hogs each year. He also raises fine thoroughbred Jerseys and has a choice herd of thirty head. In the spring of 1903, Mr. Waterman started a creamery on the ranch and now has a fine plant turning out about two hundred pounds per week. Unlike many, and indeed most, of the youth of the land, Mr. Waterman would not receive from his father any money besides what he earned, and the result is that he has a choice estate, all made by his own efforts and which is producing annual dividends that make him a goodly competence. His standing in the community is of the best and he is looked up to by all as a man of unusual ability and wisdom.

HON. J. NEWTON BURGESS, a popular and well known man in the state legislature of Oregon wherein he has made a splendid record, is no less favorably known and appreciated in business circles, being one of the heaviest stock handlers in eastern Oregon. He resides at Antelope and was born in Douglas county, Oregon, on March 5, 1872, his parents being Thomas and Ellen (Smith) Burgess, natives of Columbus, Ohio, and Douglas county, Oregon, respectively. They now dwell at The Dalles and are mentioned elsewhere in this volume. The father came to California via the isthmus in 1859 and followed mining several years in the Golden State, after which he journeyed to Idaho and Oregon, and engaged in the same business. Later, he settled in Douglas county and became interested in stock dealing. He married in 1871, and shortly after our subject was born came to eastern Oregon. In 1873 he settled at Bakeoven and there remained until 1902, conducting a wayside inn for travelers and handling stock. In the year last mentioned he sold out his interests there and moved to The Dalles. Our subject grew up on the farm and was educated in the Wasco Independent Academy and the Portland Business College. When seventeen, he became a partner with his father and they conducted the business under the firm name of T. Burgess & Son, handling on the average, a thousand head of cattle each year. Our subject looked after the books and the outside business, while the father conducted the home ranch and the inn which is known far and near as one of the choicest places to give entertainment to travelers in this part of the state. On account of that, it enjoyed an exceedingly large patronage. In 1895 our subject bought a section of land six miles west of Antelope creek and has been operating there largely. They milk at present sixty cows and it is a profitable enterprise. Mr. Burgess lives in Antelope and in addition to his stock business, conducts a meat market. Mr. Burgess simply oversees these various interests and gives a good portion of his time to buying and selling stock. In the first part of last year he shipped over twenty-five thousand sheep, besides much other stuff and is known as one of the most active stock buyers in eastern Oregon.

On May 10, 1897, at Salem, Oregon, Mr. Burgess married Miss Mary M. Ashby, who was born in Walla Walla, the daughter of William and Nancy M. Ashby, who now live in California. The father crossed the plains with ox teams in early days and was engaged in stock raising for many years. Mr. Burgess has one sister, Laura, the wife of Hon. Dan J. Malarkey, an attorney in Portland and state senator. Mr. and Mrs. Burgess have two children, Ralph and Madeline.

Mr. Burgess is a member of the A. F. & A. M., having been past master for two terms. He also belongs to the R. A. M. Politically he is a Republican, and very prominent and influential. He was elected representative to the state senate from Crook, Klamath, Lake and Wasco counties in 1902. Since then, this territory has been re-districted and in June, 1904, he was returned to the legislature from Wasco county. He has shown himself a man of force and ability in the halls of legislation and has fostered some very important measures. Mr. Burgess is president of the Wasco Southern Telephone Company, which has its headquarters at Antelope and he has been a moving spirit in this enterprise. Personally, Mr. Burgess is a generous minded man and has won the esteem and confidence of all who know him and he is as widely known as any man in this part of Oregon. He is generous, public minded and ever on the alert to foster any movement which is for the welfare of the country. In business, he is aggressive, yet careful and has the executive ability to put through any enterprise that he takes up.

FRANK IRVINE is one of the leading business men of Wasco county and now stands at the head of a large general merchandise establishment at Antelope, which his skill and progressiveness have made one of the best in this part of the county. He has an extensive town and country trade which is growing very rapidly. Mr. Irvine is known as a man of stamina and principle and his business is conducted in such a manner that he wins and retains the friendship of all who come in contact with him.

Frank Irvine was born on his father's farm two miles northwest from The Dalles, on October 24, 1860, his parents being John and Catherine (Keith) Irvine, the father a native of Indiana and the mother descended from an old southern family. The father's parents came from Scotland and he died at The Dalles in 1902. The mother died at The Dalles, in 1898. She and her husband both came to Oregon in 1852. He came alone, being sixteen years of age, and she made the journey in company with her parents. They settled near The Dalles and later moved to southern Oregon. Our subject's father remained near The Dalles and later took a donation claim which is now owned by a man named Allen. Mr. Irvine lived on the place some years and was there during the Indian troubles. He spent one year at the Cascades and also was occupied in the Snake war. About 1895, he sold his farm to Ed Kelsay and Joles Brothers. Kelsay soon sold the place to Mr. Allen. The elder Mr. Irvine had poor health the latter part of his life and went to California, Klamath county, Oregon, and other places to recuperate. Our subject was educated in the district schools and in the Wasco Independent Academy, after which he entered the employment of the O. R. & N. Following that, we find him engaged with Wingate & Company, and French & McFarland. In 1891 he came to Antelope and worked for Bolton & Company two months. Then he entered into business with Edward Wingate, the firm being known as Wingate & Company. Later, Mr. Irvine purchased his partner's interest and has conducted the business alone since. He carries a fifteen thousand dollar stock of well selected general merchandise and caters so thoroughly to the interests and wants of the people of the town and surrounding country that he has a very extensive and substantial patronage. He is a business man of ability and is also public spirited and broad minded so that he gives generously of his time and attention to every enterprise that is for the building up of the country.

In February, 1882, at The Dalles, Mr. Irvine married Lydia M. Walker, a native of California and the daughter of William H. and Julia Walker, both now deceased. The father was a native of Missouri and came to California in early days. Mr. Irvine has one sister, Alice, the wife of Henry Lorenzen, who lives near The Dalles. Mrs. Irvine has one brother, Jephtha, who lives at St. Helens, Oregon, and three half brothers, Orville, Clarence and Preston, near Portland. Mr. and Mrs. Irvine have one child, Bertha E.

Mr. Irvine is a member of the A. F. & A. M., the I. O. O. F., the A. O. U. W. and the W. W. He is past grand of Virtue lodge, No. 40, of the I. O. O. F. and has twice been representative to the grand lodge of that order. Politically he is a Republican and takes especial interest in school matters. He has also served considerable time as city treasurer and is now a member of the council. In addition to the business above mentioned, Mr. Irvine has a half interest in a store at Ashwood, Crook county, known as the Irvine & Hamilton Mercantile House.

MICHAEL DOYLE, one of the popular and intelligent farmers and stockmen of Wasco county, dwells about seven miles out from The Dalles, on Chenoweth creek, where he has a fine estate and a large band of cattle. He was born in Chambersburg, Pennsylvania, on June 23, 1842, the son of Patrick and Eleanor (Graham) Doyle. The father was born in Pennsylvania and his father was a native of Ireland, while his mother was a Welsh woman. The mother of our subject was also born in Pennsylvania, she, her husband, and Michael, our subject, were all natives of Franklin county. Her parents came from Scotland and her father fought in the Revolution. He was David N. Graham, from the old Highland clan of Graham. Our subject's father and mother died in Illinois, in 1879 and 1883, respectively. In March, 1878, Michael Doyle landed in Oregon. When eleven he had migrated from his native state to Illinois with his parents. There he obtained a good education and for several years he taught school. When he came to Oregon, he gave his attention to farming, taking a homestead where he now resides. He operated a dairy of forty cows until recently, and now he devotes his entire attention to raising cattle. He winters about one hundred and fifty head usually.

In October, 1867, at Geneseo, Illinois, Mr. Doyle married Miss Sylinda Beers. Her father, George F. Beers, was born in New Jersey, October 11, 1824, married Miss Mary E. Roberts, on April 16, 1846, and in 1878 came to The Dalles. He was a substantial man, held many positions of trust, and died in The Dalles, in 1893. He was universally mourned, and the entire business of The Dalles was closed during the afternoon of his funeral. He was prominent in church circles and in Sunday school work and did a world of good by his faithful and conscientious labors. His widow resides in The Dalles. Her father, John Roberts, died November 18, 1878, aged seventy-nine. He had married Susanna Gates, and during his life had labored faithfully in the Master's work, and went to rest sustained and soothed by the faith of the true Christian. He had previously commended his children to his heavenly Father, and his only regret was to leave his beloved companion.

Mr. Doyle has the following named brothers and sisters; John, who died in Andersonville prison, a member of Company I, One Hundred and Twelfth Illinois Infantry; William; Mrs. Nellie VanWinkle; Mrs. Evaline Lewis, Mary and Rebecca, deceased. Mrs. Doyle has one brother, David, and two sisters, Permelia Thomas and Elizabeth Joles, deceased. Mrs. Doyle's parents came to this country with the Joles family and were pioneers. Her father was with Samuel Brooks for ten years, the firm being Brooks & Beers, general merchants, and they conducted the feed yard now owned by Smith & Allen. He was for many years city marshall of The Dalles and was a prominent citizen until his death. Mr. and Mrs. Doyle have five children, named as follows; Ralph E. and Charles H., both at home; Mary E., the wife of A. Y. Marsh, mentioned in this work; Edna M., the wife of Adam Kauffman, of The Dalles; and Ina.

Mr. Doyle is a staunch Democrat and frequently in the conventions. He and Mr. Marquiss cut the logs and built the little log school house in district, No. 10. He has always shown a marked interest in building up the country and advancing educational interests. He was road supervisor for ten years.

JOHN W. ELTON, who resides six miles out from The Dalles, is one of the prosperous farmers of Wasco county. He was born in Montgomery county, Missouri, on August 27, 1848, the son of John W. and Louisa J. (Pennington) Elton. The father was born in Missouri, and his parents in Maryland. His grandfather was a native of France and came to America with the French troops and fought in the Revolution for the independence of the colonies. Our subject's father died when this son was eight. The mother was born in Kentucky and now lives in Missouri, the wife of William Jasper Skinner. John W. was reared and educated in Missouri and Wisconsin, to which latter state he went in 1865. In 1870 he came west to Oregon, settling in Washington county. For five years he did farming there and also wrought in the logging camps. In 1876, he came to Wasco county and then went to Klickitat county, Washington, where he lived for eight years. Then he sold his homestead there and bought the place where he now lives. It consists of one hundred and twenty acres, ten of which are bearing orchard. As the soil is especially adapted for cherries, he is planning to plant many more trees of the best varieties. He also raises prunes and peaches and berries. Last year he sold one thousand boxes of fruit besides much dried. He also raises fine blooded Jerseys and some hogs, and is a prosperous man.

On May 19, 1875, at Cornelius, Oregon, Mr. Elton married Miss Mary J. Davis, who was born on "Five Oaks Farm," in Washington county, Oregon, on August 30, 1856. The farm was taken by her mother's father in 1843. Mrs. Elton's parents were Andrew J. and Catherine (Zachary) Davis. The father was born in Illinois and came from an old American family. His father was in the war of 1812, and some members of the family have been in all the struggles from the earliest colonial days until the war in the Philippines. The mother was a native of Texas and came to Oregon with her parents in 1843. Her father took a donation claim called the "Five Oaks" and there she was married. Mr. Elton has the following named brothers, Thomas J., Samuel H., W. Albert, Robert T., and James A., and two half brothers, David L. and John W. Heebner, and two sisters, Rebecca Holder, and Jane Mounts. Mrs. Elton has three brothers, Ralph A., James, Albert, and one sister, Zillah Metsdorff. To Mr. and Mrs. Elton, the following named children have been born; Mary E., superintendent of the telephone office in The Dalles; Minnie J., a teacher in the primary department of the schools in The Dalles, and the possessor of a life diploma from the state of Oregon; James, graduate of the Pullman college and now civil engineer at Mace, Idaho, and formerly a noted athlete in college circles, and a veteran of the Philippine war of Company L, Second Oregon Infantry; Albert J., a student at the state university at Eugene; Eugene R., a mining man in Baker City; Ruby C., aged nine; and Ruth, aged six. Mrs. Elton's grandmother on her mother's side was Zillah Grant, a cousin of the late U. S. Grant. Mr. Elton is a member of the A. F. & A. M., of the I. O. O. F., and of the W. W. Politically he is a socialist and nominee of his party for state senator.

In 1904, Mr. Elton went to the World's Fair at St. Louis as a representative to the National Good Roads Convention, he being an enthusiastic promoter of good roads. Also, he wished to study concerning building and architecture, being a building contractor, and he had the pleasure of meeting many noted men in that line, from whom he received much profit. To make the journey more enjoyable, Mr. Elton visited his mother at Jonesburg, Missouri, and the occasion was utilized for a family reunion and four generations were represented, there being forty-eight relatives at the meeting. Mr. Elton was much gratified to find all of the voters of the family on both sides ardent Socialists, and good expounders of the doctrines of that growing party. However, he returned to his pleasant western home, more than ever satisfied with the bountiful resources and good things Nature has strewed here with a lavish hand.

AUGUSTUS HIXSON, who is owner and operator of the Antelope livery stable at Antelope, Oregon, was born in Clinton county, Ohio, on August 10, 1867. His parents, Albert and Elizabeth (Lane) Hixson, were natives of Ohio and Indiana, respectively. The father's parents were born in Ohio also and followed farming and stock raising. He died in Illinois when our subject was six years old. The mother, after her first husband's death, married Isaac Robinson, who died two years later. Then she married William Borthwick and they now reside on a farm in Pike county, Illinois. Our subject began life for himself early, being but thirteen years of age when he went out to work. He was thus employed until twenty, then rented land for himself in Illinois. Eleven years later, he came to this country and took a homestead two miles south from Antelope, that being in January, 1899. In August, 1900, he bought out William Ashby's stable in Antelope and since has given his personal attention to the same. He still owns his farm, which is devoted largely to the production of hay. Mr. Hixson owns twenty head of horses and in addition to doing general livery business, operates the stage from Shaniko to Antelope. He is a careful and skillful horseman and is doing a good business.

In 1888, Mr. Hixson married Nellie Spencer, in Pike county, Illinois. Mrs. Hixson was born in Indiana, the daughter of John and Emily (Biggs) Spencer, natives of Indiana and Ohio, respectively, and now residing in Wasco county, Oregon. Our subject has two brothers, Charles and Isaac, who are farmers near Antelope and two half brothers, Fred Robinson, a farmer in Illinois and Omar Borthwick, living near Antelope. Mrs. Hixson has two brothers, Ralph, in Antelope, and William in Oklahoma territory. She also has four sisters; Inez, wife of Bert Fox, in Kansas; Mamie, wife of Charles Hixson, of Antelope; Leona, the wife of Harry Coleman; and Lela, single, with her parents. Mr. and Mrs. Hixson have six children, Albert, Fern, Iva, Augustus, Arthur, and Nellie. Our subject's father served several years in the Civil war. Mr. Hixson is a member of the I. O. O. F., of which he is past grand of his home lodge and a lodge in Illinois. He has also been delegate to the grand lodge of the Rebekahs and his wife is noble grand of that order at the present time, both being members. He belongs to the A. O. U. W. and is past M. W. of the order, having also been a delegate to the grand lodge. Politically, he is a staunch Democrat, though not especially active. Mrs. Hixson was delegate to the grand lodge of the degree of honor in 1904. He and his wife are members of the Methodist church.

OSMER W. COOK, who resides on Three-mile creek seven miles south from The Dalles, was born in Iowa, on October 30, 1847. His parents were Seeley M. and Nancy (Rice) Cook, natives of New York. The father's father was born in Connecticut and his mother in Maine. He now lives in Jefferson, Oregon. His father, the grandfather of our subject, was a patriot of the war of 1812. Osmer W. was raised principally in the Willamette valley whither he came with his parents in 1852, crossing the plains with ox teams. The father selected a donation claim there and this son remained with him until twenty-five years of age when he crossed the mountains to Wasco county. Two years later, he filed on the place where he now resides and since that time, has resided here. He has shown industry and substantiality during his life and now has a very fine property. It consists of a half section of land in the home place and eighty acres more a mile and a half distant. The farms are well improved and productive and Mr. Cook is one of the leading agriculturists in the county.

At the residence of the bride's parents, on October 12, 1873, Mr. Cook married Mary Gilliam, who was born in Polk county, on January 9, 1854. Her father, M. Porter Gilliam, was born in Missouri, Andrew county and came to the Willamette valley with ox teams across the plains in 1844. He took a donation claim in Polk county and his death occurred in Klickitat county, Washington, in March, 1888. During the Civil war, he was lieutenant in the Home Guards Company at The Dalles but was never called to the front. He was a veteran of the Cayuse Indian war and for many years was justice of the peace and school director at The Dalles. He was a prominent and influential man and in political matters was a strong Republican. He married Sarah C. Hagey, a native of Iowa, who dwells near our subject. Mr. Cook has one brother, Edward, and four sisters, Mrs. Chloe Laird, Mrs. Martha Longworth, Mrs. Eliza Connett, and Mrs. Harriett Connett. Mrs. Cook has three brothers and one sister, William A., Homer, Samuel, and Mrs. Jennie Bly. To our subject and his wife, eight children have been born; Jennie, wife of Frank Moore, at Boyd; Nettie M., wife of George Mann, at The Dalles; Grace, wife of Frank B. Friedley in Hood River valley; Charles E., a farmer adjacent; Ehrman, at Hood River; William M., in The Dalles; Annie M., at home, aged twenty; and Florence, at home, aged thirteen.

Politically Mr. Cook is a good strong Republican and interested in the questions of the day. His wife belongs to the Methodist church and is superintendent of the Sunday school. It is said that Gilliam county is named from Mrs. Cook's father's uncle and a more extended account of the matter is made in the historical portion of this work.

ALEXANDER FRASER. True it is that no one can travel through the civilized world without meeting in every portion the sturdy sons of Caledonia. True also, that the bravest soldiers, the brightest scholars and the most zealous pioneers come from the stanch race who have, with every race of people, and on their native hills, made history for the world. America owes much in many ways to Scotland's sons and many of our best citizens are descended from these people. It is our pleasant task at this time to be permitted to outline the career of one closely connected with the leading clans of Scotland.

Alexander Fraser was born in Scotland, on October 23, 1852. His father, John Fraser, was a direct descendant of the old Frasier clan and married Jane Holmes, also a native of Scotland. Both are now deceased, having passed away from the old home estate in Scotland. In 1872, after having received a good education, our subject came to Ottawa, Canada, and thence six years later, went to Manitoba. In this latter place, he served three years on the mounted police under Colonel J. F. McLeod. In May, 1881, he returned to Scotland and spent one year in the old familiar scenes and in visiting his friends. Then he came to the United States and located in Colorado where he was engaged in the smelting work for sometime. It was in the spring of 1884, that Mr. Fraser came on to Oregon and was in business in Portland for five years. Then he came to The Dalles country and bought the rights of a settler and homesteaded the place where he now resides about seven miles out from town on Three-mile creek. Since then, he has purchased other land and now has one hundred and seventy-five acres in cultivation. The principal crops are wheat and potatoes although he has a fine three acre orchard. He is a prosperous and thrifty man, and is well known through this portion of the county and is one of the most substantial men here. He is progressive and public minded and always takes a keen interest in every question of public import.

At Portland, Oregon, on October 14, 1884, Mr. Fraser married Miss Jessie McDonald, who was born in Victoria county, Cape Breton, Canada, on August 10, 1854. Her father, Angus McDonald, was born in Scotland, and descended from the old McDonald clan of the Highlands. He was an overseer on a large estate for many years. He married Isabella Stewart who was a member of another one of Scotland's most noted families. They are now both deceased, the mother passed away in Cape Breton, on December 16, 1882, and the father at Portland, Oregon, on April 12, 1884. Mr. Fraser has one brother, Thomas, and one sister, Mrs. H. Adams. Mrs. Fraser has also one brother, Murdoc D., and one sister, Mrs. Mary Carrel. Two children have been born to this marriage, John A., on September 30, 1885, and Jessie J., on January 4, 1887. Mr. and Mrs. Frasier are prominent and devoted members of the Methodist church and take a very lively interest in church matters. He is assistant superintendent of the Sunday school, and teaches a Bible class.

Politically Mr. Fraser is a Prohibitionist and an influential figure in his party. He was school director and road supervisor for many years. Three years previous to coming to the United States, Mr. Fraser followed the sea as fireman on the Anchor Line of steamers that plied from Glasgow to New York and from Glasgow to the Mediterranean ports. Our subject and his wife are genial and kind people, having many friends and by their wisdom, industry and wise management have made themselves well to do. They are progressive people and have labored well for the advancement of the community along every line, being especially interested in school matters and church work.

It should also be stated that Mr. Fraser secured the rural mail delivery for his district.

MAX LUEDDEMANN. The Antelope Herald, a bright and newsy sheet, well known in central Oregon, is now edited by the subject of this article. He also conducts the Madras Pioneer and owns a half interest in the Bend Bulletin. Mr. Lueddemann is a thorough and capable newspaper man and a very worthy citizen. He was born in Tuscumbia, Alabama, on September 29, 1873. His father, Guido Lueddemann, was born in Germany and came to the United States when seven years old with his parents, it being then 1848. His father, the grandfather of our subject, was an officer in the German army and settled on Lake Michigan, in Wisconsin, where he cleared a place out in the timber. When eighteen, our subject's father went to New York and enlisted to serve in the Civil War, continuing there for three years. After the war, he located in Tuscumbia, Alabama and engaged in the mercantile business, which occupied him there for thirty-six years. Then he retired from business and moved to Los Gatos, California, where he now resides. He married Joanna Chisholm, also a native of Tuscumbia. She was the granddaughter of John Seveir, the first governor of Tennessee. She is still living in Los Gatos, California. Our subject began studying in the graded schools of his native town and then completed a course in the Alabama University. After this, he graduated from the law department of the Cumberland University at Lebanon, Tennessee, and took up the practice of law at Tuscumbia for two years. Then he came west and bought the Antelope Herald. Later, he sent for his old friend, E. C. Goodwin, of Tuscumbia, who came here and took an interest in the business. They were together one year and since that time, Mr. Lueddemann has been conducting the business alone. In April, 1899, Mr. Lueddemann was appointed United States commissioner and was reappointed in 1903. He is also city recorder of Antelope.

On October 7, 1903, at Moscow, Idaho, Mr. Lueddemann married Miss Ollie McConnell, a native of Oregon, the wedding occurring at the home of the bride's parents, Hon. William J. and Louise (Brown) McConnell, natives of Ohio. Mr. Lueddemann has two brothers, Fred, at San Jose, California, and Ernest L., assistant cashier in French and Company's bank at The Dalles. He also has one sister, Freda, living with her parents. Mrs. Lueddemann has the following named brothers and sisters, Benjamin, William, Mamie, the wife of W. E. Borah, an attorney in Boise, Idaho, and Carrie, dwelling with her parents at Moscow. Mr. Lueddemann is a Republican in politics and has been delegate to the state and county conventions. He is very active and is well informed in political matters. Fraternally, he belongs to the A. F. & A. M. He and his wife are members of the Presbyterian church and are highly respected people.

J. ELMER RAND, a genial and pleasant business man of Hood River, who is conducting one of the leading mercantile establishments of the city, was born in Wisconsin, on May 16, 1865. His father, Robert Rand, mentioned elsewhere in this work, is a native of Ohio and married Miss Christina Glispie, a native of New York, who died in Portland, in 1900. Our subject lived in Wisconsin until sixteen, being employed on his father's farm, which adjoined West Salem, and in attending school. In 1880, he came with the balance of the family to Iowa, where he was engaged in agricultural work with his father for four years, when they all moved to Hood River. The father purchased a farm near town and was assisted by J. Elmer one year in tilling the same. Then our subject went to Portland and took a course in the business college. After that he clerked in the Merchants hotel, in Portland about one year, then he returned to Hood River and with his father opened a hardware store. The following year, they put in a large stock of general merchandise and conducted the business successfully until the sale to A. S. Blowers and Sons, which has already been mentioned in this volume. Upon being released from the store, Mr. Rand made a trip to the east in the interests of the Davidson Fruit Company, which occupied some months. Then he returned to Hood River and purchased the stock and business of G. D. Woodworth, a general merchant. Since that time, Mr. Rand has conducted the store and has a fine business at this time. He carries a very complete stock and is up-to-date in every respect. Mr. Rand is a stirring business man and has shown excellent ability in handling the enterprises which have been placed in his hands. He has the confidence of the people and is a public minded and progressive man. On November 1, 1904, Mr. Rand moved into E. L. Smith's handsome new brick building.

At Hood River, on September 12, 1892, occurred the marriage of Mr. Rand and Miss Georgiana Smith, the daughter of Ezra L. and Georgiana (Slocum) Smith, who are mentioned elsewhere in this work. Two children have been the fruit of this union, Everett L., and Anna L. Mr. Rand has three brothers, William F., Delbert E., and Ernest C. and one, sister, Mrs. Henrietta Rahm. Mr. Rand is a member of the A. O. U. W., the K. O. T. M. and the K. P. He has passed the chairs in each of these orders and is popular and influential in fraternal circles. Mr. Rand and his wife are members of the Unitarian church, having assisted to organize the society here. He is serving his third term in the city council and is now president of the same.

ALBERT K. STRANAHAN, one of the proprietors of the Fashion Livery & Dray Company, of Hood River, Wasco county, was born in Northfield, Minnesota, the son of Oscar L. and Adelia (Berdan) Stranahan, who are mentioned elsewhere. The date of his birth is August 22, 1871. Albert K. attended the public schools at Hood River, Wasco county, to which city his parents removed from Minnesota when he was quite a young lad, and worked on his father's farm. At the age of fourteen years he left school and subsequently engaged in teaching, and at three different periods he was interested in the livery business. Two years and six months he was in the employment of the Oregon Railroad & Navigation Company, at one time being foreman of a pile-driving crew. March 1, 1903, he entered into partnership with J. T. Bagley and his cousin, James Stranahan, and they began the livery and draying business under the style of the Fashion Livery & Dray Company. They have a well equipped stable.

On February 22, 1905, at Rufus, Oregon, Mr. Stranahan married Miss Cora Fowler, the daughter of William and Lettie (Schautleaur) Fowler, who are agriculturists of Sherman county, this state. Mrs. Stranahan is a talented and refined young lady, very popular and the centre of a large circle of admiring friends.

Fraternally Mr. Stranahan is a member of Waucoma Lodge, No. 30, K. of P. Politically he is a Republican, but is not actively interested in politics. He is an eminently popular young man throughout Wasco county, highly esteemed and respected.

DOCTOR S. KIMSEY resides eighty miles southwest from Antelope where he owns a section of land and devotes his attention to stock raising. He was born in Polk county, Oregon, on September 6, 1848. His father, Duff Kimsey, was born in Howard county, Missouri and his parents, the paternal grandparents of our subject, were born in Virginia and Kentucky. They were descended from an old American family that dwelt in the colonies about the time of the Revolution and participated in the struggles to bring forth this great nation and also suffered much from Indian depredations during the War of 1812. They were pioneers to Missouri and were substantial people. The father of our subject married Mandana Smith, born in the same place as her husband and her father was born in North Carolina and her mother in Virginia. Our subject's parents crossed the plains with ox teams in 1847 and settled in Polk county. Two years later, they journeyed thence to Marion county and took a donation claim where they remained until our subject was eleven years old. Then he went with his mother to Thurston county, Washington, his father having died the year before. Then the mother married W. O. Bush and our subject remained with them off and on until 1871, when he went to Salem and in the spring worked on his uncle's farm near by. In the spring of 1872, he came to the vicinity of Antelope and after renting for four or five years bought a man's right to a piece of lieu land where he now resides. He took a homestead and preemption, then bought a half section of land and since that time he has given his attention to cultivating this and raising stock. He winters about one hundred and fifty head of cattle and utilizes the alfalfa and rye, which he raises, for hay, not threshing any grain. In September, 1874, in the Antelope valley, Mr. Kimsey married Catherine Ashby, who was born in Illinois, the daughter of Joseph and Mary (Savage) Ashby. The father was a native of Canada and came to California in the fifties, where he mined for some time. He returned east in 1853 and in 1865 crossed the plains to the Willamette valley. He came east of the mountains in 1872, and died in 1894. His wife was born in Vermont, and died in 1894. Mr. Kimsey has two brothers, James D., near Olympia, Washington and Franklin P., a farmer near Antelope. He also has a half brother, John S. Bush, living near Olympia, Washington, and two sisters, Hannah J., single, living near Olympia and Viola, wife of David L. Burntrager, who lives nine miles southeast of Olympia. He also has one half sister, Isabel, wife of George Gaston, dwelling near Olympia. Mrs. Kimsey has four brothers: William J., near Cottonwood, California; Joseph B., in the vicinity of Salem, Oregon; Grant, living near Oregon City; and George W. at Weiser, Idaho. She also has three sisters; Mary, wife of Henry Steers, a retired stockman at The Dalles; Hattie R., wife of William Humphrey, near Salem; and Grace, wife of Orange D. Glover, a bookkeeper in Portland. Mr. and Mrs. Kimsey have three children: Ernest J., on a farm which his mother inherited from her father's estate; Ray U., a tenant on Indian creek; Grace E., single, and living at home.

Mr. Kimsey is a good active Republican and is frequently at the conventions. He served four years as county commissioner from 1896, to 1900 and was justice of the peace in the eighties. He has been twelve years school director and has served as road supervisor. Mr. and Mrs. Kimsey are enterprising and substantial people and have labored long and faithfully for the upbuilding of this portion of Wasco county.

FINLAY MCBETH, the proprietor of the Occidental hotel at Antelope, is a well known and popular citizen in this portion of Wasco county. He is a generous, public spirited man, always looking on the bright side of life and lending cheer and sunshine to those about him. He was born amid Scotia's rugged hills, Perthshire being his native heath, on February 8, 1845 and inherited from stanch and prominent ancestors much of that stability and worth, which have made his race noted the world over. His father, John McBeth, was born in Perthshire and his father, the grandfather of our subject, came from north Scotland and settled in Perthshire. John McBeth married Elizabeth McBeth, a native of the same place but not related. They were substantial and worthy residents of Perthshire where they remained until death called them to the world beyond. Our subject was educated and reared in his native place and there remained until hurried by the western fever, to the New World. He landed on American soil on May 2, 1887 and went direct to Colorado where he engaged in sheep herding for three months. Then he migrated to Idaho and started in the sheep business where he owned a flock for himself. Several years later, we see him in Montana, engaged in the same business and prosperity seemed to follow him all the way, owing to his care for his business and the thrift with which he continued with the enterprises in hand. Later, he journeyed west to Oregon and still prosecuted the sheep business until his attention was called to the fact that Antelope needed a good hotel. Then he erected the Occidental which has twenty-five well equipped sleeping apartments, good office, dining room, parlor, kitchen and so forth and is a very popular stopping place for the traveling public. Mr. McBeth attends to everything that can contribute to the comfort and happiness of his guests and is very widely known and popular. Thus far in life, Mr. McBeth has never seen fit to take to himself a partner of his joys and successes but is content with the quieter joys of the celibatarian.

Fraternally, he is connected with the Elks at The Dalles, while in political matters, he is a good strong Republican. He is frequently seen at the county conventions where he is an influential figure and has been several years a member of the city council. Mr. McBeth has hosts of friends and is considered one of the substantial and leading business men of the town.

JACOB OBRIST has labored long and well in Wasco county and the result is that he has a fine farm about ten miles south from The Dalles on Fairview, formerly known as Dutch Flat. He was born in Philadelphia, Pennsylvania, on November 9, 1833, the son of John and Annie (Clawges) Obrist, natives of Switzerland and Philadelphia, respectively. The father came to the United States in 1818 and settled in Philadelphia. He died in Brooklyn, Illinois in 1879. The mother's ancestors were German and lived in Pennsylvania for several generations. Her parents were Daniel and Anna M. Clawges and were born August 11, 1760 and September 16, 1864, respectively. Daniel Clawges was the first sheriff of Philadelphia county after the Revolutionary War. Our subject was brought by his parents to northern Illinois when he was three years of age and remained on the farm with his father until twenty-one. Then he worked out and later rented land. After this, we find him in St. Louis county, Missouri, where he farmed rented land for ten years. Then he removed to Henry county in the same state and in 1883, came to Oregon and took the place where he now lives, as a homestead. He was one of the first actual settlers here. Two others, Nelson and Chittendon, had taken claims before Mr. Obrist. The land was all covered with heavy timber and brush and Mr. Obrist had no small task to open it up. However, he has one hundred acres all cleared and raises wheat, hay, potatoes and so forth and has a fine nine acre orchard.

On April 4, 1861, at St. Louis, Missouri, Mr. Obrist married Miss Ellen Kirkman, who was born in New Orleans, on July 20, 1841. Her parents were George and Mary (McBride) Kirkman. The father is a native of Wheeling, West Virginia and his parents of Scotland, while the mother was born in Pennsylvania. Her father, Alexander M., was a patriot in the Revolutionary War. Mr. Obrist has the following named brothers and sisters; Mrs. Mary A. Weygh, Mrs. Harriett Williams, Amanda, Marguerite, Charles and John, deceased. Mrs. Obrist has one sister, Mrs. Anna Smith, living, and three sisters and one brother deceased, Elizabeth, Mary, Caroline, and Alexander. To Mr. and Mrs. Obrist the following children have been born, William G., Frances A., Harry F., John E. and Charles, and two deceased, Mary E. and Jacob.

Mr. and Mrs. Obrist are members of the United Brethren church and he has been school director for many years. He assisted very materially in erecting the first school house here and has always labored for the advancement of educational interest. He is a Democrat but not active. Mrs. Obrist is a lady who has shown marked virtues and although a great sufferer from rheumatism, is a patient and kind Christian woman.

ORRE L. WALTER, one of the industrious and exemplary young men of Wasco county, resides on his father's farm some nine miles west from The Dalles. He has a fine estate of his own adjoining his father's, which comprises two hundred and forty acres of good land. He is handling his father's farm together with his own, and is showing a marked industry and wisdom. Mr. Walter has shown as a young man, fine characteristics which presage a bright and successful future. He has won the respect and esteem of all who know him and his habits are of the best. Mr. Walter has always been a careful reader and at the present time is carrying several courses of special studies from correspondence schools, which is very praiseworthy indeed.

Orre L. Walter was born at Machias, New York, on July 9, 1874. There he received the beginning of his education and later studied at The Dalles. His life was spent largely on the farm and when he arrived at manhood's estate, he was well skilled in farming and stock raising and he is abundantly able to be classed with the leading farmers of the country. In politics, he is an active Republican and committeeman for the mountain precinct. Mr. Walter is a man of energy and is a careful weigher of all questions of public import, reading carefully both sides of the issue that he may in a proper manner, make his decision. He is deeply interested in the advancement of educational interests, always striving for better roads and general progress and up-building.

Fraternally, he is affiliated with the I. O. O. F. and the Rebekahs. In the former order, he has passed all the chairs and is very popular.

ALBERT A. WALTER, who resides about nine miles southwest from The Dalles on the John, Mill road, was born in Germany, on February 27, 1845. His father, Andrew Walter, was a native of Germany and died when our subject was a child. He had married Caroline Schlick, a native of Germany where also she remained until her death. Our subject was educated in his native country and learned the tinner's trade. After that, he served three years in the German army and three years in the navy. This time having expired, he entered the merchant marine and visited nearly all the principal ports of the world. Then he came to the United States in 1869 and worked at his trade in Machias, New York for twelve years. It was 1883, when he came to Oregon and settled in The Dalles. A few weeks later, he took a homestead where he now lives and shortly afterwards added another quarter section by purchase. He improved the farm and also worked at his trade at various times and places until he came to be one of the well-to-do citizens of the country. He has shown integrity and uprightness in his walk and has the entire confidence and esteem of the people.

On September 14, 1873, at Machias, New York, Mr. Walter married Miss Melissa Lamoreaux, who was born in Ontario, Canada, on July 13, 1857. Her father, Andrew Lamoreaux was also a native of Canada. His father was a native of France. His mother was born in New York and his grandfather on his father's side came to the United States when a child with his parents, after having fled from France during the terrible massacre. They settled in New England and when the grandfather grew to manhood, he married and moved to Canada near Toronto and from him and two brothers, the Lamoreaux settlement was made. The grandfather of Mrs. Walter died at the age of one hundred and fourteen years, at Pickering, Ontario. Mrs. Walter's mother was Rebecca (Stoner) Lamoreaux, a native of Scarborough, Ontario. She died in 1901. Mr. Walter has one brother, Robert. His wife has one brother, James, and three sisters, Mrs. Martha Patton, Mrs. Mary Eaton and Mrs. Hattie Fair. To Mr. and Mrs. Walter, the following named children have been born: Orre L., who is mentioned elsewhere in this work; Robert J., a mining man in British Columbia; William P., George M., Harold A., and Frederick T., the last four are living at home. Two girls died in infancy.

Mr. Walter is a member of the W. W. and is a good strong Democrat, though not particularly active.

GEORGE BUNN is one of the thrifty and successful agriculturists of Oregon. He was born in Germany, on November 28, 1849 and now resides at number 1906 Mt. Hood street, The Dalles, where he has a fine large property, well improved and valuable. He also owns eighty acres just a little south from The Dalles and considerable wheat land in Sherman county. He comes of the good substantial German stock that has made its march the world around and Mr. Bunn is characterized by those qualities of substantiality and continuity which are so prominent in his race. His father was George Bunn and he married Katerina Boxheimer; both were born in the same place as our subject and there they remained until their death. Their birthplace was Hessen-Darmstadt. George Bunn was well educated in the public schools and by private tutors and then learned the baker's trade. For eight months in time of peace and eleven months in war, he served in the Franco-Prussian war as corporal and was wounded slightly at the battle of Gravelotte. He was in nine hard fought engagements and proved himself a soldier of bravery and faithfulness. After the war, he engaged at his trade in Germany until 1879, then came to the United States. He was in the Puget sound country and settled in Lewis county later, where he remained four years, doing farm work and mail carrying. In 1884, he came to Sherman county and filed on a homestead. Later, he bought a half section and gave his attention to raising horses and wheat. He was very skillful in this enterprise and later gave up horse breeding and confined himself entirely to the production of wheat. In 1896, he removed his family to The Dalles that they might have the opportunity of a thorough education, being a strong believer in good education. He purchased the place where he now lives which consists of fourteen lots planted nicely to orchard, good buildings and so forth. Mr. Bunn has given his attention to overseeing his various properties, since coming to The Dalles and he is now living a more retired life than formerly.

In Germany, on December 29, 1874, Mr. Bunn married Opolonia Brant, who was born in the same vicinity as her husband. Her parents were Philip and Eliza (Adrian) Brant, natives of the same place where she was born and where also they died. Mr. Bunn has five brothers and one sister, all in Germany, John, William, Lenhardt, Jacob, Nicholas, and Lena Keifer. Mrs. Bunn has one brother, Peter, who is also in Germany. To our subject and his wife, seven children have been born: Charles, a graduate of the high school and now farming in Sherman county; George, John, Alma and Mary, at home; Clara, at home and in high school; Barbara, a milliner in Portland. Mr. and Mrs. Bunn are members of the Roman Catholic church and are constant representatives of their faith. In political matters, he is independent. For nine years, he was school director in Sherman county and he takes a zealous interest in educational and political matters. Mr. Bunn has the good will and esteem of all who know him and he is considered one of the best citizens of our county.

JULIUS AND GEORGE C. CAMPBELL, well known as Campbell Brothers, leading fruit men in the vicinity of The Dalles, have shown commendable zeal and industry in their labors in Wasco county. Julius was born on January 11, 1859 at York, Wisconsin, while George was born on April 2, 1867, in Waterloo, Wisconsin. The father of Henry Campbell was a native of Rutland, Vermont, as were also his ancestors for four generations back, all descendants of Colonel Campbell of Revolutionary fame. The great-great-grandfather of our subjects was a very wealthy Scotchman and owned the land where Rutland now stands. His estate consisted of one entire township and some of the land is still owned by the Campbell family. They are a family of stockmen and farmers, being especially noted in the farming line of business. Henry Campbell married Chrissie A. Stone, a native of Newbury, New York. She now lives with her sons and is aged seventy-six. Her mother, Sarah Williams, was a lineal descendant of Roger Williams, of the sixth generation. Mrs. Campbell's father was born at Stonington, Connecticut, founded by his ancestors. Caleb Williams, the great-grandfather of Mrs. Campbell, was in the Revolution. She was born in Orange county, New York. The grandparents had migrated from Rhode Island into the trackless forests of New York state and there hunted out an estate. Noah Stone, a brother of Mrs. Campbell, is engaged in the steamboat business at Santiago, California where he has been for twenty-five years. Another brother, William Stone, is retired at Rutland, Vermont and still another brother, Asa, is deceased. She has three sisters, all deceased, Sarah, Eliza, who was the wife of Leeds Billings, a cousin of the Billings who was instrumental in founding the Northern Pacific railroad, and Harriett. The last one named was killed at the famous Ashtabula railroad accident and was the widow of Horatio Hutchinson, who was for many years an attorney in the office of Rufus Choate in Boston. Our subjects' father died in 1871 in Dane county, Wisconsin. There the boys received their education and remained until Julius was about thirty years of age, then they came to Oregon City. There they purchased a farm of three hundred and twenty acres and spent nine years in hard labor upon it, only to learn that the entire property was worthless. Then they journeyed to Tygh valley, and found themselves practically penniless. However, they went to work with a will and secured a section of land and Julius did carpentering while George handled the farm. The result was that in a short time they made it one of the finest wheat producing estates in the county and continued there until recently, when they sold out that property and purchased the place where they now reside, which consists of eighty-six acres. It contains twenty-eight hundred bearing fruit trees, fifteen acres of vegetables and melons, a thousand vined vineyard and considerable general crops. The Campbell brothers are very thrifty men, good managers and upright. They are receiving the due reward of their labor and have a very fine property besides considerable security. They are still both single men. George is a member of the United Brethren church and they are both progressive members of society and liberal supporters of churches, schools, and so forth.

JAMES M. SMITH has a choice estate of three hundred and twenty-five acres about one mile out from The Dalles, on Mill creek, which is his home at the present time. He is a representative of the intelligent agriculturists and stockmen of Wasco county and has shown marked ability and thrift in his labors here.

James M. Smith was born in Douglas county, Oregon, on May 2, 1867. His father, Jasper N. Smith, was born in Missouri, and crossed the plains with ox teams in the early forties. He was one of the first settlers in Douglas county, where he took a donation claim, and is now residing near Spray, Wheeler county. He married Miss Catherine Hewitt, a native of Illinois, and descended from English people. Her parents died in Ireland. When our subject was three years of age, the family came to the place where he now dwells, and here he was reared and educated. The father bought the farm, it being then one hundred and fifty-eight acres. Since, Mr. Smith has added by purchase until he owns the large estate mentioned. He raises diversified crops, has a fine dairy, produces much fruit and turns off considerable stock. He is progressive and well posted in the various lines which he pursues, and is a man of sound principles.

The marriage of Mr. Smith occurred on February 10, 1901, at his residence, Miss Amy Burns becoming his wife at that time. She was born at Drain, Douglas county, Oregon, and her father, Albert Burns, was a native of Ohio, crossed the plains with ox teams in 1863, and died here in 1903. He married Miss Clara Bean, a native of Oregon, whose parents had crossed the plains with ox teams in 1843 and made settlement in Douglas county. They now dwell in Coos county. Mrs. Smith has one brother, Timothy G., and one sister, Effie. Mr. Smith has the following named brothers and sisters, William H., George, Thomas R., C. Edward, Mrs. Ellen Burgess, Mrs. Olive Burgess, and Mrs. Eva Morgan. Mr. Smith is a member of the W. W. and is a well informed Republican. He does not take an especially active part in the campaigns but is always ready to cast his influence and vote for the principles he believes to be right.

HERBERT C. ROOPER, one of the leading wool growers of central Oregon, now residing at Antelope, was born in England, on May 22, 1852. John Rooper, his father, was a native of Huntingdonshire, England, and a captain in the British army, being in the Prince Consort's own rifle brigade. His brother Edward, the uncle of our subject, was major in the same regiment and was killed at the battle of Inkerman in the Crimean War. Mr. Rooper's family were landed gentry and were very prominent in the army and Church of England. Our subject's paternal grandfather was a clergyman in that church. In 1630, George Rooper compiled a genealogy of the family, reaching back for many generations. One of the ancestors was keeper of the Enfield Chase and Hyde and Mary-le-bone park and was a pensioner of Kings Henry VII and VIII. For many years thus it is seen the Roopers have done much in the various places where they have lived to support good government and to bring about the progress of the race. Our subject's father married Charlotte Nethercote, a native of Northamptonshire, England, whose ancestors were also landed gentry and prominent in the army and church. The parents of our subject are both now deceased. Herbert C. finished the grammar school course at Uppingham, then entered the Royal Agricultural College at Cirester, graduating in 1870. The following spring found him in the United States and for five years he dwelt in Iowa, renting land. In the spring of 1876, he came to Wasco county and being desirous of understanding the sheep business thoroughly, took a position as herder for two years. Then he engaged in partnership with Chandler brothers in the sheep business and they were together for seven years handling about six thousand sheep annually and several hundred head of horses. In 1885 this partnership was dissolved and our subject has since continued raising sheep. He now has four thousand of these profitable animals, twenty-two hundred acres of land, two hundred head of cattle and sufficient horses to handle his business. He also owns a fine two story residence in Antelope, which is the family dwelling place at present.

On November 26, 1886, at Astoria, Oregon, Mr. Rooper married Elizabeth Pohl, who was born in Denmark, the daughter of Ferdinand and Fredricka (Bochan) Pohl, natives of Denmark and Germany, respectively. The father was a seafaring man in the English merchant marine and died at Copenhagen, Denmark. His widow resides at Bay Center, Washington. Mrs. Rooper has two brothers, William and Max, undertakers at Astoria; and two sisters, Alma, the wife of Henry Clark, a merchant in Seattle, and Olga, single, dwelling in Seattle. Mr. Rooper has four brothers, Maximilian, a solicitor in London, England; Walter, an electrical engineer at Stafford, England; Edward, a school director in Devonshire, England; and Percy, manager of a shipping line—large company at Liverpool, which leases vessels to the O. R. & N. He also has four sisters: Charlotte, wife of Walter Earle, a retired clergyman in England; Constance, the widow of Col. Henry Dakeyene, of Leamington, England; Blanche, and Lucy, both single and at Leamington, England. Mr. and Mrs. Rooper are parents of nine children: Henry and John, students of the agricultural college at Corvallis; Edna, Bonfoy, Alma, Margaret, William, Isolda and Frederick.

Mr. Rooper is a member of the Elks and the W. W. He and his wife both belong to the Episcopal church. In politics, he is a stirring and active Republican, and is often found at the county and state conventions. He was the first stock inspector of Wasco county and is now serving his second term as mayor of Antelope. Mr. Rooper and his family are highly respected people and they have reason to be proud of the fine record,—priceless legacy—left by a long line of prominent ancestors.

BERT H. HAYNES, a popular and enterprising citizen of Wasco county, resides about ten miles northeast from Boyd, where he owns a farm of two hundred acres. He is a man of energy and has made a good record thus far in life. He is still a young man, and the holdings he now has are the result of his labor and careful management of what he earned. Mr. Haynes is possessed of determination and stability coupled with an integrity and uprightness that can but achieve success in life and make him an honored and valuable member of society.

Bert H. Haynes was born in Rock Island county, Illinois, on April 28, 1868, the son of Joseph Haynes, who is sketched in detail in this work. He was educated in Missouri and Kansas, whither his parents went when he was young. In 1879, he came west with his father, and since that time he has continued in Oregon, assured that he has here some of Nature's choicest bestowals in the way of resources. As soon as our subject had reached the age of twenty-one, he commenced shearing sheep with his brother, who is mentioned in that connection in this work, and he has followed that arduous occupation for many years. He is an expert at the business and while he does not quite equal his brother on a test record, his being one hundred and forty and his brother's one hundred and fifty-six in one day, still he is a master hand at the art and the physical endurance needed to handle the work has been shown by Mr. Haynes. He is a man of strong constitution and is possessed of a tenacious spirit. During the time he has been shearing, Mr. Haynes has purchased railroad land and this is now his home place. He is improving it and is raising grain and stock. He has wisely handled the finances with which he has been blessed and the result is he is prosperous. He makes a specialty of raising hogs and is doing well.

At his father's ranch, in November, 1895, Mr. Haynes married Miss Effie Wilson, the daughter of David and Susan (Hixon) Wilson, who live near Nansene. Mrs. Haynes was born in Quincy, Illinois. To this marriage two children have been born, Joseph and Alice. In political matters, Mr. Haynes is a Republican and is a man who always takes an interest in public matters and in all that is for the improvement and upbuilding of the county. He and his wife are popular young people and have showed themselves capable, upright, and possessed of those qualities of intrinsic worth that make the worthy American citizens.

WILLIAM ODELL, an enterprising and popular citizen of Wasco county, follows farming and stock raising, with his headquarters on his estate about nine miles east from Boyd post-office. The place consists of one-half section, is well improved, and about one hundred acres are devoted to wheat. In addition to this, he gives attention to raising stock and has been more or less engaged in this enterprise for many years.

William Odell was born in Missouri, on April 25, 1864. His parents are Griffith and Jessie (Harriott) Odell, natives of Michigan and Cincinnati, Ohio, respectively, and now dwelling in Clackamas county, Oregon. The mother's parents were born in New England. When our subject was an infant, his parents came to Iowa and thence shortly to California, settling in Butte county, where William received the initial educational training of his life. In the fall of 1880, they came to Klickitat county, Washington and remained one year. Next they made a move to Clackamas county, where the parents reside at the present time. In the spring of 1882, our subject started out for himself. He first made a trip to The Dalles and soon found employment in the railroad shops where he worked for two years. Then he engaged in stock raising and since that time, he has continued in that business. In the fall of 1893, he filed on a homestead where he now resides and in 1897 bought a quarter section. Later he purchased another quarter, having now an estate of four hundred and eighty acres.

On November 1, 1893, at The Dalles, Oregon, Mr. Odell married Miss Emma Deckert, whose parents are mentioned in another article in this book. Mr. Odell has the following named brothers and sisters, Irving, Emmett, Thomas, Walter, Edward, Mrs. Lena Ellingham, Mrs. Emma Godfrey, and Mrs. Fanny Nitzche.

He is a member of the M. W. A. and in politics is independent. He has frequently been on the school board and is a man who thoroughly appreciates matters along all lines. He is progressive and public spirited and one of our best citizens.

Mr. and Mrs. Odell have five children, Hattie, Albert, Minnie, Ada, and Elmer.

PAULUS LIMEROTH, the pioneer settler of Christman Hollow, Wasco county, resides six miles southeast of Dufur. He was born in Hesse-Cassel, Prussia, January 8, 1843, the son of John and Martha (Volland) Limeroth, both natives of Germany.

Our subject received an excellent education in the graded schools of Hesse-Cassel, and then made a special study of gardening in an extensive nursery, where he obtained a thorough knowledge of horticulture, floriculture and general gardening, plain and ornamental. When he was twenty-four years of age he came to the United States, having previously served three years in the German army, seeing two months of active service in the Austro-Prussian war. Arriving in New York city he found employment as gardner at College Point, where he planted over four thousand trees, and interested himself in other work that contributed toward making College Point one of the most beautiful suburban towns of Gotham. In 1868 our subject for a short period worked as a florist in New York city, and following that he was foreman in a new nursery near Hemstead, Long Island. July 4, 1868, he embarked for California, via the Isthmus. Remaining there about one year he went to Central America in the capacity of botanist for different European governments. In Germany he had studed botany under an eminent professor, and in this science he is, doubtless, the peer of any one in the United States. Returning to San Francisco in 1870 he found employment with various florists, and one year thence he went to Portland where he installed a floral nursery on Morrison street. This business he disposed of in the spring of 1876. The previous year Mr. Limeroth had laid out the grounds around the Portland postoffice, making a handsome and attractive park from an unsightly rock-pile. He then came to Wasco county, locating near his present place, and with George Wells engaged in the sheep business. Later he was alone in the business five years. He secured a half section of railroad land upon which he at present resides. He owns one thousand seven hundred and forty acres, seven hundred acres of which are tillable, and one hundred and sixty acres timber land. He has a substantial two-story residence, surrounded by fruit and shade trees. At present he has seventy-five head of Poland China hogs, and winters about one hundred head of cattle. In 1893 the trees surrounding the court house at The Dalles were in a shocking condition, and he succeeded in converting the place into one of the handsomest spots in the city.

Mr. Limeroth has one brother, Ernest, a tailor in New York city. He had one sister, Katherine, who died in New York. At San Francisco, January 6, 1871, Mr. Limeroth was married to Mrs. Eliza Feld, born October 29, 1838, at Rinda-Hesse, Prussia. Her parents were Helvig and Alice (Siechner) Bott, of Germany. Mrs. Limeroth has two brothers living, John, a silk weaver in Germany, and Philip, a baker in London, England. Three other brothers are deceased, George, John and Louis. Mr. and Mrs. Limeroth have two children, Edward and Albert, Wasco county farmers. By her first husband Mrs. Limeroth has two children living, Lizzie, widow of John Easton, and Frances, wife of Benjamin Pratt, of Wasco county, living twelve miles southeast of Dufur.

Politically Mr. Limeroth is independent. While he was in Columbia, Central America, he made a number of valuable botanical discoveries, attracting the attention of eminent scientists in Europe.

JOHN S. BOOTH, a leading merchant in Hood River, was born in The Dalles, Oregon, on August 26, 1870, thus being a native son of Wasco county, as well as one of its most popular citizens. His father, John P. Booth, born in Oakland county, Michigan, was a harnessmaker and a saddler and died at The Dalles, in 1876. He married Miss Mary L. Riggs, a native of Michigan, and descended from an old and prominent southern family. She had grown up in Michigan with her husband and her marriage occurred there. Her husband's father was a Baptist preacher and her father was one of the most eminent jurists that the state of Michigan ever produced. He was one of the framers of the constitution, was appointed by the first governor of the territory, Louis Cass, agent to take charge of all the Indians within the boundary of the territory. He had been commissary officer on the staff of Colonel James B. Ballis all through the War of 1812. Later he was supreme judge in the state of Michigan and his decisions are quoted and followed to this day. He was a man of deep erudition and possessed of a keenness and acumen that especially fitted him for that responsible position. His father, Jeremiah C. Riggs, was an aide-de-camp to General Washington in the Revolution, and served throughout that struggle. The grandfather of Jeremiah Riggs served with distinction in the Pequot Indian war about 1636, and on one occasion was the means of saving his entire command from annihilation by the savages, by an act of personal bravery and daring.

Our subject's parents came to Oregon via the isthmus in 1851 and located at The Dalles. The father brought the first set of harness and saddle tools to the country east of the Cascades. They came on the boat that followed him the next day. The craft sank and Mr. Booth hired an Indian to dive for the tools. He opened a harness and saddle store and shop at once and continued the same for twenty years. He was active in governmental affairs and was the first justice of the peace in Wasco county, and performed the first marriage ceremony. After retiring from the shop, he attended to the oversight of his farm, on Five Mile creek, and was the first man to foster market gardening. After his death, the family remained in The Dalles until 1898 then went to Portland and in 1901 they came to Hood River. Our subject received a good education in the schools of The Dalles and then turned his attention to the fish and produce business, as a commission merchant in The Dalles. Ten years later he sold this business and engaged as agent with the first line of steamers plying from Portland to The Dalles after the opening of the locks. One year later he assumed charge of the Portland office for the Regulator line of steamers and in that capacity served for two years. Then he resigned and opened his present mercantile business in Hood River.

At the time of the Spanish war, Mr. Booth was captain of Company G, Oregon National Guards, and with his company of sixty men went to camp McKinley, at Portland. Captain Booth's company was absorbed by the Second Oregon Volunteers, and he was appointed second lieutenant of Company L. The changes resulting from the absorption of the state militia by the regulars practically disorganized the Oregon militia and at the suggestion of General Beebe, our subject took up the arduous task of reorganizing and establishing anew the Oregon Militia. Upon the abandonment of camp McKinley and the sailing of the regulars for the seat of war, Mayor Booth commenced his labors, which finally, after two years of persistent, patient, and skillfully disposed effort, resulted in placing on a better basis than ever before the Oregon State Militia, reorganized, newly equipped, and standing in commendable relation to the other guards of the nation. To the efforts of Brigade Quartermaster Booth and his associate officers this happy ultimatum is due, and the fact that from raw material he has helped to bring out the excellently trained and finely uniformed Guards in Oregon reflects great credit upon him.

Previous to his service, Mr. Booth had an extensive military record. On December 15, 1886, he enlisted in Company C, at The Dalles, it being the first company organized in eastern Oregon, and captained by Charles E. Morgan, now of Portland. Upon the organization of the Third regiment of the Oregon National Guards, our subject was appointed signal officer on the staff of Colonel Houghton and served four years. Then he was elected major of the same regiment and was assigned to command the first battalion, serving thus four years. Then he resigned, but upon the earnest solicitation of his commanding officer, accepted the position of commissary officer on his staff and remained in that capacity until chosen captain of Company G. All told this makes fourteen years of service for Major Booth, and in it all there have been that trustworthiness and faithful execution of duty that have warmly commended him to both men and higher officers.

Fraternally, Major Booth belongs to the Artisans. His father was a thirty-third degree Scottish rite Mason and was instrumental in getting the charter for Wasco Lodge, No. 15, A. F. & A. M., of The Dalles. He and his wife were charter members of the first Congregational church at The Dalles, and their son, our subject, is a consistent member of the same denomination, being also clerk of his church. Major Booth had one brother, Latimer, a popular young business man of The Dalles, bookkeeper for J. T. Peters, who died on April 5, 1897, leaving a wife and two children. He was thirty-six years of age when his demise occurred.

On June 9, 1904, at Hood River, occurred the marriage of Major Booth and Miss Loretta F. Edmunds, a native of Petrolea, Ontario. Major Booth has made a splendid success of business life, starting in the mercantile field at The Dalles with a small capital and now having a fine establishment. His store is one of the neat, attractive places of Hood River, and is a credit to the town. He handles a full line of such goods as are usually found in a variety store, and his genialty and deferential treatment of all have won for him an excellent patronage and given him a wide circle of friends wherever he is known.

JAMES A. STRANAHAN, a young man of integrity and good habits, resides at Hood River, where, in partnership with Albert Stranahan and J. F. Bagley, he is conducting the business of the Fashion Livery and Dray Company. He was born in Goodhue county, Minnesota, on August 4, 1871, the son of Horace C. and Maggie (McKinley) Stranahan, who are mentioned elsewhere in this volume. When he was six years old, he came with the family to the Willamette valley, Oregon, and two years later moved to Hood River. His education was obtained in the district, graded, and private schools in this part of the country and after finishing the same, he turned his attention to the lumber business. After that, he did farming for several years. Off and on for ten years, he was in Sherman county where he filed on a homestead of eighty acres and bought a quarter section in 1895. He continued the owner of this until 1903, when he sold out the same and returned to Hood River to engage in business, that occupying him at the present time. He is an active and stirring young man, with good business ability and fine address. Owing to his genialty and kindness, he is very popular and has a great many friends. The business is a prosperous one and is being handled profitably with a display of wisdom and excellent judgment.

Fraternally, Mr. Stranahan is a member of the K. P. and the W. W. In political affairs, he is a Republican, and is especially active in the campaigns, and a stanch party man. As yet Mr. Stranahan has never seen fit to embark upon matrimony's uncertain seas but is contented with the quieter joys of the jolly bachelor. He is one of the good citizens of Hood River and is a man of worth.

FRANK J. STARK, a progressive and substantial agriculturist dwelling two miles east from Antelope, Wasco county, was born in Osceola, Iowa, on March 10, 1870, being descended from the family which furnished one of the greatest generals of the Revolution. General John Stark, the famous American patriot, who won so many battles against so heavy odds, was the brother of our subject's great-grandfather. It was this General Stark who rode before his men at the battle of Bennington and uttered the statement since chronicled indelibly in American history, "Boys, we must win this fight, or Mollie Stark is a widow tonight." Julius Stark, the father of Frank J., was born in Ohio, and his father was a native of Vermont. Julius Stark now dwells near Shaniko. He married Carrie Haltomyers, a lady of German ancestry, and who died on March 14, 1885. Our subject was six years of age when the family went to Texas, whence they journeyed to Kansas, and then back to Ohio. In Wellington, that state, he secured his educational training and after school days he was strongly inclined to come west. In December, 1888, he made the trip to Centralia, Washington, and there worked in a sawmill until he came to Wasco county, in 1895. He took a homestead and bought a half section adjoining, which is his estate today. He handles about one hundred acres to grain and has twenty head of cattle and fifteen horses. He has labored diligently since coming here and is in comfortable circumstances as the result of his industry.

The marriage of Mr. Stark and Nellie Hanna occurred at Dufur, on September 23, 1900. She was born near The Dalles, on July 24, 1882, the daughter of William and Elsie (Lewis) Hanna. Her father, a native of the Willamette valley, died in October, 1903, at Reno, Nevada. His father died in December, 1904, at Boyd, Oregon, one of the early pioneers of the territory. Mrs. Stark's mother lives at Tygh ridge. She was born in Iowa. Mr. Stark has three sisters; Hattie, the wife of William Blanchard, of Wellington, Ohio; Delia, the wife of Warner Peet, a machinist in Cleveland, Ohio; and Mollie, the wife of Wade Canfield, of Litchfield, Ohio. Mollie was named after the wife of General Stark. Mrs. Stark has two brothers, Archie and Walter, near Nansene, and one sister, Lottie, the wife of Archie Bully, a farmer, also near Nansene. Mr. Stark is a member of the A. F. & A. M., being past master of Antelope Lodge, No. 116. He is a Republican in politics, and a man of stamina and good standing.

PAYTON S. DAVIDSON, secretary and treasurer of the Lost Lake Lumber Company at Hood River, is one of the leading business men of this part of Oregon. He is an active business man and has acquired wealth and prominence through his own endeavors. He was born at LaCrosse, Wisconsin, in December, 1867, the son of Payton S. and Addie E. (Johnston) Davidson, natives of Ohio. The father was born on September 27, 1837, and died at Hood River, in 1901. The mother was born in 1837 and died in 1887. The Johnston family is an old and prominent one in American affairs, especially in Wisconsin. Mrs. Davidson's father was judge of Lawrence county for many years and a man of excellent education. Our subject's father was raised at Southpaw, Ohio, and with his brother, William F. Davidson, for many years was prominent as a steamboat man on the Ohio and upper Mississippi. In 1890, they sold their interests and the year previous our subject's father came on to Oregon, where he was engaged in lumbering, boat building and so forth. After completing the high school at LaCrosse, the subject of this article was associated with his brothers and father in the steamboat business until they moved to Oregon. After arriving here, he erected one of the finest sawmills in the west, it being located at Hood River, and having a capacity of one hundred and fifty feet of lumber for each ten hours. In March, 1903, they sold the entire plant to the Mt. Hood Lumber Company. Now Mr. Davidson, with his brother, owns eighty acres of fine orchard which they are putting in a high state of cultivation. They also own very much city property and other real estate.

On April 8, 1897, at LaCrosse, Mr. Davidson married Miss Alena Price, a native of California and a daughter of Jacob and Augusta (Bennette) Price. Mr. Davidson has four brothers, William F., Arthur J., Frank L. and Barton G. Mrs. Davidson has two brothers, Lester F. and William B. In fraternal affiliations, Mr. Davidson is allied with the A. F. & A. M. and the R. A. M. He is a good staunch Republican and takes a lively interest in campaign work. For four years he was a member of the city council and is one of the reliable, capable and popular men of this part of the city.

WILBUR BOLTON, who stands at the head of the mercantile firm under the style of Bolton & Company, in Antelope, has in charge the largest general mercantile establishment in the town. His trade is extended, and he does a large business each year. His stock is always kept up to date with a fine assortment and he has constantly on hand about fifteen thousand dollars worth of goods. Mr. Bolton is an enterprising and substantial business man and a very influential citizen, whose labors are constantly for the improvement and betterment of the country.

Wilbur Bolton was born in Wasco county, Oregon, on October 29, 1860, the son of Daniel and Elizabeth (Fullweider) Bolton, natives of Virginia. The father died in The Dalles, in 1887. His father was a native of England. The mother's parents were of Irish extraction. She died in The Dalles. The parents were married in Iowa and came across the plains with ox teams in 1854, settling first in the Willamette valley. Shortly thereafter they came to The Dalles, and later took land on Fifteen Mile creek, securing a donation claim and a homestead. He did stock-raising and farming and dwelt many years in The Dalles with his family. Our subject was educated in the Wasco Independent Academy, under the tuition of Prof. Gatch, now president of the Oregon Agricultural College at Corvallis. After school days, Wilbur was on the ranch with his father several years, then spent a year with the Wasco Warehouse Company at The Dalles, and in 1887 came to Antelope and engaged in the general merchandise business with his brother, Virgil, and McFarland & French of The Dalles. In 1891 the firm dissolved and reorganized without Mr. McFarland. In 1893, Virgil Bolton died leaving his interest to his widow, Nellie French Bolton, who is the daughter of J. W. French, of The Dalles. Thus the firm is comprised today.

On December 25, 1883, at The Dalles, Mr. Bolton married Miss Jennie Gilmore, a native of the Willamette valley, and sister of Mrs. Judge Fulton. Mr. Bolton has the following named brothers and sisters: Zenas, a farmer in Yakima county, Washington; Simeon, county clerk in Wasco county; Virgil, deceased; Mitchell, deceased; Ella, wife of W. A. McFarland, of Seattle. The children born to Mr. and Mrs. Bolton are: Vivian Gatch and Vernon, students at Corvallis; and Virgil and Wilbur, Jr., at home. Mr. Bolton is a member of the A. F. & A. M., while he and his wife both belong to the O. E. S. She has served several terms as matron and has also been delegate to the grand lodge several times. They are both members of the Methodist church, and are progressive people, highly esteemed and of excellent standing.

ANDREW URQUHART is one of the leading farmers and fruit men in the northern part of Wasco county. His place is situated about three miles out from The Dalles on Mill creek, and is one of the good estates of the community. He has one hundred and sixty acres and it is well improved and produces abundant returns in diversified crops and fruits, of which latter he has a seven acre bearing orchard. Mr. Urquhart bought this place with his brother and together they tilled it for some years and then he purchased the interest of the brother and since then has handled it alone. He is an exemplary man, a patriotic citizen, and a good neighbor. His standing in the community is of the best and he has hosts of friends.

Andrew Urquhart was born in Linlithgow, Scotland, on March 30, 1848. His father, James Urquhart, was born in Aberdeen, that country, and followed farming until he came to the United States in 1852. He was of an adventurous spirit and soon made the weary journey across the plains to try his fortune in the wild west. He settled at Oak Point, a logging camp on the Columbia and later settled in Napavine, Washington, where he followed merchandising. He was several times commissioner of Lewis county, in that state, and represented his district in the state legislature. His death occurred in 1901. He had married Miss Ellen Muir, a native of Linlithgow, Scotland. She died in 1891 at Napavine. Our subject came west with his mother in 1855, the father having come before and prepared a place for them. Andrew was educated in the public schools at Napavine, and in 1867, started in life for himself. He came to The Dalles and did work in a dairy after which he took a homestead in Lewis county, Washington. Six years later he came thence to The Dalles again and wrought for four years at Rockland, across the river from that city. He was in the employ of Thomas Connell. Then he and his brother bought the farm as mentioned before.

Mr. Urquhart has the following named brothers and sisters: James, a farmer; Robert, a merchant; and Noble, a farmer, all three being at Napavine; William, a merchant at Chehalis, Washington; David, Henry, sheriff of Lewis county, Washington; Ellen, in California; Margaret, the wife of J. W. Alexander, who died in 1893; John died at Chehalis, a pioneer merchant there and postmaster; Alexander A., died at The Dalles, in November, 1903. Sometime before he was postmaster and merchant at Rufus, Oregon, and David, a merchant at Chehalis, Washington. Our subject's father was many years on the school board and a veteran of the Indian wars of 1855-6. Mr. Urquhart has also served much on the school board and is zealous for the advancement of these interests.

CHARLES DAVIDSON, secretary of the Davidson Fruit Company, and a genial man of sixty odd years, is one of the well known business men of Hood River. He was born in Knox county, Ohio, on June 21, 1840. His father, William C. Davidson, commonly called Casper, was a native of Maryland and died in 1884, aged sixty-seven. He came to Ohio with his parents when three years of age. His grandfather, the great-grandfather of our subject, was a sailor and died at the advanced age of ninety-six. This venerable gentleman's son, Samuel Davidson, was a patriot in the War of 1812, and participated in the battle of Bladensburg, and others. William Davidson married Miss Louisa Arnold, a native of Harrison county, Ohio. She is residing in Knox county, aged eighty-four. Her parents were of Pennsylvania Dutch stock and came from Susquehanna county. Her mother died in Missouri, aged eighty-seven, in 1884. Her father died in 1857, aged sixty-one. Our subject was educated in the public schools and in 1857 commenced to learn carriage painting. For three years he served as apprentice, and in this line he has shown himself an artist, as his work is some of the best to be obtained. He has charge of the vehicle department of the company at Hood River and renders valuable service toward the success of the company in his line. Mr. Davidson followed painting of carriages in various sections until 1901, when he came west to join his son and since that time has continued in the business with him.

Mr. Davidson has four children; Amanda B., the wife of Albert Whitehead, in the employ of the company; Horatio F., mentioned elsewhere in this work; Ella M., in Hood River; and Maud K., the wife of William H. Chipping, assistant superintendent of the Electric Light and Water Company. Politically, Mr. Davidson is an independent thinker and leans toward socialism. He was formerly a member of the Greenback party and is well posted in all political subjects.

ARTHUR J. DAVIDSON, a member of the Lost Lake Lumber Company at Hood River and a leading and wealthy business man, was born at LaCrosse, Wisconsin, on April 26, 1870. His parents were Payton S. and Addie E. (Johnston) Davidson. The high school course at LaCrosse completed the education of our subject, then he was engaged in the lumber and steamboat business with his father, uncle and brothers until the family came to Oregon, in 1889. Since then he has been associated with his brother, Payton Davidson, in various enterprises and together they own much valuable city and country real estate, besides the lumber business which they conduct.

On December 31, 1903, at Hood River, Mr. Davidson married Miss Clara Mosley, a native of Chicago.

In fraternal circles, Mr. Davidson belongs to the B. P. O. E. and the A. F. & A. M. He is a good staunch Republican and a well informed man. He and his wife are popular in the social circles of Hood River and are highly esteemed people.

CHARLES E. SANDOZ dwells on Mill creek, five miles out from The Dalles, where he owns ninety acres of choice land and does general gardening and fruit raising. He was born in Switzerland, on September 14, 1851, the son of Frederick L. and Julia (Fry) Sandoz, both natives of Switzerland, where they remained until their death. The father was a shoemaker in early life and later followed gardening. In his native country, our subject received a good education, learned well the art of horticulture and in 1870, came to the United States, making settlement in Kansas. For four and one-half years he operated on rented land there and then came to California, making his headquarters in Los Angeles. For four years he did landscape gardening in the city and vicinity and in 1879 came on to The Dalles in company with his brother. They purchased adjoining ranches which were a part of the old Caldwell donation claim and since that time our subject has given his entire attention to the industries mentioned. He is a prosperous man, well skilled in gardening and a good substantial citizen.

On November 30, 1885, Mr. Sandoz married Miss Laura Heroux, who was born in Chicago, Illinois, on January 16, 1870. Her parents were Daniel and Martha (Bailergeon) Heroux, natives of Three Rivers, Canada. They were French people and had dwelt in that country for many generations. Both are now deceased. Mrs. Sandoz has the following named brothers and sisters: Joseph, Arthur, Charles, Alfred, Alma, Annie, Isabelle and Florence. To our subject and his wife two children have been born, Julius, aged eighteen and Emily, aged fifteen. Mr. Sandoz is a member of the Foresters, and in politics he is an active Republican. He has been school director for several terms and takes a lively interest in all affairs of a public nature. Mrs. Sandoz belongs to the Roman Catholic church.

Mr. Sandoz is a very skillful and talented landscape gardener. He has done some very handsome pieces of work, especially in southern California and is considered one of the best in this part of the country.

LOUIS A. SANDOZ, who resides on Mill creek, a few miles out from The Dalles, was born in Switzerland, on May 24, 1850. His parents are Frederick L. and Julienne (Fry) Sandoz. After receiving his education and an especially fine training in landscape gardening in his native country, he came to the United States, and on January 2, 1868, landed in New York, then went to Illinois. He did gardening there for six years, then went to California and in Menlo Park and various other places followed his profession. He did some very choice work, especially in private gardens of millionaires in that country, and he was known as a most skillful and talented artist in his line. In 1879, a few months after his brother, who is mentioned in another portion of this work, Mr. Sandoz came to Wasco county. He purchased ninety-eight acres of the old Caldwell donation claim and since that time has given his attention to fruit raising and gardening. He has a very beautiful place and is a thrifty and progressive man.

On January 2, 1888, Mr. Sandoz married Mrs. Kate Hunter, who was born in New Jersey, the daughter of Edward and Kate (Nilligan) Murphy, natives of Ireland. The mother is deceased and the father dwells in New Jersey. Besides the brother mentioned, our subject has two brothers, Henry and August, in California, and one sister, Mrs. Emily Marre, in Switzerland. Mrs. Sandoz has four sisters residing in New Jersey. To our subject and his wife the following named children have been born: Eileen, Isabelle, Catherine, Arnold, Edward and Rollen. In politics, Mr. Sandoz is Democratic, and in educational matters he is active and progressive. He has served three terms as school director and gave universal satisfaction in that capacity.

HANS HANSEN, of the firm of Hansen & Thomsen at The Dalles, is a well known business man of energy and good reputation. The firm does a large business and is operating a fine planing mill and a saw mill. The planing mill is at 410 Third street and is one of the best equipped plants in this part of the country. They make a specialty of manufacturing all kinds of fruit boxes, crates and so forth, and in addition do all kinds of shop carpentering, together with turning and so forth. Their saw mill is located on Chenoweth creek and has a capacity of fifteen thousand feet per day. Their pay rool includes from twenty-six to forty men.

Hans Hansen was born in Schleswig-Holstein, Germany, on March 4, 1855, the son of Hans and Maria (Iversen) Hansen, natives of the same place. The father came from an old German family who had dwelt there for many generations. They both died in their native land, the father in the early sixties and the mother twenty-one years later. After receiving his education in the public schools, our subject learned the carpenter trade and in 1878, came to Clinton county, Iowa. Two years later, he journeyed thence via San Francisco to the Hood River country and for one year labored there with Carl Jensen, clearing land. The latter had filed on a property now owned by Chris Dethman, mentioned elsewhere in this work. They became discouraged, as there were few settlers and no markets, and left the claim. Mr. Hansen then secured employment on the O. R. & N. until 1888, being foreman in their repair shops. At the date last mentioned, he quit the railroad shops and began general contracting and building, then was employed by Hugh Glenn, until he opened his present establishment in 1898 in partnership with John P. Thomsen. Their planing mill and factory are a large two story structure, fifty by one hundred feet, supplied with all the latest machinery known to that business. They have a thirty horse power electric motor which is operated to its full capacity almost all of the time. Mr. Hansen is a very skillful and enterprising man and is a master of the various departments in their business.

On November 21, 1881, at The Dalles, Oregon, Mr. Hansen married Caroline A., the daughter of Carsten and Anna M. Friederichsen, a native of Schleswig-Holstein. She came to the United States in 1881 direct to The Dalles, where she married our subject on the day mentioned. Her parents came from old and prominent German families and are now living in that country. Mr. Hansen has the following named brothers and sisters: Hans M., Thomas, deceased, Jens C., deceased, Johannes, deceased, and Margretha, the wife of B. Hansen. Thomas served during the Franco-Prussian war and died at Weisenberg. He was three years in that war. In fact all of Mr. Hansen's brothers were in the same war. To Mr. and Mrs. Hansen four children have been born, Carl, now in Allegheny, Pennsylvania; Fred, in the mill, and Anna and Ella at school.

Mr. Hansen is a member of the A. O. U. W., and the W. W., and has pased all the chairs of both orders. He has represented the former lodge three times at the grand lodge.

Politically, Mr. Hansen is independent. He has been twice city councilman, twice water commissioner and is a member of the same now, and is often at the Democratic county conventions. In 1902, Mr. Hansen, accompanied by his wife and two daughters, spent four months at the old home in Germany. They enjoyed the trip immensely, especially as Mrs. Hansen's mother is still living on the old home place, being now aged ninety. Still, after visiting the various places to be seen in that journey, they were quite content to return to the good old Wasco county country, assured it was the best after all.

CHARLES T. POWNE, well known in and about Antelope, is at the head of a flourishing grocery store at Antelope and is rated as one of the leading and substantial business men of the town. He was born in Lincolnshire, England, on December 25, 1867, the son of William and Marion (Groves) Powne, natives of Cornwall and Dorsetshire, England, respectively. The father was a physician and died at Cornwall, England, in 1904, June 20. The mother's people were an old Dorset family. She died in 1896. Our subject was educated in the Swindon high school in Wiltshire, and under private tutors. In 1888 he came to the vicinity of Lennox, Ontario, and worked on a farm. Thence he went to Manitoba and raised wheat for four years, buying land from the railroad there. From that point he came to Wasco county and entered the employ of Van Duyn Adams & Company, at Tygh Valley. In 1896 he came to Antelope and was with Bolton & Company until 1902, when he opened his present store. This has occupied his attention since and he has now a fine business.

On June 1, 1898, Mr. Powne married Miss Willetta Ashby, at Antelope. She was born in Washington, the daughter of William J. Ashby. Mr. Powne has the following named brothers and sisters; Leslie, a physician at Crediton, Devonshire, England; Arthur L. and William A., cattle man in Alberta; Harold and Cecil, wheat raisers in Manitoba; Bernard O., in New Mexico; Kate, wife of Harry Granger, a capitalist of London, England; Winifred, wife of T. Wood Robinson, of his majesty's steamship, Excellent; Agnes, wife of Mr. Langlon, a physician in Hartfordshire, England; and Olive, single, and in England. Mr. and Mrs. Powne have one child, Nonnan S. G. Mr. Powne is a member of the A. F. & A. M., the A. O. U. W., and in politics is an active Republican. He is now city treasurer, and he and his wife belong to the Episcopal church. They are popular young people and have many friends, being upright, worthy, and progressive.

Mr. Powne is closing out his business at Antelope and, with E. A. Priday, has purchased the interests of J. J. Monroe, of Adel, Lake county, this state. They have incorporated, the style of the business being the Warner Valley Mercantile Company.

HENRY WAKERLIG has demonstrated his grit and pluck in his endeavors in Wasco and adjoining counties, for his path has been beset with many losses and hardships which he has overcome only by sheer force of will and determination. At present he is dwelling at Bakeoven, being the postmaster there. He was born in Switzerland, August 1, 1853, the son of John and Regla (Frei) Wakerlig, also natives of Switzerland. The father served from twenty-one to forty-five in the Swiss army, two weeks and one day each alternate year. Our subject grew up on his father's farm, received his education from the parochial schools and in 1883 came to the United States. He came direct to Oregon, and herded sheep for Solomon Hauser, deceased, for eight months. Then he located his family in the vicinity of where Shaniko now stands and herded sheep for three years, being in the employ of Al Porter, E. M. Gilsay, and William Jones. In 1886 he bought four hundred sheep and started in for himself. He went to Crook county and took a pre-emption in the Paulina valley that fall, and the hard winter took half of his sheep. In the fall of 1887 he sold his place there and returned to the vicinity of Shaniko. He rented the same place where he had first left his family and the next year took a homestead and timber culture on Ocheco creek, a mile a half from Bakeoven, where he lived until 1889. He purchased eleven hundred sheep which he added to his others now increased to twenty-seven hundred. That winter he lost all but three hundred of his sheep. He placed that remnant with another man's sheep and commenced to herd again, as he was in debt and forced to raise money. Two years were thus occupied and he finally made another start. And since that time he has had better success. In January, 1902, he purchased the place where he now resides, having moved there two years previously. He had between nine and ten thousand sheep, but now handles about six thousand. He owns three thousand nine hundred acres of land, and cultivates three hundred to grain and hay. There are seventeen hundred acres of good tillable land in the estate. He also owns fifty cattle and as many horses, and is one of the wealthy men of the county, all of which is the result of his determination to make a success, which he has done.

In Switzerland, on December 12, 1876, Mr. Wakerlig married Miss Mary, the daughter of Jacob and Katherine Wittweiler, both natives of Switzerland. Mr. Wakerlig has one brother, Frederick, a sculptor in his native land, and one sister, Barbara, the wife of Donathe Wittmer, a wagonmaker in New Haven, Connecticut. The wife has no brothers but two half sisters, Mrs. Katherine Myer, and Annie. Our subject and his wife have ten children, Henry, Edwin, Ernest, Walter, Mary, Bertha, Rosie, Julia, Annie and Minnie. Mary is the wife of Albert McKinley, three miles south from our subject's home, and Bertha is the wife of Roy Logan, living near, and the balance of the children are all at home. Mr. Wakerlig is a Republican, and is active in school matters, having been director for many years.

HON. JOHN MICHELL, residing in The Dalles, is a pioneer citizen of that city and of Wasco county, also. He was born in England, the son of William and Ursula Michell, and came to America with his mother when an infant. They went direct to Dodgeville, Wisconsin, and there he resided during his early youth, receiving some training in the common schools. After that he worked at the printer's trade, and in due time the tales of the wonderful west aroused the desires of his mother to see the country west of the Rockies, and she made the pilgrimage, landing in The Dalles, January 7, 1865, having with her her son, John, and daughter, Ursula. In 1875, Mr. Michell went to the University of Michigan, at Ann Arbor, and in 1877, he graduated from the law department of that institution, standing high in his class. Mr. Michell has practiced law very little, but has mainly devoted his energies and ability to newspaper work. He entered partnership with R. J. Marsh on April 27, 1880, and began the publication of The Dalles Weekly Times. Later he purchased his partner's interest and in 1882 bought the Mountaineer, consolidating it with the Times, as the Times-Mountaineer, over which he presided as owner and editor until 1895, in which year he sold to J. A. Douthit.

As a journalist, Mr. Michell enjoyed the reputation of being "A fearless and able writer, always possessing the courage of his convictions." Under his management the Times-Mountaineer was one of the leading Republican papers in the entire state of Oregon, and although a strong partisan, Mr. Michell was strongly opposed to bossism and clique rule in the party. Being a resident of The Dalles since 1865, he is intimately acquainted with the history and development of the country, has won for himself the unstinted approval of the people, and enjoys an excellent reputation both as a business man, editor and public speaker.

As stated before, Mr. Michell is a strong Republican, made the campaign for that party in Klickitat county, Washington, and Wasco county, Oregon, for the fall of 1896, and showed himself a fearless, convincing and talented public speaker. In June, 1896, Mr. Michell's name appeared on the Republican ticket for state senator from Sherman and Wasco counties, and he was promptly elected by the largest majority on the ticket. He made a first class representative of this section and won many plaudits. During the years of 1901-3, Mr. Michell was in government service in Washington, D. C.

Although not privileged to receive the advantages of a classical college, he, nevertheless, owing to studious habits, has made himself familiar with the classics, and is a man of broad range of important information in the sciences and literature.

Mr. Michell is a member of several fraternal societies, having passed the chairs in the Odd Fellows, Knights of Pythias, the Elks, Red Men, and Maccabees.

In 1880, Mr. Michell married Miss Ella Bulger, the wedding occurring at The Dalles. One child has been born, Maud Elaine, 1883, being the year of her nativity.

DANIEL M. FRENCH, deceased. It is quite impossible to compile a work of this character on Central Oregon without giving especial mention to the esteemed gentleman whose name is mentioned at the head of this article, and it is with great pleasure that we grasp this opportunity to grant to his memory this tribute of a review of the salient features of his active and important career.

Daniel M. French was born in Holland, Vermont, on June 16, 1828. His parents, Joshua and Polly (Mead) French, were born in New Hampshire, in 1803 and in 1801, respectively, and followed farming. Young French was reared on the farm and attended the district schools until he entered Brownington Academy where he completed his education. Then he spent two years in Massachusetts and later two years in Louisiana. After that he went with the western tide, traveling via the isthmus to California. For eight years he was a resident of the Golden State and for a portion of the time was engaged in the alluring employment of mining. Afterward he operated a ferry across the Stanislaus river in company with his brothers, then went to San Francisco and in partnership with his brother, Joshua W., conducted a roofing business until 1862. In that year, Mr. French journeyed to the north and finally selected The Dalles, then but a trading post, as his location. He soon opened a large general merchandise store, being in company with Granville B. Gilman, and the firm was known as Gilman, French & Company. Joshua W. and Joseph M. French, brothers of our subject, were also interested in the business, although at that time they were not residents of The Dalles. However, Joshua W. joined Daniel at The Dalles in 1864. The firm did business for some years and then our subject and his brother, Joshua W., purchased the interests of the others, the style of the firm being then, French & Company. This firm continued in the mercantile business, being leaders in that line, until 1875 when they sold out to Brooks & McFarland. For two years succeeding this sale, the French Brothers conducted a money brokerage business, handling loans, and so forth. In 1877, they formed the banking house French & Company, which has continued the leading financial institution of Central Oregon from that date to the present. Mr. French was a natural born financier, and added to this he had received a thorough schooling in business and he brought to bear in his labors all these qualifications with the telling result that he placed himself at the head of this strong banking house, making it what it has been and is to this day. His policy was always the wisest and best and his integrity, probity and unquestioned ability to handle financial problems gave his institution a standing second to none on the Pacific coast. Together with this, Mr. French was an ardent laborer for the growth and upbuilding of The Dalles and the state in general. His sagacity and his keen foresight were of inestimable benefit in these important lines and the name of Daniel M. French is indelibly stamped on the city of The Dalles and this part of Oregon. His popularity was as extended as his acquaintance and he was genial, kind and generous, which placed him in great esteem among the people. One point in the life of Mr. French, which we would not omit, was his kindly generosity that never turned away an unfortunate individual without ministering to him. He was always assisting his fellows in times of depression and many an one cherishes his memory on account of these good deeds. While Mr. French gave his personal attention to the bank mentioned, he was also associated with numerous important enterprises, being president of the Gilman French Land & Live Stock Company, and of the Arlington National Bank, director of the old Wasco Warehouse Company and the Wasco Warehouse and Milling Company, besides holding leading positions in various other ventures.

While Mr. French took the part in politics that becomes every loyal citizen, he never aspired to office during his long and important business career, but untiringly labored for his friends content to have others fill public places. He was a strong Republican and was able to give good reasons for his political belief. Altogether, Mr. French was a leading citizen, a sturdy pioneer, a staunch business man, and a true and faithful friend and he stood one of the most popular residents of this part of the state.

In 1865, Mr. French married Miss Allie M. Gee, of Vermont, and to them were born two children; Herbert Bancroft, who died at the age of seven years; and Elsie Maude, now Mrs. Charles J. Pease, of Marin county, California. Mrs. French died in January, 1875.

In September, 1876, Mr. French married Miss Samantha A. Carter and to them the following named children were born; Elizabeth E., the wife of Ernst L. Lueddemann, of The Dalles; Ruth Constance; and Paul M., in the bank with his uncle, Joshua W. French. Also they had two children who are now deceased.

Finally, on January 12, 1902, the summons came for Mr. French to lay down the things of time where he had wrought well and long and to enter upon the realities of the world to come. His funeral was a season of sincere and widespread mourning and grief, for all knew that a great man and a benefactor had passed from their midst.

Mrs. French is now residing in The Dalles and has a wide circle of admiring friends. She was born in Iowa, on August 8, 1850. Her parents, Robert and Eleanor (Howard) Carter, started across the plains in early days. The father died en route, but the mother lived to complete the journey and remained in the western country assisting in its upbuilding until her death at The Dalles, in 1897. Mrs. French was but eighteen months of age when the journey across the plains started. Cholera was the dread scourge that swept away the father, and the widowed mother with four children, two sons and two daughters, the girls being twins, made her way to Oregon City. The teams were oxen and the journey was attended with great hardship and suffering. Later Mrs. Carter married Charles Adams and they located on a donation claim near Oregon City. Four years later they removed to Albany and thence to Salem. In 1871, they came across the mountains, locating in the vicinity of Antelope. Mr. Adams, stepfather of Mrs. French, was a man of influence and prominence and was closely identified with church work where he resided. He was engaged much in raising stock but of later years retired from active business.

Mrs. French is an official member and active, earnest worker of the Methodist Episcopal church; she is also a member of the W. C. T. U. and the Sorosis club and is one of the leading ladies of The Dalles. She is a charming hostess and presides over her home with a gracious hospitality that renders it the center of refinement and comfort.

PART III

HISTORY OF SHERMAN COUNTY

CURRENT EVENTS—1805 TO 1905.

Sherman, the second county to be considered in this History of Central Oregon, is the smallest in Eastern Oregon, although there are five smaller west of the Cascades. Sherman was taken from Wasco and was the last formed from the "Mother of Counties," having been set aside in 1889. To glance at it on the map one might reach a point in imagination when one could believe that a six or ten-horse wheat team could not be turned around without upsetting the wagon into the John Day or Des Chutes river. Our analysis of its resources will show that it is "the biggest little county" on the Pacific Coast.

During the early days explorers and trappers of the Hudson's Bay and other companies many times passed through or by, the territory now designated as Sherman county. Quite frequently they voyaged up and down the Columbia, its northern boundary, on their way between interior posts and Fort Vancouver. Undoubtedly the Lewis and Clark party were the first white men to gaze upon its limits. The several exploring parties who passed along the Columbia in the early part of the Nineteenth Century, must, certainly, have obtained an inadequate idea of the country, as along the banks of the Columbia at this point there is not an inviting prospect.

In the '40's when the tide of immigration set in toward the Willamette Valley, the route lay through what is now Sherman county and penetrated further into its interior than had the trappers and explorers. The "old emigrant road" entered Sherman county over the John Day river a short distance below the mouth of Rock creek, crossed the county, passing through one and one-half mile north of the site of the present town of Wasco and crossing the Des Chutes at its mouth. The road led to The Dalles, where the immigrants either embarked in canoes for the trip down the Columbia or, after 1846, proceeded by way of the "Barlow Road" over the Cascade mountains. The "old emigrant road" alluded to was constructed about 1847. It entered the county one mile below Leonard's bridge, climbed the hill in a southwesterly direction, paralleled Grass Valley canyon until near the present site of Grass Valley, where it entered the canyon and continued southwesterly to Buck Hollow. The immigrants ferried themselves across the Des Chutes on wagon boxes one mile north of Sherar's bridge.

When Dr. Marcus Whitman journeyed westward with the first settlers of Oregon, in 1843, it is said that the soldiers who were sent from the coast met them at the point where De Moss Springs is now located, owned by Professor J. M. De Moss. Here camped the soldiers and immigrants together for several days under the high, though beautiful bluff of rocks known to many who have passed along that route since Whitman's decease. These springs are about a dozen in number, and all on this immigrant route. This was the original road across Sherman county. Describing this locality January 1, 1898, The Dalles Times-Mountaineer said: "Here is found a body of land seemingly set aside for the use of a favored class. A tract almost forty miles square, bounded on the east, west and north by the John Day, Des Chutes and Columbia rivers, and on the south by a deep gorge so abrupt that with the others it makes a vast section of land set apart from all others. A typical prairie country it supported a heavy growth of prairie grass, differing only from the great plains in the fact that it is rolling and intersected with canyons. These canyons, however, are not rocky and are easily accessible. All along the horizon loom majestic mountains, covered with timber, and occasionally the towering summit of a snow peak rises high above all else, a thing of grandeur to be admired. On the east are the Blue Mountains; on the west the Cascades and most important of all Mount Hood—the pride of Oregon—shows itself so all may look and admire.

Although in these early days thousands of immigrants passed through Sherman county on their way to the Willamette Valley, not one stopped off, or even thought of the country between the John Day and Des Chutes as a place of residence. It was not until 1859 that the first settler came and made his home here. As is almost invariably the case accurate data relating to the first settlers of any county is difficult to obtain. Two or three drove stock into this country in 1859. During the next decade several more came, all engaging in the stock business. Quite a number came during the '70's. But it was not until 1878 and the few years following that the country between the John Day and Des Chutes rivers received any number of settlers. It was then that the country was found to be capable of producing crops. After that the settlement was rapid. We shall endeavor to give the story of the early settlement of the county in as comprehensive a manner as the available data will allow.

Perhaps the first person to settle between the John Day and Des Chutes rivers was William Graham. He came some time about 1858 and located at a place now known as Thomas Miller fruit farm on the Des Chutes. Mr. Graham is said to have grazed the first horses on the range. Soon he was followed by others until the number of horses and cattle in this county alone ran up into the hundreds of thousands. We have used the word “perhaps” advisedly, for the question concerning the date of his settlement is still problematical.

In the early days Barnum worked for The Dalles Military Wagon Road Company. At the time he located here he placed scrip on the land, but this title not being considered good he afterwards homesteaded the place. It is now a portion of the present town of Moro.

Of this “hard winter” predicted with such surprising accuracy, by Mr. Barnum, it may be said that during several weeks in February and March of 1862, the temperature indicated 40 degrees below zero at the express station between Des Chutes and John Day rivers. Several Florence miners perished in the snow between Walla Walla and The Dalles. Nothing but the periphery of the hills remain about the old stage road below what is now Wasco by which the visitor of 1861-2 can today fix the location. The bunk room in which tons of gold dust were stored, as at the Alaska trail inns now; the grouty old keeper; the nimble drivers and the dogs are missing; also the weather—40 degrees below zero for six weeks’ duration, with a travel record of fifty-seven miles from Walla Walla to The Dalles, and several good men frozen to death. In her “Reminiscences of Oregon” Mrs. Lord says:

A party of men who had been at the Colville mines were on their way down to The Dalles; on reaching the John Day river the stage, or whatever conveyance they were using could come no further, so seven men decided to walk. They were Jager, Mulkey, Galliger, Gay, Moody and two others. Galliger was an Irishman, very poorly clothed, tall and muscular. Jager was of medium size, or under, wore two suits of clothes and an overcoat. They tried to dissuade him from attempting the trip, but he was very anxious to get home to Portland. Mulkey was a heavy set, rather large man, past middle age, heavily dressed and with a heavy belt of gold around his waist under his clothing. The others I do not know much about.

The snow was two feet deep on the level and badly drifted. They took turns in going ahead and breaking the road. Some of them unwisely used stimulants to counteract the cold, but the reaction left them in worse condition than before. The big Irishman never flagged and finally had to break the trail all the time. He came in without a blemish; Jager gave out and wanted to give up long before the others. They did everything in their power to bring him through, but he would not try, so they were forced to leave him unconscious. Galliger got through to the Des Chutes and sent out help for the others.

to let them thaw, and none of them knew what their real condition was. Mulkey was dreadfully frozen and went to bed with most of his clothes on. For days he would not allow them to be taken off. When he was finally forced to let them be removed the gold belt was found; they supposed he was afraid of being robbed. His condition was something dreadful, and he soon died. The two young men were brought in, taken to the garrison, and had to have parts of their toes and feet amputated. The body of Jager was brought in and put into a metallic coffin filled with alcohol, and placed in a storeroom until the ice went out of the Columbia and they were enabled to send it home. Two other men were frozen the same winter in attempting to make the same trip. One wandered off toward the Columbia and his remains were not found until the next spring.

D. G. Leonard settled on the John Day river in 1861. He conducted a road house and ferry and subsequently erected a bridge across the John Day which for many years was used by stages. The place is now known as Leonard's Bridge. In 1862 Masiker came and located on Military Road Land. Shortly afterward he died and his widow married Samuel Price who had been working for Masiker. Jesse Eaton settled one and one-half miles northwest of what is now Wasco, in 1864. Here he conducted a road house, and also took up a claim in the Wasco settlement, which was then known as Spanish Hollow. To Mr. Eaton should be given the credit of growing the first grain in what is now Sherman county. This was not wheat, but rye, which he raised for hay and, with horses, trampled out sufficient seed for the following season.

The stage road, built in 1864, between The Dalles and Walla Walla, ran up from the mouth of the Des Chutes through what is now known as Fulton's canyon; passed by Samuel Price's stage station, now Poplar Grove; thence to Locust Grove and on to Jesse Eaton's place; thence to what is now Wasco to Klondyke and by Webfoot Springs to Leonard's Bridge on the John Day River. It was in use until 1881. By the construction of this road travel to the Idaho mines was deflected to Walla Walla. Traffic over this highway was enormous and travelers had again an opportunity to see, as had the earlier immigrants, the bunch grass hills of Sherman county.

Mr. A. J. Price settled in the county about 1865. The Finnegan Brothers located six miles south of Grass Valley in 1867 and engaged in stock growing. In 1869 John Gilland came to the C. E. Jones place about one mile from De Moss Springs and engaged in the same business. Shortly following Mr. Gould settled on a claim near Rosebush, five miles east of Grass Valley, on a farm that still bears his name. Practically he became the first settler in southern Sherman county. Mr. Gould was followed by James Pier-son, who located in Grass Valley, about six miles from Leonard's Bridge. This was in 1870. He, too, engaged in stock raising. About this time Mr. James Jenkins came into the country with a large band of horses. He settled near what is now Murray Springs where, aside from planting the first fruit orchard, he engaged extensively in raising stock. Mr. Jenkins was, undoubtedly, the pioneer in fruit culture, and was the first to demonstrate that lands along the rivers would produce excellent fruit (which has since been well attested, and in addition that the uplands as well, grow as fine fruit as was ever placed on the market.) Mr. Jenkins', with other orchards adjoining, has become a very valuable piece of property.

In 1870, five miles south of Grass Valley, Mat Ingleman located and engaged in stock raising. James Mackin, in 1871, settled near what is now Kent, but at that period known as Buck Hollow. He engaged in stock raising. John Harrington came to Sherman county in 1872 and was among the first to engage in the since wonderfully developed sheep industry. The reader will bear in mind that in speaking of the advent of these early pioneers we refer to the territory now comprised in Sherman county as distinct from Wasco county. Sherman county had not then evolved. Ten miles south of what is now Grass Valley Tilford Moore settled in 1872, and began raising stock. In 1864 Mr. Cornwall located on what is known as Mackin place in Buck Hollow, with cattle, and in 1878 a man known as "French Pete" settled on "Jack Knife." With the exception of John Harrington his advent marked the beginning of the sheep era. J. H. Smith came all the way from New Brunswick to Sherman county in 1876; he embarked in the business of rearing sheep. Mr. James Frazier was not long in discovering the advantages of Sherman county, and soon had under way a most profitable business. Judge John Fulton moved to the present Sherman county in 1878, and settled about nine miles west of what is now Wasco. He engaged in stock raising and general farming, being, in fact, one of the first agriculturists in Sherman county. In 1880 Judge Fulton and William Walker brought a threshing machine from another locality and threshed their grain. William Walker, in company with his brother James, came in 1878 and located west of Wasco, where they successfully engaged in general farming.

rival of George W. Bates and Adam Keast. It is said by Dr. E. R. Rollins that this year of 1879 he raised and threshed the first wheat ever threshed in what is now Sherman county. At the beginning of the year 1878 there were living in that portion of Wasco, that is now Sherman county, only forty-two white people. The first settlers in that portion of the county where is now the site of Grass Valley were Dr. C. R. Rollins, John W. Dow, Frank Richie and a Mr. Locks. They came in 1878. The first postoffice within the present limits of the county was at Spanish Hollow, two miles northwest of the present site of the town of Wasco. Jesse Eaton was the primal postmaster. Henry Barnum was the first justice of the peace and John Fulton the first constable within present county boundaries. They were elected in 1878; the entire territory now comprising the county was known as Eaton's precinct. It must be born in mind that they were then officials of Wasco county, Eaton's being one of Wasco county's precincts.

During the year 1880 that part of Sherman, once a portion of Wasco, county was rapidly settled. In its issue of May 4, 1880, the Weekly Times of The Dalles said: "In our own county, between the John Day and Des Chutes rivers, the bunch grass hills are dotted with cabins of settlers some of whom came from the far-off states, and others from the Palouse and other sections of the country in Washington. We have no desire to be boastful, but there is no doubt that eastern Oregon is fast filling up with an agricultural population."

Among others who came in 1880 were: W. H. Biggs, W. A. Murchie, W. M. Barnett, Abil Erskine, Henry Root, Rufus, John, Captain, W. H., Henry, C. W. and Lawrence Moore, George C. Vinton, Sr., and George C., Jr., and Mr. Cushman. A correspondent of The Dalles Times writing from Spanish Hollow under date of November 4, 1880, said:

As a result of settling up these bunch grass plains there were 62 votes cast at Eaton's on election day, besides there were ten or fifteen who absented themselves. A majority of them have settled here within the last year. As I ride over the hills I meet on every hand new houses and improvements. Many of the dwellings would do credit to older settlements. They have just completed a school house; had church services in it last Sunday, when 50 settlers assembled with lunch baskets, etc., and spent the day in getting acquainted with each other.

A thief marred their pleasure by "going through" the houses of Messrs. Biggs and Love while the inmates were at church, robbing the former of $600 and the latter of a pistol. He did the job like an experienced hand at the business. The theft has created considerable excitement and the settlers have formed a vigilance committee and all future thieves will be found dangling from the end of a rope, labeled with their occupation, by a "court and jury" of vigilantes.

December 20th the correspondent added the following:

I hear the vigilantes have perfected a plan by which they can catch any thief that travels this road by a code of signals. It seems there is a class of men who can't pass a thing lying around loose along the road without packing it off, to the great annoyance of the owners. A few of this reckless class of thieves will swing shortly, no doubt; and right here let me pray the county court to appoint us a justice of the peace, as there is not one within twenty-five miles of us.

February 20th he wrote:

The winter has been long and the stock is dying fast. Cattle and sheep are faring poorly. I think fully one-half of these have died. Horses are, also, very poor and some have died. If some of your merchants would come out here and start a store I think it would pay them. There is no store that amounts to anything on this side of the Des Chutes river where we can get goods by the wholesale. * * * There is a movement in the direction of getting a post route from Grant's Landing to Bakeoven, with offices along the road. This will be of great benefit to the settlers in this section. The man who starts the first store will "hit the nail on the head."

Bruno F. Medler located at Wasco in 1881. He has the distinction of having owned the first header brought into Sherman county. A Grass Valley correspondent of The Dalles Times said December 25, 1881: "This part of Wasco county is fast settling up; and where one year ago there were but two or three settlers, there are now from 25 to 30 families. The crops this year were splendid and the country seems to be in a prosperous condition and bids fair to become an agricultural instead of the grazing region which it has been."

The first "woman farmer" in Sherman county was, undoubtedly, Miss Annie Fulton, sister of Judge Fulton. She secured land near Wasco in 1882, which she owned and operated successfully. Other pioneers of 1882 were: W. J. Armsworthy, George L. Doyle, Del Porter, Clark Dunlap, John Forbus and H. O. Corsan. Mr. Biggs was the first farmer to use a gang plow. Of Sherman county, as it was in 1882, Mr. George L. Doyle says:

It was in the month of August, 1882, that I first beheld what is now known as Sherman county. It was at that time an almost unbroken bunch grass prairie from the Des Chutes to the John Day rivers; the stockman's paradise where vast herds of horses, cattle and sheep grazed to their knees in bunch grass—one of the finest and most succulent grasses that grows—and where the antelope and frisky jack-rabbit roamed at their own sweet will, and the Siwash was monarch of all he surveyed. * * * The first place I saw was Grass Valley, then occupied by Dr. Rollins, the only physician between the two rivers. There were a few small places between Grass Valley and the present site of Moro. After passing Gordon ridge the small patches of plowing became more frequent. The road at that time followed the top of the ridges and easiest grades until it reached Spanish Hollow near the Eaton stock ranch. It was near here that I saw the first and only header at that time in Sherman county. It was at the Pugh place and was owned by B. F. Medler. The Dunlap and Chapman stock farms came next and there was our pioneer merchant, William Barnett, who had a store and was postmaster at Spanish Hollow—the only postoffice between Des Chutes and John Day rivers.

The present site of Wasco was at that time pasture land owned by Messrs. Dunlap, Biggs, MacPherson and Armsworthy. The amount of land under cultivation in the county in 1882 could not have exceeded 1,000 acres, being in patches of from ten to twenty acres. The ground cut could not have been over 500 acres. The only 28-inch thresher run by horse-power was owned by B. F. Medler and Julius Wiesick, and was the first one in the county. It was a very crude outfit. Considering distance between farms there was a great loss of time moving from setting to setting. It was not uncommon to move from four to six miles for settings that yielded only from 200 to 500 bushels. The farmers paid for the settings, but not by the bushel. There was not a bushel of grain sold outside of the county, as it was needed for bread and feed for the fall and winter of 1882 and 1883. In the fall of 1882 after the crops were in the next consideration was wood for winter use. We concluded to go to Jack Knife and Pine Hollow for juniper wood. We took the road that crossed Grass Valley canyon at the place now known as McDonald's bridge, thence south following the ridges, and camping wherever we could find water, which was generally at the bottoms of the canyons. Water was our first consideration, so if we happened to make a dry camp at night, we always aimed to give the stock a chance to feed and make up for lost time when we got to where there was water. We would drive as near as we could get to the wood and leaving our wagons, we went down into the canyons, chopping our wood and after snaking it to the wagons, loaded and started back home. Possibly some reader may think we got cheap wood, and had a snap getting it, but I can say from experience, and all who have been there will agree with me, that we earned the wood.

To commence farming in the territory now known as Sherman county, required no great amount of capital—a good span of horses, a plow, willingness to work, a fair constitution—these were about all the requirements necessary to found a home and enter upon prosperity. The government fee for entering land was only a few dollars. If one did his share nature kindly completed the task. And during the early '80's the country was rapidly settled; agriculture crowded stock-raising for the honor of being the leading industry. To illustrate the progress made in 1885, Sherman county produced 1,654,210 bushels of wheat.

The Dalles, being the head of navigation on the Columbia river was, naturally, the supply point for all this vast country. The usual transportation was by freight wagons, until the Oregon Railroad & Navigation Company's lines were built along the northern boundary of the county. In the early '80's this road was constructed. Then it was that Sherman county began to develop pre-eminence as a wheat-growing section. Probably the first men to come to Sherman county in search of wheat land were Messrs. O. M. and Hugh Scott. They came from a magnificent wheat belt the soil of which was not dissimilar to that they purposed to till. Thus, it was not a slow, steady, growth, but the grain enterprise appeared almost spontaneous. Metaphorically speaking Sherman county had been transformed in one night. For the poor man it became a paradise. Hundreds came; hundreds founded homes. The carpenter plied his vocation building houses; the blacksmith came with his tools; the merchant saw and appreciated the advantages offered to do business. Shortly afterward the golden cereal was being transferred from what was to be Sherman county by the trainload. It was the largest wheat belt in the world not intersected by a railroad. Year after year wagon load after wagon load was hauled to the Oregon Railroad & Navigation Company's stations at Rufus and Biggs. Wood, coal, lumber and other supplies were hauled back; the farmer prospered.

With such magnificent prospects in view it was only natural that the citizens of the territory between the Des Chutes and John Day rivers should desire to be set aside as a county by themselves. The reasons for this were thus set forth by Mr. George L. Doyle:

"Like all new communities in America, about this time we began to think we had some say in governing our destinies, and began to bud and bloom into full fledged politicians. Although a part of Wasco county, we were so far removed from the county seat that we were merely figure-heads; all county business requiring a trip of thirty miles and more which was a great expense and loss of time. The topographical lay of the present county seemed, as we thought, to call for the forming of a new county between the Des Chutes and the John Day rivers. That we were right has been proven beyond doubt, and we have at present one of the richest and best governed counties in the state, if not in the United States. To think of forming a new county with us was to act. Although it was a hard fight it was successful."

In December, 1888, when a plan was proposed to annex a portion of Wasco to Gilliam county, talk of forming a new county was heard quite frequently. Two petitions were at once placed in circulation in eastern Wasco county; one asking that the territory be not annexed to Gilliam county, and the other asking that a new county be formed from that part of Wasco lying between the Des Chutes and John Day rivers. The proposed new county was to be about twenty miles wide and over sixty miles in length. Each petition was signed by many, particularly the one protesting against being annexed to Gilliam county. Certain ones did not sign the other on the grounds that the movement was premature; that the proposed new county would be too small and that there was not sufficient taxable property in the limits to warrant the action.

Of course there was strong and vigilant opposition to the project. Wasco county, for so many years the prey of all who desired to form new county governments, was called upon early in 1889 for another small slice of territory for the formation of Sherman county. As they had, many times in the past, the residents of Wasco county again protested against further dismemberment of their territory. December 22, 1888, when agitation was begun, the Times-Mountaineer, of The Dalles, said:

"We see no reason for the formation of a new county between the Des Chutes and John Day rivers. It would increase the burden of taxation on the citizens and would be no real benefit to the people. The Dalles is not such a long distance from this portion of Wasco that they need a new political division and a county seat all to themselves. The town that would receive the honor of being the county seat might be benefited in business, but the people generally, we believe, are satisfied with the county town as it is now."

The bill to create the county of Fulton, with the town of Moro as the county seat, was introduced in the house by Representative E. O. McCoy, of Wasco county, residing in that part which became Sherman county, in January, 1889, at the session of the Oregon legislature which convened January 14th. The bill passed the house Friday, February 15th. The name was changed from Fulton to Sherman, and the southern boundary line removed further north. February 23d the Times-Mountaineer said: "Sherman county with much diminished boundaries, passed the senate last Thursday, February 21st. The new county is very small in extent, and as it is, it is well that it should be formed. The value of county buildings and other items have been amended so that Wasco is not much injured by the division."

As has been shown, this was only a portion of the territory asked for in the original bill, owing to the strenuous fight made in the legislature by Wasco county. Hon. E. O. McCoy, the author of the measure, saw that there was no hope of securing the passage of the bill in its original shape. He compromised with its opponents; the bill was then amended and passed. A correspondent of The Dalles Times-Mountaineer, writing from Emigrant Springs, February 3, 1891, thus summarizes the campaign ending in the organization of Sherman county.

* * * All the action taken by the citizens of the proposed county in their various meetings, in circulating petitions in writing up the move—"booming it, so to speak—in raising funds to prosecute the work to final consummation, was taken by persons residing north of Buck Hollow. Notwithstanding the citizens south of Buck Hollow never co-operated with us in any of this work done prior to the meeting of the legislature, the only original bill, as presented by Mr. McCoy, proposed to make the north line of Crook the south line of Sherman, or Fulton, as it was then named. It was generally known, however, before the legislature convened that the citizens around Antelope would uncompromisingly oppose any measure that would set them off into the new county. And to no well-informed person's surprise, when Mr. McCoy's bill went before the house committee on counties, he was there confronted by a party from Antelope with a remonstrance bearing a thousand signatures, backed by The Dalles board of trade, and championed by the speaker of the house, Hon. E. L. Smith. With our senators opposed these obstacles were rendered absolutely insurmountable. And, as was expected by the friends of the bill, Buck Hollow was agreed upon as the line before leaving the committee room. The Antelope men went home; The Dalles opposition withdrew, and, said Speaker Smith to Mr. McCoy, "Now I want you to have a county." And, as above stated, the bill so passed the house without a single "no."

Combined Harvester at work in Sherman County

Everything appeared to be satisfactorily settled at that time, but before the bill was to become a law the territory was to be further restricted. Just prior to the adjournment of the legislature a strenuous opposition suddenly sprung up and a remonstrance was hurriedly sent to Salem. The result was that the southern boundary of the new county was moved still further north, and in that form the bill became a law.

Sherman county was named in honor of General William Tecumseh Sherman. The bill originally introduced for creating the new division named the county proposed Fulton, in honor of Colonel James Fulton, a prominent resident of the new county; before it became a law the name of Sherman was substituted for that of Fulton. Following is the text of the Enabling Act:

Be it enacted by the Legislative Assembly of the State of Oregon:

Section 1. That all that portion of the State of Oregon embraced within the following boundary lines be, and the same is hereby created, and organized into a separate county by the name of Sherman, to-wit: Beginning at a point in the center of the main channel of the Columbia river, opposite the mouth of the John Day river; thence up the middle of the main channel of the said John Day river to the south line of township number 2, south where it crosses the John Day river; thence west along the said south line of township 2 south to the middle of the Des Chutes river; thence down the center of the main channel of said river to a point in the center of the main channel of the Columbia river opposite the mouth of the Des Chutes river; thence up the middle of the main channel of the Columbia river to the place of beginning.

Section 2. That the territory embraced within the said boundary lines shall compose a county for all civil and military purposes, and shall be subject to the same laws and restrictions and be entitled to elect the same officers as other counties of this state; provided that it shall be the duty of the governor as soon as convenient after this Act shall become a law, to appoint for Sherman county and from its citizens the several county officers allowed by law to other counties in this State; which said officers, after duly qualifying according to law, shall be entitled to hold their respective offices until their successors are duly elected at the general election of 1890, and have duly qualified according to law.

Section 3. The temporary county seat of Sherman county shall be located at Wasco in said county until a permanent location shall be adopted. At the next general election the question shall be submitted to the legal voters of said county, and the place, if any, which shall receive a majority of all the votes cast at said election shall be the permanent county seat of said county; but if no place shall receive a majority of all the votes cast, the question shall again be submitted to the legal voters of said county at the next general election, between the two points having the highest number of votes at said election, and the place receiving the highest number of votes at such last election shall be the permanent county seat of said county.

Section 4. Said county of Sherman shall for representative purposes, be annexed to the 18th representative district, and for senatorial purposes said county shall be annexed to the 17th senatorial district.

Section 5. The county clerk of Wasco county shall, within thirty days after this Act shall have gone into operation, make out and deliver to the county clerk of Sherman county a transcript of all taxes assessed upon persons and property within said county, and which were previously included within the limits of Wasco county, and all taxes which shall remain unpaid upon the day this Act shall become a law shall be paid to the proper officer of Sherman county. The said clerk of Wasco county shall, also, make out and deliver to the county clerk of Sherman county within the time above limited, a transcript of all cases pending in the circuit and county courts of Wasco county between persons residing in Sherman county, and transfer all original papers in said cases to be tried in Sherman county.

Section 6. The county court of Sherman county shall be held at the county seat on the first Monday in April, July, October and January of each year.

Section 7. The said county of Sherman is hereby attached to the 7th judicial district for judicial purposes, and the terms of the circuit court for said county shall be held at the county seat of said county on the second Monday in March and the first Monday in October of each year.

Section 8. Until otherwise provided for the county judge of Sherman county shall receive an annual salary of $300, and the county treasurer of said county shall receive an annual salary of $100, and the county stock inspector of said county shall receive an annual salary of $300. The sheriff and county clerk of said county shall receive the same fees as are now allowed by law to the sheriff and clerk of Wasco county.

Section 9. The county treasurer of Sherman county shall, out of the first money collected for taxes, pay over to the treasurer of Wasco county the full amount of state tax on the assessment of 1888 due from the citizens of Sherman county, and within one year after its organization, by the appointment of its officers as hereinbefore provided, shall assume and pay to the county of Wasco a pro rata proportion of the remaining indebtedness of Wasco county, after deducting therefrom the amount of money that has been collected in taxes from the property of the territory to be embraced in the county of Sherman and expended by Wasco county for public buildings situated within Dalles City, and that George H. Thompson, R. F. Gibbons, of Wasco county, and C. M. Scott, of Sherman county, are hereby appointed to determine the value of such property and the amount of indebtedness to be assumed by said Sherman county. Said persons shall meet at the county seat of Wasco county on the 1st day of May, 1889, or within ten days thereafter and take and subscribe to an oath before the county judge of Wasco county faithfully to discharge their duties; thereupon said board shall proceed with said work, and when completed file a report of their conclusions in duplicate with the clerks of Wasco and Sherman counties. Within thirty days after the filing of such report in Sherman county either county may appeal from the decision of said board to the circuit court of Wasco county by serving notice of appeal upon the clerk of the other county. Upon perfecting the issues in the said circuit court, either county may demand a change of venue to any other county in the 7th judicial district of the state of Oregon, which may be agreed upon by said counties, or, in the event of their disagreement, which may be designated by the judge of said district. The trial may be by jury, and the judgment rendered may be enforced as other judgments against counties. If the county appealing fails to receive a more favorable judgment than the finding of said board, by at least $500, it shall pay the cost of appeal. If no appeal be taken by either county within the thirty days above provided, the finding of said board shall be conclusive. The said board shall receive $3 per day for each day actually employed and mileage. The expense incurred by the above mentioned board shall be borne equally by Wasco and Sherman counties.

Section 10. The county judge of Sherman county shall let by contract, to the lowest responsible and efficient bidder, the work of transcribing all the records of Wasco county affecting real estate situated in Sherman county, and when concluded they shall be examined and certified to by the clerk of Sherman county, and shall thereafter be recognized and acknowledged as the official records of Sherman county; provided the clerk of Sherman county shall be allowed to bid on such work.

Section 11. It shall be the duty of the superintendent of schools for Wasco county, within sixty days after the appointment of a superintendent of schools in Sherman county, to make out and forward to said superintendent of schools in Sherman county a true and correct transcript or abstract of the annual reports of the clerks of the various school districts embraced within the said Sherman county; and he shall, also, at the time of making the apportionments of the school fund for the year 1888, apportion to the various school districts within Sherman county their pro rata proportion of said school fund, the same as if said county had not been created and organized.

Section 12. The county court at its first regular session shall appoint a stock inspector whose salary shall be $100 per annum to be paid quarterly.

Section 13. Inasmuch as the early formation of Sherman county is much desired, this Act shall take effect and be in force from and after its approval by the Governor and the appointment of the proper officers as herein provided.

Approved February 25, 1889.

When the bill finally became a law with the restricted dimensions for the new county, the people of the Grass Valley country were far from being pleased. By the terms of the law the south boundary of Sherman county passed through the middle of their country, which, of course, was not to their liking. Some who were included in the new division were dissatisfied at being placed in such a small county; those to the south who were left out were no better off than they were before. On the town of Wasco was laid the blame for cutting down the originally proposed boundaries of the county. The charge against Wasco, condensed, was that it had influenced this change in the boundary to better its chances of becoming and remaining the capital of the new county. With a county extending to the Crook county line the chance that in time some other town would secure the prize was plainly apparent; with narrow limits Wasco's location would not be so far from the center of the county as to endanger its location as capital. Therefore the residents of Grass Valley naturally opposed the organization of Sherman county when it was proposed to concentrate its limits as they were finally adopted. A mass meeting was called; resolutions were passed protesting against the cut; nothing availed. A correspondent at Emigrant Springs writing to The Dalles Times-Mountaineer under date of February 3, 1891, said:

Ever since the fact became known to the citizens of Oregon residing between the Des Chutes and John Day rivers, and north of Buck Hollow, that on February 25, 1889, Governor Pennoyer signed the bill creating Sherman county there has been general dissatisfaction. Nearly five-sixths of these people were dissatisfied because of the diminutive size of the new county, and the other sixth because they were not included within its limits. This statement cannot be gainsaid. It is true a few persons could be found who wanted the south boundary to extend to Crook county. It is true there were some who even wanted to remain a few years longer in Wasco county, and I believe it is likewise true that few counties have ever been created in Oregon that gave more dissatisfaction to their citizens than Sherman county would have given with its south boundary as fixed in McCoy's bill, which he succeeded in passing the house on February 15, 1889, without a dissenting vote.

Concisely stated the population of the new county was 1,400, and it assumed as its share of Wasco county's indebtedness about $15,000. Tuesday, March 12, 1889, Sherman county began as a separate political division. Then the several county officials-to-be met at the Oskaloosa hotel in Wasco and took their oaths of office. The political chapter of Part II of this work will summarize the election and acts of these pioneer officials. It may be said here that the commissioners at first rented a building at Wasco for court house purposes. The county's rate of taxation at the assessment of 1889 was fixed at 18 mills on the dollar. It was not long before Sherman's large share of Wasco county's debt was fully paid. Exclusive of wheat reserved for home consumption there were exported in 1889 from Sherman county 20,000 bushels.

Of course it was destined that the new county should become involved in "county seat fights." The country south of Gordon Ridge had been rapidly settled up. The town of Moro was founded; the question of a permanent county seat was in the air; each section had its favorite location. As the election drew nearer the fight for county seat honors narrowed down to three places, Wasco, Moro and Kenneth. It was claimed that the last named was, geographically, nearest the center of the county. Kenneth was merely a "stopping place" a few miles east of Moro. It never attained to the importance of a "town," but was quite well known as a road station. The result of this election, when the votes were counted, showed that none of the three places named had received a majority of all votes cast. Under the law it became necessary for Moro and Wasco, the two highest, to again compete two years later. Wasco, of course, remained the county seat until a permanent location should be selected.

It will be remembered that the enabling act creating Sherman county, authorized a board of three commissioners to appraise the amount of Wasco county's indebtedness due from Sherman. The following is the report of the board to the court:

To the Honorable, the County Courts of Wasco and of Sherman Counties of the State of Oregon:

The undersigned commission appointed to determine the value of the public buildings belonging to Wasco county and situated within Dalles City, and to ascertain the pro rata valuation of the indebtedness of said county to be assumed by the county of Sherman, created under an act of the legislative assembly of the state of Oregon and approved February 25, 1889, find that the indebtedness of Wasco county at the date of the approval of said act was $63,243.35. That the pro rata proportion of the same which should be assumed by the county of Sherman is $10,208.14, from which last sum should be deducted the amount of money collected in taxes from the property of the territory embraced in the county of Sherman and expended in public buildings in Dalles City, the sum of $1,587; remaining pro rata proportion of indebtedness due from Sherman county, $8,621.14. We further find that the sheriff of Wasco county had collected from the taxpayers of Sherman county on the tax roll of 1888 and paid the same to the treasurer of Wasco county the sum of $4,708.94, from which sum should be deducted both state and school taxes due thereon from the county of Sherman $2,354.47; leaving amount to be deducted from the indebtedness to be assumed by Sherman county of the sum of $2,354.47. Amount due Wasco from Sherman county $6,266.67, to which last sum should be added interest from February 25, 1890, assuming that Sherman county under the act creating the same, had one year within which to settle its indebtedness, $341.19. Whole amount due $6,606.80.

Respectfully submitted. Done at The Dalles, Oregon, October 30, 1890.

O. M. SCOTT,
R. F. GIBONS,
GEORGE H. THOMPSON.

In a subsequent report submitted to the commissioners of Wasco county, dated November 8th, A. G. Johnson claimed that there was due Wasco, from Sherman county, $9,711.97. However, the following is from the report of the proceedings of the county court of Sherman county January 7, 1891:

Now on this day is presented to the court the written reports of commissioners appointed by the bill creating Sherman county to adjust its debt to Wasco county: And it appearing to the court that the amended report of said commission bearing date November 25, 1890, showing the total amount of indebtedness due Wasco county from Sherman county to be ($8,364.96) eight thousand three hundred and sixty-four and 96-100 dollars, had been accepted as an equitable adjustment of said debt by the county court of Wasco county, and this court believing that the same is just and correct:

It is hereby considered, ordered and adjudged that said amended report be accepted and the clerk authorized to draw warrants on the county treasurer in favor of Wasco county in amounts not exceeding $500 each for the said sum of $8,364.96.

This, it appears, was the final settlement between the two counties. There are no records concerning the amended report above mentioned, but the amount agreed upon by the adjusters is given. There is the same absence of information regarding the sum necessary to make up the $15,000 mentioned as having been Sherman county's expenses in the separation.

The United States census of 1890 showed that Sherman county had a population of 1,792 people. But this was anterior to a subsequent enlargement of its boundaries as will be shown later. In the legislature of 1891 the boundaries of Sherman county were changed; that is, so far as concerned its southern limitations. The original boundary provided in the bill of 1889, as passed, was only to the southern line of township 2 south; just south of the village of Grass Valley. The new boundaries of 1891 were as follows:

Beginning at a point in the center of the main channel of the Columbia river opposite the mouth of the John Day river; thence up the middle of the main channel of said John Day river to the south line of township 5 south; where it crosses the said John Day river; thence west along the said south line of township 5 to the middle of the hollow known as "Buck Hollow;" thence down the middle of the said "Buck Hollow" to a point in the middle of the Des Chutes river directly opposite the mouth of said "Buck Hollow;" thence down the center of the main channel of said river to a point in the center of the main channel of the Columbia river opposite the mouth of the Des Chutes river; thence up the middle of the main channel of said Columbia river to the place of beginning. (Session Laws 1889, p. 82, sec. 1; Session Laws 1891, p. 68, sec. 1.)

In 1891 the taxable property of Sherman county had increased to $892,718. The year 1892 witnessed the settlement of the county seat controversy. Immediately following the election of 1890 the towns of Moro and Wasco began organizing and mobilizing their forces for the great "battle of the ballots" two years later; an engagement that was to decide which of these contesting towns should remain the permanent capital of Sherman county. The result of this election was a majority for Moro of 113 votes, divided among the precincts as follows:

Precincts.	Moro.	Wasco.
Bigelow .....	11	32
Grant .....	38	39
Wasco .....	23	183
Monkland .....	61	30
Moro .....	117	2
Grass Valley .....	74	5
Rutledge .....	51	5
Kent .....	29	5
	414	301

July 7, 1892, the county court of Sherman county spread upon their records the following order:

"Now on this day it is ordered by the court that all county records be kept in their present offices until a suitable place be secured at Moro to receive them. When notified by the court that such place has been prepared the officers will remove said records to Moro."

The same day the county court decided to build a vault and temporary building at Moro, and on the 8th spread upon the records the following order:

"Now on this day it is ordered by the court that a contract be let to H. C. Jackson to build vault and temporary offices for clerk and sheriff at Moro."

The same day a block of land was purchased at Moro, the new county seat, for court house purposes. The records were moved shortly after this and the court held its first session at Moro on October 5, 1892. The taxable property in Sherman county for 1892 was $1,026,645.

In May, 1893, the county court accepted the jail from the contractors. Its cost was $2,100. It was at this period that Sherman county, in company with the whole United States, entered upon the "hard times, hard luck" epoch. It is only just to say that the county suffered no more in proportion than the other counties in the state, and not so much as many of her sisters. In April, 1894, the Grant Gazette reported that Sherman county was, practically, out of debt; the payment of taxes then due would liquidate all indebtedness. The assessed valuation was: gross, $1,115,371; net, $973,146.

Although the great flood of 1894 is fully treated in the chapter devoted to towns and cities, it is fitting that something should be said here concerning it. During the month of May railway traffic was interrupted to so great an extent as to, practically, prohibit rail communication between Portland and Umatilla; shutting off the mails and suspending freight shipments. Points along the river adjacent to Wasco suffered in full proportion with the rest; at Grant business was completely demoralized. By the Milling & Distillery Company work of every description was suspended, only so far as rendering the property more secure against wreck. Columbus, across the Columbia river, in the state of Washington, was submerged from the Presby warehouse, in which the water gained considerable depth, down to the Hickinbotham homestead. It was stated by the Moro Observer June 7th that the losses at Rufus, Grant, Biggs, Columbus, Des Chutes and Celilo were fully eighty per cent. of actual values.

In 1895 the population of Sherman county, gauged by the Oregon State census was 2,511. There were 921 legal voters. The same year the county produced 1,617,790 bushels of wheat. In January, 1896, the gain in population since 1895 was 698. The aggregate taxable property valuation had been reduced to $902,152. Until the year 1897 Sherman county had no railroad extending into its interior. The line of the Oregon Railroad & Navigation Company had traversed its northern boundary, along the Columbia river since the date of its construction in 1881. This, however, was scanty accommodation to the farmers and merchants of the interior. Long hauls were required either to some shipping point on the railway in Sherman county, or to The Dalles, for the purposes of marketing wheat and securing supplies. The best lands of the county lie back from the river a considerable distance; this is where the bulk of the population lived. A railway through the county north and south was a great desideratum. Anterior to the construction of the Columbia Southern Railway in 1897, a single two-horse stage line sufficed for the transportation of all passengers, express and mail in Sherman county. In 1902 the company had in service two daily trains—one each way. Within the limits of one year it carried 29,080 passengers, 414 tons of express matter and 118 tons of mail.

Articles of incorporation of the Columbia Southern Railway were filed March 4, 1897, for the purpose of constructing and operating a railroad from Biggs to Prineville, traversing the fertile wheat fields of Sherman, and the stock and wool districts in Wasco and Crook counties. The capital stock was fixed at $100,000. The incorporators were E. E. Lytle, J. M. Murchie and D. C. O'Reilly. March 23d surveying was commenced and construction on June 19th. October 6th the new road was completed to Wasco. The line as constructed was first-class and standard gauge, being laid with 56-pound rails and 7x8 ties, the ties being laid 3,000 to the mile. In every respect the equipment was complete. At Biggs connection is made with the Oregon Railroad & Navigation Company line. January 2, 1902, the Shaniko Leader said:

On the 29th day of June, 1897, four months after the incorporation papers were filed, active work was commenced at Biggs, the junction of the road with the line of the Oregon Railroad & Navigation Company. To the average man the task of building a railroad without means would have seemed a hopeless one, even though the task was without opposition; what would he think of, besides the task of building the road and raising the money for that purpose, had he to meet powerful and energetic enemies at every turn and at every move? Did he want right of way, they were there, like Mephistopheles, whispering, plotting against him. Did he try to sell bonds, there were the same dismal whisperings of failure, gloomy predictions of utter collapse. He could never pay his men; the first pay day would settle it; but the first pay day came and passed, the money raised and the work went on. Steadily the grade stretched along the canyon; slowly but surely the rails followed; until after a struggle, the strain and tiresomeness of which no one but he who bore the brunt will ever know, the road reached Wasco, ten miles from its starting point; three months and twenty days from the time work was commenced. The hill had been climbed, the road was in the wheat belt of Sherman county, the best of its size in the state, and traffic as well as tonnage was in sight.

* * * It was just such a victory, just such a fight made by E. E. Lytle when he conceived the idea of the Columbia Southern Railway. Possessing no means, at least none that would be considered adequate to even dream about such an undertaking by any ordinary man, he yet dared fate, fought the good fight and today the Columbia Southern Railway, with its shops and depots, daily trains and 70 odd miles of well-ballasted track, is a visible and perpetual evidence of what un-failing purpose, indomitable will and tireless energy can accomplish. January 1, 1898, The Dalles Times-Mountaineer said:

"And the projectors of this line deserve especial credit for the persistent manner in which they prosecuted their project until they saw success crown their efforts and began to transport freight to and from Wasco. This road is, without doubt, the best paying piece of railroad property in Oregon. * * * Its officials have interested themselves in Sherman county, and business-like, have left nothing undone that will help the development of the country."

This was written at the period when Wasco was the terminus of the road; it has since been extended to Shaniko, Wasco county.

The population of Sherman county in 1897 was 3,051. This was a notable year in the history of the county's almost continuous prosperity. The entire state was then emerging from a series of depressing years, financially, and Sherman county was among the first to experience the rebound. An area of 160,000 acres produced 3,700,000 bushels of wheat, oats, barley and rye, an average of over 23 bushels an acre; 8,000 tons of hay; 650 bushels of corn; 70,000 pounds of butter and cheese; 35,000 bushels of potatoes; 5,000 bushels of prunes and plums; 200,000 pounds of wool. The live stock in evidence was as follows: sheep, 39,670; hogs, 1,825; horses and mules, 5,613; cattle, 1,000.

In 1898 no county organization in the state had made a better record. Starting with a debt assumed pro rata from Wasco county, together with obligations naturally incurred in its inception of, approximately, $25,000, the county officials had, by careful, though liberal management, succeeded in wiping everything out. The cost of conducting the county had never caused exorbitant taxation. No expensive buildings had been erected, although the officials were comfortably housed. The greater portion of the money had been judiciously expended in improving roads.

Early in the spring of 1898 the project of extending the Columbia Southern Railway south from Wasco was taken under consideration by its officials and citizens of Sherman county. January 15th a public meeting was held at Moro. This was attended by a number of railway officers and most of the people of Moro. Within two hours a cash subsidy of $5,000 was pledged, aside from a tract of about eight acres of land for depot purposes. On the 17th a similar meeting convened at Grass Valley; this resulted in a substantial donation and a cash subsidy of $1,000.

Yet this extension was not accomplished without opposition. There was an element called "obstructionists" whose interests, it was claimed, would be best subserved by delay in the proposed extension. There was trouble in securing the right of way; citizens of Sherman county looked after this; it was largely owing to their sagacious efforts that the extension was secured. Following is the report of the "Right of Way Committee" appointed to dispel the Wasco taboo:

Wasco, Oregon, April 28, 1898—We, the undersigned committee, in behalf of the people of Monkland, Moro and Grass Valley, beg leave to submit the following resolution, to wit:

"Whereas, the Columbia Southern Railway is now constructed to the town of Wasco, and

"Whereas, the extension of the same will be of untold benefit to the people of Sherman county, living south of Gordon Ridge, and

"Whereas, it is the intention and desire of said railway to immediately continue the construction of the same, but on account of the unreasonable position taken by parties in granting right of way, the said railway company is experiencing great trouble and delay, therefore, be it

"Resolved, that we, the members of the above committee, most emphatically condemn the opposition to the extension of the said railway."

These resolutions were signed by: A. Dillinger, Al. Wright, P. McDonald, M. Hansen and Hugh McIntyre, for Monkland; C. A. Heath, J. V. O'Leary, B. S. Kelsay, Fred Krusow and

C. W. Moore, for Grass Valley; E. Sayres, Carl Peets, M. Damon, D. W. Howard and W. J. Martin, for Moro.

May 9, 1898, work on the extension of the road was commenced. At 5:30 o'clock p. m., Wednesday, December 14th, rails were laid to the depot grounds in Moro. This was done amid considerable excitement, ringing of bells, fanfare of whistles, firing of anvils and voicing of cheers. Engine No. 1, with the construction train ran into the city; Moro became the terminus of the Columbia Southern Railway. Thus it continued until the spring of 1900 when the road reached its present terminal point Shaniko, Wasco county.

In 1899 the valuation of taxable property in Sherman county was $1,231,655. In less than ten years of its existence, and within two years following the construction of the interior railroad, the county had liquidated its indebtedness, erected at Moro a well-appointed two-story brick court house and, at this writing, 1905, has discharged all its obligations and has a balance of from $15,000 to $20,000 in its treasury. April 7, 1899, the grand jury of Sherman county included in its report the following:

"On account of the lack of room and the great danger of fire in the present cramped offices of the clerk, sheriff and treasurer, and the inconvenience of holding county and circuit courts, we believe that the county should build a court house. We therefore recommend that a court house be built as soon as the necessary plans and contracts therefor can be made. Said court house not to cost more than $6,000."

The contracts for the erection of this edifice was let, July 1, 1899, to A. F. Peterson, of Corvallis. His bid was $6,665. Warrants for $6,000 were issued by the county court; Moro subscribed the balance; work at once commenced. November 18th the handsome building was turned over to, and accepted by, the county court.

According to the United States census of 1900 the population of Sherman county was 3,477. From 1,100 farms the yield of wheat was 4,000,000 bushels. It was said of the crop of 1901 that it required for transportation 4,300 cars of 25 tons capacity each, which, if coupled together would reach from the north to the south line of the county. It was said by the Morning Oregonian of January 2, 1905, that "During the past eight years the relative increase in the value of Sherman county land is from $2.50 to $7.50 per acre to $25 to $45 per acre and the aggregate value of products from $450,000 to $2,225,000, increasing its population from less than 1,500 to 5,500." This was preceded January 1, 1898, by the Times-Mountainer as follows: "In conclusion Sherman county greets the business world simply, candidly, with the assurance that she can not be excelled. Her people are happy, contented and prosperous. The good angel of plenty has been kind to her and her people; she welcomes all who may come within her confines for legitimate benefit. Peopled as she is by a highly desirable class of citizens, she still has room for more."

There appears a trail of fraud running deviously through the greater portion of all Oregon land transactions in which the United States government has been interested. At the present writing, April, 1905, the legal ability of Uncle Sam is pitted against the slimy, subterranean artifices of adepts in scientific swindling on extensive scales; yet men in high official positions have won the confidence of trusting political constituencies only to betray this trust in the most scandalous manner. We allude to the timber land thieves of Oregon, and several other northwestern states. A large number of them have already suffered the ignominy of indictment by a grand jury, and their cases are pending before the federal courts.

But these later crimes are only repetitions of a number of previous land frauds, perpetrated by politicians and railway magnates; bold in their conception; unscrupulous in their execution, and which in the eyes of all honest men "shine and stink like a rotten mackerel in the moonlight." One of the most glaring frauds in the annals of Oregon criminality was what is colloquially known as "The Dalles Military Wagon Road Land Grab." At least the fraud originated with this corrupt and unscrupulous syndicate, although it has been juggled into the hands of another combination known as the Eastern Oregon Land Company. Its history is that of a crime against the United States government; the good name of Oregon and thousands of western homeseekers who have discovered that even the courts are arrayed against their honest dues, and that the oft boasted "equality before the law" is a myth; a baseless illusion; a glittering generality for the astigmatism of credulous dupes. While it has affected the whole body politic of Eastern Oregon, its tyrannical curse has been to the people of Sherman county a veritable "whip of scorpions." Let us lay bare its entire historical career, calmly, conscientiously and without the least exaggeration.

By act of congress passed February 25, 1867, there was granted to the state of Oregon by the United States, to aid in the construction of a military wagon road from The Dalles to Fort Boise, on the Snake river, each alternating section of the public lands designated by odd numbers, to the extent of three sections in width on each side of the said road. By the terms of the act of congress the state of Oregon was authorized to dispose of said lands for the purpose of aiding in the construction of the said military road; and in pursuance of this authority the legislature passed an act which was approved by the governor October 20, 1868, granting to The Dalles Military Road Company, a corporation duly organized for the purpose of constructing this road, all of the lands aforesaid.

The act of congress further provided that the land should be disposed of in the following manner, to wit: "That when the governor of said state shall certify to the secretary of the interior that ten contiguous miles of said road are completed, then the quantity of land hereby granted, not to exceed thirty sections, may be sold, and so from time to time until said road shall be completed. June 23, 1869, Governor Woods filed the following acceptance, which is such an important document that we deem it worth publishing:

Executive Office,
Salem, Oregon, June 23, 1869.

I, George L. Woods, Governor of the State of Oregon, do hereby certify that this plat or map of The Dalles Military Road has been duly filed in my office by The Dalles Military Road Company and shows in connection with the public surveys, as far as said public surveys are completed, the location of the line of route as actually surveyed and upon which their road was constructed in accordance with the requirements of an act of congress approved February 25, 1867, entitled "An Act granting lands to the State of Oregon to aid in the construction of a military wagon road from Dalles City, on the Columbia river, to Fort Boise on Snake river," and with the act of the legislative assembly of the State of Oregon approved October 20, 1868, entitled "An Act donating certain lands to The Dalles Military Road Company." I further certify that I have made a careful examination of said road since its completion and that the same is built in all respects as required by the said above recited acts and that said road is accepted.

In testimony whereof I have hereunto set my hand and caused to be affixed the Great Seal of the State of Oregon.

Done at Salem, Oregon, June 23, 1869.

GEORGE L. WOODS..

(Seal of the State of Oregon.)

SAMUEL E. MAY.

Secretary of State.

January 12, 1870, the governor issued a further certificate in like terms and effect as that of June 23, 1869, certifying to the secretary of the interior the completion of the military road through its entire length by The Dalles Military Road Company. December 18, 1874, the commissioner of the general land office of the United States withdrew from sale the odd numbered sections of land within three miles on either side of the road in favor of The Dalles Military Road Company.

June 18, 1874, congress passed an act authorizing the issuance of patents for lands granted to the state of Oregon in certain cases, which act of congress, after reciting that congress had granted to the state of Oregon certain lands to aid in the construction of certain military wagon roads in said state, and that there existed no law providing for the issuing of formal patents for said lands, provided "that in all cases when the roads, in the aid of construction of which said lands were granted, are shown by the certificate of the governor of the state of Oregon, as in said act provided, to have been constructed and completed, patents to said lands shall issue in due form to the state of Oregon as fast as the same shall under said grant be selected and certified, unless the state of Oregon shall by public acts have transferred its interests in said lands to any corporations, in which case patents shall issue from the general land office to such corporation or corporations."

Under the provisions of this act the road company selected lands, and May 31, 1876, conveyed the title to such lands to Edward Martin, the consideration being given as $125,000. Then by sundry mesne conveyances the title became vested in the Eastern Oregon Land Company.

Such was the status in 1885, when public opinion, calling for an investigation into the fraud that had been practiced upon the government by this road company, became so strong that at the session of the legislature that year a memorial was passed by both houses asking congress to look into the matter and commence suit for the recovery of the lands. March 2, 1889, congress responded to this appeal, passing an act authorizing the attorney general of the United States to bring suit to procure a decree of forfeiture of all lands granted by the act of congress of February 25, 1867, on the ground that the terms of the grant had not been complied with. This act also sought a cancellation of all patents therefor, issued by the United States under the act, and all conveyances to purchasers under said patents, and under the act, as well as a forfeiture of the lands still unpatented. The bill filed by the attorney general alleged in substance, "That the road was never constructed in whole or in part; that through the fraudulent representations of the officers, stockholders and agents of the corporation, the governor of Oregon was deceived and induced to issue a certificate in pursuance of the provisions of the act, declaring that he had examined the road throughout its entire length, and that it had been constructed and completed in all respects in accordance with the statute; and that, relying on this certificate, the patents to portions of the lands had been issued by the United States."

Suit was immediately begun in the circuit court, district of Oregon, before Judge Sawyer, L. L. McArthur appearing as United States attorney, and James K. Kelley and Dolph, Bellinger, Mallory & Simpson for the defendants, The Dalles Military Road Company, et al. The case came up for argument February 18, 1890, the defendants filing two pleas, as follows: That the governor's certificate was made without fraud; that the defendants were bona fide purchasers from The Dalles Military Road Company, without notice of any fraud or defect in the title. In an opinion rendered February 2, 1890, Judge Sawyer sustained the defendants' pleas and dismissed the case.

From such decision the case was appealed to the United States Circuit court, Ninth district. Judge Blatchford handing down the opinion, May 25, 1891, which reversed the decision of the district court and remanded the case for further hearing. The conclusion reached was that the district court erred in not permitting the United States to reply to the pleas and dismissing the bill absolutely. After the mandate had been filed in the district court issue was joined on these two pleas, testimony taken from settlers and others, and December 7, 1891, a decree was again entered sustaining the second plea. From this decree an appeal was taken to the circuit court of appeals, by which court on March 10, 1892, that decree was affirmed, and from this decree of affirmance the United States appealed to the supreme court of the United States. Assistant Attorney General Parker appeared for the United States, and James K. Kelly, for The Dalles Military Road Company. Justice Brewer handed down an opinion from the supreme court bench, March 6, 1893, which affirmed the decision of the district court and the court of appeals. Thus the original title of the road company to these lands was made absolute. Several other military road grants, including that of the Willamette Valley and Cascade Mountain Wagon Road Company, whose road passed through what is now Harney, then Grant county, were, also, in litigation at this time, and as the basic facts in all were the same as in the case against The Dalles Road Company, this case was made a test case and the cases against the others dropped when negative decision was rendered against this company. The main point upon which the defendants rested their case was that by the act of 1867 congress provided that the only proof of construction required to obtain possession of the lands was the governor's certificate, and when that was given, and proven to have been bona fide, the title to the land was absolute.

It will be gleaned by the reader that in these numerous trials, appeals, remands and affirmances that the United States government completely ignored the basic fraud in this outrageous proceedings—the granting to the Military Road Company a certificate to the effect that the governor had made a careful examination of said road since its completion and that the same is built as required by the act of congress. Such was far from being the fact. Little if anything was ever done in the way of making a highway. The entire unscrupulous scheme bore the offensive taint of so many later day government, state and municipal scandals which reek through the columns of the daily press, and plunge once honored citizens into the law courts and finally dump them into the sewer of political oblivion. The government was in possession of all facts necessary to lay bare this scandalous conspiracy and convict the conspirators. There was a voluminous oral and written testimony in the shape of affidavits in support of such an action. But the federal supreme court virtually said that two wrongs would make a right; that because congress had passed an unwise and ill-digested act, which imprudence was taken advantage of by an unscrupulous executive, the honest, homeseeking pioneers must suffer the penalty of combined pernicious legislation and executive truculency. It is idle to say that it is the business of the supreme court to construe congressional laws, not make them. Whenever it pleases this highest legal tribunal in the land to declare a law unconstitutional, it brushes it aside as lightly as the down is blown from the thistle top. "Fraud vitiates all contracts." A plainer case never existed than the corrupt machinations carried by this land grabbing syndicate to a successful conclusion. Today it would be called in colloquial parlance "graft." Some nearer contemporary history of this episode is given by The Dalles Times of date March 16, 1881:

The 39th congress passed an act granting certain lands to the state of Oregon for the construction of a military wagon road from Dalles City, on the Columbia, to a point opposite Fort Boise, on the Snake river. The grant included alternate sections of public lands, designated by odd numbers, to the extent of three sections in width, on each side of proposed road. The act provided that the lands should be exclusively applied to the construction of said road and to no other purpose; and should be disposed of as the work progresses. It further enacted that this should be a public highway for the use of the government of the United States, free, and that it should be constructed with such width, graduation, and bridges as to permit of its regular use for wagons and in such other special manner as the state may prescribe. The manner of the sale of the lands was prescribed in this manner: When the governor shall certify to the secretary of the interior that ten continuous miles of said road shall be completed, a sale of the land may be effected, not to exceed thirty sections.

The legislative assembly in October, 1868, passed an act conformable to the one cited above, but containing no provision specifying the kind of road that should be constructed. It was literally giving into the hands of the company all the lands mentioned in the act of congress. The history of this road is marked by fraud at every step. The object of congress was to grant a sufficient subsidy to the incorporators to aid them in building a highway to the interior of the eastern portion of this state and a part of Idaho. The fact is, no road was built, but the line of an old one followed, and settlers along the route for a number of years past have had to do their own grading and build their own bridges. It is only a short time since that a United States sub-mail contractor recovered a judgment in the circuit court of this county, because he had to perform the service on a different route.

The company incorporated for this purpose laid their hands upon the choicest parcels of the public domain within the grant, without fulfilling any of the conditions prescribed. That was not necessary, for a governor was at Salem at that time who approved all their acts, and that was satisfactory. Perhaps no one thing has tendered to retard the development of Eastern Oregon more than this "land grab." The public domain which should be used alone for settlement, has been taken out of the market, and the settler had to apply to the road magnates to effect a purchase. If the road had been built as congress provided, then it would have opened a means of ingress or egress into and out of the more sparsely settled portions of Grant and Wasco counties; but as it is, the settler had to construct his own road if he needed one.

From all along the line of this route we have heard the same complaint. There can be no doubt that the provisions as regards a public highway were never complied with or, perhaps, were never intended to be carried out by the recipients of the bounty of the government. The road is at present owned by the widow and heirs of E. Martin, deceased, who are residents of San Francisco. The estate cannot be disposed of until the minor heirs are of age. The "powers that be" at Washington should make a thorough investigation of this swindle, and if the conditions in the original act were "conditions precedent," then see that justice is done to the settlers of Eastern Oregon. Other 'frauds have been exposed; why not this one?'

In her "Reminiscences of Eastern Oregon" Mrs. Elizabeth Lord has written:

"In 1861 a company was incorporated called The Dalles and Canyon City Military Road Company, under an act passed by congress granting to such companies lands adjacent to such roads. The road was necessary to facilitate the moving of troops and stores and to establish posts and render it possible for the government to punish and control the renegade Indians who made themselves a terror to whites passing over the trails. My father (Judge W. C. Laughlin), was an active member of this company. I can not name all of the members, but William Logan and O. Humason were among them. After my father's death the company underwent some sort of sleight-of-hand performance by which the unsophisticated were left out. We were of that class."

March 29, 1882, The Dalles Times said: "Some time since we published the rumor that the owners of the road intended to sell the same to an English company who intended to bring out a colony to occupy the lands. We take the following from the Grant County News:

"An agreement on the part of the present owners of the lands of The Dalles Military Road Company to sell to Leigh, Payne & Company, Chicago, has been filed for record in the clerk's office of this county. The number of acres to be transferred is 562,577.89. The price to be paid is $600,000; $100,000 by April 1st, and the balance in bimonthly payments of $140,000 each, beginning with July 1st. It is provided that if Leigh, Payne & Company transfer the lands to an incorporated company of London, England, the bonds of such company to the amount of $420,000 shall be accepted in lieu of the three last three cash payments. The above lands are situated in the counties of Grant, Baker and Wasco."

It should be borne in mind by the reader that the county of Wasco then contained several counties that have since been sliced off, including Sherman. January 17, 1902, The Dalles Times-Mountaineer said:

"There is much justice in the claim of the people of Sherman county that they be repaid for the land that was taken from them by the decision of the federal court sustaining the title of the Eastern Oregon Land Company. The government invited settlers to take up and improve lands inside the grant of the company. In many instances it issued patents thereto, and certainly the government could do nothing less than repay such settlers for their improvements and repay the amount they had expended in perfecting title to the land."

We now come to the only defense of this rapacious and venal land-grabbing syndicate, addressed to the secretary of the interior by the president of the Eastern Oregon Land Company:

San Francisco, October 4, 1904—Sir: The company will accept $60 per acre in quarter section lots for such of its lands in Sherman county, Oregon, as may be required by the government agreeing to take not less than 10,000 acres. The company will agree to transfer all its right, title and interest, including improvements, together with an abstract of title of each quarter section subdivision. In case of purchase the present tenants of the land are to hold possession under their leases and not to be disturbed in the possession of such portions of the land as have been seeded for the next crop until the growing crop, if any, has been harvested. The payments are to be made in San Francisco, California, the company's home office. Agreements concerning the prorating of taxes and rents will be made hereafter. The above price is based on the value of the land itself, its relation to other portions of the grant, and on the damage sustained by the company through the litigation involved in the overlap case. * * * The rest of the land belonging to the Eastern Oregon Land Company, while of value at the present time, does not pay its share of the taxes and other expenses. It has been the policy of the company to hold its Sherman county lands in order to profitably carry on the rest of the grant, and it is its intention not to sell these until the whole grant can be disposed of. Many offers for these lands have been made and are refused in all cases except as stated above. * * *

To recapitulate: The company is by no means anxious to sell these lands, which are the best of its property, producing all its revenue and giving its value to the rest of its property. The price it has made it deems reasonable on the present purchase value and market price, adding to this some consideration for its losses and expenses, which have exceeded $325,000, and the cost of improvements, fencing, etc., which have aggregated over $20,000. The company does not care to consider the question of exchange for scrip on any terms.

The above is not to be considered as a contract or agreement, and the company does not bind itself not to sell or dispose of its holdings in consequence.

WALLER S. MARTIN,

President Eastern Oregon Land Company.
The Secretary of the Interior,
Washington, D. C.

So far we have traced the sinuous history of one celebrated Oregon Land grabbing scheme.

Moro, County Seat of Sherman County

There are others. They do not at this juncture come into the province of our work. They are one and all redolent of political foulness and malfeasance in high office. We care only too glad to leave them in the most competent hands of the magazine specialists.

CHAPTER II

CITIES AND TOWNS.

Within the boundaries of Sherman county are three towns of importance, nearly of a size and each the center of a rich agricultural section. These are Moro, the county seat, Grass Valley and Wasco, all on the line of the Columbia Southern Railroad. Aside from these are several other towns which are important shipping points for the millions of bushels of grain annually produced in the county. These are all prosperous communities. There are in the county fourteen postoffices.

MORO.

The capital of Sherman county is located twenty-seven miles south of the Columbia river. Since 1899 its population has increased from 250 to about 800. It has electric lights, excellent water and sewerage systems, well-equipped fire department, a weekly newspaper, two hotels, a graded public school, three churches and a number of general stores and shops. It has, also, one flouring mill, with a capacity of 200 barrels per day, a feed mill, one lumber yard, one wood-working mill, and four grain warehouses with a combined capacity of 425,000 bushels. Its favorable location contributes to Moro an immense trading population.

The "community of interest" among the residents of Moro is highly commendable. Their divisions on religious, political or other lines in nowise conflict with their concerted action when confronted with any question bearing upon the interests of the town as a whole. The elevation above sea level of Moro is about 1,400 feet; it is located on rolling land sloping gradually to the northeast, presenting to the traveler a most pleasing perspective as he approaches the city from any direction. In a retrospective vein the Times-Mountaineer said: "The county seat of Sherman county is pleasantly situated between the John Day river on the east and the boisterous Des Chutes on the west, in a picturesque valley that winds its way southerly through the county. Located near the center of the county, where "The lofty hill, the humble lawn, with countless beauties shine,' the town possesses especial advantages as a commercial point."

While the history of Moro as a municipality does not begin until the '80's, let us hark back a trifle to the spot upon which the capital of Sherman county is builded. Here it was, in 1868, that Henry Barnum located. Here he erected a house, founded a home and became Moro's first resident. About 1879 Mr. Barnum established, in a small way, a store, or more properly speaking, a trading post, utilizing one of the rooms of his house for that purpose. Practically this was Moro's first business house, although the name Moro as applied to any place in Oregon did not then exist, nor was there then even an indistinct impression that ever a town would be named Moro.

The second building erected, following Mr. Barnum's, was one that in 1898 was used as a printing office by the Moro Observer. But at the time it was built, in 1883, it was occupied by Fox, Scott & Company as a general merchandise store. The original location was where is now situated the Wasco Warehouse Company's bank. This firm was succeeded by Scott & McCoy, Fox retiring from the firm. Eventually the Moore Brothers purchased the business of Scott & McCoy. December 22, 1897, the Moro Observer said:

"When Scott & McCoy, our stalwart and worthy E. O. (McCoy), who still sticks to Sherman county, the best in the world, erected this building, now the home of the Observer, there was no Sherman county, no Moro here; only the rolling hills covered with native grasses, the world-best bunch grass predominating, upon which were feeding herds of cattle and bunches of wild cayuses. The virgin soil had only been broken in patches to demonstrate the fact that this region was a wealth-producer in other respects than grazing nomadic herds for the market. Scott & McCoy brought in a big stock of merchandise for general business, including a limited supply of farming implements."

On the authority of The Dalles Times-Mountaineer of January 1, 1898, it may be said: "The original townsite was purchased by Scott & Company in 1882 from Mrs. Hunter, who afterward became Mrs. Fox, her husband of the firm of Fox & Scott, then the leading merchants of Sherman county, and consisted of six blocks of ten lots each."

Of the naming of the town of Moro there have been many versions. Here is the story of the selection of a cognomen as told to the writer by one of the participants in the selection, L. Barnum, then a boy six or seven years of age. It was anterior to the establishment of a postoffice. A number of ladies met at the warehouse which at that period stood on the principal street of the present town, to discuss the matter of a name for the postoffice. They were of many minds, each one suggesting a name; consolidation on any one name appeared impossible. It was finally agreed that each one should write the name she, or he, desired, on a slip of paper; throw the slips into a hat; shake them up; draw out one and the name thereon should become the name of the future town. This was done; the name of Moro, like Abou ben Adhem's, led all the rest. It had been selected by Miss Melisa Hampden, and, incidentally, that lady drew the slip. Those present at the christening of Moro were: Mrs. Henry Barnum, Mrs. Scott, Miss Melisa Hampden, Mrs. Ragsdale, Mrs. Julius Martin, Hugh Scott, John Scott and L. Barnum. Where Miss Hampden found the name is, today, problematical. There are six towns in the United States named Moro, viz: Moro, Arkansas; Moro, Illinois; Moro, Maine; Moro, Pennsylvania; Moro, Texas and Moro, Oregon. But there is another version; The Dalles Times-Mountaineer of January 1898, says:

"The name 'Moro' is not of local origin, having been given to the town by Judge O. M. Scott, one of the earliest settlers here, who formerly lived in Moro, Illinois, and desired to perpetuate the name by christening this town after it."

And here is still another from the Observer of December 22, 1897:

"After the postoffice was established in the spring of 1884, John Scott was postmaster; it became necessary to have the office in the store of Scott & McCoy, to facilitate trade and accommodate settlers who were becoming quite numerous. For convenience the firm wished the name to be a short one as their correspondence was voluminous and they did not care to waste time in writing words of many syllables. * * * * Name after name was suggested but laid aside. Finally a clerk in the establishment by the name of Truelove, a native of Scotland, produced the name Moro, which was adopted."

This suggestion, however, may have been only the foundation of the actual selection of the name, and the word "Moro," written by Miss Hampden may have been merely in the line of "seconding the motion" of Mr. Truelove. Certainly there is not, necessarily, any insurmountable difference, or conflict of facts, between the story related by L. Barnum and the version published by the Moro Observer.

"Moro" is a Spanish word signifying Moorish; belonging to the Moors. There is, also, another reason. Attoni Moro, otherwise known as Sir Anthony More, an eminent portrait painter born at Utrecht, in 1512 was, in 1552, invited by Charles V., king of Spain, to paint the portrait of Prince Philip. So satisfactory was his work and so highly appreciated that he was greatly honored in Spain, granted many presents and an annuity. Moro lived there for several years, dying in 1581. It is thought that his name has been thus honored by Spain. The English word moro signifies the vinous grosbeak, stone-bird or desert trumpeter, Carpodacus (Bucanetes) githagineus, a small fringilline bird. It also means the mulberry.

From the date of the establishment of the Moro postoffice in 1884, the following have officiated as postal officials: John Scott, W. H. Williams, Mrs. Dora Williams and John M. Parry. The townsite was platted by Scott & McCoy, recorded at The Dalles, and sales of lots began. Main and First streets were the principal ones, and the streets were numbered First, Second, Third, Fourth, etc. West from Main were Scott, McCoy and Jewett streets. During its early history there was no "boom" in Moro; no mushroom growth—in fact its growth was quite slow following the establishment of the store and postoffice by Scott & McCoy. John Scott built a residence which was the third building erected on the present site of Moro. Following this the progress of the town was about as follows: Moro Hotel, by E. J. Rollins; J. B. Mowry and O. E. Leet came to this place, ran stock for Henry Barnum and made their home here; Mr. Ragsdale, Sr., moved his house from Grass Valley canyon to Moro; Henry McBride and Mrs. Bounds, brother and sister, built a home within the present limits of the town; Zumalt family moved here; Somers & McKenzie erected a large blacksmith shop; John Landrie, an employe of Somers & McKenzie, built a small house. The Dalles Times-Mountaineer devoted this much space in 1885 to a description of the present capital of Sherman county: "Moro is situated in what is known as the Grass Valley country, the best belt of farming land in Wasco county. A stage leaves Grant three times a week for this place, from which it is seventeen miles distant."

But it was not until 1887 that Moro began to assume the proportions of a village, when the townsite passed into the hands of Moore Brothers. Shortly afterward a well-equipped hardware store, with R. J. Ginn as proprietor, proved a welcome accession to the town.

The selection of Moro as the capital of Sherman county in 1892 was, of course, an important event in its history. This has been fully treated in the preceding chapter. In July, 1893, the citizens of Moro took the preliminary steps toward organizing a fire company. W. H. Moore was elected captain; he appointed ten members to serve as pipemen, making R. J. Ginn the leader. He then named the members of a hook and ladder corps. During its earlier days Moro was supplied with a water system constructed by private capital at a cost of 2,700. This answered every purpose during the infantile period of the town's history, but its place was taken in the late '90's by the splendid system now in use.

An attempt at incorporation was made in 1897. In the state senate a bill to grant a city charter to the town of Moro was introduced, but nothing eventuated that session. December 22, 1897 the Moro Observer said: "Fifty-five new buildings have been erected and the old ones—every one of them—more or less improved since June, 1894." Rapid strides were taken by Moro in the year 1897. There was most encouraging development; many new enterprises were put on foot during this year, including a number of business houses. Municipal improvement was continued through 1898, the year of the arrival of the railroad, and 600,000 feet of lumber had been put into the Moro buildings up to June 15th. The new water company, of which we have spoken, was organized this year. It absorbed the old one; the capital stock was increased to $7,000. It was completed in August. A second weekly newspaper was another new enterprise that accentuated the steady improvement of the town. September 7, 1898, the Moro Leader said:

"Since the second day of March last, when the first issue of the Moro Leader was published, there has been a large increase in population in Moro. Not only this, but building and other improvements have nearly kept pace with the increased needs. During the past six months there have been begun about seventeen residences, and most of them completed. Of business places, such as hotels, stores, etc., there are twelve erected and under way."

In 1899 Moro secured from the legislature a city charter. It was approved February 17th. The last section reads: "Inasmuch as there is great need of local municipal government in the city of Moro, this act shall take effect and be in force from and after its approval by the governor."

While this bill was pending the Moro Observer said: "If passed as prepared the Moro city charter provides for selling $10,000 worth of bonds for water, electricity and sewerage. The government is to consist of one mayor and six councilmen to be elected in April for two years; a recorder, marshal and city attorney, annually appointed by the council. The city boundaries take in 160 acres of Moore Brothers' land; 80 acres of the Mowery tract and a 40-rod strip of the Barnum-Ragsdale tract."

The new boundaries provided by the charter were as follows: Commencing at the northeast corner of section 18, 1 south, range 17 east; thence  $\frac{1}{2}$  mile due west to the northwest corner of the I. O. O. F. cemetery; thence south  $\frac{3}{4}$  of a mile; thence east 200 rods, which would be 40 rods east of the southeast corner of the northeast quarter of the southeast quarter of section 18; thence due north  $\frac{3}{4}$  miles; thence west 40 rods to place of beginning.

The Moro Commercial Club was organized in May, 1899, with F. E. Brown, president; E. E. Lytle, vice-president; A. C. Sanford, treasurer; I. J. Keffer, secretary. The membership was limited to thirty. Rooms were fitted up in the basement of the opera house. The taxable property of Moro for 1901 was $110,525; leading all other towns in the county. January 1, 1898, The Dalles Times-Mountaineer paid the following handsome compliment to the town:

It is safe to predict that Moro will continue to retain its preeminence as a commercial center. Geographical position is favorable to it. Nature has surrounded it on all sides with rich and fertile agricultural lands, whose golden harvests are year by year, in the usual course of trade, poured into the lap of its commercial population. A wide-awake and progressive citizenship proclaims the fact that here is a town which contains all the elements of success—honesty, fair dealing, courtesy and the desire and ability to attract within its borders trade from every quarter. But a few miles west of the town is the lordly Des Chutes, leaping with giant strides to the Columbia, and containing within itself almost unlimited wealth in the water power that has hitherto been permitted to waste itself with lavish prodigality, but which the genius and industry of Moro's citizens will ere long harness to the mill and loom; and for a reward snatching from its broad bosom the wealth that now floats there "unhonored and unsung."

Theologically the city is represented by the First Presbyterian, Methodist and Baptist churches. Following are the fraternal societies: Eureka Lodge No. 121, A. F. & A. M.; Bethlehem Chapter, No. 78, O. E. S.; Moro Lodge, No. 113, I. O. O. F.; Lupine Rebekah Lodge, No. 116, I. O. O. F.; Moro Camp, No. 351, W. O. W.; Moro Circle, No. 56, Women of Woodcraft; Moro Lodge, No. 64, A. O. U. W.; Herrin Lodge, No. 82, D. of H.; Moro Council, No. 962, Knights and Ladies of Security; Moro Camp, No. 9285, M. W. A.

In 1899 a city charter was granted to Moro. We append a list of the city officials since that period:

1899—Mayor, W. H. Moore; council, S. S. Hayes, G. W. Brock, A. C. Sanford, W. Holder, H. A. Moore, J. M. Parry,* I. M. Smith,* recorder, W. Henricks,* J. M. Parry,* treasurer, F. H. Meader; marshal, N. W. Thompson.

1900—Mayor, W. H. Moore; council, G. W. Brock, J. O. Elrod, R. J. Ginn, H. A. Moore, W. Holder, S. McDonald; recorder, J. M. Parry,* M. Fitzmaurice,* treasurer, E. R. Hickson; marshal, W. Hoggard.

1901—Mayor, W. H. Moore; council, R. J. Ginn, H. A. Moore, W. J. Martin, E. W. Elrod, J. O. Elrod, S. McDonald; recorder, J. M. Parry; treasurer, E. R. Hickson; marshal, W. Hoggard.

1902—Mayor, W. H. Moore; council, R. J. Ginn, M. Fitzmaurice, G. W. Brock, J. O. Elrod, H. A. Moore, W. J. Martin; recorder, J. M. Parry,* G. M. Frost,* treasurer, E. R. Hickson; marshal, W. Hoggard.

1903—Mayor, W. H. Moore; council, J. O. Elrod, H. A. Moore, I. D. Pike, G. W. Brock, M. Fitzmaurice, R. J. Ginn; recorder, G. M. Frost; treasurer, E. R. Hickson; marshal, W. Hoggard.

1904—Mayor, W. H. Moore,* L. Barnum,* council, W. H. Ragsdale, J. F. Foss, G. W. Brock, B. F. Pike,* O. A. Ramsey, J. O. Elrod,* J. M. Dunahoo, H. A. Page; recorder, G. M. Frost,* M. Fitzmaurice; treasurer, E. R. Hickson,* S. S. Hayes,* marshal, W. Hoggard,* J. P. Strahl,* E. L. Sells.*

1905—Mayor, J. O. Elrod; council, W. H. Ragsdale, L. Barnum, O. J. Goffin, E. H. Moore, O. A. Ramsey, G. W. Brock; recorder, W. C. Bryant; treasurer, E. R. Hickson; marshal, E. L. Sells.

WASCO.

This lively town is located ten miles south of the Columbia river on the line of the Columbia Southern Railway. From 300 to more than twice that number the population has increased since 1897. In every respect it is a modern city.

* Served part of term.

It possesses a well-equipped fire department, excellent water system, one weekly newspaper, two hotels, one graded public school, three churches, two flouring mills with a capacity of 400 barrels per day, two banks, numerous general stores and shops, two livery stables and five grain warehouses with a combined storage of 450,000 bushels. Of a splendid agricultural region it is the financial center. Wasco is noted for having been the first town in Oregon to resort to the use of crude petroleum on its streets for the purpose of "laying the dust," and shedding water in winter. The system has proved successful in every particular.

While the growth of Wasco has never been what might be termed in western parlance "swift," it has been steady and healthy. The town will never recede; with the development of the surrounding country it must, certainly, keep pace, and continue the supply point of a large territory. A conservative estimate of Wasco's population places it at 700. In a variety of ways the town of Wasco is a pretty place; one that nestles in rural simplicity which charms the eye and gratifies the senses. A more eligible site for a town could scarcely have been chosen. Situated near the head of Spanish Hollow, it is comparatively level, yet sloping sufficiently to allow excellent drainage. The general topography of the country is such that all roads easily and naturally trend toward it. The sloping hills surrounding the townsite are covered with wheat farms.

Wasco was so named from the county in which it was located at the time it was founded. The significance of this Indian word—a maker of horn basins—is explained in the chapter concerning Wasco county. The name Wascos was applied to a tribe of Indians who for many years made their homes, or head center, at The Dalles.

"In the pioneer days ('40's and '50's) when thousands of immigrants crossed the plains to Oregon, their trail bisected the ground where is now located this thriving little city." Before it took final, definite shape the act of locating the present site of Wasco was agitated for some time. W. M. Barnett was the first to build. He erected a two-story edifice, the lower portion being utilized for his mercantile business; the upper story was used primarily for meetings of every description. Mr. Barnett was closely followed by Messrs. MacKenzie & Somer, with a machine shop. Mr. MacKenzie's mother was the first white woman to live in the city. These people were followed the succeeding year by Messrs. Tozier & Holland, blacksmiths. The same year, 1883, the Methodist Episcopal church was built. This building was located on the west side of "the creek," and was an edifice of considerable importance, being the only one devoted exclusively to religious services between the John Day and Des Chutes rivers. July 16, 1883, Wasco townsite was platted by Clark Dunlap; the southeast corner of southwest half of section 4, township 1, north range 17 E. W. M. Anterior to removing to Wasco Mr. Barnett had been engaged in mercantile business since 1880 near "Eaton's ranch," one and one-half miles northwest of Wasco. The second store building in town was, also, erected by Mr. Barnett. This was in 1885, a drug store, rented to Josiah Marsh. In 1885 The Dalles Times-Mountaineer had this to say of the town: "Wasco, ten miles distant from Grant, on the Grass Valley stage route, is in the midst of a fine belt of land. Within the last four years over 1,000 settlers have made homes in this section, and Wasco has a promising future."

In 1887 Levi Armsworthy built the Oskaloosa Hotel, the first hostelry on the original plat of the town. Later came Dr. S. E. Koontz and James Haas, a contractor, followed by quite a large contingent of people, many of whom are yet Wasco's best and most honored residents.

In 1888 the first school house was erected. It was a one-story building; in commission two years. In 1890 the present four-room edifice was built at a cost of $4,000. The first year only two rooms were found necessary for accommodation of the pupils; three were used the third year; in 1903 all were utilized and another teacher employed. It was in 1889 that E. O. E. Webber built the second general merchandise store in the town of Wasco. This place, it will be remembered by readers of the preceding chapter, was made the temporary capital of Sherman county, remaining so until 1892 when it was removed to Moro. A stock company was organized in Wasco in 1891 for the purpose of transacting a general banking business, and the Sherman county bank was placed in the financial field. Subsequently it was sold to J. M. Patterson and V. C. Brock, who failed in 1899. After 1892 "hard times" left their melancholy results throughout the land, still, compared with other localities Wasco suffered but little.

Prosperity in 1897 was marked. Not only were crops munificent but the financial atmosphere was clarified. Wasco more than doubled her population; business marvellously increased. The basis of this spontaneous revival was the commencement of the Columbia Southern Railway and the certainty that Wasco was to be on "the line." The first extensive warehouse was constructed by a stock company called the Farmers' Co-operative Warehouse Company. As such it was conducted two years and then disposed of to the Union Warehouse Company. One year subsequently it was merged with the Wasco Warehouse & Milling Company. H. P. Isaacs erected the first flouring mill in Wasco. This was in 1897, coincident with the advent of the railroad.

January 1, 1898, the following description of Wasco was published in The Dalles Times-Mountaineer:

Again the clarion tones of the whistle are heard, and houses begin to flash in sight. The bell clangs, the train slows up, and after having traveled ten miles, Wasco is reached. Looking about the visitor is impressed with the amount of business apparent. On every hand are new houses both business and dwelling. Many are finished; others under construction. It is harvest field for mechanics. The sound of the hammer is incessant. Looking about the railroad yards the immense volume of business is more apparent than ever. The tracks extend along one side of the town for nearly a mile, and every available foot of this space is taken up by warehouses, woodyards and business features of different sorts. Huge ricks of wheat amounting to over a million and a half bushels are stored here during the year for shipment. During all of the autumn months and far into the winter heavy wheat trains, four, six, eight and ten horses, with two or three heavy wagons, come in, bringing in thousands of sacks daily. Indeed, four hundred of these teams have been counted in one day. It takes almost an army of men to handle all this produce, to say nothing of the large quantity of other freight that goes out as well as comes in. The Columbia Southern Railway hauls all the freight into the county, and it amounts yearly to considerably better than half a million dollars. Daily heavy freight teams leave their depot with loads of supplies for other portions of Sherman county.

At the January, 1898, meeting of the county court a petition signed by 55 residents of Wasco was presented asking the commissioners to grant them the privilege of voting on the question of incorporation. It was alleged in the petition that there were about 300 people resident within the boundaries of the proposed incorporation. The petition was granted; an election was called for January 31st for the purpose of voting upon the question and selecting city officials should the proposition carry at the polls. Friends of incorporation were successful by a majority of 13 votes. Close and exciting was this election; vigilant were the watchdogs at the polls and many a man was compelled to swear in his vote. The vote for city officials was equally close, with the following result:

For mayor—W. M. Barnett, 44; G. N. Crossfield, 55.

For councilmen—The six first named elected—L. Clark, 76; J. E. McPherson, 55; W. M. Booth, 55; P. L. Kretzer, 54; W. A. Murchie, 57; W. M. Reynolds, 77; W. H. Biggs, 52; W. S. Barzee, 50; W. S. Clayton, 42; H. Krause, 49; J. M. Hoag, 50.

For recorder—W. F. Johnson, 62; E. E. Lyon, 42.

For marshal—Angus Cameron, 6; W. H. Walker, 42.

For treasurer—V. C. Brock, 98.

The first meeting of the city council was held Wednesday, April 18th. The two tickets in the field were named People's and Citizens'. In the main the People's ticket was successful, although some of the councilmen's names appeared on both tickets.

For some reason or other it was affirmed by certain pessimists that with the extension south of the railroad Wasco would retrograde. In this gloomy prognostication they were grievously mistaken. Per contra Wasco continued to wax prosperous and happy. In 1901 her taxable property was $90,520.

On the morning of November 17, 1903, Wasco suffered from a most disastrous fire. At 2:15 a. m., flames were discovered issuing from the basement of an addition, under process of construction, to the Oregon Trading Company's store. The main building was soon a mass of flames and smoke; the fire ran to the adjacent opera house and this, too, was a total loss, as was the residence of John Venable.

The Oregon Trading Company's store, the property of E. O. McCoy and George N. Crossfield, was a large concern, the building and stock being valued at $100,000. They carried an insurance of $60,000 on the building and stock. The opera house was owned by a joint stock company and was valued at $40,000, on which there was only $2,000 insurance. Mr. Venable's residence was worth $1,500 and he carried no insurance.

Saturday, July 16, 1904, the citizens, by an almost unanimous vote, decided to bond the town for an amount sufficient to meet the expense of a complete system of fire protection and sewerage. But the people were not yet out of the woods. A committee, commissioned by the city council, went to Portland to negotiate the sale of $12,000 worth of municipal bonds. The attorney of the loan company to whom the bonds were offered examined the Wasco city charter and discovered an amendment to the effect that the city could not be bonded for more than five per cent. of its taxable property. The citizens had voted a tax of ten per cent. But, although available records are a trifle obscure, this difficulty was subsequently overcome and the money found for the greatly needed improvements.

As has been stated the Methodist Episcopal church is the pioneer in the town of Wasco; having been one of the first buildings erected on the original plat of the town. This was in the fall of 1883. In 1902 the present building was erected at a cost of $5,000 and was dedicated January 11, 1903. The church has a membership of more than sixty.

The Christian, is the second church in the town of Wasco; the foundation of the present building having been laid in 1888. Owing to financial obstacles, however, the building was not completed until 1890, at a total cost of about $2,500.

The edifice of the Catholic denomination was begun in 1904, and completed the following year, the cost being $3,000. It is the first Catholic church in Sherman county, and, with the exception of The Dalles, 30 miles distant, there is no other Catholic church within a radius of 100 miles. The fraternal societies of Wasco are represented as follows:

Wasco Lodge No. 965, Knights and Ladies of Security; Aurora Lodge No. 54, K. of P.; Wasco Assembly No. 78, United Artisans; Taylor Lodge No. 99, A. F. & A. M.; Lillian Temple No. 17, Rathbone Sisters; Alanthus Circle No. —, Women of Woodcraft; Wasco Camp No. 350, W. O. W.; Wasco Lodge No. 88, A. O. U. The city administration of 1905 was the same in personnel as that of 1904.

The following ladies and gentlemen have served Wasco as postmasters and postmistresses since the establishment of the office: W. M. Barnett, Miss Jeannette Murchie, Mrs. Mary Jory, William Henrichs, Clark Dunlap and W. E. Tate.

GRASS VALLEY.

is located 39 miles south of the Columbia river on the line of the Columbia Southern Railway. As has been the case with her sister towns, Moro and Wasco, Grass Valley has nearly quadrupled her population within the past four years. It has electric lights, good water and sewerage systems, a fine graded public school, two churches, a number of general and department stores, a livery stable, hotel and four grain warehouses with a storage capacity of 450,000 bushels. Grass Valley is the one city in Sherman county that is situated, practically, on level ground, with an abundance of water close to the surface and quickly and easily secured by digging. At the present writing the population is between 450 and 500. It is, certainly, an eligibly located town, attractive to the eye and possessing several handsome brick buildings which would be a credit to a city many times its size—a town of comfortable, cosy homes.

Grass Valley, while in the heart of one of the finest wheat belts in Eastern Oregon, is, also, in close proximity to fine grazing grounds, where thousands of sheep, cattle and horses are kept the year round.

May 3, 1878, Dr. C. R. Rollins in company with a number of others, camped where is now situated the town of Grass Valley. The members of this little exploring expedition, aside from Dr. Rollins and his son, were John W. Dow and wife, Frank Richie and a Mr. Locke. They were San Franciscans, and they were attempting to spy out land suitable for stock growing purposes. Dr. Rollins located a homestead on the quarter section upon which they were camped. Others of the party secured homesteads adjoining thereto. There were, at this period, only forty-two white people in what is now known as Sherman county; during the summer and fall several of these left. It should be remembered that at this period the whole country was considered fit only for the purpose of grazing stock. True, there were some who possessed different ideas, and among them were the few who settled in the vicinity of what is now Grass Valley. They at once turned their attention to growing both cereals and vegetables; harvest time proved them in the right and fully justified their judgment. The country around Grass Valley began to fill up with settlers and its celebrity as a rich agricultural and stock-raising center extended far and wide.

Dr. Rollins built here a small store, practiced medicine and for a number of years was the sole physician from Antelope on the south to the Columbia river on the north.

Concerning the name "Grass Valley" the pioneers of the section in which it is located will tell you that the place of the town's location was covered by an exceptionally luxuriant growth of rye grass, so heavy and tall that old timers, without changing countenance, will say that it was impossible to see a horseman riding through it only a short distance away. To Dr. Rollins belongs the credit of giving the town its name.

The house built by Dr. Rollins to which we have alluded as a "store," was, in reality, utilized as a hotel, or more properly speaking, an inn, and also a home aside from being a store. Here were accommodated for many years immigrants coming in to the country; and stockmen having their flocks and bands of cattle in the vicinity. Provision was made for man and beast and the small stock of general merchandise supplied the needs of the new settlers. Until about 1885 Dr. Rollins conducted this commercial combination. In the fall of 1878 J. C. Dow ran up, on the present townsite of Grass Valley, a little house, and these two structures for many years were the only ones on the site.

C. W. Moore, who came in the fall of 1881 states that there were on the present townsite, or in the immediate vicinity, the "Grass Valley House," of Dr. Rollins, and farm houses of F. E. Clark, James Harney, G. W. Bates and Charles Taylor. Not yet had the settlement grown to sufficient proportions to warrant the establishment of a postoffice; settlers received their mail either from the Sherar's Bridge office, or the one at Grant, in the extreme northern part of the county. Dr. Rollins secured a patent for his Grass Valley homestead in 1883. In a special edition published in 1885 The Dalles Times-Mountaineer said of the town of Grass Valley:

"Grass Valley is the name of a postoffice, consisting of a store, hotel and other buildings in the center of the fertile settlement bearing that appellation. Dr. C. R. Rollins is the proprietor of the store and postoffice. There are other post-offices in this Grass Valley section, one named Erskineville, but Moro, Wasco and Grass Valley are the principal business points."

Following the discontinuance of Dr. Rollins' store, C. A. Williams, in 1885, entered the field with a stock of general merchandise. This enterprise he conducted three years, disposing of the same to Hamilton & Adams. They, in turn, were succeeded in the business by Scott & Hamilton, Scott & Company, Scott & Heath Company and the last by the Citizens Commercial Company, which today is one of the leading general merchandise stores in Sherman county. Soon after the establishment of the Williams store a post-office was secured, named Grass Valley, and was located at Charles Taylor's residence about one mile from the present business center of the town. Charles Taylor was made postmaster. Since then the officials who have succeeded Taylor in this position have been E. Olds, E. Hamilton, George Hamilton, Alexander Scott, James H. Marquiss, Minnie Smith and H. W. Wilcox, the present incumbent.

In the year 1888 C. W. Moore and Dr. Rollins entered into partnership and opened a small stock of general goods. Another business enterprise was a blacksmith shop on the ranch of one A. Coon, on the fringe of the town; this was about 1889. In the early '80's a shop was opened in town by A. Holder. April 16, 1889, the present townsite was surveyed by John Fulton and platted, although the plat was not filed until June 27, 1891. In the course of business transactions Mr. C. W. Moore became owner of most of the lots in the original townsite of Grass Valley. As an inducement to settlement he presented several lots to certain parties who built houses upon them. So great was the demand for town lots that Dr. Rollins soon had a "First Addition" to Grass Valley laid out. Recently a "Second Addition" was placed on the market. Sherman's and Clement's additions are both situated on the flat. The boundaries of the original site are as follows: Commencing at the southeast corner of said Grass Valley which point is 72 rods east of the southwest corner of section 26, township 2, south range 16, E. W. M., and which point is also 30 south 20 degrees, 40 minutes west of the east corner of lot 1, block 1, in said Grass Valley.

From this time on through several years the growth of the town was not rapid. It was merely the trading point for a rich but sparsely settled country. The commercial needs of the people in the vicinity were supplied; Grass Valley remained a country village. It was not until 1897-8 that attention was turned toward this part of the country; for then it was that the Columbia Southern Railway was commenced. While it was not extended to Grass Valley until a few years later it was "headed this way;" a new impetus was given to the little village. A newspaper, the Grassville Journal, was launched in 1897.

October 18, 1898, a fire company was organized, and arrangements made for securing apparatus, engine house, etc. The first officers were: C. W. Moore, president; Dr. J. W. Cole, vice-president; J. H. Berger, treasurer; Hollis Wilcox, secretary; W. I. Westerfield, foreman; Will I. Ewing, first assistant foreman; Charles H. Jenkins, second assistant foreman.

During the five months preceding August 26, 1898, eight houses were erected in town and lumber ordered for another large business house. The railroad reached Grass Valley in the spring of 1900. From this period dates, practically the continued progress and steady growth of the town.

At a meeting of the Sherman county commissioners, July 2, 1900, there was presented to them a petition signed by 45 residents asking for the privilege of voting on the question of incorporation. It was claimed that there were within the proposed limits of incorporation about 180 residents. The United States census taken that year gave the town a population of 196. Monday, September 10, 1900, was the date set by the commissioners for the purpose of voting on the proposition, and to select the first city officials. Incorporation carried by a vote of 37 to 15, and the successful candidates for city officers were: Mayor, C. W. Moore; aldermen, J. D. Wilcox, J. H. Smith, A. Scott, R. H. King, G. B. Bourhill and J. O. Elrod. Recorder, W. I. Westerfield; treasurer, A. B. Craft; marshal, Charles French.

On the authority of the Grass Valley Journal during the four years, 1898-1902, eighty residences and business houses were erected in the town. Perhaps the year 1903 was the most prosperous in the history of Grass Valley. There were erected two large two-story brick buildings, a flouring mill, a number of substantial dwellings and a banking institution was opened. The previous year one large brick building had been com-

Surprise Lodge No. 87, D. of H., Grass Valley Lodge No. 650, W. of W.; Modoc Camp No. 39, I. O. O. F.; Grass Valley Lodge No. 131, I. O. O. F.; Grass Valley Rebekah Lodge No. 118; Grass Valley Lodge No. 65, A. O. U. W.

The Grass Valley churches are represented by the Baptist and Methodist denominations.

KENT

is the fourth town in size and importance in Sherman county. It is located 53 miles south of the Columbia river on the line of the Columbia Southern Railway. Two years ago (March, 1903), naught but a station platform marked its location. At the present writing, May, 1905, it has a population of 250 which is increasing. There are, here, a number of stores and shops, a newspaper and two grain warehouses with a capacity of 275,000 bushels. For many years there has been at this point a postoffice named Kent; no town appeared until recently.

In anticipation of the coming of the railroad the townsite was surveyed in 1899 by John Donahue, and on his land. According to the townsite plat it is situated in the northeast quarter of section 28, township 4, south range 17, E. W. M.; the initial point being the southeast corner of block 10, which is 40 feet north and 1,066.7 feet west of the one quarter section corner between sections 27 and 28, township 4, south range 17, E. W. M.

The fraternal societies of Kent are limited to the camp of the Modern Woodmen of America and Independent Order of Odd Fellows.

GRANT.

This is the name of a postoffice on the line of the Oregon Railroad & Navigation Company, in the northern portion of Sherman county, and on the Columbia river 23 miles east of The Dalles. The railway station is called, however, Grant's. Grant, or Grant's, is the remnant of a once most prosperous village. "Grant's station" came into existence with the building of the Oregon Railroad & Navigation Company's line, and for several years was an important shipping point, freight being distributed from this place throughout a large territory. Alluding to this point November 30, 1880, The Dalles Times said:

"Grant's Station—This is the name of a side track about seven miles beyond Celilo, where freight is discharged for Columbus whence it is ferried over the river. At present there are no buildings at this place, but it being contiguous to the large tract of country beyond the Des Chutes, it is not presumptuous to think that a small town will be started here at an early day."

In the spring of 1881 a town began to evolve at "Grant's Landing." J. W. Fox opened a general merchandise store in March, and here John McDonald conducted a blacksmith shop. But there is an anterior history of Grant's. With the construction of a railway and the construction of a town, a postoffice was established and given the name of Villard in honor of the builder of the Oregon Railroad & Navigation Company's line, Henry Villard. The name of this office was subsequently changed to Grant, while the station still retains its original name of Grant's. When the townsite was platted, in 1883, it was named Grant. It is undeniably true that the growth of "Villard" for a period was rapid, and within a year or two after the founding of the town quite a little city appeared, and the amount of business, especially traffic, was considerable. Following is the Times-Mountaineer's account of a fire at Grant, Grant's or Villard, June 18, 1883:

A very destructive fire occurred here at 11 o'clock last night. The Oregon Railroad & Navigation Company's depot, Cooper's Hotel, William Grant's warehouse; also the stores of Fox, Scott & Company, a large amount of wool and miscellaneous freight and numerous outbuildings were consumed. The loss is estimated at from $150,000 to $200,000, and only partially insured. The losses are as follows:

John Cooper, hotel and furniture, $5,000; Fox, Scott & Company, $25,000; William Grant, buildings and lumber, $15,000; Murray Brothers, wool and merchandise, $15,000; A. Schwernicken, $2,000; Lowengart & Sichel, merchandise, $2,000; Cummings & Dixon, merchandise, $4,000; Harvey & Clark, wool, $5,000; Cochran & Dowling, wool; William Burnett, merchandise, $1,000; wool awaiting shipment, owners unknown, $25,000; Oregon Railroad & Navigation Company, $5,000.

There were a large number of consignments of freight burned, the value of which was never correctly obtained, and which was difficult to estimate. Grant townsite was platted in November, 1883, by William Murray, Isabella Murray, his wife, W. Lair Hill and Julia Chandler Hill, his wife, and is situated in section 2, township 2, north range 16, E. W. M.

Grant remained the shipping point for a large scope of country, but did not improve greatly during the '80's. In 1892 new impetus was given to the town. In August of that year about 26 acres to the west were donated to a company that contemplated building a flouring mill and distillery. But this did not eventuate. In 1894 Grant was visited by a destructive flood. Vast volumes of water washed through the town and citizens were forced to seek the hillsides for personal safety. September 7th the Antelope Herald said: "The old station house is still standing on one end, and like two-thirds of the other standing buildings at that place, is in a sorrowful looking condition. We would never have recognized the location of Grant had we not known that it was really the place. There are a few houses yet standing, but they are located amongst sand dunes, near deep washouts, and outside of Johnstown, Pennsylvania, it is the most dilapidated place we have ever seen."

From the effects of this flood the town never recovered. The construction of the Columbia Southern Railway into the interior of the county sounded its death knell; the only tangible excuse for Grant's existence had been its advantage as a practical shipping point for the interior.

DE MOSS SPRINGS.

This is a pleasant little village consisting of a postoffice, store, blacksmith shop, two churches, Baptist and United Brethren, two warehouses, mill and telephone service. It still remains the summer home of the De Moss family, concertists, who pass "the season" playing throughout the country. The town is located on the Columbia Southern Railway, between Moro and Wasco. Within half a mile of the present De Moss Springs was located one of the first postoffices in Sherman county. It was called Badger and was supplanted by the De Moss springs office.

In 1883 the De Moss family left San Francisco by railway, proceeded to Ogden, purchased hacks and toured the country in this manner for the benefit of the health of Mrs. De Moss. At this point, Grass Valley creek, they pitched their tents. To Professor De Moss his wife expressed a desire to make this their future home. To this proposition the family agreed provided they could purchase the ranch then claimed by Couture (known as Pierre Gordon). Professor De Moss and sons secured 840 acres of land. In 1885 C. W. Dickman came and desired to obtain possession of a portion of the townsite which was granted him. There were, however, two men before him; they, too, wished to engage in business, but were not willing to agree to sell no liquor, and also refused to donate every other lot to "moral men." But Dickman acquiesced in the restrictions imposed by De Moss, and this it became a temperance town. Professor De Moss had promised his influence in the establishment of a seminary. The board was organized in 1887, consisting of thirteen members. Professor De Moss was president; C. W. Dickman, secretary; Reverends Davis and Treseuriter, soliciting agents. The board of trustees were: W. H. Biggs, A. McDonald, Robert Ginn, H. S. De Moss, James Belske, Thomas Cochran, and Reverends Holgate and Pratt. The school opened under the direction of Miss A. A. Coffin. In 1889 Henry S. De Moss published the following historical sketch of the town in The Dalles Times-Mountaineer of January 1st:

The townsite was selected by Mrs. J. M. De Moss more than five years ago last September, the land then being claimed by Pierre Couture, and named after the family. It is a beautiful townsite, well watered, and is the junction of eight county roads. The seminary board of directors was organized in June, 1888, there being thirteen good men appointed. The school has a bright prospect before it.

The business men consist of T. J. Cocking, as postmaster, notary public and merchant; H. A. Rawson, barber and merchant; George Mielke, blacksmith; T. Brown, wagon maker; C. W. Dickman, hotel and feed stable; T. Calvert, butcher, who has good slaughter pens near the town, where all the beeves are killed to furnish beef for the entire portion we write about; H. H. Hahn, photographer; De Moss family, teachers of music; Rev. C. B. Davis, pastor of United Brethren church, that being the only church organization, though the Christian and Baptist churches have been holding meetings here.

Town lots are now given to persons on which to build and start any business except the liquor traffic. We claim to have the healthiest location for a large city in the entire Grass Valley country, because of the rolling hills near by furnishing an elevation in almost every direction where reservoirs may be built and the beautiful waters carried from the many springs and conducted by pipes into every building whose owners may desire to have such.

True, we have a stage line and the junctions of mail routes, but we want a railroad here, and this we believe we will have soon, so that tourists may step off the cars and be escorted by carriage a few hundred yards to an eminence from which they can view the snowy glacirs of Mount Hood, Mount Adams, Mount Tacoma, Mount St. Helens and Mount Jefferson, also the great timber and pineries of the famous Cascade range.

It is not understood that the seminary mentioned by Mr. De Moss ever developed into the success contemplated by its founders. The town plat was filed for record in the county clerk's office in February, 1898. The streets were named easterly and westerly for noted musicians; northerly and southerly for famous poets.

RUFUS.

This place was formerly known as Wallis station, eight miles north of Wasco, but on the line of the Oregon Railroad & Navigation Company. It has a postoffice, two stores, two warehouses, saloon, hotel, livery barn and feed stable. The townsite of Rufus was platted by R. C. and M. E. Wallis, June 22, 1892.

BIGGS.

This is a postoffice and station at the junction of the lines of the Oregon Railroad & Navigation, and the Columbia Southern Railway, companies. It is on the Columbia river, 20 miles east of The Dalles, and 26 miles north of Moro. It has a hotel, store, saloon and eating house. The town came into being with the construction of the Columbia Southern Railway, in 1897, of which it is the northern terminus. It is not an inviting locality owing to huge mountains of sand surrounding it. Of this place the Occidental Magazine said, in March, 1905:

To the traveler and homeseeeker who is not acquainted with the natural conditions of the northwest, particularly that section of Oregon and Washington through which courses the Columbia river, the little town of Biggs—the junction of the Columbia Southern and O. R. & N. railroads—affords nothing but a cold bath to the hopes of the prospective settler; nor does that sand-duned, rock-ribbed town offer the slightest suggestion of the half million and more fertile acres and the many progressive towns lying above and to the south of its rocky walls.

KLONDIKE.

This town is thirteen miles northeast of Moro and five miles southeast of Wasco. It maintains a general merchandise store and a warehouse. According to the Moro Leader, of August 24, 1898: "The name Klondike was given to the place nearly a year ago when the immense output of golden wheat was just beginning to be placed on the market and was netting the people far more than the gold of the then newly discovered, heralded Klondike of the frozen north. The name already in use was given to the railroad station."

In 1899 a postoffice was established at Klondike and Antone B. Potter was the first postmaster, and still retains the position. Of the town in March, 1905, Miss Laurance Potter writes:

It was named after the discovery of the Klondike gold region, so it was decided that it should be called Klondyke. You will notice this Klondyke is spelled with a "y" instead of "i". When the postoffice was established it was decided for some reason unknown to me to be spelled that way, and in the postoffice certificate it is spelled Klondyke. It is of no consequence, anyway.

The first business house was established in 1897 by Moore Brothers, and two years later was sold to A. B. Potter. The first residents were Josiah Wilder, Miss Irene Smith and Mrs. Jones. Josiah Wilder built the first blacksmith shop and was the first blacksmith. The first telephone line was a barbed wire system, and was completed May 1, 1899. A. P. Potter was the first person who discovered that talking by 'phone could be done over barbed wire, that is, the first one in this country.

Regardless to the postoffice certificate mentioned by Miss Potter, it is certain that the United States Postal Guide spells the name of the postoffice referred to, Klondike.

MURRAY SPRINGS.

This was one of the earlier Sherman county towns, now defunct. It was located on the line of the Oregon Railroad & Navigation Company, between Grant and Rufus. The town was named after W. M. Murray who for many years resided there and owned one of the most productive orchards in the Inland Empire.

OTHER LOCALITIES.

Ersineville is a postoffice on the Columbia Southern Railway and Spring Creek, three miles north of Moro. About 1884 or 1885 C. A. Williams opened a store at this place, which he conducted for awhile, subsequently removing to Grass Valley. In these early pioneer days Ersineville was classed as one of the "towns" of the future Sherman county. It was named in honor of Mr. A. Erskine, an early settler in the place. With the exception of a postoffice nothing now remains.

Fultonville was one of the first postoffices established in Sherman county; its primal postmaster was Colonel Fulton. At present it receives mail only once a week. In 1885 the Times-Mountaineer said: "Three miles east of Celilo is Fultonville. It is named after Colonel James Fulton. The town consists of his residence, store and the company's warehouse. It is near the mouth of the Des Chutes river, and is the shipping point for the section of country bordering on that stream."

planted the one at Bigelow, discontinued. The Early postoffice was established in 1902, and so named because fruits and vegetables at this point are two weeks earlier than in any other locality, even Hood River. The first postmaster was H. K. Porter, who was succeeded by Mary E. Wall, now acting in the official capacity of postmistress. Mr. Harben M. Cooper entered land along the John Day river at this place twenty years ago. He built a mill race and wing dam at a cost of $15,000. This mill is at present owned by George Wall, who has constructed a dam 250 feet in length and nine feet high, which will soon be utilized for an electric light plant to supply power to Wasco for mills and lighting the town. About twelve families receive their mail at the Early postoffice. Near this place are four fine fruit orchards, mostly devoted to peaches and grapes, all under irrigation, either by springs or water from the John Day river.

Monkland is a postoffice seven miles east of Moro with daily mail and a general store.

Rutledge is a postoffice eight miles southeast of Grass Valley, with a daily stage to the latter point. It is named in honor of one of the pioneers of Sherman county.

CHAPTER III

DESCRIPTIVE.

Sherman county, Oregon, is in latitude 45 degrees north, and longitude 121 degrees west from Greenwich. It has an elevation of from 200 to several thousand feet, but the general elevation of the county is about 1,500 feet. It is about ninety miles east of the Cascade mountains. The Columbia forms its northern, the John Day the eastern, and the Des Chutes river the western boundary. On the south its frontier is the 1st Standard Parallel. To the north of Sherman is Klickitat county, Washington; to the east Gilliam, and to the south and west is Wasco county. The total area of land surface is 481,500 acres. As a whole the county is composed of what is termed rolling land. There are but few wooded districts, and the soil, which is of fine texture, is light gray in color, darkening slightly when subjected to moisture.

As the traveler steps from the car at Grant's station into the bracing air, supplied with its due proportion of ozone, he stretches his limbs over the gravelled walks constructed by nature. But quite recently he has passed through a plentitude of sand, reminding him of old time pictures in old time geographies of the greta Sahara; with a cloud of dust just closing in on a troop of bewildered Arabs and camels; he imagines his stopping place to be in no respect an oasis, but a repetition of past grievances. But at Grant there have been, wisely, planted trees, sunflowers and "creepers," which combine to hold the voluminous sand in place. Above and beyond the Columbia there is no sand. Once on the summit of the frowning bluff that skirts the river, apparently guarding the treasures beyond, the sand disappears; the happy transition is a relief and pleasure.

As one leaves Grant behind and rises gradually to the top of the bluff through the Gherkin, or Scott, canyon, the grandeur of scenery is unsurpassed; long, thin, misty, foggy vapors hang over the Columbia's still waters; and the great river itself appears but a silver spectrum motionless until it breaks into the wildest turmoil at Tumwater far below. Above and beyond, Mount Adams, white and grand, begins to rise into view, and on this side of the river Mount Hood looms in spectral whiteness until, gaining Gordon ridge, seven snow-clad peaks with azure backgrounds tower heavenward. And right here, beneath one's feet, is a roadway of which the stalwart Romans might well have felt proud.

From Wasco, ten miles from Grant, we pass through a country nearly all of which is carved into productive farms, with roads and lanes on section and township lines, more like portions of Illinois or Iowa, than the greater part of Oregon. This particular section of the country is level and admits of this artistic formation. Journeying onward the traveler wins his way to Des Moss Springs. Here the country's contour is flatter; the soil deeper and blacker. At this locality one readily understands why the word "Springs" is added. It is a veritable spring throughout the country. From here one finds a gradual slope, upward, which soon alternates to the long decline through the gorge to Moro, the capital of Sherman county. The vicinity of Moro, from a farmer's viewpoint, is beautiful; straight lanes, well-kept fences, whirring wind-mills and painted farm houses. From Grass Valley on to Rutledge the country possesses the same general characteristics which mark all counties given over to agriculture. Beyond, and south of Rutledge, the soil continues to deepen and the soil is even richer than nearer the river, although the climate is less mild. Toward the south, through the open country, looking in the direction of Bakeoven, Antelope and Prineville, it appears like an unexplored district, ready made for the family of the homeseeker. A correspondent of The Dalles Times-Mountaineer travels the same road from Biggs to Wasco as follows:

The route lays off up the Spanish Hollow Canyon. Immediately on leaving the river, great, rocky bluffs meet the gaze. The squeaking of the ponderous wheels fills the air with unearthly voices, as the train rounds a curve. A small stream tumbles over the rocks, occasionally lost to sight, as it seeks subterranean cavities, only to reappear lower down. After all, the large, imposing piles of stone and the lower surroundings are not so inviting. It is something new with every turn; and one is constantly interested until aroused by the shrill whistle announcing that the first half of the journey has been completed. The train is at Gibson's. From this place the scene changes; the transformation is most complete. The track still continues along the bottom of the canyon; but it is scarcely a canyon now. It is not nearly so steep; the hills are not so high. Every vestige of rock has disappeared. Farm houses stand here and there, giving a solid appearance to the country that is just now attracting so much attention. Spreading out over the hills are the broad acres that produce all the immense volume of wheat that Sherman county boasts of. A band of horses, some cattle or other live stock may be seen at a distance—another great evidence of the wealth of this country.

Concerning the climate of Sherman county it may be said in addition to what has been detailed in the descriptive chapter of Wasco county that the prevailing winds are from the west, and convey a moisture that in later years has proved to be fully equal to the dews of the low valley lands, and invigorating. Not only are these winds needful to growing vegetation, but health is borne on every breeze. Naturally fresh and bracing these western winds purify the atmosphere. The average rainfall is light.

The soil of Sherman county is abundantly supplied with potash, but phosphoric acid is deficient. To one unacquainted with its peculiarities this soil would not be considered especially favorable, but when its present productiveness is considered, and its possible productive capacity, based on present status, it will be recognized that the soil possesses constituents that produce almost phenomenal crops of cereals, fruit, hay and vegetables; when irrigation is available the productive capacity is almost doubled. Such is the nature of this soil that the subsoil moisture percolates through it upward; to this fact is owing the production of millions of bushels of wheat that, otherwise, with the small and poorly distributed annual distribution would be impossible. In the extreme northern portion of the county, along the Columbia and along portions of the John Day and Des Chutes rivers, the soil is sandy, but under irrigation, wonderfully fertile.

Wheat is the principal revenue crop. This is due to the character of the soil and distribution of precipitation throughout the year. An examination of statistics favors the opinion that Sherman county produces more wheat per capita than does any other county in the United States. Along the Columbia, and for a portion of the John Day and Des Chutes, rivers, soil and climatic conditions are peculiarly adapted to the cultivation of peaches, although irrigation is indispensable.

In a well-written and comprehensive article published in The Dalles Times-Mountaineer of January 1, 1898, has been told the resources of Sherman, as a wheat-growing county. With this is combined an excellent description of the farming community:

In the year just ended the output of wheat alone was 2,742,876 bushels—by far the largest crop yet raised, and about one-fourth of the entire crop of Oregon. Yet this amount seems small when we figure on the amount that can and will be put on the market, now that the Columbia Southern Railway has made it possible for the markets to be easily reached. It is safe to say that Sherman county will very soon be exporting 4,000,000 bushels of wheat, and that in the coming year she will double her population.

Not only is this immense business constantly going out, but no section consumes more; for wood, lumber, everything the farmer needs, must be shipped in. And he uses great quantities of supplies. He is of no small consequence; he does not farm on a small scale; a walking plow and a single team would insult a Sherman county farmer. He drives from four to ten horses and uses several plows at one time—that is unless he is on the road; then it's two wagons. One man thinks nothing of farming less than a half section, and a majority of them have more. Then, when he harvests he turns out with a header or two, or mayhap a combined harvester, works several weeks, and if he has a small crop he markets a thousand sacks or, if a larger, sells from three to four thousand. These are the average; yet several go considerably higher. No person has an easier time raising wheat than the Sherman county farmer. Through being able to do so much work in such limited time, he can farm cheaper than in any country in the world—except those that deal in slavery.

And, perhaps, there is no better evidence of the prosperity of these same farmers than their home surroundings. Not one man in the county—except the indolent, a class that afflicts every county more or less—but has an elegant home and comfortable appointments. A splendid buggy, a pair of roadsters, a piano in the house, are all evidences that Sherman county is kind to those who delve into her bosom for sustenance. Sherman county, long before it was capable of doing business for itself, was settled by the best class of people.

After all, the back bone of the country is the farmer. Intelligent, shrewd, hard-working and honest, he produces the wealth that makes Sherman county famous. And he does it easily; he owns from 360 to 4,000 acres, and machinery plenty to farm it. The condition of the soil and the climatic influences are favorable, so that he may labor while the sun shines. The farmer is the man who develops every industry to be used; his surplus money is to be found in various institutions. He nearly always has a bank account, and through this means Sherman county handsomely supports two banking institutions—not small ones, such as may be found in small country towns—but the amount of business done reminds one of the class of business done by metropolitan institutions. No place on earth is the farmer more independent than in this little Oregon Klondike. He dictates the volume of business. The social features, the educational doings, the business of the county—everything that pertains to the welfare of himself and his neighbor.

The amount of government land open to settlement in Sherman county January 1, 1905, was 44,206 acres. Throughout the entire county the roads are excellent, and this, too, where light, sandy soil predominates. Not easily worked into mud, during the rainy season the roads are nearly at their best. Practically unlimited is the electric power that may be wired from the Des Chutes river. It is said to equal the falls of the Willamette at Oregon City. This river, the Des Chutes, is a splendid mountain stream which comes bounding down from its source in the Cascades mountains; nearly its entire length abounds in miniature waterfalls and sparkling rapids. The stream, not navigable, contains many salmon and rainbow trout. January 1, 1902, George B. Hollister, Resident Hydrographer, United States Geological Survey, Washington, D. C., writes as follows concerning the stream in the Morning Oregonian:

The United States Geological Survey has started investigations among the streams of Oregon as part of its general study of the water resources of the whole country. The work in Oregon, however, is but a beginning of what it is hoped and expected will be later undertaken. Thus far the investigation has been confined to a few streams draining from the Cascade range; Umatilla river, which flows through an important section, in the northeast, and the Des Chutes river, one of the largest streams in the interior of the state.

Des Chutes river is, in some respects, one of the most remarkable streams in the United States, from the fact that its volume of flow is nearly constant throughout the year. Almost universally the streams run full in the spring, or wet season, and are much diminished in volume in the summer and fall; but Des Chutes river has almost no fluctuation between its summer and winter volumes. This feature is of great importance and makes the river of much more value than ordinary streams for irrigation and water power, as absolute dependence can be placed upon it to supply definite amounts of water for these purposes.

The reason for this remarkable uniform flow of Des Chutes river is not fully determined, but it is thought to be due to the large storage capacity of the layers of lava of which the surface of that part of the state is composed. The water percolates through the lava, and generally finds its way to the stream. The river contains a number of rapids which form admirable water powers.

A gauging station is maintained by the Geological Survey on Des Chutes river, and the measurements show the discharge of the river to be about 5,000 cubic feet per second for the summer season, with but little additional increase during the spring and winter months. The river at its mouth will generate approximately 570 horse-power per foot of fall and, with the 25-foot fall which is said to exist there, 14,250 horse-power gross would be available.

One of the finest streams in Eastern Oregon is the John Day river, skirting Sherman county on the east. It rises in the Blue mountains, trends west and north, forming a confluence with the Columbia river some forty miles above The Dalles. In a previous chapter we have given the melancholy origin of the name this river.

CHAPTER IV

POLITICAL.

The enabling act creating Sherman county provided that the governor should appoint the first county officials to serve until their successors were elected in June, 1890, and qualified. These appointments were made by the governor March 4, 1889. James Fulton was named as county judge; he did not qualify and was replaced by O. M. Scott. The other officers named were John Medler, Dayton Elliott, county commissioners; V. C. Brock, clerk; E. M. Leslie, sheriff; Levi Armsworthy, treasurer; C. C. Myers, assessor; J. A. Smith, surveyor; C. J. Bright, school superintendent.

March 12, 1889, these officials took up their line of duties. The first meeting of the board was held in the Oskaloosa hotel, Wasco, when the officials took the oaths of office. At a meeting of the board April 1, 1889, the new county was divided into four election precincts—Grant, Wasco, Moro and Grass Valley. Before an election was held, however, two more precincts were added—Bigelow and Monkland. For the first general election in which Sherman county as a political division participated, held June 2, 1890, the following were the election officials:

Bigelow precinct, F. W. Van Patten, H. E. Everett and Charles Hill, judges; W. C. Fuller and W. J. Peddicord, clerks. Grant precinct, R. C. Wallis, S. Carson and A. M. Cooper, judges; J. W. Blackburne and M. A. Phelps, clerks. Wasco precinct, R. H. Armsworthy, Del Porter and J. A. Elder, judges; J. M. Murchie and Warren Myers, clerks. Monkland precinct, J. J. McDonald, James Gray and J. F. Miller, judges; J. A. Smith and W. V. Johnson, clerks. Moro precinct, Rufus Moore, J. J. Schaeffer and Frank Pike, judges; H. A. Thompson and S. B. Walter, clerks.

These were the voting places in the different precincts: Grant, Grant school house; Bigelow, Bigelow school house; Wasco, town of Wasco; Moro, town of Moro; Monkland, Monkland post-office; Grass Valley, Moore & Rollins' hall. Complete returns for this election are not in existence.

We are, however, enabled to give a portion of the result:

For Congressman—Herman, 301; Miller, 131; Bruce, 61.

For Governor—Thompson, 211; Pennoyer, 272.

A portion of the county officers elected were: O. M. Scott, county judge; John A. Moore, John Graham, county commissioners; E. M. Leslie, sheriff; V. C. Brock, clerk; Levi Armsworthy, treasurer; C. F. McCarthy, school superintendent; Mr. McCarthy resigned, January 8, 1891, and J. B. Hosford was appointed. J. W. Blackburne became county judge, also in 1891. John Graham did not qualify and October 8, 1890, R. J. Ginn was appointed. Following is the result of the election of June 6, 1892:

For Congress, Second District—C. J. Bright, Pro., 82; W. R. Ellis, Rep., 354; J. C. Luce, Peo., 83; J. H. Slater, Dem., 190.

For State Senator 18th district—W. L. Rinehart, Dem., 289; W. W. Steiwer, Rep., 434.

For State Senator, 17th district—H. S. McDaniel, Rep., 367; J. A. Smith, Dem., 368.

For Joint Representative, 18th district—S. F. Blythe, Dem., 258; E. N. Chandler, Rep., 387;

T. R. Coon, Rep., 407; H. E. Moore, Dem., 337.

For County Judge—John Fulton, Dem., 415; R. J. Ginn, Rep., 283.

For County Clerk—V. C. Brock, Dem., 326; S. S. Hayes, Rep., 404.

For Sheriff—E. M. Leslie, Dem., 410; E. Olds, Rep., 328.

For Treasurer—J. Marsh, Dem., 280; H. A. Thompson, Rep., 440.

For County Commissioner—D. H. Leech, Dem., 368; J. D. Wilcox, Rep. 358.

For Assessor—William Henrichs, Rep., 501; Louis Schädewitz, Dem., 224.

For School Superintendent—W. J. Peddicord, Rep., 319; Hiram Tyree, Dem., 417.

For Coroner—W. H. Moore, Rep., 643.

For Surveyor—J. R. Belshe, Rep., 691.

Vote on permanent county seat—Moro, 414; Wasco, 301.

January 4, 1893, J. R. Belshe resigned. The result of the presidential election in November of the same year was as follows:

Harrison electors, 286; Cleveland electors, 109; Weaver electors, 208; Prohibition electors, 31.

Results of election June 4, 1894:

For Congressman, second district—W. R. Ellis, Rep., 264; A. F. Miller, Pro., 75; James H. Raley, Dem., 102; Joseph Waldrop, Peo., 173.

For Joint Representatives—O. W. Axtell, Pro., 98; V. C. Brock, Dem., 148; T. R. Coon, Rep., 260; M. V. Harrison, Dem., 97; L. Henry, Peo., 186; T. H. McGreer, Rep., 260; W. J. Peddicord, Peo., 209; E. A. Tozier, Pro., 81.

For County Clerk—A. B. Craft, Peo., 203; S. S. Hayes, Rep., 319; Albert Porter, Pro., 87; G. E. Thompson, Dem., 91.

For Sheriff—William Holder, Rep., 231; E. M. Leslie, Dem., 173; Delbert Porter, Peo., 208; G. D. Woodworth, Pro., 100.

For Treasurer—J. B. Florer, Peo., 180; D. W. Howard, Dem., 96; E. Peoples, Pro., 133; H. A. Thompson, Rep., 304.

For County Commissioner—William Elliott, Pro., 157; J. H. Johnson, Peo., 165; R. P. Orr, Rep., 251; R. C. Wallis, Dem., 132.

For School Superintendent—C. E. Brown, Rep., 232; W. K. Dunn, Pro., 87; C. J. Herrin, Peo., 164; Hiram Tyree, Dem., 222.

For Assessor—S. M. Carson, Pro., 136; C. C. Kuney, Rep., 256; P. M. Ruggles, Peo., 221; W. C. Rutledge, Dem., 93.

For Coroner—Jesse Edginton, Dem., 133; T. S. Hill, Peo., 185; C. R. Rollins, Rep., 247; I. M. Smith, Pro., 142.

For Congressman—A. S. Bennett, Dem., 211; W. R. Ellis, Rep., 281; H. H. Northrup, Ind., 31; Martin Quinn, Peo., 194; F. McKercher, Pro., 41.

For Joint Senator, 18th district—E. B. Dufur, Dem., 388; W. H. Moore, Rep., 330.

For Joint Representative, 17th district—B. S. Huntington, Rep., 334; F. N. Jones, Rep., 294; L. Henry, Peo., 313; John W. Messinger, Peo., 356; T. R. Coon, Ind., 35.

For County Judge—John Fulton, Dem., 516; J. J. Thompson, Rep., 228.

For County Clerk—Roy C. Atwood, Peo., 370; William Henrichs, Rep., 376.

For Sheriff—J. D. Gibson, Pro., 171; William Holder, Rep., 355; George Meader, Peo., 240.

For Assessor—M. F. S. Henton, Pro., 85; B. F. Pike, Rep., 341; M. A. Van Gilder, Peo., 311.

For Surveyor—John T. Johnson, Peo., 359; Thomas Peugh, Rep., 354.

For School Superintendent—C. E. Brown, Rep., 350; W. J. Peddicord, Peo., 391.

For Coroner—F. E. Brown, Rep., 363; J. B. Mowry, Pro., 313.

For County Commissioner—William Elliott, Pro., 170; Rufus H. King, Peo., 317; Elwood Thompson, Rep., 261.

Sherman county cast at the presidential election, November 3, 1896, 835 votes, a gain of 114 votes over those cast at the June election. The campaign was very exciting between the gold and silver forces, and the result was close. Following was the vote: McKinley electors, Rep., 426; Bryan electors, Dem., 418; Prohibition candidate, 38; Palmer electors, Gold Democrats, 7.

There were three tickets in the county field at the general election of June 6, 1898—Republican, Prohibition and a union ticket composed of Democrats and Populists. Following was the vote:

For Governor—H. M. Clinton, Pro., 67; T. T. Geer, Rep., 478; William R. King, union, 285; John C. Luce, Peo., 41.

For Congressman—H. E. Courtney, Peo., 64; C. M. Donaldson, union, 241; G. W. Ingalls, Pro., 64; M. A. Moody, Rep., 485.

For Joint Representatives, 18th district—J. W. Morton, Rep., 438; Albert S. Roberts, Rep., 429; A. J. Brigham, union, 326; C. L. Morse, union, 294.

For Circuit Judge, 7th district—W. L. Bradshaw, union, 536; H. S. Wilson, Republican, 293.

For District Attorney, 7th district—N. H. Gates, Dem., 283; A. A. Jayne, Rep., 400.

For County Clerk—William Henrichs, Rep., 507; P. M. Ruggles, Peo., 308.

For Sheriff—William Holder, Rep., 440; N. W. Thompson, Peo., 369.

For County Commissioner—J. D. Gibson, Pro., 115; R. P. Orr, Rep., 449; J. M. Powell, Peo., 258.

For Treasurer—Henry Krause, Pro., 172; T. R. McGinnis, Peo., 235; Walter Stanley, Rep., 421.

For School Superintendent—Richard Hargreaves, union, 209; W. H. Ragsdale, Rep., 484; F. R. Spaulding, Pro., 132.

For Assessor—W. C. Fuller, Pro., 92; B. F. Pike, Rep., 484; M. A. Van Gilder, Peo., 249.

For Surveyor—J. W. Kerns, Rep., 520; A. V. Underwood, Peo., 278.

For Coroner—J. B. Mowry, Pro., 184; Dr. I. M. Smith, Rep., 584.

For Congressman—M. A. Moody, Rep., 439; Leslie Butler, Pro., 106; J. E. Simmons, Ind. Dem., 83; William Smith, Dem.-Peo., 243.

For Joint Senator, 20th district—T. H. Johnston, Rep., 437; E. B. Dufur, Dem.-Peo., 439.

For Joint Senator, 21st district—W. W. Steiner, Rep., 467; V. G. Cozard, Dem.-Peo., 382.

For Representative, 28th district—George Cattamach, Rep., 398; G. J. Barnett, Rep., 441; George Miller, Rep., 421; Robert Messener, Dem.-Peo., 341; T. R. Conn, Dem.-Peo., 382; W. J. Edwards, Dem.-Peo., 328.

For County Judge—C. C. Kuney, Rep., 320; John Fulton, Dem., 546.

For County Commissioner—Joseph A. Morrissey, Rep., 372; N. P. Hansen, Peo., 198; R. H. King, Peo., 317.

For County Clerk—H. S. McDanel, Rep., 435; R. P. Dean, Dem., 352; A. S. Porter, Pro., 109.

For Sheriff—F. E. Brown, Rep., 397; T. R. McGinnis, Peo., 483.

For Treasurer—Walter Stanley, Rep., 505; E. Peoples, Pro., 342.

For School Superintendent—W. H. Ragsdale, Rep., 503; H. H. White, Dem., 394.

For Assessor—B. F. Pike, Rep., 527; J. T. Johnson, Peo., 260; J. B. Mowry, Pro., 102.

For Coroner—Lloyd D. Idleman, Rep., 573; Olive Hartley, 68.

For Surveyor—A. H. Barnum, 24.

At the presidential election of November 6, 1900, the Sherman county vote was divided as follows: Republican electors, McKinley, 451; Democratic electors, Bryan, 385; Prohibition electors, 86; Social Democrats, 8; People's party, 1.

Election June 2, 1902:

For Governor—George E. Chamberlain, Dem., 311; William J. Furnish, Rep., 527; A. J. Hunsaker, Pro., 97; R. R. Evan, Soc., 23.

For Congressman, Second District—W. F. Butcher, Dem., 245; Diedrich T. Gerdes, Soc., 24; F. R. Spaulding, Pro., 121; G. N. Williamson, Rep., 559.

For State Representative, 28th district—C. A. Dermeman, Rep., 468; R. J. Ginn, Rep., 538; C. P. Johnson, Rep., 454; C. G. Hansen, Dem., 307; E. G. Stevenson, Dem., 210; E. P. Weir, Dem., 225; Louis J. Gates, Pro., 83; N. P. Hanson, Pro., 157; H. C. Shaffer, Pro., 92.

For County Commissioner—4 year term—W. S. Barzee, Rep., 285; John Medler, Dem., 189; A. M. Wright, Pro., 479.

For County Commissioner, 2-year term—J. K. Craig, Pro., 310; Fred Krusow, Rep., 682.

For Sheriff—T. R. McGinnis, Ind., 492; Charles R. Porter, Rep., 390; A. S. Porter, Pro., 82.

For County Clerk—R. E. Haskinson, Pro., 167; H. S. McDanel, Rep., 759.

For Treasurer—E. Peoples, Pro., 237; W. Stanley, Rep., 686.

At the presidential election, November 8, 1904, the vote of Sherman county was divided as follows:

Roosevelt, 704; Parker, 163; Prohibition, Swallow, 86; Debs, Socialist, 34; Watson, Populist, 4.

For Prohibition in Sherman county, 396; against 517. The total vote of the county was 1,023.

From the foregoing record of the political results of Sherman county it will be seen that, normally, the county is Republican by a good majority. Of course, party lines are not invariably strictly drawn in county elections, but as a rule a Republican nomination is equivalent to an election.

EDUCATIONAL.

The schools of Sherman county are excellent. Good, substantial school buildings have been erected, and all the various districts are well supplied with necessary apparatus and educational facilities. Careful selection of teachers has contributed greatly to place the school system upon a solid basis. There are graded schools in a number of towns in the county, all of which are in charge of competent teachers.

The first school building in what is now Sherman county, was located in China Hollow, about two miles north of the present site of Wasco. Miss Addie Thompson was the first teacher. The second school house in the territory mentioned was situated at the place now known as Klondike. It was called "Jack school house" from the name of the settler then living there. It will be recalled that when Sherman county was organized a transcript was taken from the Wasco county records of all matters concerning the new political division. The following is from the educational data of this transcript:

District No. 1, of Sherman County—District No. 76, of Wasco, which was afterward District No. 1 of Sherman county, was organized February 6, 1886, with the following boundaries: Bounded on the north by the Columbia river; on the east by John Day river; running south to the boundary of school district No. 60; thence west to the southwest corner of section 25, township 2, north range 17, E. W. M.; thence north to the Columbia.

District No. 2—District No. 53 of Wasco, afterward District No. 2, of Sherman county, was formed March 16, 1886, with the following boundaries: Beginning at a point in the middle of the main channel of the Columbia river, opposite the mouth of the John Day river; thence down said Columbia river to the point where it crosses the section line running north and south between sections 28 and 29; 32 and 33, township 3, north range 17, E. W. M.; thence south on said section line to the southwest corner of section 21, said township and range; thence north one mile; thence east one mile to the northeast corner of said section 24; thence north on township line to the John Day river and down said river to the place of beginning.

When Sherman county was organized in 1889, there were in the county 23 districts; at the present writing there are 35. Following is a list of the county superintendents of public instruction since that period:

C. J. Bright, 1889-1890; J. B. Hosford, 1890-1892; Hiram Tyree, 1892-1894; C. E. Brown, 1894-1896; W. J. Peddicord, 1896-1898; W. H. Ragsdale, 1898-1904; G. M. Frost, 1904.

Following is the annual report of Superintendent Bright for the year 1890:

Number of persons between the ages of 4 and 20 years residing in the county: Male, 317; female, 280; total, 597. Number of pupils enrolled: male, 252; female, 193; total, 445. Average daily attendance, males, 176; females, 139; total, 315. Number of teachers employed, male, 19; female, 10; total, 29. Number of children not attending, male 87; female, 79; total, 166. Number of teachers in private schools, male, 1; female, 2; total, 3. Number of pupils in private schools, males, 41; females, 31; total, 72. Value of school houses and grounds, $6,360; value of furniture and apparatus, $1,028.10; average salary of male teachers, $41.25; average salary of female teachers, $36.97; salary of school superintendent, $240. Number of organized districts in county, 25; average number of months taught, 4.6; number of private schools in county during the year, 4; number of school houses built during the year, 3; number of school houses in county, 21; number of legal voters in county for school purposes, 438.

The first teachers employed directly after the formation of Sherman county were:

Miss Flora Golden, Goldendale; Charles Ritter, Monkland; Julia A. Woods, DeMoss

Springs; George L. Carroll, Erskineville; W. C. Herin, Wasco; C. J. Herin, De Moss Springs; F. M. Anderson, Grant; M. A. Phelps, Rufus; P. W. Davis, De Moss Springs; Mrs. A. Lyon, Wasco; Mrs. M. A. Phelps, Rufus; Miss Bertha Johnson, Monkland; Perry A. Snyder, Wasco; Miss Minnie Wren, Monkland; Mrs. M. A. Chamberlin, Grant.

Annual report of the county superintendent for 1892:

Number of persons of school age in county, male, 417; female, 423; total, 840. Estimated value of grounds and school houses, $14,705; estimated value of furniture and apparatus, $3,686; amount of superintendent's salary $300; number of legal voters in county for school purposes, 634; number of school districts, 27; number of schools visited by superintendent, 24; number of school houses in county, 33; number of graded schools, 2, Wasco and Moro; teachers employed, 4; attendance, 176.

At present the number of children of school age in Sherman county is 840.

Annual report of the county superintendent for 1894.

Number of persons of school age, male, 423; female, 420; total, 843; value of school houses and grounds, $16,000; value of school furniture and apparatus, $6,010; average salary of male teachers, $60; average salary of female teachers, $42; salary of superintendent, $300; number of graded schools, 3; number of teachers, 5; number of pupils attending graded schools, 210; amount paid in teachers' wages $6,328.51.

Annual report for 1904:

Number of pupils of school age, male, 711; female, 638; total, 1,349; number of pupils enrolled, male, 438; female, 412; total, 850; average daily attendance, 604; number of school houses in county, 35; number of school houses built this year, 2; average number of months taught, 6; number of legal voters for school purposes, 867; number of teachers employed in private schools, male, 3; female, 7; pupils enrolled in private schools, male, 36; female, 33; number of private schools, 6; paid for teachers' wages, $14,123.39; paid for school houses and sites, $1,392.50; total disbursements for year, $33,649.91; estimated value of school houses and grounds, $39,125; estimated value of furniture and apparatus, $7,205; average salary male teachers, $54; average salary female teachers, $42.80.

The apportionment of school money for April, 1905, was $7,517.20. There are at present no private schools in Sherman county. For several years the Middle Oregon Baptist Academy was conducted at Grass Valley. This institution was placed on its feet in 1895 by local capital, and under the auspices of the Eastern Oregon Baptist Society. A handsome frame structure was erected and for a number of years the school was maintained. Still, it was never in a satisfactory and prosperous condition. For a short period it was conducted in connection with the public schools, but this arrangement was not successful, although added advantages along educational lines were thus secured. In 1904 the academy was closed. In size the building was 48x48, two stories in height, with a seven-foot basement. The cost was $4,000. It contained eight rooms and was heated by a hot air furnace. Of this educational institution The Dalles Times-Mountaineer said, January 1, 1898:

This noble institution of learning was founded by the Middle Oregon Baptist Association, for the purpose of thoroughly preparing young people for college, business life, or for the profession of teaching, and to do this under Christian influences. Its location is a great advantage, situated, as it is, in the midst of a town where no saloon nor gambling is tolerated, nor are there any of the alluring attractions, such as the theatre and kindred evils. It is two stories in height and also has a large and commodious basement, and is surrounded by a large campus. There are three courses of study, each requiring three years to complete. The Normal is particularly adapted to those intending to follow teaching as a profession. The classical presenting two years Latin gives thorough preparation for admission to college, and a business course is offered which is adapted to fit students for the practical duties of business life. Studies in elocution and vocal music will be given by T. Clay Neece, it being a part of the regular course. During the course lectures will also be given by C. A. Woddy, Claude Raboteau and Gilman Parker of Portland; A. L. Boardman, of McMinnville, George W. Barnes, of Prineville and C. P. Bailey, of Grass Valley. The principal, R. Hargreaves, is an able instructor, and gives the affairs of the Academy his personal supervision. He will gladly furnish any desired information regarding its advantages.

In September, 1902, a contract was let to W. A. Raymond for an annex to the Moro High School building, 22x33 feet, to cost $2,020.

The school at Wasco is composed of four departments, primary, intermediate, grammar and high school. Of these the intermediate is the largest department, having an enrollment for the year 1904 and 1905 of 57. Next in size is the primary with an enrollment of 47, followed by the grammar department with 34, and the high school with 26. This school is disciplined by the "self-control" plan, and while the teachers assist pupils in controlling themselves, the latter are making rapid progress along this line. As a whole, the Wasco school has been in the past quite fortunate in its selection of teachers, especially in the "grade" teachers. Many have gone from this school to the larger Portland schools. In 1905 it carried full ninth, and part of the tenth, grade work, and all classes completed their work without great difficulty.

BIOGRAPHICAL SKETCHES

SHERMAN COUNTY

EUGENE S. CATTRON, representative of the Pacific Coast Elevator Company for Sherman county, and mayor of Wasco, Sherman county, was born in Monmouth, Oregon, July 14, 1864, the son of Jonathan and Alvira (Shelton) Cattron. The father was a native of Kentucky, a member of an old family of Holland descent. His parents moved to Missouri while he was a small boy. The mother of our subject, a native of Missouri, resides in Portland, Oregon. It was in 1850 that the father of our subject came to Oregon, overland with ox teams to California, and by boat to Oregon from San Francisco. The mother, with her parents, had preceded him in 1846, locating in Yamhill county, where she remained five years and where she was married to the father of our subject. Following this he removed to Polk county where he died in 1872. He was a stanch Republican, active in campaigns, but never sought office. He was, also, one of the promoters of the old Monmouth University, of which he was secretary. This institution was later known as Christian College, and at present the State Normal school.

Our subject continued to live in Monmouth until 1897 when he came to Sherman county, having previously been graduated from Christian College and the Monmouth State Normal school. In 1885 he taught school six months and then engaged in the grain business, conducting a warehouse eight years. This enterprise he disposed of and took a trip east to attend the World's Fair at Chicago. Returning he again engaged in the warehouse business two years, sold out and came to Sherman county, August, 1897, as the county representative of the Pacific Coast Elevator Company. In 1899 he was elected mayor of Wasco on a citizen's ticket and is now serving his third term.

At the city of Wallace, Idaho, October 6, 1899, Mr. Cattron was united in marriage to Miss Verne Lytle, a native of Missouri, the daughter of Walter S. and Helen Lytle. Her father, a native of Pennsylvania, is assistant auditor of the steamship lines of the Northern Pacific Railroad Company at Seattle. Mrs. Cattron has two sisters, Bertha, single, living with her father at Seattle, and Helen, wife of Captain Charles Smithers, instructor at the military college of West Point. Our subject has one brother and three sisters living; Edgar, of the hardware firm of Jensen, King, Byrd Company, Spokane, Washington; Laura, single, residing at Eugene; Alice, wife of T. J. Craig, of Portland, a druggist; and Bertha, wife of C. E. Clodfelter, of the Brownsville Woolen Company, of Portland. Mr. and Mrs. Cattron have one child, Helen, aged four years. The fraternal affiliations of our subject are with the B. P. O. E., No. 303, The Dalles, and the Knights of Pythias, of Wasco, of which he is chancellor commander. He is a Republican and quite frequently is called upon to serve as delegate to county conventions and several times he has acted in a like capacity at state conventions. Mr. Cattron is a gentleman of pleasing address and marked executive and financial ability, one who has won a host of friends in a wide circle of acquaintances.

J. SHELBY FOWLER, a young, energetic and sagacious Sherman county farmer, resides two miles south of Rufus. He was born in Pettis county, Missouri, near Smithton, May 20, 1880, the son of William and Lettie (Matthews) Fowler. The father was a native of Missouri; the mother of Ohio. The parents of William Fowler were of German descent. The family of our subject came to Sherman county when he was four years of age. Here the father secured one-half section of land and purchased more, although he had, at the time, only limited capital. He now owns a section of land and our subject has three hundred and seventy-five acres, a portion of which he homesteaded, purchasing the balance. They farmed together until recently, and our subject now rents his father's place. Four hundred acres of the land are at present devoted to wheat. William Fowler has an orchard of fifteen acres which he, himself, conducts. He was a soldier in the confederacy, in Company A, under Captain Dill, Colonel Parsons, and General Parsons. He is a Democrat, fairly active during the successive campaigns, has served on several occasions as delegate to county conventions, and has been school director a number of terms.

Our subject received a good business education in the public schools in his vicinity and in the high school at The Dalles, to which was added a course at the Portland Business College. He has four sisters: Cora, a clerk at Hood River; Lella, wife of Charles Lamb, a farmer in Pettis county, Missouri; Ila, wife of Correl Smith, of Wasco; Zula, living at home.

Mr. Fowler is a member of the M. W. A., of Rufus, of which order he is venerable counsel. He is a popular young man, ambitious and progressive, and one highly esteemed in his home community.

ALEXANDER SCOTT, a capitalist and farmer of Grass Valley, was born in Armagh county, Ireland, on May 3, 1849. John Scott, his father, was a native of the same county in Ireland and married Susannah Henry, also a native of the same place. The father died in Ireland, and the mother now lives at Holly Beach, New Jersey. Our subject attended the national schools of Ireland until 1864, and came to the United States in 1868 and settled in Orange county, New York. He did farm work a year there, then went to Philadelphia and clerked for three years, after which he took up the grocery business for himself until 1877. In that year he came to Portland and engaged in the flax industry in Jefferson City, having learned the business in his father's flax mill in Ireland. Six months later, he came to The Dalles for the winter and the following spring, 1878, took land on Tygh ridge, one mile north from Kingsley, being one of the first settlers and wheat raisers in that section. For fourteen years he continued there then sold his half section to John Whitten. In the spring of 1888, Mr. Scott was forced to take a business in Grass Valley, where he had endorsed some papers. It was the only store there and he ran it as Scott & Company, for twelve years. Then he entered into partnership with the three Heaths and they continued three years longer. Then the business was absorbed by the C. C. Company, our subject becoming vice-president and director in that company. Our subject had traded a half interest in his store to the Heaths for eight hundred acres of land. This land is now valued at twenty-five dollars per acre and raises twenty-five bushels per acre on summer fallow and fifteen bushels spring wheat. Mr. Scott owns a combined harvester and is one of the leading grain producers of the county. He is also director and secretary of the Citizens' Bank. Mr. Scott also owns Sherman addition to Grass Valley, originally forty acres, over half of which has been built up. It is the very best part of the town. He also owns a fine two-story dwelling besides considerable other property. With A. B. Craft, he erected the first warehouse and they later sold out to the W. W. & M. Company. They also built one at Kent and sold to the same company. Mr. Scott bought the Sherman addition from the E. O. L. Company for a thousand dollars. He had previously bought a quarter section from the government and had a government title for five years while here in business and built various buildings. Then the E. O. L. claimed the land and won it in the supreme court, so our subject purchased back forty acres for a thousand dollars and they kept one hundred and twenty acres. The government returned the two hundred dollars he had paid and he has now a claim pending against the company for nine thousand six hundred dollars for improvements.

On November 3, 1874, at Philadelphia, Mr. Scott married Elizabeth Whitten, who was born in Armagh county, Ireland, a sister of John D. Whitten, who is mentioned in this work. Mr. Scott has one brother, John, one of the largest wholesale grocers in Philadelphia and one of twenty-five who handle the entire product of the American Sugar Refinery. He also has a brother in St. Louis, William H., engaged in the millwright business, and Nathan, at Columbia Falls, Montana, and one sister with his mother in New Jersey. Mr. and Mrs. Scott have three children living, Ethel J., Anna E., and Linden D., aged seventeen, fifteen, and thirteen, respectively. They also have five children who are now deceased, whose names and ages at the time of their death are given below: John A., two and one-half years; William H., six years and eleven months; George D., aged four and one-half years; Annie, eighteen months; and William J., fourteen years. John M. and Annie died in the same week of that dread disease, diphtheria. Mr. and Mrs. Scott and their children are all members of the Baptist church. Politically, he is a Republican and as active as his business will permit. Mr. Scott is one of the substantial, heavyweight business men of Sherman county. He has achieved marked success in his endeavors and has also maintained a reputation for integrity, uprightness and fair dealing, which have won for him confidence and esteem from all who know him.

Since the above was written, Mr. Scott has sold some of his property in Grass Valley and has invested in Portland. He has purchased a fine residence at 692 East Ash street in that city and is transferring his property from Sherman county to Portland.

CHARLES H. TOM, a prosperous Sherman county farmer, resides one-half mile from Grant on the hill. He was born in Stark county, Ohio, February 7, 1855, the son of David A. and Mary F. (Bartholomew) Tom. The father was a native of Ohio; his parents of Ireland. David A. Tom was a member of Company F., in an Ohio Infantry regiment, in which he served in the Civil war. Two years previous to his enlistment he was in the employment of the government, purchasing horses for the use of the army. On the Ohio canal he ran boats for many years. The mother of our subject was a native of Pennsylvania, of Pennsylvania Dutch ancestry.

Until 1869 our subject lived in Ohio, in Indiana until 1871, and in Illinois until 1881. Thence he went to Dayton, Washington, remaining a few months and then he came to Sherman county. He filed on timber culture and homestead claims, and purchased more land later. Occasionally he worked for the Oregon Railroad & Navigation Company, in all about four years, and at other periods devoting his attention to improving his ranch. This was a noted rendezvous for stockmen, with good water, etc., and a lake which Mr. Tom has drained and utilizes for irrigation purposes. He has now about seven hundred acres, nearly all of which is cultivated.

October 25, 1877, our subject was married to Mary C. Montgomery, born in Menard county, where the marriage ceremony was performed. Her father, William Montgomery, a native of Illinois, was born in the same house in which his daughter, Mrs. Tom, first saw the light. His parents, Thomas Jefferson and Sarah (Stone) Montgomery, were born in Kentucky, in 1805, and in Owensville, Indiana, in 1812, respectively, and went to Illinois in 1849. William Montgomery was a second cousin of President Jefferson Davis, of the Southern Confederacy. Three of William's brothers fought in the Civil war. Ritchey, the eldest, was born in Gibson county, Indiana, in 1831, and in 1862 enlisted in the Seventy-third Illinois Infantry. Samuel, born in Indiana, in 1839, enlisted in Company A, Tenth Illinois Cavalry, in 1861. James, still living in Atlanta, Logan county, Illinois, was born in Indiana, in 1837, and enlisted in Company G, Thirty-eighth Illinois Infantry. These brothers were in the union army. William endeavored to enlist but failed to pass the necessary examination. He was born in Gibson county, Indiana, in 1833, and died in 1880.

Our subject has three brothers and three sisters: Anson S., of Grant, in the service of the Oregon Railroad & Navigation Company; Homer, in Indiana; S. Fremont, a farmer living with his mother in Indiana; Mary, wife of John Smith, a capitalist in Cadillac, Michigan; Emma, wife of Henry Hurd, a farmer near Friend, Nebraska; and Ella, single and at home in Indiana. Mrs. Tom has six brothers and one sister living: James R., of Menard county, Illinois; Samuel D., of Oklahoma; Charles L., of Moro, Sherman county; Harvey E., foreman in a newspaper office in Clinton, Illinois; Homer, of Weldon, Illinois; J. Henry, a printer near Weldon, Illinois; Ellen, wife of Charles Parkhurst, a preacher in Oklahoma, of the Cumberland Presbyterian Church. Thomas J., aged four, died at the home place in Menard county, Illinois; M. Jane, wife of Rev. Willis Patchen, died in Illinois, aged twenty-one.

Mr. and Mrs. Tom have four children; Edith, wife of Charles Hoggard, a merchant in Rufus; Curtis A., at home; Sarah E., aged seventeen; Leah, aged eleven, at home. The fraternal affiliations of Mr. Tom are with Cascade Lodge, No. 303, B. P. O. E., of The Dalles, and the A. O. U. W., of Moro. He is a progressive citizen, broad-minded and liberal, and one who has won a host of friends in the community in which he resides.

WILLIAM H. FAIRFIELD, proprietor of the Kent Hotel at Kent, Oregon, was born in California, on August 6, 1871. His parents, William and Ella (Rawson) Fairfield, are natives of Michigan, and now reside in California. They moved to Clackamas county, Oregon, when he was three years old and there cleared a farm from heavy timber. Twelve years later, they sold the place and moved to Douglas county, and two years after that our subject, having completed his education in the common schools, struck out for himself. He did various work until his people went to California, then he came to this part of Oregon. He herded sheep for a time, then spent two years or so in farm work. Following that, he raised wheat on rented land for four years; then bought three-fourths of a section and also took up a homestead. He later sold the land he had bought and in December, 1903, purchased the place he now conducts at Kent. Since that time Mr. Fairfield has given his attention to handling the hotel and livery barn and is doing a nice business.

On December 7, 1898, at Grass Valley, Mr. Fairfield married Minnie Smith, whose parents dwell in Grass Valley. To this union one child has been born, Kenneth. Mr. Fairfield has three brothers, Edward, Harry and Wallace, in California, and one sister, Minnie, wife of Bud Lewis, Roseburg, Oregon.

Politically, Mr. Fairfield is a Republican. He is also a man of good standing and takes an interest in everything that is for the building up and the welfare of the country.

WILLIAM H. TURNER is one of Sherman county's progressive, energetic and skillful farmers. He resides two miles west from Rutledge postoffice and has a fine estate. He was born in New York, March 21, 1866, the son of George and Louisa (Seeley) Turner. The father was born in Hartford, Connecticut and died when our subject was nine years of age. He came from an old American family. The mother's parents were born in New York and their parents were natives of England. The Seeley family is well known as one of the prominent families in New York and New England and many professional and educational men were among them. The mother's father, lost his eyesight when forty years of age, through overwork while clearing land for his home in Cortland county, New York. He was a pioneer settler and had taken land there and when his eyesight was nearly gone, he suffered the additional trouble of having to resist unprincipled men who tried to drive him from his property. They even went so far as to fire shot guns at him. Still he persevered and afterward bought peace and was left alone. Our subject still today owns the old place of sixty six acres where he resided until nine years of age. His uncle helped till the place until he entered the State Normal school. The uncle is Professor Felix E. Seeley who taught in the high schools in Michigan, Wisconsin and New York and in later years came west and farmed near DeMoss Springs for ten years. He is now engaged in real estate and loaning in San Francisco, being a prominent and worthy citizen. After his father's death, he assisted his mother in working out to pay for the little home place and he continued at the same until fifteen, when he determined to come west and seek his fortune. He gave his mother all his money, except enough for his fare and he landed in Wasco county with just six cents in his pocket. He was on the second train that had come over the Northern Pacific. Scott and McCoy ran a store in Grant and when our subject was trying to purchase a nickel's worth of crackers and cheese, Mr. Scott gruffly asked him if he had no more money. Mr. Turner replied, "No." Scott then said, "Go to the hotel and I will stand good." Mr. Turner feeling independent, said he would not, as he had one cent left. Scott insisted and took him to the hotel with instructions for the hotel man to keep him until he could find work. Our subject went to work cutting wood for the hotel keeper and while thus employed Michael King, a Scotchman with a broad brogue and a throat disease, came along and addressed Mr. Turner with the idea of hiring him; but owing to the difficulties mentioned, our subject could understand nothing except the man's profanity. However, a bargain was finally made and he went to work tending camp for forty-five dollars per month, which money he sent to his mother as soon as he earned it. Then he went to work at eighty-five dollars per month and remarks to this day that he felt nearly frightened to death to receive that much money for one month's labor when he had only gotten thirteen and one-half dollars for his work in the east. Mr. Turner stayed two years with Mr. King and during that time he sent for his mother, who married William Currie a year after she came here. After his mother came, our subject went to freighting and prospered exceedingly, but like the other freighters, he spent his money freely but was careful to take a preemption, homestead and timber culture, which forms his estate at the present time. Mr. Turner owns the lead mare which he used for fifteen years, she now being twenty-one years old. Her intelligence is almost human and he would not part with her under any circumstances. In addition to doing freighting and handling his estate, our subject worked with his step-father on a threshing outfit which he later owned and they conducted the business until the present time. Mr. Turner is a prosperous man, has many friends and is one of the leading citizens of the county.

On October 12, 1903, Mr. Turner married Jennetta Leonard. She was born in Ontario, Canada, on April 12, 1887, the daughter of Charles and Jennetta (Bain) Leonard, natives of Canada and Scotland, respectively, and now dwelling in Sherman county, their home at the head of Sherar's grade, seven miles up from the bridge. Mr. Turner is an only child; his wife has one brother, Allen, and four sisters, Lizzie, Carrie, Georgia and Nora.

JOHN R. VENABLE was born in Marion county, Oregon, March 26, 1865, the son of Francis M. and Jane (Hubbard) Venable. Francis M., the father, is a native of Missouri, the mother of Illinois. At present they both reside on a farm near Rufus. With ox teams the father crossed the plains in 1852 or 1853, accompanied by his wife.

In the beautiful and arable Willamette Valley our subject was reared until he attained the age of eleven years. At that period his family removed to Klickitat county, Washington, where the father purchased land on the Columbia, opposite the mouth of the John Day river. They remained there until 1888, thence coming to Sherman county. Our subject found employment in a variety of occupations, living much of the time at home.

March 11, 1891, at Pendleton, Oregon, Mr. Venable was united in marriage to Miss Elvena McCullough, a native of Ohio and the daughter of William McCullough, the latter at present living in Wallowa county, Oregon. Our subject has three brothers living. Mr. and Mrs. Venable have six children living, W. Frances, Chester R., Marie, Paul, Mack, and Manuel, an infant.

Politically, he is a Democrat, and although not an active partisan he served as a delegate to the last county convention in the interest of the Democratic party.

During four years Mr. Venable was engaged in the barber business, and was for nearly three years at Adams, Umatilla county. He is quite a popular man in the community in which he resides and numbers many friends in a wide circle of acquaintances.

JAMES W. HARVEY, proprietor of the Rufus Hotel, Rufus, Sherman county, was born in Polk county, Oregon, May 3, 1856, the son of Job and Ellen (Perry) Harvey. The father was a native of Pennsylvania, his parents the same, and his grandfather was English; his grandmother Scotch. The mother of our subject was a native of Maine, a member of the old and distinguished Perry family. Of these Commodore

Perry, the historically celebrated naval officer—Oliver Hazard Perry—who fought the battle of Lake Erie, and others who became distinguished in American history, were members.

The father of our subject came to Oregon with his parents, with ox teams, in 1850. His father, Amos, secured a donation claim which is now the present site of a portion of the city of Portland. The Multnomah county court house stands on part of it and the entire quarter section extends down to the Willamette river. The locator remained on this land nine months and then disposed of the improvements for a ranch in Yamhill county, which he later exchanged for Polk county property where he died. Our subject's father owned a half section adjoining upon which James W. Harvey was born. The latter's father died when he was seventeen years of age; his mother when he was eleven months old. He has no remembrance of either of his parents, the father having died in Montana. Our subject lived with his grandfather and uncles until he was nine years old, and then he ran away to The Dalles. Here he worked for Mr. Grimes, mentioned elsewhere. He passed eighteen months at The Dalles and was eighteen months with Henry Barnum, mentioned in another portion of this work, on the present site of Moro. Returning to the Willamette valley he found employment in a livery stable in Albany. Here he remained two years and then he went east of the mountains as general manager for Robert Saltmarsh, a sheep grower. Three years subsequently he went to Heppner where he filled a similar position in the cattle business for William Taylor. He then purchased beef for a Portland house four years and the two years subsequently he traveled about, engaging in no business. Mr. Harvey returned to Umatilla county in 1876, and at the breaking out of the Indian war joined the company of Frank Mattoc's with which he remained one month. Then the United States government employed him as a scout for a period of three months when the war closed. Subsequently for two years he bought and sold horses on his own account, going to Grass Valley, Sherman county, in 1879. There were then only two houses in the place; one belonging to "Doc" Rollins, who is mentioned elsewhere; and one owned by a man named Hough. Our subject located a claim near "Doc" Rollins', which he disposed of to Mr. Van Winkle, mentioned in another portion of this work. On this he resided seventeen years, going, in 1887, to Ellensburg, Washington, where he passed a few months. After this during a portion of eight years he remained in Portland engaged in contracting on street grading. During that period he took a contract for railroad work near Winlock, Washington, in which he lost all his funds owing to the fact that the principal contractor failed to pay the sub-contractors. This loss was a severe one amounting to about $16,000. After this he completed a small contract near Olympia and returned to Portland. In 1893 Mr. Harvey located in Peoria, Linn county, Oregon, where he worked for H. F. Fisher in a mill and warehouse for six years. Going to Viento, Wasco county, he was in the employment of the Oregon Lumber Company five months. Thence he migrated to The Dalles where for a short period he conducted a shooting gallery, and the following summer he was in Centerville, Washington, one year, in the confectionery and ice cream business. He continued the same line of business ten months in Wasco, but August 1, 1904, he rented the Rufus Hotel. He still owns a farm on the edge of Peoria which he rents.

March 15, 1884, at Grass Valley, our subject was united in marriage to Margaret Emma Shanklin, born in Burlington, Linn county, Oregon, the daughter of Robert and Martha (McCartney) Shanklin. Her father was born in Fleming county, Kentucky. His ancestors were Scotch pioneers. Her mother was a native of Indiana, and her father of Tennessee. Her grandparents were Scotch and Irish. Our subscriber has one brother living, Daniel P.; another brother, Charles C., is dead. Mrs. Harvey has three sisters living; Edna; Edith (in Idaho); Effie, wife of Walter Barber, of Peoria, Linn county, Oregon. Mr. and Mrs. Harvey have four children, Clinton, Clyde, Robert and Edith, living at home. Mrs. Harvey is a member of the Methodist (South) church. Politically, Mr. Harvey is a Republican although not particularly active. Our subject is a popular man throughout the county and numbers a wide circle of friends and acquaintances.

GEORGE W. RAMEY, dealer in hardware and a blacksmith, resides at Rufus, Sherman county. He was born in St. Louis county, Missouri, the son of William H. and Virginia (Ball) Ramey, both natives of Missouri. The ancestry of William Ramey were an old and prominent southern family of Holland descent. His father was a pioneer settler in Missouri and California. Virginia Ball was born in Boone county, a descendant of the old Ball family, the members of which were distinguished soldiers in the wars of the Revolution and 1812. Their ancestry were English. Ephraim Ball, born at Greentown, Ohio, August 12, 1812, dying at Canton, Ohio, January 1, 1872, was an inventor and manufacturer of plows, mowers (the Buckeye machine), and harvesters. Thomas Ball, a native of Massachusetts, born July 3, 1819, was a distinguished American sculptor. Among his works are a statue of Daniel Webster (New York), "Emancipation," (Washington), statue and busts of Everett, Choate, etc.

Until he was eleven years of age our subject remained in Missouri. He then, with his parents, went to Tulare county, California. This was in 1870. Here he attended the district schools and worked on the farm. His family left California in 1882 and came to Sherman county, where he and his father took up land on the hill overlooking the Columbia river. They disposed of these claims later and purchased other land. Our subject at present owns forty acres of fine fruit and vegetable land near the town of Rufus. It was in 1903 that he engaged in his present business. His parents own a section of land on the hill four miles from town.

Mr. Ramey is a single man, living with his parents in Rufus. They rent the land on the "hill." Politically, Mr. Ramey is independent. He has one brother and two sisters; Charles T., a stock-raiser in Yolo county, California; Cora, wife of Frank Bartholomew, who rents the ranch on the "hill;" and Agnes, wife of Benjamin L. Andrews, a farmer residing four and one-half miles from Rufus.

WILLIAM H. McGRATH, a skillful mechanic, who does blacksmithing and wagon making at Grass Valley, Oregon, is one of the leading business men of this part of Sherman county. He handles the largest business south of Wasco and as large as any mechanical business in the county. He was born in Mendocino county, California, on May 19, 1875, the son of John B. and Mary (Black) McGrath, natives of Delaware, New Jersey, and Illinois, respectively. The father's father was a native of Ireland and came to the United States in his youth and settled in New Jersey. John B. McGrath died at The Dalles in the fall of 1900. Our subject's maternal grandparents were natives of Illinois, and came of German extraction. William H. grew up in California until six years of age when the family came to Sherman, it being then 1881. The father took a homestead in Grass Valley and there were only six other families in this part of the country. He bought more land but sold, so at the time of his death he owned one-half section. Our subject was educated in the district schools and when twenty-one took a homestead. Later, he sold this and purchased town property. He has a residence in Grass Valley and owns a commodious blacksmith and wagon shop, besides some vacant lots. He is doing a very extensive business, keeping constantly employed with three mechanics and sometimes more. Mr. McGrath is a very skillful man in mechanical lines and is able to turn out any kind of work that is needed in the county. He worked under a thoroughly competent instructor when learning the trade and was master of it when he opened the shop here in the fall of 1903. He does light and heavy blacksmithing and all kinds of wagon and carriage work, builds water tanks, in fact attends to any line of work needed in an agricultural country.

In December, 1899, Mr. McGrath married Mrs. Mamie B. McGreevy, a native of Missouri. By her former marriage, she had two daughters, Lena and Maggie, and to Mr. and Mrs. McGrath one child has been born, Jessie. Our subject has one brother, living, John T., at Aberdeen, Washington. One brother died when an infant, and three sisters, Kate, Mary and Catherine, aged nine, seven and six respectively. They all died in California.

Mr. McGrath is a member of the A. O. U. W. In political matters he is a Republican, but not especially active. He takes an interest in school matters and general affairs, and is a progressive and industrious man.

WILLIAM CURRIE resides about three and one-half miles northeast from Rutledge, Sherman county, and is well known here, having been a pioneer of 1884. He was born in Scotland, on March 19, 1844, the son of William and Jeanette (Bosomwaith) Currie, natives of the same country. The father died in Scotland and the mother died in Canada. Our subject came to Canada when five years old, with his mother and other relatives and settlement was made in Huron county, Ontario. There Mr. Currie was educated and reared until twenty years of age. His mother had taken land there and he assisted her to improve it and make a home. When twenty years of age, he came to Port Huron, Michigan, and enlisted in Company B, Thirtieth Michigan Infantry, under Captain Balles and Colonel Johnson, and was busy at guard duty until the close of the war, receiving his honorable discharge in June, 1865. After being mustered out, he came via Panama to San Francisco, and a short time later went thence to Santa Cruz where he labored two years getting out redwood bolts to make powder kegs. Afterward, we find him in Nevada, where he was variously engaged for a year, then he went to Montana and did packing. Later, he operated a threshing machine there, after which he went down the river to Kansas City. Not finding anything there to suit him, he journeyed on west to Arizona, and was variously employed in that territory, Utah and Idaho until 1884, when he came to this part of Oregon. A year later, he took up land, then bought railroad land and since has been giving his attention to farming. His wife also took land before her marriage and they now own nine hundred and sixty acres. Mr. Currie has a threshing outfit, operated by a gasoline engine.

In 1886, Mr. Currie married Mrs. Louisa Turner, who was born in New York, the daughter of William and Ellen (Morse) Seeley, natives of New York and descended from old American families. The father died in New York, and he was blind from forty until 1871, the time of his death. Mr. Currie has no brothers living, but has two half brothers, John and Robert Boswaith, in Canada. He also has one half sister, Elizabeth, the wife of Mr. Main, in Ontario. Mrs. Currie has two brothers, Felix E., in San Francisco, and William H., who died from cholera in the Civil war, and one sister, Diadama, in New York.

Politically, Mr. Currie is independent, not being trammelled by any party ties. Mrs. Currie is a member of the Methodist church, while her husband belongs to the Presbyterian denomination. They are good substantial people and are well and favorably known.

JOHN W. SMITH, an enterprising merchant and influential, progressive citizen of Rufus, Sherman county, was born in Berrien county, Michigan, March 19, 1848. He is the son of John R. and Mary A. (Miller) Smith, the former a native of Pennsylvania, the latter of Indiana, but both descended from old Pennsylvania Dutch families.

It was in Michigan that our subject was reared until he was three years old, when his family removed to Iowa. Here he attended the public schools where he obtained a good business education, and worked on the farm with his parents until he was fifteen years old. Evidently he was a very patriotic youth, for at that early age he enlisted in Company F, Ninth Iowa Infantry, Captain James W. Gwin. The colonel of our subject's regiment was David Henderson, who subsequently became speaker of the House of Representatives at Washington. Mr. Smith began his life as a soldier with the Chattanooga campaign in the spring of 1864, with General Sherman. He was in the Fifteenth Army Corps, then commanded by General John A. Logan (Black Jack), of Illinois, who was subsequently candidate for vice president on the ticket with James G. Blaine. For eighteen months our subject remained with his regiment with the exception of three months, which he passed in the hospital owing to serious illness. July 25, 1865, he was mustered out at Louisville, Kentucky.

After the close of the war he was engaged in farming in Missouri and Kansas, and also in railroad work and various other employments. In 1880 Mr. Smith went to Colorado where he remained four years as clerk in a store and engaging in carpenter work. Thence he went to Seattle, Washington, and worked at bridge-building four years, and in the fall of 1888 he took up general merchandising in Grant, Sherman county. In 1894 a disastrous flood carried off the building and much of the stock. He at once erected another building twenty-eight by seventy feet at Murray Springs and engaged in the same line of business, and in 1895 removed the building to Rufus. He carries about four thousand five hundred dollars worth of stock and has a good trade. Our subject is single. He has three brothers and two sisters living; Benjamin F., a farmer in Douglas county; Jacob R., in Fort Scott, Kansas; Thurston S., proprietor of a saloon in Wasco; Hattie, wife of Frank Vennum, of Coffeerville, Kansas; and Emma, wife of John Harris, also of Fort Scott.

Politically, he is affiliated with the Republican party, but is not what might be termed an active partisan. In the community in which he resides he is very popular and has won the esteem of a wide circle of friends.

GEORGE E. THOMPSON is postmaster at Rutledge where he also owns a section of land and does general farming. He was born at The Dalles, Oregon, on April 23, 1860. His father was descended from English and Irish parentage and came to Oregon in the early fifties. He was a soldier in the regular army and died when our subject was two years of age. The mother died just before that. George was then legally adopted by John B. Dickerson and was raised and educated at The Dalles. He received good training in the schools and assisted his foster father in the meat business. Later, he was engaged in that for himself, and about 1884 sold out and came to Sherman county. He took a homestead, bought railroad land and started practically without capital. He now has the property above mentioned, which is well improved, with a good cosy frame house, barns, outbuildings, fences and so forth and is one of the good places of the county.

On May 3, 1881, at The Dalles, Mr. Thompson married Mary Bolton, who was born in Illinois, the daughter of Patrick Bolton, a native of Ireland, and now living at Kingsley. Mr. Thompson has one brother, William, at Wheatland, Oregon, and one sister, Nettie, the wife of George T. Thompson, an attorney at Walla Walla. To Mr. and Mrs. Thompson nine children have been born, named as follows: John, Albert, Morris, Mabel, Nellie, Edith, Ruth, Alice, Grace, all at home. Our subject is a member of the A. O. U. W., and he and his wife belong to the Roman Catholic church. In politics, he is a Democrat and is almost always found at the county conventions and frequently in the state conventions. He is a committeeman of his precinct, and is also school clerk. Mr. Thompson is a man of good standing, has shown splendid business ability in his efforts here, and is rated as one of the substantial and leading men of this part of the county.

CLARK DUNLAP, at the head of one of the pioneer families of Oregon, is a prosperous farmer living one mile north of Wasco. He was born in Peoria, Illinois, October 25, 1844, the son of Smith and Madeline Dunlap. Smith Dunlap was a native of Connecticut, of Scotch and Irish ancestry. His parents came from the north of Ireland.

At the time our subject was about three years of age the family crossed the plains with an ox train. This was in 1847. While en route the father was accidentally shot and killed. The mother died eighteen months after arriving at Forest Grove, Oregon. Our subject grew up in Salem, where he was reared in the family of F. R. Smith, who were old pioneers in the country. Here young Clark Dunlap obtained a good business education in the public schools of Salem and worked on the farm of Mr. Smith, which was located on the outskirts of the town. In 1868, when our subject was twenty-four years of age, he struck out for himself and engaged in the stock business in which he was fairly successful. He passed about one year in Klickitat county, Washington, thence going to Grant county, Oregon, where he raised cattle. In this enterprise he continued until 1882 when he came to Sherman county and took up half a section of very fine land, where he now resides.

May 20, 1874, at Bridge Creek, Wheeler county, Oregon, our subject was married to Jane Chapman, born in Polk county, Oregon. She is the daughter of Joseph R. Chapman, a native of Connecticut, who came to Oregon with an ox train in 1852. He located a donation claim in Polk county, and later went to Klickitat county, Washington. This was about 1860. Here he remained several years thence moving into the John Day country, where he engaged in stock-raising. He died in Sherman county January 12, 1883; the mother now lives in Wheeler county.

Our subject has one brother and one sister; William; and Harriet, wife of Henry Trimble, residing near Lewiston, Idaho. He is colloquially known as "Hank," and is a prominent pioneer of North Idaho. Mrs. Dunlap has three brothers and two half-sisters; George W. and Isaac M., stockmen residing near Fossil; Joseph A., a stockman in Wheeler county; Mary, wife of William Waters, of Fossil; Sarah A., widow of Alby Bunnell, late of Centerville, Washington.

Mr. and Mrs. Dunlap have four children; Clifton, born October 25, 1886; Mary V., born March 8, 1875, wife of Edward D. McKee, a druggist in Wasco; Vleda, born December 21, 1876, wife of George Van Gassbec, a farmer of Blalock, Oregon; and Veva, born September 13, 1893, now living at home. Mrs. Dunlap is a member of the Methodist Episcopal church. Politically, Mr. Dunlap is a Republican and frequently a county delegate.

WILLIAM TATE, one of the prosperous and solid citizen farmers of Sherman county, after an extended tour in many of the states of the union, has decided that his present location, three miles south of Rufus, is one of the best he has seen in all his journeyings. He was born in Ireland, April 25, 1830, the son of John and Elizabeth (Steele) Tate, both natives of Ireland, where they died, in County Armagh. The father was a farmer.

In 1851 our subject came to the United States and at first located in Chicago where he remained two years engaged in the carpenter trade. In 1853 he crossed the plains to Plumas county, California, thus becoming one of the early Argonauts to the Golden State. Here, for a period of three years, he followed mining, prospecting and farming, and then went back to Chicago. Between 1856 and 1876 Mr. Tate divided his time between Chicago and California, and was, also, four months in the Willamette valley. In 1876 he was induced to settle in Nebraska, in York county, but the immense and devastating swarms of grasshoppers there drove him out of the country, and he returned to Chicago. Remaining there a few months he went back to California and for three years was in San Luis Obispo county. Thence he came to Sherman county. This was in 1886, and he located the place where he and his son, Worth A., reside. Here he secured half a section of land, and purchased more from the railroad company. He had at the time a small capital and with this he improved the place, occasionally working out. He now possesses a section of fine land, practically all tillable.

At Chicago, in 1859, our subject was united in marriage to Elizabeth Steele, born in Joliet, Illinois. She is the daughter of Hugh and Mary A. (Cole) Steele, both natives of Ireland. They emigrated at first to Canada, and later to Illinois. Her father was a stone mason by trade.

Our subject, William Tate, has two brothers and two sisters; Alexander and Frank, in San Luis Obispo, California; Mary, widow of E. D. Hosselkoss, late of Plumas county, California; and Elizabeth, widow of Wilson Reed, residing near our subject. Mrs. Tate has one brother and one sister living; Charles Steele, of Chicago; and Jane, widow of Richard Thompson, also of Chicago. Our subject has four boys and one girl; Walter, a carpenter in Wasco; Ernest, postmaster of Wasco; Frank, in Chicago; Worth A., at home; and Mollie, single, living in Chicago.

Both Mr. and Mrs. Tate were reared in the Presbyterian faith. Politically, he is a Republican, although by no means a strong partisan worker.

CORNELIUS D. O'LEARY resides about six miles east of Grass Valley, where he rents an estate of sixteen hundred acres. He owns about thirty head of horses and seven head of mules, all good graded stock, and is one of the leading wheat producers of the county. In addition to this, Mr. O'Leary owns and operates a large steam threshing outfit, being especially skillful in that line of enterprise. He was born in Michigan, on May 2, 1866. Dennis O'Leary, his father, was born in county Cork, Ireland. He received a splendid education and then came to the United States to seek his fortune. His father, the grandfather of our subject, was a large land owner and Dennis was a younger son and began life for himself when he landed in Michigan and took up logging. He was more or less engaged in that business until his death on February 25, 1885, at Lapier, Michigan. He was then aged fifty-six and met his death by being crushed under a fallen tree. He had become influential and well-to-do and was known far and near as a devout Catholic and an excellent man. Upon his death, the estate dwindled down and in 1888, his widow, Elizabeth (Wilson) O'Leary, a native of New York, died. Our subject began working for himself when sixteen and followed lumbering until twenty-four. Then he came to Oregon and remained in Portland and Seattle, about two years. In 1891, he came to Sherman county, without capital, and worked out for several years. In 1896, he took a homestead and bought a quarter section and remained on the same for three years, raising sheep. Then he sold the entire property and rents the estate above mentioned.

On December 11, 1902, at The Dalles, Oregon, Mr. O'Leary married Bertha Sigman, the daughter of Richard Sigman, who is mentioned elsewhere in this work. Our subject has two brothers; William, near Boise, Idaho; Frank, in Lapier, Michigan; and one sister, Ellen, the wife of John Conrad, in Flint, Michigan. Our subject's mother was of Scotch ancestry and married in Lapier, Michigan, where also she died. To Mr. and Mrs. O'Leary one child has been born, Margaret Ellen. Mr. O'Leary is a very active man in political matters and is allied with the Democratic party. He has been a delegate to every county convention since coming here, and for eight years was on the state central committee. He has also been a delegate to three state conventions, and is as active as his business will permit. Although keenly interested in this realm, he never aspires to office, but has labored constantly for others. Mr. O'Leary personally is a genial, public-spirited man, generous and progressive. His qualities have won him many friends and he stands among the prominent farmers of the community today.

WORTH A. TATE, the son of William Tate, a biographical sketch of whom appears in another column, resides on and conducts his father's ranch, which he rents. He is a native of Illinois, having been born in Chicago, February 17, 1872. In the excellent graded schools of Chicago and San Luis Obispo he received a substantial education to which he has added by extensive reading. He went to San Luis Obispo at the age of eleven years, remained three years and then came to Sherman county with his family. Continuing here until 1890 he sought employment in the lumber woods of Hood River where he was engaged three years. The following four years were passed in Chicago in the organ-making business with his brother, Walter. In the fall of 1897 Mr. Tate returned to Sherman county and commenced earnestly the conduct of his father's extensive ranch where he has remained since.

The fraternal affiliations of our subject are with Sherman Lodge, No. 157, I. O. O. F., and the K. O. T. M., of Chicago. Politically he is a Republican, but not particularly active. He is a young man of sterling principles and numbers many friends in a wide circle of acquaintances.

ORSINIUS H. RICH, a prosperous Sherman county farmer, residing one and one-half miles north of Wasco, was born in Iowa, September 5, 1860. His father, Liberty J. Rich, was a farmer and a native of Michigan. He died when our subject was a child, and was a member of the distinguished Rich family of the United States who hold yearly reunions. His father, Andrew Rich, served in the Revolutionary war. Liberty J. Rich was, during the Civil war, a member of the Thirteenth Iowa Infantry. He enlisted three times before he was accepted. The second year of his service in the army he was taken ill, came home and died. The mother of our subject died in 1901, at North Yakima, Washington.

Until he was seventeen years of age our subject lived in Iowa. Thence he went to Kansas where he learned the butcher's trade. In 1890 he went, with his family, to Washington, locating at Centerville, Klickitat county. Here he engaged in the meat business, remaining there six years. He bought and sold cattle and land. He had arrived with a capital of only five dollars, but had been eminently successful financially. Disposing of his interests he went to North Yakima, again engaging in the meat business for one year; thence he came to Sherman county, January, 1902, and purchased the old Jesse Eaton ranch, one and one-half miles from Wasco, a half section. This is the oldest piece of farming property in the county, and was the first stage station.

Mr. Rich was married in Smith county, Kansas, to Miss Ettie Barnes, a native of Iowa. She is the daughter of Cheslev and Ruth (Blaine) Barnes, both natives of Ohio. The father is a descendant of the old Barnes family which for many generations has been known in the United States. The mother was a member of the distinguished Blaine family of which Hon. James G. Blaine was a brilliant light.

Our subject has one brother, Eles A., a fruit grower near North Yakima. Mrs. Rich has six brothers and three sisters; Jackson, of Smith Center, Kansas; William H., of Medical Lake, Washington; Wilson M., living in Smith county, Kansas; James M., a resident of Dewey county, Oklahoma; Burt and Elmer, of the same locality; Lucinda, wife of Frank Zimmerman, of Oklahoma; Sylvia, wife of Michael Zimmerman, a farmer near White Salmon, Washington; Bessie, wife of Angus Dennitt, of Oklahoma. Mr. and Mrs. Rich have four children, Leroy, Opal, Zettie and Pardee. Our subject is a member of Sherman Lodge, No. 157, I. O. O. F., and the W. W., of which he is past council commander. His political affiliations are with the Prohibition party of which he is an active member. His home is rich in historical interest, and finely shaded with a stately row of poplars fifty years old. In early pioneer days the United States mail was robbed near the site of his residence. This was, probably, the first frame house ever erected in the county. Mr. Rich is a progressive, liberal-spirited business man and an influential citizen. He and his estimable wife are members of the Christian church, and are highly esteemed in the community.

CHARLIE F. FRENCH resides at Grass Valley and was born in Michigan, on July 21, 1864. His father was Ransome E. French, a native of Essex county, New York, and he married Cordelia Heath. Our subject was raised in Michigan, Ohio and Kentucky until eighteen, and obtained his education in the district schools of those various places. He assisted his father in general merchandising and also learned the jeweler's trade. When the family came west in 1884, he accompanied them and worked with his father on the land taken in this county. In Wasco, when twenty-one years of age, Mr. French married Catherine Clement, a native of Iowa. Her father, Alfred E., was born in England, and came to Colorado when he was small. He married Miss Hodges. After marriage, our subject farmed for himself some and also took a homestead. He bought railroad land and handled the entire estate until 1903, when he sold it. He now owns a house and six acres in Grass Valley and gives his attention to the jewelry business a portion of his time. In addition to this, he owns and operates the largest steam threshing outfit in Sherman county. It is a first-class outfit and is operated by an engine of twenty horse power. Mr. French has three brothers, Leroy R., Frank, and Johnnie. He also has two sisters, Lucy, the wife of F. G. Howard, a nephew of General O. O. Howard, of Civil war fame, and Eva, wife of Frank Butz, of Ashtabula, Ohio. Mr. French belongs to the I. O. O. F., the Encampment and the Elks. He is a Republican in politics, although not especially active, and is now serving his second term as constable of district number four. His ancestors on his father's side were Welsh people, and on his mother's English. They are both old, American families. Mr. French is a progressive, industrious man, and is well known throughout the country.

HERMAN H. HUCK, whose parents are mentioned elsewhere in this work with the family history, was born in Solano county, California, on July 29, 1880. His life was spent up to his majority with his father and his education was received in the various places where the family lived. On June 15, 1903, Mr. Huck married Nina R. Davis, a native of Nebraska and then they began life for themselves, renting the farm known as the Eaton place, where they reside at the present time. Mr. Huck is giving his attention to the conduct of this estate and is manifesting himself a skillful and industrious farmer. Mrs. Huck's parents are Charles W. and Lizzie Davis and now reside in Portland, the father being a mechanic. The brothers and sisters of Mrs. Huck are William, in California; James, in Portland; John, at home; Dean, in Nebraska; Unita, Ethel, Myrtle, Edna and Stella, all at home.

Politically, our subject is a well informed Republican and takes the interest that becomes every good citizen in this realm. He is one of the good men of Sherman county and bids fair to make one of its leading and substantial citizens and now has hosts of friends.

EVERETT SINK, one of the leading and influential citizens of Sherman county, resides on an extensive farm three miles northwest of Wasco. He was born in Illinois, February 23, 1867. The parents of Mr. Sink are fully mentioned in the biographical sketch of his brother, George.

When our subject was about the age of eight years the family removed to the Wilamette valley, and here he attended district schools, acquiring a good business education, and worked on the farm with his father. At the age of twenty years he faced the world for himself; located in Sherman county; worked out for a period and finally took a homestead. He purchased and rented more land and now owns 1,600 acres.

At The Dalles, May 20, 1901, our subject was joined in marriage to Hester Hardin, a native of North Carolina, the daughter of Irdelle P. and Mary E. (McGheyhey) Hardin. At present they reside in Sherman county on the John Day river. Mrs. Sink has four brothers living and four sisters: Sylvester, a merchant in Morrow county; Weldon, of Sherman county; Millis, and John, both of Sherman county; Alice, Minnie, Calender and Ida, all single and living at home. Mr. Sink is a member of Wasco Lodge No. 83, I. O. O. F., and the A. O. U. W., of Wasco. They have one child, Leota, an infant. Politically, Mr. Sink is a Republican, although not especially active in campaign work. He is a progressive, broad-minded and liberal citizen, and one who manifests a deep interest in the welfare of the community in which he resides. Numbering a wide circle of friends and acquaintances throughout the county and state he is popular with all and the family is highly esteemed.

The parents of our subject were natives of North Carolina where they grew to man and womanhood, and were also married in that state. Our subject's mother's maiden name was Lozina Thomas, her parents were farmers and one of the early American settlers of that state. Mr. Sink has two brothers and two sisters, George P., of Spokane, Washington; Thomas E., a successful farmer and neighbor of our subject; Mary, wife of Charles Belcher, in California; Jennie, wife of Charles Chandler, of Portland, Oregon.

HON. JOHN FULTON, a prominent agriculturist and leading citizen of Sherman county, resides some nine miles west of the town of Wasco, where he owns a magnificent estate of over two thousand acres and one of the most beautiful rural abodes of the county. He is a native Oregonian, having been born in Yamhill county, on May 24, 1852. His parents were Colonel James and Priscilla (Wells) Fulton, and are mentioned in this volume.

In 1857 the family came east of the Cascades, and since then John Fulton has spent his life largely in this part of Oregon. After studying in the country schools and at The Dalles, Mr. Fulton entered Whitman college, of Walla Walla, Washington, the historic character, C. C. Eels, being then principal of the college. The Reverend Chamberlin, well known among the early pioneers, was the first principal of the college. After completing his education at Whitman College, our subject remained with his father until 1878, when he commenced farming, taking up a timber culture and preemption, where he now resides. Later, he bought land until he has the amount mentioned, which is largely rented. Mr. Fulton handles some stock, wintering about fifty head of cattle, and raises some hogs. He is one of the prosperous and thrifty men of the county, and financially, has made a splendid success. In his other lines of endeavor, he has not fallen one whit behind this and he has certainly done a lion's share in developing and forwarding the interests of the county.

On November 12, 1878, at Rockland, Washington, Mr. Fulton married Britania Gilmore, who was born in Yamhill county, Oregon, on July 16, 1855. Her father, Samuel W. Gilmore, a native of Tennessee, comes from the old colonial family of Gilmores, and crossed the plains with horses and mules in 1843. He settled on a donation claim in Yamhill county and there gave attention to farming and stock-raising. He was one of the organizers of the territorial government and a man of influence and prominence both in politics and business circles. He married Ann Stevenson, a native of Kentucky and descended from an old pioneer family. She lives at Rockland, while her husband died in 1893, aged seventy-eight and is buried at Wasco.

In 1880, our subject was elected county surveyor of Wasco county and served six years. In 1892, he was elected judge of Sherman county and served twelve years. Politically, he is a Democrat and has been many times delegate to the state and county conventions. Mr. Fulton is a man of wisdom and sound judgment, has labored assiduously not only for the success in business life that he has achieved, but in every department for the building up of the country and making known and developing its resources. He has hosts of friends throughout this part of the state and is highly esteemed and respected by all.

Mr. Fulton has three sisters and three brothers, named as follows: James, residing in Wasco county; David and Frank, prominent farmers of Sherman county; Lucy, widow of H. P. Isaacs, residing in Walla Walla, Washington; Elizabeth, wife of Louis Scholl, of Walla Walla, Washington; and Miss Annie, who is mentioned elsewhere in this volume.

IRA F. HILL owns an estate of five hundred and sixty acres about four miles north from Wasco in Sherman county, which is improved in splendid shape and annually produces excellent dividends in crops. Mr. Hill is one of the thrifty and energetic farmers of this part of the county, has resided here steadily since coming and is reaping the reward of his wise industry and integrity. In addition to doing general farming, he raises blooded horses, Clydes, and is meeting with good success in this line as well. He was born in Iowa, on March 31, 1862, the son of George W. and Ruth (Orm) Hill, natives of Ohio, where they were married. They were descended from old American families, and after marriage, moved west to Kansas, where they now reside on their farm of three hundred and twenty acres. Our subject was raised in Iowa until eight, then went with the family to Kansas and completed his education in the district schools. He remained with his father on the farm until twenty-two, then bought eighty acres and did diversified farming there for nine or ten years. Then he determined to come west and selected Sherman county as the objective point. He bought a place near Klondyke and later sold it and purchased his present farm. He is a man who works on the motto that, "What is worth doing, is worth doing well," and the result is that everything about his estate shows thrift and care. In addition to this, Mr. and Mrs. Hill have so conducted themselves in life that every one confides in them and esteems them for their integrity and their stanch principles.

On November 16, 1885, in Lincoln county, Kansas, Mr. Hill married Mary Vanderlinden, a native of Kansas. Her parents, Luke and Hulda Vanderlinden, were born in Holland and there married. The father died in Iowa. The children born to Mr. and Mrs. Hill are Herbert, Guy, Chester, Fay D., and Daisy, all at home. Mr. Hill has the following named brothers and sisters: John, in Oklahoma territory; Charles, in Idaho; George, in Colorado; Frank, in Lincoln, Kansas; N. Raymond, in Kendrick, Idaho; Alice, wife of Stephen Knowles, in Kansas; D. Sophia, wife of Elmer Phillips, in Kansas. Mrs. Hill has five brothers and two sisters: Luke, in Kansas; Henry, in Missouri; Gove, in Lynden, Washington; William, in Minnesota; John, deceased; Lizzie, wife of William Von Steenberg, in Sioux county, Iowa; and Dena, wife of E. C. Cochran, in Sherman county, Oregon.

Mr. Hill is a member of the I. O. O. F., and in political matters is independent. He and his wife are members of the United Brethren church, and in 1904 were delegates to the conference. They are ardent laborers for the spreading of the gospel and for the promotion of those principles of truth and uprightness for which they stand.

DAVID S. YOUNG, one of the popular agriculturists of Sherman county, resides two miles south from Wasco and was born in Lafayette county, Missouri, on February 10, 1869. His father, Theodore A. Young, was a native of Tennessee and his parents of Massachusetts, being descendants of the old colonial Young family, many of whom are prominent at the bench and bar and in commercial lines in New England. The father married Margaret Martin, a native of Virginia and descended from an old colonial family. Our subject was raised in Missouri until nineteen, where also he received his education from the common schools, remaining with his parents on the farm. Then, with his brother, John, and sister, Rose, he came to Arlington, Oregon. Shortly afterwards, they settled west of Bickleton, in Washington, and four months later, David S. went to the Willamette valley. He wrought for wages there for two years, then came to Sherman county and engaged in the same capacity for two years. After that, he rented land and now is cultivating two sections. In June, 1904, he bought five hundred and sixty acres, four miles from Dufur, on Fifteenmile creek, which he rents. He expects to make his home upon this when his lease expires where he now resides. Mr. Young is a prosperous and thrifty farmer and is one of the leading grain raisers of this part of the county.

On January 26, 1896, Mr. Young married Jennie Madden at the residence of her grandparents. She was born near Dixon, California, the daughter of Benjamin and Augustine (Lambarn) Madden, both of whom are now deceased. Our subject has one brother, John, at Elgin, Oregon, and one sister, Rose, wife of William D. Blair, a farmer of Elgin, Oregon. To Mr. and Mrs. Young one child has been born, Theodore R., aged seven.

Mr. Young is a member of the K. P., being past C. C., and also having been a delegate three times to the grand lodge. He belongs to the W. W., and in politics is a Democrat. He is active and is frequently a delegate to the county conventions. Mr. Young is a popular man, has many friends and stands well in the community.

W. ALEXANDER MURCHIE, who resides one mile west from Wasco and gives his attention to farming, was born in Nevada county, California, on August 27, 1858. Andrew Murchie, his father, was a native of Maine and his parents of the same country, being of Scotch descent. He came to California in 1854 and followed farming and mining until 1880, when he came to Sherman county. He married Mary Nesbitt, a native of Maine, where also her parents were born, being descendants of an old colonial family. Our subject was reared in Nevada City, California, and completed his education in the high school. Then he went to work for his father in the quartz mill and in the mines owned by his grandfather and two uncles until twenty-one. In 1880, he came to this part of Oregon and took a preemption and later a homestead. In 1881, he put forty acres into wheat, being among the first to raise that cereal here. Now he owns a section of fine land, a handsome residence, beautified by shade trees, with plenty of stock and improvements. He came here without capital and his entire property holdings are the result of his industry in Sherman county.

On November 15, 1885, at The Dalles, Mr. Murchie married Lilly M. Andrews and to them one child has been born, Ruth B., on May 21, 1892. Mr. Murchie has the following named brothers and sisters: John M., a liveryman; Harry T., a baker; Marcello A., a commercial traveler; Melvin, and Burt, liverymen; Frank, a horse dealer in Coulee City, Washington; Addie, wife of Arthur Knight, a wheat buyer of Pendleton.

Fraternally, Mr. Murchie is connected with the A. O. U. W., and in politics is an active Republican. He has attended nearly every county convention since coming here, and is a man who labors hard for the forwarding of those principles which he believes to be right. When our subject's father came here, he took up land and also bought more. He had previously met with reverses in California, having lost his stamp mill by fire, and four of his men being burned to death. His death occurred on March 8, 1896. Our subject's uncles, Skeffington T. and William H., are now part owners of the mine previously owned by our subject's father, and are prominent and influential men in California. Mr. and Mrs. Murchie are popular and genial people and are to be numbered among the most substantial residents of this part of the state.

CARL PEETZ, a retired farmer of Sherman county, is now living at Moro. He was born in Schleswig-Holstein, Germany, as were also his parents, Otto and Lena (Lock) Peetz. The date of his nativity was November 12, 1831. The father followed farming and died in his native place in 1897. The mother's death had occurred there in 1863. Our subject was educated in the public schools and remained on the farm with his father until 1861, when he enlisted in the Schleswig-Holstein army. During 1863-64, he was in active service in the war with Denmark and received a wound in his arm. He served in all, three years and two months. After his honorable discharge, he returned home and purchased a farm, conducting the same for five or six years. In 1876, having sold his property, he came to the United States, and the first six months were spent in Iowa. Then he took a homestead in Massachusetts where he remained for seven years. He did well until the grasshoppers came, working winters on the railroad and farming in the summers, but these pests nearly ruined him financially. Selling his holdings for enough to bring the family west, he came to Puget Sound where he lived for thirteen years. Having procured land on the Snoqualmie river, he suffered the loss of everything by two overflows and he was left in much the same condition as in Minnesota. Finally he landed in Sherman county with two horses, a wagon and a plow and a little cash. He purchased a half section of land from the government, paying four hundred dollars in cash. He improved the same with a good residence, barns, outbuildings, orchard and so forth, and then the military land company claimed the property and took it from him. He lost the land and the government still has his four hundred dollars. Then he bought three-fourths of a section again and made a new start. He finally purchased the half section place back again from the land company, paying ten dollars per acre for it. Recently Mr. Peetz sold his farm to his son Louie, who is mentioned elsewhere in this volume. This move was induced both because Mr. Peetz had acquired a fine competence for use in the later years of his life and because he was so afflicted with rheumatism as to render active life impracticable.

In October, 1865, while still in Germany, our subject married Katrina Schacht, a native of Schleswig-Holstein. Mr. Peetz has one brother, Hans, living in the suburbs of Chicago, and three sisters: Lottie, wife of George Goodchart; Marguerite, wife of Carl Rath; and Christina, the widow of Mr. Marquott, all in Schleswig-Holstein, Germany. To Mr. and Mrs. Peetz seven children have been born, named as follows: Otto H., county assessor and mentioned elsewhere in this volume; Louie L., a farmer, mentioned elsewhere; Fred, with Louie on the farm; Benjamin, deputy sheriff of Sherman county, mentioned elsewhere; Lena, wife of Mr. Messenger, of Klondyke, Sherman county; Emma, at home; Annie, wife of Mr. Montgomery.

Mr. Peetz is a member of the I. O. O. F., and in politics is a staunch and active Republican. For four years he was road supervisor. For ten years he was on the election board, being judge and chairman; for two terms he was school director, and for eight years he was constable in King county, Washington. Our subject and his wife are both members of the Lutheran church.

He owns a comfortable cottage in Moro, which is the family home. Mr. Peetz has been a very active and successful business man, despite the reverses he has met, and deserves great credit for the labors he has performed.

RUFUS C. WALLIS, promoter of the town of Rufus and owner of the townsite and waterworks, was born in Knoxville, Tennessee, on June 11, 1837, the son of Allen and Ann (Sargent) Wallis, natives of Minnesota and early pioneers in Missouri. The family, for several generations back, were builders and people of wealth. Our subject was reared in Missouri, whence the family went when he was four years of age. He came to Oregon in the fall of 1862 and settled in Klickitat county, Washington, engaging in the cattle and sheep business. He also planted several ranches to fruit there. In 1884, he moved to where Rufus now is and started a ferry boat and warehouse. He was backed by Finch & Company, of The Dalles, and commenced buying wheat, which he continued at for thirteen years. At one time, it was said he was the second largest individual wheat shipper on record. Then he sold his ferry and the warehouse, but still owns considerable other property at Rufus.

On February 21, 1866, Mr. Wallis married Mary Bergin, who was born in Missouri, the daughter of John Bergin, a native of Virginia. She was born in 1849 and came west to The Dalles with her parents in 1859. It is interesting to note that at that time, owing to the scarcity of provisions, flour was eighty dollars per sack. Mr. Wallis has one brother, also one sister, Jane, the wife of William H. Hale, retired, at Goldendale, Washington. Mrs. Wallis has the following named brothers and sisters: William, residing at Goldendale, and three times sheriff of Klickitat county; Thomas and Oscar, farmers in the Big Bend country, Washington; Newton, living with his mother in Klickitat county, having the distinction of being the first white child born in the Klickitat valley; Jane, the wife of William Thompson, living in Washington; Nancy, the wife of John Graham, in Klickitat county; Lydia, the wife of Frank Branton, who operates Mrs. Branton's farm of three hundred and eighty acres; Emmie, the wife of Mr. Baker, in Idaho; William A., a clerk in Portland; Rufus A. and Harry E., in Gilliam county; Charles W., in Dawson; George at Rufus; Ida M., the wife of John A. Foister, at Rufus; and Josephine, the wife of Robert Haley, of Rufus.

Politically, Mr. Wallis is a Democrat and has served in the county and state conventions. He was an ardent laborer for building up this western country and is known far and near and has many friends.

WILLIAM OEHRMAN, who was born on March 2, 1870, in Connersville, Indiana, is now residing six miles southeast from Rufus, on the magnificent estate of twelve hundred and eighty acres, all of which he has cleared through his industry and thrift since coming to Sherman county. His parents, Frank and Rachel (Rickenheiser) Oehman, are natives of Baden, Germany, and Kentucky, respectively. The father came to the United States with his parents when eighteen years of age. They settled first in Ohio then moved to Indiana, where he was married. The mother is of German ancestry, and when our subject was two years of age the family came from Indiana to Wabaunsee county, Kansas, where the father purchased land. The parents still live there, the owner of a section of valuable land and are influential and highly respected people. Our subject was educated in the common schools and remained with his father until fourteen, when he started to work for himself, operating on the railroad and levees in Missouri and Mississippi. Four years later he went to Colorado, then to Wyoming and wrought at various work, mostly at the stonemason's trade, which he had acquired in his work previously. When nineteen years of age he came to Portland and worked in the logging camps of Oregon and Washington for two years.

About 1891 he came to Sherman county and worked out in the harvest field and at other employments for six months. Having saved up two hundred and fifty dollars in earnings, he finally decided to purchase a quarter section and the relinquishment to a homestead, which he did, paying four hundred dollars therefor. It was a splendid half section, but owing to the fact that he had no money to improve it, he still had to work out until he could get stock. He soon began to prosper and bought other land until he now has the twelve hundred and eighty acres mentioned. He has thirty head of fine horses, graded Clydes, nearly all of which he has raised, besides some other stock. His place is well improved and is productive of excellent returns each year. Mr. Oehman is still outside of the matrimonial bonds, yet he is a very popular young man.

He has three brothers, John, Charles and Frank, and two sisters, Annie, wife of Ralph Thompson, a barber at Wamego, Kansas, and Lizzie, wife of Charles Kuypers, a barber at Alma, Kansas.

Politically, Mr. Oehman is a Democrat and is frequently delegate to the conventions. At the present time he is filling the office of constable. He has certainly made a splendid success in his efforts in the west and stands one of the leading farmers of Sherman county today.

GEORGE A. MELOY, a well-known and successful farmer of Sherman county, residing one and one-half miles southeast of Monkland, was born in Juniata county, Pennsylvania, November 24, 1862, the son of Everett O. and Polly M. (Martz) Meloy, both natives of Pennsylvania. The parents of the father were natives of the Keystone State, but their ancestors were from Ireland. Everett O. served in the home guards during the entire Civil war. He is a contractor, builder and farmer, now living in Callaway county, Missouri. He is a member of the United Presbyterian church. The mother is of Pennsylvania Dutch stock, and now lives with the family in Missouri.

Until he was seven years of age our subject was reared in the state of Pennsylvania, educated in the district schools, and when nineteen years of age came to The Dalles, Oregon, remaining there only a short period. He was then for three months in Union county, and the following four years were passed in the employment of A. A. Bonney, of Tygh Valley, mentioned elsewhere. Thence he came to Sherman county, where he engaged in raising cattle and horses, about two years. Returning to Tygh Valley he conducted a blacksmith shop for four years. Then he rented the old McAtee place and purchased land adjoining Bonney's property, four hundred acres, and attended both farms industriously, at the same time running the blacksmith shop. Disposing of his interests there he came to Sherman county in the spring of 1899, where he rented the Hugh McIntyre place for a period of five years. During this time he purchased land and at one period he owned five and one-quarter sections. He disposed of some of this and now has eight hundred acres. Mr. Meloy has thirty head of horses, a commodious five-room cottage with a fine water system from a spring piped to his home and barn.

At the residence of the bride's parents, November 24, 1894, our subject was married to Nellie M. Elliott, born in Benton county, Oregon. She is the daughter of Joshua H. and Emma Elliott, the father a native of Illinois; the mother of Iowa. Joshua H. Elliott came to Oregon about the year 1876, and first settled in Benton county. In 1886 he removed to Sherman county. At present he is a prominent agriculturist, and owns six hundred and forty acres of land. Emma Elliott, the mother of our subject, is a sister of Mrs. Alexander Nish, mentioned elsewhere.

Our subject has two brothers and two sisters; Thomas T., of Missouri; William, on the old home place in that state; Annie, wife of Thomas Herring, a farmer and stock-raiser of Callaway county, Missouri; Sallie, wife of Benjamin Rice, of the same county. Mr. and Mrs. Meloy have three children living: George E., aged seven; Lulu, aged five; and Katie, aged four. Ruth, their first child, born in November, 1895, died February 26, 1896.

The fraternal affiliations of our subject are with the I. O. O. F. Lodge, No. 113 and the A. F. & A. M., both of Moro. He is a Republican politically, and has frequently served as delegate to county conventions in Wasco and Sherman counties, in both of which counties he has been road supervisor. At present he is school director. He and his estimable wife are both members of the Methodist church.

GEORGE HENNAGIN, one of the successful Sherman county farmers, living six miles southeast of Moro, was born May 19, 1875, in Yolo county, California, the son of Henry and Ruth Hennagin, the former a native of New York; the latter of Canada. The mother died when our subject was a small boy. The father lives near his son in Sherman county.

Until the latter was five or six years old he was reared in California, and then his family removed to Crook county, Oregon. Here the father worked out for three years, thence coming to Sherman county. Our subject attended the public schools of his neighborhood, and subsequently worked for nine years for Milton Damon. He then purchased the place on which he now lives, one-quarter section, subsequently adding another quarter. Mr. Hennagin owns a one-half interest in a combined harvester in company with John Christensen.

October 25, 1897, at The Dalles, he was united in marriage to Miss Daisy Fuller, born in Iowa December 16, 1882. She is the daughter of Benjamin F. and Emma Fuller, the father a native of Iowa, now living at Chenoweth, Washington. Our subject has two full brothers, three sisters, two half-brothers, and one half-sister: Fred, in Sherman county; Albert, in Portland; Daisy, wife of John Christensen; Bessie, wife of John Johnson; Evie, wife of William Rudolph, manager of a warehouse in Kent; Frank and Homer, at home with their parents; and Maggie, also living at home. Mrs. Hennagin has two brothers and six sisters: David, at Elgin, Oregon; Alfred, with his father at White Salmon; Della, wife of Charles Tubbs, of Chenoweth, Washington; Mattie, wife of John Forbes, of Hood River; Bertha, wife of Abraham Mitchell, of Hood River; Cora, wife of Louis Isenberb; Blanche, wife of Frederick Kautz, a sawmill man, of Hood River; Maude, single and living with her parents at Chenoweth, Washington.

Two children have been born to Mr. and Mrs. Hennagin, Lotus, aged six, and Pearl, aged two. Our subject, fraternally, is a member of the Masons and the W. O. T. W. Politically, he is a Republican.

GEORGE E. WALLIS, of the firm of Wallis & Venable, proprietors of the "Little Brown Jug" saloon at Rufus, Sherman county, is a Washingtonian by birth, having been born in Klickitat county, June 2, 1882, the son of Rufus C. and Mary (Bergin) Wallis, the former a native of Tennessee; the mother of Missouri, both of whom are mentioned elsewhere in this work.

The parents of our subject came to Sherman county when he was about five years of age. Here he attended district school and assisted his father at home in Rufus. Practically he has resided here all his life, with the exception of a few months in western Washington and Idaho. In October, 1903, he engaged in his present business enterprise, later selling a half interest to J. R. Venable, mentioned elsewhere. He previously conducted the Rufus Hotel a trifle over a year.

At Moro, in February, 1903, our subject was united in marriage to Miss Minnie Blackburne, born at The Dalles. She is the daughter of William and Clara (Hill) Blackburne, the father a native of Ireland; the mother of England. They now live at Grant, Sherman county. They were married in England. The mother is a descendant of a well-to-do family who afforded her every opportunity for the acquirement of a superior education which she improved to the best advantage. Her father was educated in the Scottish high schools, and was graduated from the University of Glasgow, and practiced law in Scotland. The parents of our subject's wife came to the United States, and, having ample means, toured the country for a number of years. Finally he located in San Francisco, where, for a while, he conducted a hotel. In this unfortunate enterprise he lost all his money, and subsequently went to The Dalles. In 1874 he engaged in the lumber business, and later was in the employment of James Peters, elsewhere mentioned. He, also, for some time, handled lumber at Cascade Locks, Wasco county. A portion of ten years he was at Grant on his homestead, where he made a specialty of poultry raising. He was the first judge of Sherman county, and for several years was justice of the peace.

Our subject's maternal grandmother, Susanne Bergin (Simpson), was born in Indianapolis, Indiana. Her father, John, was a native of Virginia; her mother, Sallie (Crabb), was, also, a native of Virginia. Their fathers were in the war of the Revolution, and Susanne Bergin has a powder horn that was carried by one of them. She married in Missouri, in 1844, John S. Bergin. They crossed the plains with ox teams in 1852, accompanied by three children. They located in the Willamette Valley, eight miles from Salem. In December, 1859, they removed to Klickitat county, Washington, and erected the first house in Klickitat Valley; it is still standing, a log structure. They reared stock and later engaged in general farming. She now lives on the same place. He died in December, 1900, on the home place aged seventy-five years.

Mr. and Mrs. Wallis have one child, Lynn R., born May 5, 1903. Mrs. Wallis has two brothers, George, living at Grant, and Albert E., with his parents. Politically Mr. Wallis is a Democrat. He is a progressive and broad-minded young man, patriotically interested in the welfare of his home community and popular among a wide circle of friends and acquaintances.

ALEXANDER NISH, one of the leading farmers of Sherman county, resides one-half mile east of Monkland. He was born in Scotland, February 15, 1847, the son of William and Grace (McKean) Nish, both natives of Scotland. The family came to the United States in 1852, and located in New York, removing to McHenry county, Illinois, where the mother died in 1890. The father passed from earth in 1898.

During the Civil war our subject enlisted in Company I, Ninety-fifth Illinois Infantry, Captain James Nish, brother of our subject's father. The regiment was commanded by Colonel Humphrey. He saw two years and one month of active service; was in the Red River campaign, the battle of Gunntown, Nashville, siege of Mobile, and many skirmishes. At the close of the war he went to Iowa where he purchased a farm. He is a member of Sherman Post, of the G. A. R., of Wasco. The name of our subject was, originally, McNish or MacNish, an old Highland family, but the uncle of our subject, who was a captain, enlisted under the name of Nish, which name was taken by Alexander and a brother, as their discharge from the army and our subject's naturalization papers were made out in the name of Nish. The father of Alexander took a deep interest in the war and was throughout a staunch union man, although he never took out naturalization papers. He contributed one brother and two sons to the war.

December 19, 1885, Alexander Nish was married, at Salem, Oregon, to Harriet Thompson, born May 28, 1859. She is the daughter of Charles W. Thompson, a native of Greene county, Illinois; his parents of Ohio. One of his brothers died during the Civil war from a fever contracted in the service. Charles W. could not enlist on account of deafness. Her mother was Delilah (Baxter) Thompson, a native of Pennsylvania; her mother and father of New York, descendants of an old American family. The parents removed to Iowa when she was about two years of age, and when she was seventeen they came to Oregon. For twelve years they resided in the Willamette valley, thence coming to Sherman county. Here the father secured land on which the town of Monkland now stands. He was a pioneer merchant and postmaster, and is now living in Los Angeles county, California, near Pasadena, a retired merchant. In 1883 Mrs. Nish came with her parents to Sherman county.

Our subject, Alexander Nish, purchased the farm of his wife's father, in Willamette valley. In December, 1895, she went back to Salem, where she married our subject. There they remained until April, 1891, when they came to Sherman county and subject filed on a homestead adjoining her father's land, and subsequently acquired a section of government and railroad land. Alexander Nish has three brothers and four sisters; Nathan, and John, Iowa farmers; David, in the fire department of Elgin, Illinois; Charlotte, single; Jane, wife of Robert Johnson, of Lake county, Illinois; Mary, wife of William Mullis, an Iowa farmer; and May, widow of Dr. Charles Cook, of Huntly, Illinois. Mrs. Nish has six brothers and three sisters; Andrew C., of Portland, who owns about one thousand two hundred acres of land near Monkland; James O., a farmer near Grass Valley; Nelson W., a farmer four and one-half miles from Moro; Ezra J., of Corvallis, Oregon; Owen, of Monkland; Burton, a carpenter and photographer at Corvallis; Emma, wife of Joshua H. Elliott, Monkland postoffice; Addie, wife of James Leslie, an Iowa farmer; Myra, widow of Milton Brown, of Monkland. Two children have blessed the union of Mr. and Mrs. Nish; Charles, aged seventeen, and Delilah, aged fourteen. The parents are both members of the Presbyterian church, as are the children. Mr. Nish is an elder and his estimable wife a teacher in the Sunday school. The family is highly esteemed in the community, and Mr. Nish is a popular, energetic man of sound business judgment, genial and courteous to all.

CORNELIUS J. BRIGHT, one of the most successful and prominent attorneys of Eastern Oregon, resides at Wasco, Sherman county. He was born in Bath county, Virginia, September 27, 1862, the son of Thomas M. and Martha J. (Anthony) Bright, both natives of Virginia. The ancestors of the father were English and German; those of the mother English. Thomas M. Bright was a farmer and carpenter, an influential citizen serving as justice of the peace and constable at different times and financially successful in life. He lives at Massillon, Cedar county, Iowa, practically retired. The Bright family is an old and distinguished one. Some of them served in the war of the Revolution. John Bright, born at Greenbank, Lancashire, England, November 16, 1811; died March 27, 1889. He was a famous English liberal statesman and orator and an author of world-wide repute. Richard Bright was a distinguished medical practitioner in England. In 1827 he published "Reports of Medical Cases" in which he traced to its source in the kidneys the morbid condition named for him, "Bright's disease." Jesse D. Bright was a Democratic United States senator from Indiana, from 1845 until 1862. The father of our subject, and an uncle served in the Civil war under General Imbotan, of the confederate army.

The family removed to Ohio when our subject was four years of age. Thence they went to Iowa where they remained until 1883. He laid the foundation of an excellent education in the district and graded schools in Fontanelle, Iowa. In 1883 Mr. Bright came to The Dalles where he taught school one year. He was then matriculated in the Wasco Independent Academy, from which he was graduated in 1886, with honors, and and having earned sufficient money to carry him through, with the strictest economy. Subsequently he taught school two years in Wasco county, Oregon. In the spring of 1888, he came to Wasco, Sherman county, where he taught two terms of school. In November, 1888, Mr. Bright began publishing the Wasco Observer, the first newspaper in what is now Sherman county. That fall the question of county division became a vital issue and our subject took an active and leading part in the campaign. Of the new county he was appointed school superintendent and served with ability until the July election of 1890.

Mr. Bright had commenced the study of law immediately after graduation. In October, 1890, he was admitted to the bar and established an office at Wasco. The first marriage of Mr. Bright occurred November 9, 1890, at Wasco, when he was united to Jeanette Murchie, a native of California, the daughter of Andrew and Mary A. Murchie. The father is dead; the mother lives in North Yakima, Washington. Mrs. Bright died at Wasco, February 27, 1892, from consumption, after an illness of a year's duration.

March 14, 1896, at Wasco, Mr. Bright was united in marriage to Jennie M. Larson, born at Alcona, Michigan. She is the daughter of Charles and Christina (Nelson) Larson, the father a native of Norway; the mother of Sweden. Charles Larson and his wife at present live in Yamhill county, Oregon.

Our subject has five brothers and one sister living; Charles S., a farmer near Alexandria, Nebraska; George W.; Ira J., a teacher in Emporia, Kansas; Asa T., at Massillon, Iowa; William T., of the same place, agent for the St. Paul & Milwaukee Railway Company; Clara B., wife of Lewis C. Savage, a farmer and stock-raiser near Little Falls, Minnesota. Five of his brothers have passed away, John P., Harry, Harvey, Arthur N., and an infant unnamed. Mary E., another sister, is dead. Mrs. Bright has one sister, Minnie, wife of Horace N. Aldrich, of Bridal Veil, Oregon.

Mr. and Mrs. Bright have two children; Lohren V. and Bernice. Fraternally he is a member of Aurora Lodge No. 54, K. of P., of which he is past chancellor and has on several occasions served as representative to the grand lodge; W. W., Wasco Camp, No. 350, of which he is past consul commander; the Rathbone Sisters, Mrs. Bright being a member of the same, and grand chief in the grand lodge of Oregon; past chief in the local lodge Lillian Temple No. 17. Mrs. Bright is prominent in Methodist Episcopal church work; has been organist ever since coming to Wasco. Both are members of that church, of which he is recording steward, leader of the choir and chorister in the Sunday school. He has been city attorney and for the past three years clerk of the school district. Politically he is a prominent Prohibitionist; has been county chairman for the last ten years; delegate to county and state conventions and was delegate from Oregon to the last Prohibition national convention at Indianapolis, Indiana. During several campaigns Mr. Bright has been the Prohibition candidate for congress, attorney general and supreme judge.

Mr. Bright is a man of pleasing personality, is a forceful and logical speaker, and an untiring student. He is conscientious in his labors for clients and is known as a man, to use the homely but expressive phrase, "one can tie to." He maintains an up-to-date and complete library, and judging from his past achievements in his profession, he has a bright and useful future before him.

JOHN A. FOISTER. The subject of this biographical sketch is an extensive stock-raiser, successful farmer and proprietor of the Model Saloon, in Rufus, Sherman county, Oregon, of which state he is a native, having been born in Linn county, November 17, 1867. His parents were born, the father in France; the mother in Ohio. Josiah Foister, the father, came to the United States while yet an infant, with his parents. They settled in St. Louis, Missouri. The mother, Mary (Ford) Foister, died when our subject was three years of age. Her mother was a native of Pennsylvania; her father of Ohio. The father of the latter was an early pioneer of Ohio and Illinois. At one period he owned an extensive farm where now stands the city of Chicago.

Our subject was reared by his maternal grandmother until he was fifteen years old, at which time she died in Polk county, Oregon. The death of our subject's mother occurred in Scio, Linn county. When sixteen years of age he began railroad work and followed the same until 1894, when he came to Sherman county, locating at Rufus and engaging in the saloon business. In 1901 he purchased three-quarters of a section of farming land which he rents. Annually he winters about one hundred head of cattle. He has two sisters living; Laura, wife of James Leffler, Stayton postoffice, Linn county; and Arilla, wife of Reuben A. Titus, a farmer in Gilliam county.

Politically our subject is a Republican, active in the successive campaigns, and frequently delegate to the county conventions of his party. For several years he has served as school director.

April 24, 1892, at Rufus, Mr. Foister was married to Ida M. Wallis, the daughter of R. C. and Mary Wallis, who are mentioned elsewhere in this volume.

Mr. and Mrs. Foister have two children, Robert P., aged ten years, and Maravine, a girl aged six years.

Josian Foister, the father of our subject, was for many years a prominent and influential citizen of Linn and Marion counties. He was a builder and contractor, and erected a number of fine buildings and bridges. He participated in the Indian wars of 1855 and 1856, and at present draws a pension as a non-commissioned officer. He lives at Scio, Linn county, on his farm, four miles from town. Our subject owns a fine house eligibly situated, and is a popular man socially, and successful financially.

ALFRED DILLINGER, postmaster and prominent business man of Monkland, Sherman county, was born in Greene county, Iowa, May 21, 1857. His parents were William and Nancy (Foster) Dillinger, both natives of Ohio. The father died on the farm in Iowa, in 1896; the mother in 1870. The paternal ancestors of William Dillinger were Dutch; those of the mother Scotch.

In Iowa our subject was reared and attended the district schools and worked with his father on the farm. At the age of eighteen years he went to the state of Indiana where he worked for farmers and rented land for three and one-half years, when he returned to Iowa and conducted his father's place four years. Thence he removed to The Dalles where he found employment in railroad shops and on the river for about three years, and then took up a claim seven miles southeast of the present site of Monkland. This was a quarter section. He had then small capital, but he has since purchased more land and now owns one thousand eight hundred acres in Sherman county. The first six years he conducted a stock ranch, and at present his land is all rented out.

In January, 1901, Mr. Dillinger entered into partnership with P. W. McDonald, of Wasco, and Hans Thompson, a farmer, living three and one-half mile east of Monkland. They purchased the business of N. P. Hansen—a general merchandise store at Monkland—and in February, 1902, Mr. Dillinger was appointed postmaster.

May 1, 1878, at Battle Ground, Indiana, our subject was united in marriage to Margaret Miller, a native of Indiana, the daughter of Abraham and Mary (Smith) Miller. The father of Mrs. Dillinger, a native of Ohio, died in Tippecanoe county, Indiana, in 1873. The mother passed away in Illinois, in 1881. Our subject has four brothers and two sisters; James W., an Iowa farmer, who served in the Civil war; William H., of Greene county, Iowa; John W., residing at The Dalles; Daniel; Eliza, wife of Norman Orchard, of Marshall, Iowa; and Rachel, wife of William M. Morrison, living four miles south of Monkland, a farmer. Mrs. Dillinger has one brother and one sister; William A., of Monkland; and Alice, wife of John Lucas, near The Dalles, a farmer. Mr. and Mrs. Dillinger have one child, Flora, wife of James R. Hunter, a farmer living near Rutledge, Sherman county. Mr. Dillinger is a member of the A. O. U. W. and his wife of the Methodist Episcopal church. He is a Republican and, although not active, has served as delegate to county conventions, and has been clerk of his school district two terms. Mr. Dillinger and his partners transact business under the name of the Hay Canyon Commercial Company, and carry a $10,000 stock of groceries, dry goods, hardware and farming implements. He is a popular man and influential citizen.

LEVI S. HINES, a large land owner and successful farmer of Sherman county, resides in the town of Wasco. He is a native Oregonian, having been born in Benton county, October 6, 1874, the son of Shelton and Salina (Pyburn) Hines, the father a native of Kentucky; the mother of Missouri. Shelton Hines died when our subject was one year old. The mother now lives eight miles east of Wasco, on her timber culture claim. In 1852 the mother became one of the early pioneers, crossing the plains with ox teams with a party of friends, her father being captain of the train. They were accompanied by the father of our subject, then about eighteen years of age. She was twelve. Oregon was at that time a territory. The couple grew to manhood and womanhood and were married in the Willamette valley. His father did not make the trip; he was killed in the Civil war. Her father died en route of the cholera. Salina Hines, our subject's mother, remained a widow, and continued to live on the home farm about seven years following her husband's death. Then she, with seven of her children, came to Sherman county. Her oldest boy was twenty. The mother had small capital when she came to Sherman county, in 1882. John Fulton was her nearest neighbor. The boys cultivated the homestead after the oldest one had taken a claim adjoining, when he became of age. The oldest single girl took another claim; the oldest daughter having come a year previous with her husband, John L. Burrell, now in Gilliam county.

Until he attained his majority our subject remained with his mother. He attended the district schools in Sherman county, and was one year in the public schools of Goldendale, Klickitat county, Washington. December 30, 1896, at Goldendale, he was united in marriage to Miss Mary D. Day, born near Scio, Linn county, Oregon, December 2, 1877. She is the daughter of Jacob and Henrietta (Richmond) Day, the father a native of Indiana; the mother of Illinois. At present her father and his wife reside two and one-half miles from Goldendale, where he is a gardener. Her parents removed to Iowa while she was a child and there she was reared.

Our subject has three brothers and five sisters living; Alfred, a mechanic in Portland; Eli M., a Sherman county farmer; William E., a Stockman in Gilliam county; Loretta, wife of John L. Burress, who assisted in the government survey of 1870, of a large portion of Wasco county, now residing near Condon, Gilliam county; Nancy, wife of Elias F. Truax, a farmer in Linn county; Ida, wife of William M. King, nine miles west of Wasco; Mary E., wife of Edward McMillen, a farmer near Wasco; and Katie, wife of Port Mitchell, a farmer near North Yakima, Washington. Mrs. Hines has two brothers and four sisters; John J., with his parents at Goldendale; Alonzo E., the same; Ida, wife of Frank Fenton, a farmer near Goldendale; Emma, wife of John Chapman, of Wasco; Mabel and Cecil, at home.

Mr. and Mrs. Hines have three children, Orville E., born January 10, 1898; Howard C., born September 29, 1900; and Llyod L., born December 12, 1902. Mr. Hines is a member of Sherman Lodge, No. 157, I. O. O. F., of Wasco. Politically he is a Republican. Mr. Hines owns a section of excellent land six miles west of Wasco, six town lots and two houses and barn in town. He has, also, a one thousand two hundred acre farm in Morrow county which property he rents. All of these holdings he has acquired by his own industry and business sagacity. He has twenty-five head of horses, five of which are standard-bred trotters. Altramont and Wilkes stock; a one-year-old thoroughbred registered Altramont mare, and one Hambletonian stallion. The rest of his equine stock are Percheron and Clyde draft horses.

In crossing the plains, our subject's father came as the driver for the father of his future wife. On the death of the latter's father, Shelton Hines, took charge of the train in his place. He was a prominent farmer in the Willamette valley; was industrious and prosperous. He had recently moved on a new homestead and lost nearly everything he had in the world through a flood which occurred just before his death, leaving his family with little means. In county affairs he took an active and patriotic part. Our subject worked for Judge Fulton when he was twelve years of age, and from him received the first money he earned in the county.

Since the above was written, Mr. Hines has sold his Morrow county farm to Daniel Pattie, of Sherman county, the deal being consummated January 31, 1905. Mr. Hines has purchased an acre lot in St. Johns, Oregon, and there he is erecting a fine, modern, ten-room residence. On March 5, 1905, he purchased eighteen hundred acres of land from Maley Brothers, of Ajax, Gilliam county, Oregon, together with two hundred and ninety head of cattle. The ranch is a stock and farm place combined, and under Mr. Hines' skillful management will return fine dividends.

JOSEPH F. BELSHEE, one of the leading farmers and energetic business men of Sherman county, resides three miles east of Monkland. He was born April 16, 1856, in Hancock county, Illinois, the son of Robert and Ellen (Smith) Belshee, both natives of Virginia, as were their parents. The parents of Robert Belshee were David and Eleanor Belshee, their ancestors of foreign birth, probably of Ireland. David lived in Virginia until he was thirty-two years of age, when he moved to Missouri, where he followed farming as he had in Virginia. He came to Oregon one year before his son. He, ninety years old June 1, 1905, is mentally bright, in excellent health and makes his home with our subject. The mother of our subject died in Hancock county, Illinois, October 13, 1875.

Until 1878 our subject was reared in Illinois where he attended the public schools and the high school at Warsaw, at intervals working on the farm with his father. The family came to Oregon together and our subject took up land, a quarter section, and purchased other land from the railroad company. He had no capital at first and rented land in the Willamette valley. He and his wife are members of the Methodist Episcopal church of which he is steward and trustee. Politically he is a Prohibitionist.

October 26, 1875, in Hancock county, Illinois, Mr. Belshee was united in marriage to Emma Bledsoe, a native of that county, born January 15, 1855. She is the daughter of Benjamin F. and Millie (Breedon) Bledsoe, the former a native of Indiana, the latter of Iowa. Benjamin F. Bledsoe was an early Illinois pioneer and assisted in driving the Indians from the territory, and, also, took an active part in the expulsion of the Mormons from Nauvoo, Illinois. He was the captain of the company, a farmer, dying January 22, 1871, on his farm in Hancock county. The maternal grandfather of Mrs. Belshee was a pioneer Methodist Episcopal preacher in Jackson county. The two brothers were ministers in the Methodist and Baptist churches. One of the brothers of the father of Mrs. Belshee was a preacher; the other a captain in the confederate army during the Civil war.

Our subject has one brother and one sister living; Charles H., a farmer near Woodland, California; and Causby, wife of John B. Gilbert, of Cleveland, Ohio. Mrs. Belshee, also, has one brother and one sister: Richard O., an Arkansas farmer; and Clarrissa, wife of Washington Gollifer, a farmer in Hancock county, Illinois. Mr. and Mrs. Belshee have the following named children: Robert W., a farmer; Wesley R., living three miles south of our subject; Charles R., a farmer; Howard B., Homer, a schoolboy, living at home; Benjamin F., also at home; Robert M., a grandchild, son of Robert W. and Jessie (Thompson), died November 10, 1901; Millie E., single, living at home; Clarrissa E., Cassie F., Jennie M., born in Sherman county, May 31, 1894, died June 4th, of the same year; Josie F., born June 5, 1888, died July 8, 1889, and Boyd, born February 22, 1897, died March 5th, of the same year.

ALBERT S. PORTER, superintendent of the Sandow Milling & Warehouse Company, Wasco, Sherman county, was born in Livingstone county, New York, February 19, 1855. He is a twin brother of "Dell" Porter, a sketch of whom appears in another portion of this work. His parents were Derrick and Jane (Shephard) Porter, mentioned elsewhere.

Our subject was reared on his father's farm in the county of his nativity, where he received a good business education in the public schools in his neighborhood. At the age of twenty-eight he went to Buffalo, New York, where he was in the employment of the Buffalo Lubricating Oil Company four years, having charge of the stills two years of this time. He was then associated with the Barber Asphalt Paving Company and three years subsequently with the Ball Brothers Glass Works. It was in 1893 that he came to Wasco where he has since resided. He owns a pleasant home in the town, a story and a half house surrounded by six acres of ground. During the past seven years he has been associated with the Sandow Flour Milling Company.

April 13, 1880, at Mount Morris, Livingstone county, New York, he was married to Miss Jennie R. Brinkerhoff, a native of that county. She is the daughter of Rev. J. G. and Maria (Van Horn) Brinkerhoff, both natives of New Jersey, the father a descendant of an old and prominent Knickerbocker family. For many years the father was a preacher in the Dutch Reformed church. The mother was, also, a member of a Knickerbocker family, and both families were prominent in New York commercial and professional circles.

Mrs. Porter, the estimable wife of our subject, has three sisters: Nettie, wife of Fayette Frayer, a farmer in Iowa; Mina, wife of Michael Clause, a broom manufacturer, near Schenectady, New York; Ida, wife of Jacob Essler, foreman of an extensive farm near Nunda, New York.

Mr. and Mrs. Porter have two children, girls, Grace, aged sixteen, and Alberta, aged twelve. Both our subject and his wife are devout and consistent members of the Methodist Episcopal church, of which he is trustee and Sunday school superintendent and his wife a teacher in the same. Politically, he is a Prohibitionist and for the past twelve years has been a delegate to all the county conventions of that party. At every election he has been a nominee for some office. Mr. Porter is a good, clean-minded, liberal and progressive citizen, popular with all and one who always has a good word for his neighbors and acquaintances.

ELWOOD THOMPSON, an enterprising, progressive farmer of Sherman county, Oregon, resides ten miles southeast of Moro. He was born in Illinois, January 18, 1861, the son of Isaac and Mary A. (Easley) Thompson, the father a native of Ohio, the mother of Illinois. During the entire Civil war Isaac Thompson, father of our subject, served in an Illinois regiment. While on the march near the close of the war he was severely injured. At present he resides three miles west of our subject. The parents of the mother, Mary A. (Easley) Thompson, were natives of Ohio.

It was in Fulton county, Illinois, that our subject was reared until he attained his majority. In the public schools of his vicinity he obtained a solid business education, and with his father worked on the farm and in the butcher business in Ipava, Fulton county. In 1882 he came to Oregon and at first located in the Willamette valley, where he worked on a farm. In 1884 he came to Sherman county, having but limited capital, and secured a quarter section of land, which he gradually but surely improved, at the same time working for other farmers. At present Mr. Thompson owns six hundred and forty acres and rents four hundred and eighty more.

At the residence of the bride's parents, at Monkland, November 29, 1889, our subject was united in marriage to Mary N. McDonald, a native of Canada, born November 28, 1869. She is the daughter of Neil and Annie McDonald, both natives of Canada, the father of Scotch ancestry. The latter died about the year 1884. The brother of Mrs. Thompson is mentioned elsewhere. Our subject has four brothers and one sister; Jesse B., with his parents in Sherman county; Richard, at Hood River; Vincent, in Malheur county, Oregon; Aaron, in Whitman county, Washington; Bertha, wife of Neil McDonald, a farmer residing near Monkland.

Fraternally our subject is affiliated with Moro Lodge, No. 113, I. O. O. F., W. T. W., and the A. O. U. W., of Moro. His political affiliations are with the Republican party and he has frequently been a delegate to county conventions and three times delegate to state conventions. He is at present central committeeman for his county and precinct.

In the way of pleasant surroundings he has a fine six-acre orchard, bearing plums, cherries, apricots and prunes, and commodious barns and substantial dwelling. He raises stock, including mules, for his own use. Throughout the community in which he has cast his lot Mr. Thompson is very popular and numbers many warm friends and acquaintances.

ALBERT M. WRIGHT, one of the prosperous farmers and solid business men of Sherman county, resides five miles southeast of Monkland. He was born at Zanesville, Muskingum county, Ohio, March 26, 1860, the son of John A. and Eva (Vestal) Wright, both natives of Ohio. John A. was born in Licking county; his parents were of Scotch ancestry, and his father served with distinction as captain in the War of 1812. The mother, Mrs. John A. Wright, was born in Zanesville, Ohio; her parents having been natives of what is now West Virginia, and her father's parents of Pennsylvania. The parents of Mrs. Wright are now living in Lane county, Oregon.

In the excellent public schools of Zanesville our subject received a sound business education. His father was a contractor and builder and the family removed to Harrison county, Ohio, in 1877. Here John A. Wright engaged in the marble business and here our subject acquired the trade of marble cutting. In 1884 they all came to Oregon, locating in Sherman county. Here John A. Wright and his son took up land, the father a half, and the son a quarter of a section. They had but limited capital, and worked out at times, gradually improving their places. In the fall of 1903 the father and mother removed to Lane county, twenty miles from Eugene. The father rents his farm in Sherman county; our subject now owns a half section of land, and rents four hundred and fifty acres more.

Our subject was married at Cadiz, Ohio, March 22, 1883, to Miss Jessie F. Adams, born in that place, and the daughter of William and Mary (Nichols) Adams, natives of Ohio. Her father died at Cadiz, September 25, 1898. The mother's father was a native of Maryland, and she now lives at Cadiz, Ohio.

Albert M. Wright, our subject, has three sisters; Fanny, wife of Rev. D. H. Leech, of Woodburn, Oregon, where he is established as a preacher in the Methodist Episcopal church; Lillian, wife of James H. Fraser, of North Yakima, Washington, in the implement and harness business; and Mamié, wife of John V. O'Leary, a sheep-raiser in the Willamette valley. Mrs. Wright has two brothers and four sisters living; Ernest and George, at Cadiz, Ohio; Catherine, wife of Albert McConnell, also of Cadiz; Annie, wife of W. D. Ritchie, of the same city; Carrie, single, residing at Cadiz; Mrs. Martha Cope, of Mansfield, Illinois; and Frank, deceased.

Two children have blessed the union of Mr. and Mrs. Wright, Ethel M. and Eva V., and they have one adopted son, Raymond A. Havnar, the son of Mrs. Wright's sister, Mrs. Rettie Havnar, who died at Dennison, Ohio, October 11, 1895. Mr. Wright is a member of the A. O. U. W., of Moro; politically, he is a Prohibitionist. In 1901 he was elected county commissioner on the Prohibition ticket, and several times he has been selected as delegate to Prohibition conventions. For a number of years he has been school director. Both he and his wife are devout and consistent members of the Methodist Episcopal church, and he is superintendent of the Sunday school.

WILLIAM F. JACKSON. The subject of the following sketch is a prosperous and successful farmer in Sherman county, residing one and one-half miles south of Moro. He was born in Tennessee, April 22, 1868. He is the son of Captain Francis M. Jackson, of Hood River, also a native of Tennessee, his father being a Kentuckian, and a member of the old and distinguished Jackson family.

Our subject came to the state of Oregon with his father, and now owns a quarter section of land adjoining his father's place near Hood River. In the fall of 1897 William F. Jackson came to Sherman county and at first rented wheat land from the Eastern Oregon Land Company. He now owns a quarter section, and his wife eighty acres, and he still rents five other quarters.

December 25, 1901, he was married to Carrie Kaseberg, a native of Illinois. Her father, Theodore Kaseberg, was born in Germany, and now lives three miles south of Grass Valley. Mrs. Jackson has two brothers; Robert W., seven miles southwest of Grass Valley; and George, aged seventeen years. Mr. Jackson is a member of the W. W., of Moro. Mr. Jackson is a Democrat, and active in the interests of the several campaigns of his party. He was a delegate to the last Democratic state convention. In his home community, throughout the county and wherever he is known, Mr. Jackson is quite popular and highly esteemed for his many social qualities and good business ability.

ROBERT W. PINKERTON, one of the leading agriculturists and prominent land-holders of Sherman county, resides in a handsome and eligibly located home three and one-half miles north of Moro. He is a native of the Hawkeye State, having been born in Page county, Iowa, April 25, 1858. His parents are Samuel and Margaret (Smith) Pinkerton, natives of Ireland, both of County Antrim, where the father was a farmer. At present they live in Page county, Iowa, with a daughter, Clarinda. Samuel Pinkerton came to the United States in the 40's, settling in the state of New York, near the Vermont line. Later the family moved to Wisconsin where he bought a farm, going thence to Iowa about 1856 or 1857, where he purchased more land.

On this farm our subject was reared, and from which he attended the public schools in his vicinity, remaining there until he had attained his majority. He then worked a portion of the old home place until he came to Sherman county in March, 1886. For three years he rented land, and then filed on a claim near Kent, which he later abandoned. In June, 1892, he purchased a quarter section—a timber-culture—and now owns a half section. He has built a story and a half house on the timber culture claim and this is surrounded with a fine small orchard and handsome shade trees.

Mr. Pinkerton was married in Page county, Iowa, to Carrie J. Bennett, born in that state. Her parents were James and Sarah (Daugherty) Bennett, the father a native of Pennsylvania, and the mother of Ohio, and both deceased.

Our subject has two brothers and three sisters living; Samuel J., at Kent, King county, Washington; William A., a Presbyterian minister of Sumner, Beaver county, Iowa; Martha, wife of William J. Bayles, a farmer in Page county, Iowa; Margaret J., wife of James McKeown, of Page county; Rachel, wife of Alexander Duncan, of the same county. Mrs. Pinkerton has one sister and three brothers; Emma, widow of Thomas Young, of Taylor county, Iowa; Ellsworth, a farmer in Oklahoma territory; William, in Colorado; and James, of Clarinda, Page county, Iowa.

Four children have blessed the union of Mr. and Mrs. Pinkerton; Wilma, wife of Charles Poole, a farmer of Morrow county, Oregon; Emma, aged nineteen; Margaret, aged fifteen; and Harry, a boy of nine. Mr. Pinkerton and his wife are members of the Reformed Presbyterian church. During the past two years the family have made their home in Seattle in winters, where Mr. Pinkerton owns a residence at the corner of Federal and Harrison avenues. During a portion of the past ten years Mr. Pinkerton has cultivated about eight hundred acres in Sherman county, which he rents. In 1902 he purchased one thousand six hundred acres in Morrow county, Oregon, one mile from the town of Douglas. This place is conducted by his son-in-law, Charles Poole, with whom he is a partner. Socially and financially Mr. Pinkerton has scored a pronounced success and he and his estimable wife are highly esteemed in the community in which they reside.

JACOB B. WHEAT, a well-known pioneer of Sherman county and a veteran of the Civil war, is at present a farmer residing three miles east of Moro. He was born in Jefferson county, Indiana, May 1, 1836, the son of Nathaniel and Martha (McCloud) Wheat, the former a native of Virginia; the latter of North Carolina, her ancestry being Scottish. The parents of Nathaniel Wheat were Virginians, but their ancestors came from Holland. Nathaniel served with distinction in the War of 1812; his father was in the Revolutionary War. Nathaniel was a member of Colonel Johnson's Kentucky Mounted Riflemen, and was with Johnson at the time the great Indian chief, Tecumseh, was killed. Following the War of 1812 Nathaniel removed to Indiana.

Jacob B. Wheat, our subject, lived in Indiana until he was thirteen years of age, when his parents removed to Missouri. They were farmers, the father being quite a prominent man in Lawrence county. He was an old line Whig, a union man during the Civil war, and, although often urged to accept office refrained from doing so. All through the war he remained a stanch Republican. He died in 1867. The mother had passed away in 1863.

In May, 1861, our subject enlisted in Captain Burrows' home guard company, Colonel Martin's regiment. In October, 1862, he enlisted in Company K, Captain Thomas Burgess, Colonel John Allen. He was in the Price raid campaign, and in a number of bushwhacker fights, until the close of the war, his field of action having been confined to Missouri and Arkansas. After the war he worked at various employments, farming, carpentry and wagon making, continuing the same for a period of about thirteen years. In 1880 he came to Sherman county and in the spring of 1881 located at his present home, but with limited capital. He took up a half section of land, which he now rents, but resides there with his wife.

In September, 1855, in Lawrence county, Missouri, Mr. Wheat was married to Charlotte T. Neece, a native of Tennessee. She is the daughter of Ellis and Annie (Reese) Neece, both natives of Tennessee, as were their parents. The ancestors of the father were Virginians, of Norman extraction; those of the mother of Scotch lineage.

Our subject has one sister living, Rachel, widow of Leroy Ayers, of Arkansas. Mrs. Wheat has two brothers and six sisters living; Robert, of Canyon City, Oregon; William, of Colorado, both in the stock business; Sophie, widow of Daniel Jones, of Lawrence county, Missouri; Huldah, wife of William C. Elsey; Alcy, wife of Levi G. Hillhouse, both of Lawrence county, Missouri; and Elizabeth, wife of John Stuart, a farmer in Christian county, Missouri; America, wife of T. C. Elsey; Sarah, wife of James Askins; besides two sisters and three brothers deceased. Mr. and Mrs. Wheat have four children; Nathaniel P., a farmer living near Oakland, Oregon; Edwin B., an optician and jeweler at Boise, Idaho; Don C., a farmer living two miles from Moro; and Henrietta M., wife of William H. Rose, a farmer near Roseburg, Oregon.

Both Mr. Wheat and his estimable wife are members of the Baptist church, and have been since 1855. He is a Republican, politically, and has frequently been delegate to county conventions since the organization of Sherman county. He was precinct committeeman when the county was cut off from other territory, and was chairman of the first Republican county convention held in the new political division. He has never sought office, but has frequently served as school director, and in Missouri as director and clerk. A man of strict integrity and sound business judgment, popular in social and business circles, he is one highly esteemed by all who know him.

ELVIN E. BARNUM, a member of the firm of Barnum Brothers, resides six miles southeast of Moro, Sherman county, Oregon. He is a true Oregonian, having been born on the "old Price place," in Sherman county, August 21, 1874. His parents were Henry and Elmira M. (Massiker) Barnum, mentioned elsewhere in this work.

Our subject attended the public schools in the vicinity of his birthplace and secured a good, business education. November 28, 1897, at the residence of the bride's parents, near Wasco, he was united in marriage to Mary E. Medler, born near Walla Walla, Washington, February 8, 1876. Her father was Bruno F. and her mother Jane Medler, the father being a native of Germany; her mother of Pennsylvania. Bruno F. Medler is an extensive farmer near Wasco.

Mr. Barnum, politically, is a Republican, but is not at all active in the various campaigns of his party. He is a man of sound business principles, wide-awake, energetic and industrious.

JOHN C. KASEBERG, a retired farmer living at 318 E. Rose street, Walla Walla, was property in Sherman county, Oregon, where he born in Germany, on June 13, 1832. He owns labored for years and is now spending the golden years of his life enjoying the competence that his industry has provided, and has chosen Walla Walla as the home place. His parents, John and Cristina (Rumpf) Kaseberg, were natives of Hessen, Germany, and came from old and substantial German families. The father was a mechanic. Our subject received his education in his native land and also thoroughly learned the wagonmaker's trade. In 1853, he came to the United States and settled in St. Louis. Although he had no relatives there and could not speak the English language, nevertheless he secured work at his trade and later visited various places. He was back in St. Louis at the time of the outbreak of the Civil War and enlisted in Company K, Fifth Missouri Infantry for three months and served five months and ten days. Upon his honorable discharge, he again went to work at his trade, and in 1864 we find him operating a shop for himself. For a decade he continued this then sold out and moved to southern Missouri, where he remained two years. He owned a shop in Salem, Missouri, and continued in business until 1882, when he came west to Oregon. He spent a few weeks in Walla Walla visiting his two brothers, then took up land in what is now Sherman county. His place lies about seven miles from the present town of Wasco, and consists of about nine hundred and sixty acres. He conducted the farm until 1901 and then, owing to failing health, gave up active work and came to Walla Walla. His land is handled by his sons and is a valuable property.

In 1863, Mr. Kaseberg married Henrietta (Sommerkamp), a native of Hanover, Germany. Mr. Kaseberg has two brothers, Henry, at 318 South Second street, Walla Walla, and William, who died in this city. To Mr. and Mrs. Kaseberg eight children have been born, Henry, in Walla Walla; John and Ed in Sherman county; Albert, at home; William, who died in April, 1904; Augusta, wife of W. Copeland, in Walla Walla; Lizzie, wife of W. Bennet, a retired farmer in Walla Walla; and Amelia, at home. Mr. Kaseberg is a member of the A. O. U. W., and in political matters is a Republican, although not especially active at this time. Personally, he is a genial, kind man and one of those substantial citizens who have accomplished very much in general upbuilding for the country where he has wrought. He has the esteem and good will of all and has hosts of friends.

JOHN B. HOLMAN, one of the extensive and substantial farmers of Sherman county, resides five miles southeast of Moro. He was born in Sweden, October 25, 1856, the son of Gabriel and Johanna (Barge) Holman, natives of Sweden, where the mother now lives, and where the father died in 1901 aged seventy-four years. Gabriel Holman was a woolen weaver and his father was a seafaring man trading out of Halmstad, where our subject was educated in the public schools. In 1871 he came to the United States, remaining in New York city two years, where he found employment in a car-spring factory. Thence he went to Virginia City, Nevada, where he worked at various employments one year, mining, etc. Then he went to Plumas county, California, where for the succeeding six months he followed mining. Having spent a few months in San Francisco he returned to Virginia City, but six months afterward he was back in California conducting a chicken and turkey ranch in Butte county. Here he remained two years, and in 1882 came to Sherman county, Oregon, arriving with no capital. Despite this handicap he took up a half section of land and industriously began improving the same. His two brothers, also, secured claims adjoining him, and while they continued to work out for other farmers our subject devoted his entire attention to improvement of the claims. Mr. Holman now owns five hundred and seventy acres and rents eight hundred and eighty acres more, mostly land belonging to his brothers. He owns a threshing outfit in partnership with the Barnum Brothers.

At the residence of the bride's parents, in Sherman county, December 25, 1886, Mr. Holman was united in marriage to Lizzie Maxwell, born in Arkansas, October 21, 1868. Her father, David Maxwell, a native of Alabama, now lives in Washington county, Oregon. Our subscriber has three brothers; Martin, of Portland, who owns a place adjoining him; Charles, a merchant in Sweden; and Axel, also of Sweden, where he is a manufacturer and merchant.

To Mr. and Mrs. Holman three children have been born; Nellie, aged sixteen; Martha, aged fourteen; and Lillian, aged three years.

Our subject, fraternally, is a member of the A. O. U. W., of Moro. Politically, he is independent. In the community in which he resides Mr. Holman is highly esteemed and popular among a wide circle of friends and acquaintances.

EDWARD E. KASEBERG, one of the bright and popular young farmers of Sherman county, resides on his father's place, which he rents, five miles west and two miles south of Wasco. He was born in Summersville, Texas county, Missouri, July 18, 1879, the son of John C. and Henrietta (Sommerkamp) Kaseberg, both natives of Germany. During the Civil war John C. Kaseberg, the father, was employed by the government as a wagon-maker. He had learned the trade in Germany, coming to the United States in 1853. At present he lives in Walla Walla, Washington. The parents of our subject were married in St. Louis, Missouri, and migrated to Walla Walla when our subject was two years of age. In the spring of 1883 they came to Sherman county, the father having preceded them the year previous. He located a homestead and here they continued to live until 1902, when the parents returned to Walla Walla, having rented the farm to our subject.

February 16, 1902, at Wasco, Sherman county, the latter was married to Evelyn Morrow, born in Illinois August 26, 1879, the daughter of John and Mary (Shoup) Morrow. For fifteen years her father was a resident and landholder in Sherman county. He was a veteran of the Civil War, dying December 18, 1903. The mother still lives at Wasco.

Our subject has three brothers and three sisters living; John R., eight miles from the town of Wasco; Henry J., a farmer near Walla Walla; Albert C., aged sixteen, with his mother in Walla Walla; Augusta, wife of Wallace R. Copeland, of Walla Walla; Lizzie, wife of William C. Bennett, of the same place; and Amelia, single, and living with her mother at Walla Walla. Mr. and Mrs. Kaseberg have one child, Lawrence E., born April 3, 1903. He is, politically, a Republican, although by no means an active partisan. In the community in which he resides he is quite popular and he and his estimable wife are highly esteemed in a wide circle of friends and acquaintances.

In addition to handling the old home place, Mr. Kaseberg is a member of the firm of Webber & Company, who operate a general merchandise store in Wasco. The firm consists of E. A. E. Webber, H. P. Disher and E. E. Kaseberg.

C. MORTIMER ANDREWS, a successful and progressive Sherman county farmer, residing two miles west of Wasco, is a native of the Wolverine State, having been born at Kalamazoo, Michigan, May 23, 1852. His parents were Simeon J. and Rachel A. (Wigley) Andrews, both natives of New York. The father was a descendant of an old and distinguished American family. The father of the mother of our subject was born in Connecticut; her mother in New York, of an old colonial family, some of the members of which were prominent in the War of the Revolution.

Our subject was reared in Kalamazoo county, Michigan, where he remained with his parents, two miles from Kalamazoo, until he was nine years of age. The family then moved to Wisconsin, remaining in that state until 1862, going thence to Iowa. In these three states our subject gained a good business education in the district schools until he was nineteen years old. In 1874 he began the world for himself, going to Nevada. There he worked in the mines two years, at Virginia City and Gold Hill. He then went to California and engaged in farm work for several years. Coming to Oregon in 1882 he located land and was back and forth for two years. In 1884 he brought his family to Sherman county where he had sixty acres of land broken, together with other improvements. He sowed his first wheat crop in 1885. At present he owns three hundred and five acres lying opposite his brother's place.

In 1876, at Dixon, California, he was married to Hattie King, a native of the Golden State. Her father, Simeon J. King, was a native of New York, a descendant of an old American family. Her mother, Rachel A. (Wibberly) King, was also born in New York; her parents in England. Mrs. Andrews has one brother living; William, residing eight miles west of Wasco. Susan, a sister, is dead. Mr. and Mrs. Andrews have two children, Claud K., at The Dalles, and Guy C., at home. Our subject has a brother, Ernest A. Andrews, a farmer, whose property adjoins that of our subject. He was born in Blackhawk county, Iowa, July 20, 1868. He has always been with his parents, with the exception of four years on the Colorado Southern Railroad, as a brakeman. He is single and lives with his mother.

The father of our subject was, in early days, a Democrat. Shortly after the formation of the Republican party he joined that political element. He was sheriff of Otsego county, New York, two terms. The Andrews family were influential and well-to-do farmers in Connecticut and other portions of New England. C. Mortimer Andrews, our subject, is a Republican. He is a member of Aurora Lodge No. 54, K. of P., of which he is past C. C.

ARTIMUS H. BARNUM, one of the leading farmers of Sherman county, resides four miles south of Moro, a member of the firm of Barnum Brothers. He was born on what is known as the "old Love place," eight miles north of Moro, June 2, 1878. His parents were Henry and Elmira M. (Massiker) Barnum, whose lives and ancestry are detailed in the biographical sketch devoted to Ladru Barnum, our subject's partner in business.

Our subject attended the public schools of Moro, and, also, pursued a course in the Portland Business College from which he was graduated in February, 1900. Since then he has continued in company with his brother as described in the sketch devoted to the latter.

February 3, 1903, at Moro, county seat of Sherman county, Mr. Barnum was united in marriage to Maggie M. Farra, born February 3, 1884. Her father was a native of Missouri, dying in May, 1901, in Alberta county. He came to California, and at first worked in the mines. Thence he migrated to the Willamette valley, Oregon, where he was married to Elizabeth A. Porter, a native of Iowa, who crossed the plains with her parents in the 60's. Mrs. Farra married again and is now the wife of John W. Dunn, of Sherman county.

Mrs. Barnum, the wife of our subject, has three brothers and three sisters; John, aged thirteen, living with our subject; Samuel P., with his mother and step-father in Sherman county; Harley T., at home with his mother; Maud, wife of M. Phillips, a farmer living in Gilliam county; Alva, wife of George V. Stanton, a lumber dealer doing business in Grass Valley and mentioned elsewhere; and Frankie, wife of Ray Dunn, of Gilliam county.

Mr. Barnum is a member of Moro Lodge, No. 113, I. O. O. F., and of the Rebekahs. Politically, he is a Republican, but not by any means a radical partisan. Mr. and Mrs. Barnum have one boy, Henry, born April 14, 1904. Mr. Barnum is a popular, energetic and industrious business man and a citizen of broad and progressive views. In a wide circle of acquaintances he numbers a host of warm personal friends.

JOHN M. HULERY, a retired Sherman county farmer, now living with his son, resides six miles northwest of Wasco. He was born in Darke county, Ohio, October 17, 1827. His father, Michael Hulery, was a native of the Keystone State, a member of an old Pennsylvania Dutch family. Michael Hulery was a millwright. He moved to Indiana when our subject was about one year old, and purchased a farm eleven miles from the old Tippecanoe battle ground, on the Tippecanoe river. Here our subject was reared on the farm with his parents and in the town of Delphi, the county seat of Carroll county. When nine years of age he began learning the trade of a carpenter, with his father. At this period he was so small that he was compelled to stand on a platform to reach the bench. During three months of each winter he attended district schools, in log buildings. At the age of sixteen he had finished his apprenticeship at the carpenter's trade, and about this time his father died. John M. then took full charge of the shop. The father had enjoyed a good business, having from fifteen to twenty-five men at work at carpentry and coo-

At the age of twenty-two our subject began the cooper business on his own account, and was quite prosperous, employing on an average from ten to twenty men, and sometimes forty or fifty. In this enterprise he continued until 1853. He then came to Oregon with his wife and children. They enjoyed a fine trip with the exception of slight Indian troubles. They located a donation claim six miles from Eugene, but abandoned it the following year. In the fall of 1855 he went to Portland and once more engaged in the cooper business. He manufactured the first whiskey barrel ever made in Oregon. During three years he transacted a lucrative business and then he disposed of his interests and engaged in a dray and trucking enterprise, buying and selling horses, for ten or twelve years. Following this he was at McMinneville, Yamhill county, Oregon, for twelve years engaged in the saloon business. In 1886 he came to Sherman county and has since lived with his son. At times he had acquired considerable money, which he lost through injudicious investments.

June 17, 1848, Mr. Hulery was married to Martha Davidson, born in Carroll county, Indiana. For several years she was a great sufferer from disease, and died August 17, 1873. She was the daughter of John and Mary Davidson. Her father came to Oregon the same time that our subject did, and settled in the Willamette valley, where he died. He was a farmer located on a donation claim. The parents of Mary Davidson were Indiana farmers, and quite prominent in church work.

For many years our subject was a member of the I. O. O. F., of which he is past noble grand. He was a member of Samaritan Lodge, which he and four or five brothers who had cards, assisted in building up when it was nearly extinct. When only twenty-one years of age he joined the order in Indiana, and was ever an enthusiastic member, having passed through all the chairs. For the past six months he has been confined to his bed through ill health. At the age of seventy-eight years our subject can look back upon a long, eventful and useful life. He has ever been a good husband and kind and indulgent father, a man highly respected in all communities in which he has cast his lot, and esteemed by all with whom he has been thrown into intercourse.

Since the above was written, Mr. Hulery has gone to his long rest. The death occurred at the home of Mrs. E. J. Bray, in Oakland, California, on October 23, 1904.

GEORGE G. DEMOSS, an eminent musician of national reputation, formerly a member of the "Lyric Bards of America" and later of the "DeMoss Lyric Bards," was born at Cove, Union county, Oregon, May 28, 1866. His parents were James M. and Elizabeth A. (Bonebrake) DeMoss. His father, James M., was a missionary pioneer of Oregon, coming here in 1862, accompanied by his wife, the mother of our subject.

July 10, 1899, our subject was united in marriage to Aurelia Davis, a native of Iowa, born April 15, 1879. The nuptial rites were solemnized at Omaha, Nebraska. Her parents were Charles B. and Elizabeth (DeMoss) Davis, the father a native of Virginia and the mother of Indiana. The father was a descendant of the old southern Davis family, and he was a second cousin of Jefferson Davis. At one period he was a preacher in the United Brethren denomination, and later in the Presbyterian. He died at Salem, Oregon, November 30, 1902. The mother resides at DeMoss Springs. To Mr. and Mrs. George G. DeMoss has been born one child, an unnamed infant at the present writing.

The townsite of De Moss Springs was laid out by James M., Henry S. and George G. De Moss, as a prohibition town, in 1900. The family represented Oregon at the Chicago Columbian Exposition's Congress of Musicians. The family composed a musical work of great merit, "The Columbian Souvenir Songs," devoted to each state. The sister of our subject, Lizzie DeMoss (Davis), began singing with the company at the age of four years, and up to the present time has traveled every season. She is an accomplished graduate of the Royal Academy, of London, England, in violin and voice, and of the Cincinnati and Chicago Colleges of Music. Her elementary instruction was received at the hands of her father, James M. DeMoss.

Our subject, having been well grounded in music, began teaching at the precocious age of twelve years, composed and wrote music at the age of thirteen and at fourteen was a professor at a normal musical institute, where he taught thorough bass and harmony. This was at Des Moines, Iowa. At the age of sixteen he occupied a chair of music at the Western College, and was then with the "Lyric Bards of America" and the "DeMoss Lyric Bards" for thirty-two years continuously. Our subject and his estimable wife have one child, Evelyn, born August 21, 1902.

The DeMoss Family was employed by the directors of the World's Fair to give daily entertainments in Horticultural Hall, during each afternoon, for which they composed songs, words and music on special occasions. From the fair officials they received forty certificates of merit, and many of their songs have obtained world-wide popularity. During the six months of this grand exposition the DeMoss family sang to several millions of people.

FRANK L. HULERY, a landholder of Sherman county, and proprietor of the Phallmont Livery Stable, Wasco, was born in Portland, Oregon, October 23, 1861. His father, John M. Hulery, a native of Ohio, came to Oregon so early as 1853. He is a cooper by trade and lives with our subject. The mother, Martha (Davidson) Hulery, died when our subject was about twelve years of age, at Dayton, Yamhill county, Oregon.

The family located on a donation claim near Harrisburg, Linn county, Oregon, and later moved to Portland. Here the father worked at the cooper trade and, also, conducted a livery stable.

Frank L., our subject, was reared in Portland until ten years of age. Thence he accompanied the family to Dayton, where he continued his education in the public schools which had been commenced in Portland. After his mother's death he lived with Captain W. S. Powell, an old soldier and Indian fighter, two years. He then began the world on his own account, and found employment in a fishery near Astoria. Thence he went to Klickitat county, Washington, where he was employed by John Graham for whom he rode the range in the stock business for five or six years. In 1883 our subject went to Morrow county and engaged in sheep and horse raising with a brother. In this he continued two years, with poor success, and then came to Sherman county and began raising horses near Biggs, on shares with his father-in-law, John Graham. He had used his homestead rights in Morrow county and disposed of his half section of land when he left that vicinity. Two years after his arrival in Sherman county he moved to his present home, six miles northwest of Wasco, and about two miles from Rufus. He now rents a place of four hundred acres. He is, also, engaged in the livery business in Wasco; the family live on the farm.

At Goldendale, Washington, July 6, 1882, Mr. Hulery was united in marriage to Sarah A. Graham, born near Hillsboro, Washington county, Oregon. She is the daughter of John and Matilda (White) Graham. Our subject has four brothers and two sisters; John, a painter in Eugene, Oregon; George, a stockman near Wallace, Idaho; Edward, of Ontario, Malheur county; Walter, of Tuscarora, Nevada; Ida, single, living in Portland; and Josephine, wife of Mr. Bray, a commercial traveler residing at North Forks, North Dakota. Mrs. Hulery has the following named brothers and sisters: Albert R., a speculator and trader of North Yakima, Washington; Carrie, wife of Luther Fletcher, of Yamhill county; and Louisa, single, and residing at The Dalles with her parents. Mr. and Mrs. Hulery have four children, Pearl W., Thomas F., Frank W., and Minnie L. Our subject is a member of Sherman Lodge No. 157, I. O. O. F., and Modoc Encampment, Grass Valley; and the A. O. U. W., of Wasco. Politically, he is a Republican and has frequently served as delegate to county conventions. He is a school director and for many years has been director and clerk of the school district No. 6, Sherman county.

HENRY S. DEMOSS, a well known citizen of DeMoss Springs, Sherman county, was born in Iowa, February 4, 1860, the son of James M. and Elizabeth A. (Bonebrake) DeMoss, sketches of whom appear in another portion of this work. To Oregon he came in his infancy, and it may be truthfully said that he was reared in eastern Oregon and Washington. He received an excellent education, and for one year was a student in the Des Moines, Iowa, high school. While still of tender years he commenced the study of music, his father being his instructor, and subsequently he was with G. Lang, of Boston, who was a guest of his parents, in Union county, Oregon. He then continued these musical studies under Virgil C. Taylor of Des Moines, and was matriculated in the Chicago College of Music, under Prof. H. S. Perkins. He also took an advanced course at the College of Music, Cincinnati, Ohio. In addition to this he received a thorough course of musical instruction at the Royal Academy, of London. His brother, George, and sisters, Lizzie and Minnie V., were there at the same time, and all graduated with high honors. Our subject was graduated in musical composition and voice culture. The family traveled together until 1893 when the subscriber's father and his second wife commenced conducting entertainments and Henry DeMoss was at the head of a company known as "DeMoss Lyric Bards." This organization has proved wonderfully successful since the close of the World's Fair at Chicago, and has acquired a well deserved reputation throughout the country.

Our subject owns several hundred acres of land individually, and more in partnership with his brother, George. They are the proprietors of the townsite of DeMoss Springs.

July 24, 1901, at DeMoss Springs, our subject was united in marriage to Julia R. Hall, a native of Ohio, born in Bellevue, October 24, 1882. She is the daughter of John R. and Mary E. (Livermore) Hall, natives of Massachusetts. The father was born at Pittsfield, and during the past three years has been a retired Methodist Episcopal preacher. At one period he was advance agent for the "DeMoss Lyric Bards," but was disabled in a railway accident. The mother is a member of the old Livermore family, one of whom came to America in the Mayflower in 1620.

The following is an extract from the preface to "The Columbian Souvenir Songs:"

"For twenty-one years prior to the World's Columbian Exposition, of which this folio contains illustrations, the authors of this work were known to the American public as concertists. Having traveled from the Pacific to the Atlantic coasts, and from the Lakes to the Gulf, scarcely a city, shore or mountain pass, of this vast nation but has resounded to the strains of the voices and instruments of the DeMoss Family Lyric Bards, of Oregon, as they have sung in praise of God and country."

HARLEIGH GLASS, a prosperous Sherman county farmer and one of the rising young citizens of the state, resides in Gerking Canyon, four miles north of Wasco. He was born in Cuming county, Nebraska, September 1, 1874, the son of William H. and Emma K. (Emgleit) Glass. The father died at Dilley, Washington county, Oregon; the mother now lives at Pullman, Washington.

Our subject was reared in Nebraska until he was eleven years of age. Then, with his parents, he went to Portland, and from there direct to Woodland, Cowlitz county, Washington, remaining eighteen months. Thence he migrated to Dilley where the family conducted a small dairy and vegetable and fruit garden. During the succeeding five years our subject found employment in a grist mill. In 1895 he went to Klickitat county, Washington, secured a homestead, and for a few years raised sheep. He then conducted a stage line from Grant, Oregon, to Goldendale, Washington, two years. This enterprise he disposed of and purchased a quarter section of land in Sherman county; he also rents a half section.

At Goldendale, Washington, September 1, 1897, Mr. Glass was married to Bertha E. Wilson, born in Mount Pleasant, Iowa. She is the daughter of Frank and Ella (Harvey) Wilson, both natives of Iowa, and now residing at Portland, Oregon, where the father is a painter and contractor. Our subject has two brothers, Harvey, a drayman at Pullman, Washington, and Burt. He has one sister, Edith, wife of Clinton Thompson, proprietor of a cigar store at Pullman. Mrs. Glass has one brother and one sister; Roy S., a merchant at Grant's Pass; and Winnie, aged thirteen.

The fraternal affiliations of our subject are with the W. W.; Sherman Lodge, No. 157, I. O. O. F.; and the Rebekahs, of which his wife is a member. He is a Republican and served as a delegate to the last Sherman county Republican convention. Mr. and Mrs. Glass have two children, Raymond E., aged five, and Beauford R., aged three.

PROF. JAMES M. DEMOSS, for many years at the head of "The Lyric Bards of America," and residing at DeMoss Springs, Sherman county, Oregon, was born in Indiana, May 15, 1837, the son of Peter and Elizabeth (Stewart) DeMoss. The "Lyric Bards" have won a world-wide fame, and the term "world-wide" is used advisedly, for their musical field has not been confined to the United States, but has extended over the greater portions of Europe. During the Chicago World's Fair of 1893 they became the official musical organization of that vast enterprise.

Peter DeMoss, the father of our subject, was born in Richmond, Virginia, in 1787, and died in Marion county, Iowa, in 1853. His father, John DeMoss, was a native of Virginia, the son of Louis, a French Huguenot. John served with distinction in the Revolutionary War. Peter DeMoss was an athlete, six feet one inch in height, and at the age of twenty-two years he became a professional pugilist, defeating many opponents, though not for money, but finally retiring from the ring, convinced that fighting was an unworthy method of making a livelihood. Subsequently he became a steamboat captain on the Ohio and Mississippi rivers.

Elizabeth Stewart, who became the bride of our subject's father, was a native of Ohio. Her mother, Mollie Stewart, was a distinguished actress and singer for many years. It may be said that she was reared in the atmosphere of the theatre and her histrionic career was eminently successful. The "Stewart Family" for a number of years toured the United States, appearing in all the principal cities, making their home later in Cincinnati, Ohio. During the War of 1812 her father enlisted. Having served through the war he started for his home, but was killed on the way by a limb falling from a tree. Until her death his widow was in receipt of a pension from the United States government. She and her daughter were members of the dramatic profession, but were subsequently converted at a camp meeting and abandoned the boards to become singing evangelists. Elizabeth Stewart joined the United Brethren church and became a licensed preacher. Mollie Stewart was burned to death at the age of ninety-six years. September 7, 1893, Elizabeth Stewart DeMoss, the mother of our subject, passed from earth in her ninetieth year.

The father of our subject, Peter DeMoss, was a devout Christian in later life and becoming disgusted with slavery, removed to Indiana, and later to Iowa. James M. DeMoss was reared in the Hawkeye State. Here he received an excellent education in a subscription school, and at Western College, in Linn county, a United Brethren school. He pursued scientific and musical courses. Subsequently he preached, conducting religious services and singing schools. At the age of sixteen he taught music; and really began singing at the age of two years.

On attaining his majority our subject was united in married to Elizabeth A. Bonebrake, a native of Indiana. She was the daughter of Henry and Margaret (Wolf) Bonebrake, both natives of Ohio, the father of German ancestry;

the mother of Dutch extraction. He became a preacher in the United Brethren Church, a pioneer evangelist and among the first bishops elected in the church. But he refused to accept this office. He died in Iowa. Our subject was married November 25, 1858, and in 1862, accompanied by his wife, came to the Powder Valley, Oregon, as a missionary—the pioneer missionary of the United Brethren church east of the Cascade mountains.

"A preacher of the gospel, a missionary, a musician, with his singing wife, who sang as they started across the wilderness of mighty plains in the year A. D. 1862, with an ox team, the best mode of traveling in those early days, leaving their homes and turning their faces westward to the land of the setting sun, they plodded along day after day, through alkali dust and over rugged mountains, glad when a day's march was done and their journey shortened eighteen or twenty miles. This zealous Christian couple, James M. DeMoss and Elizabeth Bonebrake DeMoss, started their work with great success in portions of Oregon, Washington and Idaho, gaining many souls to Christ. In due time they were blessed with a little family of singers, who sang at their father's meetings and singing classes."

They located in Sherman county, and in 1883 took up land, which they cultivated when not out with his company. In 1873, while in Des Moines, Iowa, with his concert company, he joined the Baptist church, and is still a preacher of that denomination. His wife died, December 28, 1886, at Roseburg, Oregon.

December 10, 1889, at Carlton, Illinois, our subject was married to Julia E. Shatto, a native of Iowa, born in Washington county, September 30, 1862, the daughter of Ralph and Julia (Plumb) Shatto, both natives of Ohio. Julia and Martha Plumb studied in Oberlin College, the latter graduating. Ralph Shatto was a newspaper man of national reputation, having begun his career as publisher of a college paper (Western College), the same attended by our subject. Subsequently, for several years, he conducted the New Orleans Republican. His last paper was the Tribune, of Harvey, Illinois. He died August 21, 1899, at Toledo, Iowa. The parents of Julia Plumb were New York people, and Senator Plumb, of Kansas, was her first cousin. Her brother, Colonel Ralph Plumb, was a noted Abolitionist who served three months in jail at Oberlin, Ohio, for rescuing a free negro who was to be taken to Kentucky under the fugitive slave law. He became very wealthy, being a "coal baron" of Illinois, and at one period owned the townsite of Streator, Illinois, of which he was mayor for many years, and served two terms in congress. Her father served three years in the Civil war, in Company C, Nineteenth Iowa Volunteers.

Our subject, by his first wife, has three children living: Henry and George, Sherman county land owners, and members of the DeMoss Concert Company; Lizzie, wife of Peter W. Davis, a Sherman county farmer, and member of the company. Minnie, another daughter, died in Wheatland, California, December 1, 1896, aged twenty-seven. She was a most accomplished lady, bright, intelligent, and a cultured and artistic contralto singer. May, died in October, 1886, at Hornbrook, California, aged fifteen years, but her brief life gave promise of a most brilliant future. The children by his second marriage are John M., aged eight years, and Ruth, aged six, who were juvenile performers with their parents in their entertainments. At present our subject is a Prohibitionist, but for many years was a staunch Republican, having cast his first vote for Abraham Lincoln. He has one brother and three sisters; Peter, a retired farmer, living near Moro, and an old Indian fighter; Mary A., wife of George C. Davis, deceased, of Lincoln, Nebraska; Lucinda, widow of R. Shatto, deceased, of New Hampton, Iowa; Elizabeth S., widow of Rev. C. B. Davis, living at DeMoss Springs. Rev. C. B. Davis died at Salem, November 28, 1902, and is buried at DeMoss Springs.

The second wife of our subject was reared by the Plumb family, and educated at Western College where, for many years she was a music teacher. She has one half-brother, Rev. Charles R. Shatto, of New Hampton, Iowa, pastor of the Congregational church at that place. During the state oratorical contest he secured the first prize.

Our subject located the townsite of North Powder and built three toll bridges crossing both Powder and Grande Ronde rivers; he, also, erected the first sawmill in the Grande Ronde valley, and located and owned the town of Weiser, Idaho. He has been largely interested in real estate and has been uniformly successful financially. For his services as preacher he receives no salary, and is the pioneer missionary teacher of eastern Oregon and Washington, having in early days taught music in Walla Walla and Grande Ronde valleys.

Prof. DeMoss is author of the "Key to Music," of the cantata "Joseph, the Hebrew Governor of Egypt," which was published in Philadelphia, in 1891, of a number of patriotic and sacred songs, and with his sons, Henry and George, and daughters, Minnie and Lizzie, composed the songs of the "Columbia Souvenir songs," introduced during the Columbian Exposition in Chicago, in 1893. The family composed and published the "Songs of Jesus."

In 1872, Prof. DeMoss and family began giving concerts, the initial entertainments being at Cove, Oregon. The DeMoss family are now in their thirty-third year of touring, having given three seasons in New England, three in the northern states, three in the southern states, seven in the northwest and California, one in Europe, and two in Canada. The children all received most thorough instruction from their father and took post-graduate courses in the Royal Academy of London; George in voice and cello, Minnie and Lizzie in voice and violin, Henry in voice, violin and musical composition. Lillie was an actress and a member of her father's troupe until her death, having commenced composition of music when thirteen.

The DeMoss estate consists of twelve hundred acres traversed by the Columbia Southern railroad. The town of DeMoss Springs is located about the center of the property.

BENJAMIN L. ANDREWS, a prosperous, enterprising and progressive farmer, and popular citizen, resides at Gerking Canyon, four miles from Wasco, in Sherman county. He was born in Missouri, January 19, 1862. His parents were Amos and Martha (Andrews) Andrews, the latter not even a second cousin of her husband, being of an altogether different family. The mother died when our subject was an infant. The parents of Amos Andrews were early settlers of Missouri, where he died.

Benjamin L. Andrews was reared in Missouri until he had attained the age of eighteen years. He then came to Oregon alone, and located in the Willamette valley where for about two years he was employed on farms. Thence he went to Klickitat county, Washington, worked two years more on ranches and then for three years rode the range. In 1884 he came to Sherman county, filed on land adjoining the place where he now resides, and purchased railroad land. At present he owns a half section of exceptionally fine land; has a good orchard of four acres, devoted to apples, pears and peaches, for which he finds a ready market on the place.

Our subject was married in Wasco, November 2, 1892, to Agnes R. Ramey, a native of Missouri. She is the daughter of William Ramey, and the sister of George Ramey, mentioned elsewhere. Mr. Andrews has one brother and three sisters: James, a merchant in Denver, Colorado; Luella, wife of Gustave Dredger, of Iowa; Belle, wife of Newman Guilford, of Denver; and Mattie, wife of William Carver, of the same city. Three children have been born to our subject and his wife, Cora, Willie and Belle. Mr. Andrews is a member of Sherman Lodge, No. 157, I. O. O. F. He is a Republican, politically, but not especially active in the various campaigns. He and his wife are members of the Christian church. Amos Andrews, the father of our subject, served three years in the Civil war. Our subject is a man highly esteemed by a large circle of friends and acquaintances.

EDWIN M. MEACH is well known in Moro as a first-class painter and paper hanger, as well as dealer in paints, oils, wall paper and so forth. He was born in Vancouver, Washington, on February 21, 1877, the son of Henry M. and Mary (Sheehan) Meach, natives of Jackson county, Michigan, and Portland, Maine, respectively. They now live in Portland, Oregon, where the father does a general contracting and building business. His father was born in the United States, of Scotch parents, and his mother was a native of England. Our subject's mother was of Irish parentage. Edwin M. was educated in the graded and high schools of Vancouver, and when fifteen took up the painting business, which he had learned while attending school, by working mornings and evenings and Saturdays. All told, he served about five years as an apprentice and learned every department of the business, as house painting, carriage painting, sign painting, and so forth. In 1897, he went to Pendleton and followed his trade for wages and also did contracting there and in Portland for a period of five years. Then he came to Moro, primarily to play baseball, and opened a business here in which he has succeeded splendidly. In addition to ordinary painting, he has painted railway coaches and does much fine work. Previous to coming to Moro, he had played semi-professionally for six years in various teams, being mostly in demand as pitcher, having also played as second baseman. He came to Moro as stated, and for the past two seasons has been captain of the Moro team, and is one of the best players in this part of the county. He has traveled to various portions of the state, was in Burns and Canyon City and has made a good record for himself in this capacity.

On June 18, 1902, at Portland, Oregon, Mr. Meach married Maude B. Carter, a native of Michigan, and the daughter of John Carter, also a native of Michigan. He now lives in Portland and does a general carpentering and millwright business. He married Miss Bowen, who has since died. Mr. Meach has the following named brothers and sisters, Clyde and Debs, aged sixteen and eight, respectively, at the father's home in Portland; Ethel, wife of William Feister, a railroad man in Pomeroy, Washington; Daisy, the wife of Dudley Evans, a deputy health officer in Portland; Minnie, Isabel, Blanche and Helen at the father's home in Portland. Mr. and Mrs. Meach have one child, Mearle, aged one and one-half years.

Politically, Mr. Meach is a Democrat, but not active in this capacity. He is an industrious man and attends closely to business, being governed by the motto that "What is worth doing at all is worth doing well." This has brought him good success and a splendid standing in the community.

ERNEST A. MEDLER, a prosperous farmer residing four miles northeast of Wasco, Sherman county, was born in Cooper county, Missouri, February 22, 1867. His parents were John and Eliza J. (Hull) Medler, mentioned in another portion of this work.

Until his parents came to Sherman county, in 1881, our subject remained with them, and he was with his father here when the family's house in Walla Walla, Washington, was burned, involving the loss of his mother and two of her children. He was educated in the district schools of Willamette valley and Sherman county. A few months before he attained his majority Mr. Medler began life for himself. He associated himself with his brother Henry, under the firm name of Medler Brothers, and they purchased nine hundred and sixty acres of land and began farming on an extensive scale; principally stock-raising. They had limited capital but plenty of credit, and they bought nine thousand dollars worth of land and stock on credit. For ten years they continued in partnership; having paid all indebtedness at the end of the third year. During the hard times of 1893 and 1894 they received something of a setback, but they gradually recuperated after a hard pull of three or four years. They owned a steam threshing machine and a two thousand dollar pedigreed horse. In the fall of 1899 they dissolved partnership and since then each brother has worked separately. At present our subject owns four hundred and eighty acres of land, all but eighty acres of which is this year in wheat. He has commercial interests in Wasco and divides his time between that place and the farm.

Our subject was married at Wasco, November

11, 1894, to Marion H. Myers, of San Francisco, California.

Politically, he is a Republican, but not active.

Mr. and Mrs. Medler have four children, Evelyn, Norma, Elsie and Chester. The Chronicle of San Francisco offered a silver cup to every child born on Christmas day, 1895. Evelyn Medler was born that day and received one of the cups.

CHARLES R. ROLLINS, M. D., an esteemed citizen of Grass Valley, now retired from active business, is also one of the builders of Sherman county. He was born in New Hampshire, on June 2, 1829, the son of Joseph and Mary (Russell) Rollins, natives of the same state. The father came from an old colonial family of English ancestry and died in 1874 in California, being then aged eighty years. The mother came from French ancestry and died in 1846 in New Hampshire. The first six years of our subject's life were spent in New Hampshire and then the family moved to Vermont. When Charles was fourteen, he went to Roxbury, Massachusetts, a suburb of Boston, and there attended a night school and learned the printing trade in the office of the Uni-Vicelum, a communistic paper, edited by Charles R. Dana, assisted by George Ripley. Dana, as is well known, later became one of the most prominent journalistic men of the English speaking world, being for years editor of the New York Sun. After three years the paper suspended where our subject was learning his trade, then he went to New York city and thence to New Jersey, where he joined the North American Phalanx (a communistic community and was occupied in driving the stage from Red Bank, New Jersey, to the community and boarded at the same house where Mr. Horace Greeley lived. Later he went to Massachusetts and studied medicine with Dr. Jerome Wilmoth, practicing during a portion of the time. After four years in these studies, the doctor returned to New Jersey and took charge of the machinery part of a large sash and door factory. Later, we find him in Indiana and in 1856, he took up land twenty-one miles south from St. Paul upon which was afterwards built the town of Farmington, Minnesota, where he lived and practiced medicine until about 1873, when he journeyed to California and passed the examination of the state board to practice in that state and then took a post graduate course in the Columbia Medical College, graduating in 1877 with the degree of Doctor of Medicine. In 1878, he came to the vicinity of Grass Valley and took up land. A portion of the town now stands upon the land he took up. There were only forty-two white people then in the precincts of what is now Sherman county when the doctor landed here. He erected a store building and operated a mercantile establishment in addition to his practice. His riding was very extensive as he was the only physician between Antelope and the Columbia river. Later, he was associated in the mercantile business with his son-in-law, Mr. Moore, who is mentioned elsewhere in this volume, the doctor taking a personal supervision of the drug department of the establishment. Dr. Rollins was one of the organizers of the State Pharmaceutical Board and the State Druggists Association and has been a leading figure here for over a quarter of a century. During this entire time, he has steadily resided in Grass Valley with the exception of two years that were spent in Portland. Of late, he has retired from the practice of medicine and also from all active business, being justified by the success he has won in his life's labors.

In Massachusetts, when nineteen years of age, Dr. Rollins married Sybil A. Lillie, who was born in Massachusetts in November, 1829, the daughter of Henry and Charlotte F. Lillie, natives of Massachusetts. In 1886, Mrs. Rollins died here in Grass Valley. Doctor Rollins has one brother, Ira L., a farmer in Michigan. His father had one brother, Henry, an architect in Elsi-more, California.

To the Doctor and his wife, five children have been born; George H., in Rye Valley, Oregon, handling a mail contract; Edward, a barber in Portland; Nena M., the wife of Charles G. Staples, a confectioner of Spokane; Eva L., wife of Charles W. Moore, mentioned elsewhere in this work; and Charles M., residing in Grass Valley.

The Doctor is a member of the A. F. & A. M. and is a man of excellent standing and worth. In August, 1891, Dr. Rollins platted the town of Grass Valley and still owns a goodly portion of the townsite, as well as additions which he has since platted. He was the first practicing physician here, operated the first store and conducted the first hotel, as well as raised and threshed the first crop of wheat within the boundaries of the present Sherman county.

WILLIAM E. MILLER. The subject of the following biographical sketch is one of the energetic and industrious farmers of Sherman county, residing four miles northwest of Wasco. He is a true Oregonian, and was born in Sherman county near his present home July 29, 1867. His

William E. Miller

William H. Biggs

parents are Thomas Jefferson and Sarah (Ford) Miller, mention of whom will be found in another portion of this work.

Until he arrived at the age of sixteen years our subject remained with his parents. He then began life on his own account and when of age filed on a homestead, purchasing a half section later. At present Mr. Miller owns twenty-four hundred acres of excellent wheat land. He winters from fifty to sixty head of cattle and has been raising two hundred and twenty-five hogs yearly.

October 11, 1890, at Goldendale, Klickitat county, Washington, Mr. Miller was united in marriage to Mrs. Dora S. Harvey, born near Taylorville, Illinois, the daughter of David Fields. She died September 18, 1892, of consumption after an illness of two years' duration. She left two children by a former marriage to James Harvey, Walter and Myra. The second marriage of our subject occurred July 6, 1895, to Belle Pyburn, born in Benton county, Oregon. She is the daughter of Jacob and Susan (Mulkey) Pyburn, the former a native of Texas; the latter of Missouri. The father crossed the plains in 1850 while an infant in arms. The mother came in 1847. He was a prominent and influential farmer.

Our subject has two children living, by his second marriage, Charles E. and Laura J. Two are dead, Cassius N. and William W. Fraternally, Mr. Miller is a member of Sherman Lodge, No. 157, I. O. O. F., of Wasco, and the W. O. W., of the same place, of which he is second manager. Politically he is a Republican and has frequently served as delegate to county conventions. For twelve years he has been school director of his district, and three years school district clerk. At present he is in partnership with his brother in the meat business at Wasco.

Mr. Miller is an example of what pluck can do, coupled with energy. Though still a young man, he has made a signal success, financially in this resourceful country of central Oregon. He has an extended acquaintance throughout the county and enjoys the respect and confidence of the entire community.

HON. WILLIAM H. BIGGS, a retired farmer and extensive land owner of Sherman county, resides at Wasco, in a most picturesque residence, surrounded by a spacious lawn and large and beautiful shade trees. He was born in Belmont county, Ohio, May 12, 1831, the son of John and Charlotte (Coleman) Biggs. The father was a native of Kentucky; his parents (probably) of Pennsylvania, and were early Kentucky pioneers.

The father of John Biggs participated in many sanguinary battles with Indians, and was severely wounded while defending the block-house which stood on the present site of Wheeling, West Virginia. John Biggs served in the war of 1812, and like his father was a man of great courage. He was born in 1791 and passed away at Canton, Missouri, in 1854. In his younger days he was a shipbuilder and carpenter; later a farmer.

The mother of our subject was a native of Pennsylvania, descended from an old Pennsylvania Dutch family. Her father served throughout the Revolutionary War under General Francis Marion. She died at Canton, Missouri, two years after the death of her husband.

The family of our subject moved to Missouri when he was nine years of age. Here he was reared on a farm and received his elementary education in a subscription school. When nineteen years old—in 1850—he crossed the plains with an ox train, to California, where he remained two years engaged with varying success in mining. He then returned to Missouri, where he was fairly successful, financially. Subsequently he engaged in the forwarding and commission business at Canton, Missouri, on the Mississippi river, sixteen miles above Quincy, Illinois. Having remained there three years, he was, the following three years, serving in the capacity of a pilot on the Mississippi river. He then followed the livery business at Canton three years, going thence to Colorado during the Pike's Peak sensation. He remained there only a short time, returning disgusted, like so many others. Shortly after this he was appointed sheriff of Lewis county, Missouri, by Governor Gamble. Two years afterward he began trading in cattle, horses and mules, continuing until 1871, when he went to Deer Lodge, Montana, returning in the fall. The following spring he was back in Montana with a drove of five hundred cattle. In 1873 we find him in Missouri engaged in a variety of business enterprises, and in the spring of 1874 he took from Lexington, Kentucky, five head of fine trotting horses to Deer Lodge, Montana. Subsequently he went to California where for three years he was in the stock, and three years in the grocery business, located at Dixon. In February, 1880, he came to Sherman county and secured railroad land where Wasco is now built—on a portion of it—and seeded the first crop of wheat in the spring of 1881. He brought from California the first gang plow ever introduced in this section of the country. Although he possessed limited capital he managed to push wheat growing along and purchased more land. He now owns about eight hundred acres of which he has rented out a portion for ten years. He began renting this land at the time he was appointed receiver of the land office at The Dalles where he remained four years and three months.

In 1886 Mr. Biggs was elected a member of the Oregon Legislature and introduced the Maximum Freight Bill which passed the house but was defeated in the senate. After this he was appointed a member of the railroad commission by Governor Pennoyer, but owing to subsequent legislation removing the appointive power from the hands of the governor, he did not serve. In 1888 he was nominated for the State senate, and was defeated. In 1885 Mr. Biggs was at Salem, and was successful in securing the passage of a bill compelling railroads to place sidings where needed. Two of them were put in; one of these was named Biggs, as a compliment to his successful efforts in this direction; the other Rufus, after Rufus Wallis, on whose land a town was built. Since leaving the land office our subject has paid but little attention to political affairs. During the whole course of his busy and eventful life Mr. Biggs has ever remained a staunch Democrat.

March 10, 1859, at Canton, Missouri, our subject was united in marriage to Martha E. Ellis, born in Lewis county, Missouri. She is the daughter of Judge William Ellis, a native of Kentucky, born in Oldham county. His parents were Virginians of Welsh ancestry. He died in 1879 at Canton, Missouri. He was a lumber merchant and owned a farm on the edge of the town. For many years he was a prominent merchant in Louisville, Kentucky, and served several terms in the Missouri Legislature. For sixteen years he was judge of the county court; was an "old line Whig," but after the war was not identified with any political party. He was a trustee of the Christian University, and the only member of another denomination on the board, being a pillar of the Methodist Episcopal Church, deacon, trustee, steward, and foremost in every movement for the benefit of the community and very public spirited. At one period he was the second wealthiest man in the county. The Civil war left him much poorer in purse; he lost all of his slaves, but throughout the whole trend of the trouble between the states he was always a union man and did not favor the cause of the confederacy.

Her mother, Sarah (Cassady) Ellis, was a native of Kentucky as were her parents. She died in 1873. Our subject has one brother living, John H., of Canton, Missouri, a retired merchant. He had three other brothers who are deceased, Leonard C., Joseph and James D. They died in Missouri. He had one sister, now deceased, Lucinda C., wife of Thomas B. Jeffries. Mrs. Biggs has lost two brothers, James A., who died in California, and who served in the union army until he was severely wounded. Her brother William died in La Grange, Missouri. She has two sisters living, Elizabeth, wife of Christopher Agee, of Solano county, California, and Laura, widow of Samuel J. Davis, of San Francisco. Mary C., wife of John S. Pemberton, died at Los Angeles, California.

Our subject has lost two children; Leonard M., who died in 1861, aged fourteen months; and William E., who died in Missouri, in 1866, aged two weeks. Mr. Biggs has been a member of the A. F. & A. M. since 1852, and is a non-affiliated Royal Arch Mason. His wife is a member of the M. E. church and has been a Sunday school teacher for many years. She is a member of the official board and steward of the W. C. T. U., of which she is corresponding secretary and was for several years president. She is a member of the O. E. S. and past matron of Myrtle Chapter, Dixon, California.

JAMES H. SMITH is well known throughout Sherman and Wasco counties and is one of the substantial citizens of Grass Valley at the present time. He is practically retired from business, although he owns an interest in the firm of E. E. Porter & Company, one of the successful mercantile houses of Grass Valley. James H. Smith was born in New Brunswick, on November 4, 1853. John B. Smith, his father, was a native of Scotland and came to New Brunswick when fourteen years old, accompanying his parents. He followed farming all his life and died in New Brunswick, in 1901. He married Isabel Amos, who was born while her parents were crossing the Atlantic ocean from Scotland to New Brunswick. Our subject was reared in his native place and there educated. On October 19, 1875, he came west and finally selected a location between Dufur and Kingsley, where he commuted on a preemption. Four years later, he came across the Des Chutes and engaged in sheepraising, following the same successfully for twenty years. Then he homesteaded and bought land about nine miles out from Grass Valley. In 1895, he came to Grass Valley and engaged in the hardware business with George Bourhill. Later, he was in partnership with W. F. Weigand. In 1903, he sold out to his partner and since then has been practically retired from business, although he has an interest in the mercantile house mentioned. Mr. Smith owns a residence right in the center of town and several lots, besides other property.

In August, 1884, Mr. Smith married Mary E. Offield, the wedding occurring near Kingsley. In 1890, Mrs. Smith was called hence by death. Two years later, August 6, 1892, Mr. Smith married Callie Offield, a sister of his former wife, the wedding occurring in Lane county. She was born near Salem, Oregon and her parents are William H. and A. (Jones) Offield. Mr. Smith has three brothers; Thomas H., a sheep man in North Yakima; Robert, a merchant at Sisters, Crook county, and Alexander, who also has a mercantile house at Sisters, Crook county. He also has one sister, Agnes, the wife of Mr. Brownell, of Philadelphia, Pennsylvania. Mrs. Smith has one sister, Nettie, married to Augustine Risdon, an insurance man in Seattle. To our subject and his wife three children have been born, Mary B., Eltha and Leslie. Fraternally, Mr. Smith is popularly connected, being affiliated with the I. O. O. F., the Encampment and the Elks. He is past grand and past C. P. of the former order and has frequently been delegate to the grand lodges. He also is frequently a delegate to the political conventions and is a member of the city council at the present time. Of Mr. Smith, it may be said that his life thus far has always been spent in wise labors ever striving to build up and assist both the country and every one with whom he comes in contact. Thus, he has won many friends and a standing second to none in the community.

LOUIE L. PEETZ was born in Snohomish, Washington, on January 30, 1877, and now resides about two and one-half miles west from Moro, being one of the most extensive grain raisers of Sherman county. His parents, Carl and Catherine (Schott) Peetz, are mentioned elsewhere in this volume. Mr. Peetz owns in his home estate, eight hundred acres of good wheat land and rents twelve hundred acres besides of military and other land. He has the entire amount in cultivation and produces many thousands of bushels of the cereals annually. He is a thrifty, wise and progressive farmer and manages his large interests in an excellent manner. His education was received in the various places where the family resided before they came to Sherman county. And since that time, he has been closely identified with the interests of the county, while also laboring efficiently to gain his splendid holding of property. Mr. Peetz has not only achieved the success that was to be desired in both these lines but has also so conducted himself that he has won hosts of friends and is one of the popular and leading young men of the county.

On December 31, 1901, at Moro, Oregon, Mr. Peetz married Ora Barnum, a sister of the Barnum brothers, mentioned elsewhere in this volume.

Politically, Mr. Peetz is a staunch and active Republican, although he never aspires to office for himself. He is well posted on the questions of the day, progressive and public minded and seeks diligently to bring about those ends and measures which are for the best interests of the county. He and his wife are popular people and command the respect of an extended acquaintance.

JAMES B. VENABLE, the popular proprietor of the "Wheat Exchange" saloon, Wasco, Sherman county, Oregon, was born in Klickitat county, Washington, November 23, 1869. His father, Francis M. Venable, mentioned elsewhere, was born in Pike county, Missouri; his mother, was Jane (Hubbard) Venable.

Until he attained his majority our subject remained with his parents and rode the range for his father. He received a good business education on Chamberlain Flat, and when twenty-one years of age married and rented the "Dingle place" near his father's present home. Two years after he rented another, the "Hoss place," remaining there one year. Then his father gave him a quarter section of land, which he worked four years, and then disposed of the property to John Hull, mentioned elsewhere, and engaged in the saloon business in Wasco.

November 13, 1890, at Silverton, Marion county, Oregon, our subject was united in marriage to Kate Woolen, a native of that place. She was the daughter of William and Mary (Cooper) Woolen. Mrs. Venable died on her husband's farm, January 3, 1901, of consumption after an illness of six months. She left four children, Alva, Oral, Fanny and Harold.

September 23, 1903, at Wasco, Mr. Venable was married to Ida Mahar. She has two sisters, Minnie, wife of Charles Seeley, a farmer near The Dalles; and Nellie, wife of George Robinson, of The Dalles, an engineer. Politically, Mr. Venable is a Democrat, although not particularly active. He is an energetic, liberal-minded citizen and generous to a fault.

JOHN SIENKNECHT, a successful farmer and stock-raiser of Sherman county, resides two miles south of Rufus. He was born in Holstein, Germany, November 6, 1858, the son of Christian and Julia (Ruge) Sienknecht. Both parents died in Germany, the mother when our subject was only two years of age. The latter was reared by his mother's brother, Joachim Ruge, an old soldier who participated in the Danish War of 1848. He was a tailor by trade and died in Holstein.

Until 1874 our subject attended the public school where he made excellent progress and acquired a superior education. At the age of twelve he was qualified to pass examination for the government school, but acting on the advice of his uncle he did not do so. May 4, 1874, he came to Solano county, California, where he remained eleven years. Then he removed to Sherman county, coming with Caesar C. Huck, mentioned elsewhere in this work. He pre-empted a quarter, later homesteaded the same and purchased a quarter section of railroad land, both quarters of excellent quality and nearly all tillable. His attention is mostly devoted to wheat, but he raises fine vegetables and fruits, and rears stock, mainly for home use.

July 3, 1898, at the residence of the bride's parents, our subject was married to Lulu Gerking, born in Umatilla county, Oregon. Her father, William Gerking, a native of Missouri, was an early pioneer, crossing the plains with an ox train. Her mother, Montie (Stone) Gerking, is a native of Illinois, and lives with her husband at Tecoa, Washington.

Our subject has one brother and one sister; Henry, a farmer in Tama county, Iowa; and Annie, married and living in Germany. Mrs. Sienknecht has one brother and three sisters; Guy, at Tekoa, Washington; Myrtle, Grace and Maud. Our subject and his estimable wife have four children, Henry, Guy, Frank and Maud. He and his wife are members of the Christian church. Politically, he is independent. He has been school director for many years and has served as school clerk for about fifteen years. His home is pleasantly located in Gerking Canyon, named after his wife's father. In the community in which he resides he is a popular and highly esteemed citizen.

About one mile north of Mr. Sienknecht's place is the historic battle ground where the Indians and the Oregon Volunteers under Colonel Cornelius fought in 1856. The old breastworks and rifle pits are still in evidence.

IRWIN D. PIKE was born in Linn county, Oregon, on December 28, 1873, the son of Benjamin F. and Mahala G. (Denny) Pike, a sketch of whose lives appears in another portion of this volume. Our subject is the only child living, of his parents, and has removed with them in their various travels during his life, and he was educated in the district schools and in the agricultural college at Corvallis. The father was engaged in various enterprises in different parts of the northwest and our subject was closely associated with him in these activities and when they came to Sherman county, he went into partnership with his father. He secured land for himself and now owns one-fourth of a section and has an interest in four hundred and eighty acres with his father. In addition to this he farms twelve hundred and eighty acres of rented land and is one of the heavy grain producers of Sherman county. Mr. Pike is a progressive and thrifty young man and is gaining the success that his energy and skill merit.

On December 23, 1900, Mr. Pike married Nellie Z. Holder, a native of Linn county, Oregon. Since marriage, they have labored together steadily in conducting the farm and are among the substantial people of this part of the county. Fraternally, our subject is a member of the I. O. O. F., and is present noble grand. He is a Republican in politics and, although not especially active, was deputy county clerk for one year. Mr. Pike has labored with assiduity and display of wisdom in his occupation in Sherman county and the success he has won is truly merited by display of these qualities.

LEROY H. MARTIN was born in San Bernardino county, California, on October 16, 1858, the son of John R. and Jane C. (Brown) Martin, natives of New York and Pennsylvania, respectively. The sketch of the parents appears in another portion of this work. Our subject received his education during his minority and dwelt with his parents in the various places where they made their home. When twenty-one, he left Umatilla county and went to Union county and there on March 11, 1882, at Island City, married Amanda E. Buchanan, who was born in Tama county, Iowa, on January 11, 1864. Her father, William D. Buchanan, was a native of Trumbull county, Ohio, born October 9, 1829. October 16, 1849, the father married Ellen J. Buchanan, nee Cullen, his brother's widow and a native of Erie county, Pennsylvania, and born on April 23, 1829. In 1865 they crossed the plains to Oregon, settling in Union county. They now live in Harney county, Oregon. Mrs. Martin's brothers and sisters are named as follows: James A., in Montana; Monroe, who died at Boise, Idaho, on June 7, 1899; William T., of Baker county; Joseph W. and George L., in Harney county; Josephine, the wife of Joseph Spencer, of Union county, Oregon; Harriet J., the wife of M. A. Harrison, the judge of Union county, Oregon; and Eliza E., the wife of W. J. Martin, of Morrow county, Oregon. Mr. and Mrs. Martin have two children, Miles E., born on February 26, 1887, and Lola B., born December 20, 1888, both being natives of Sherman county and now dwelling with their parents. The following week after our subject was married, he and his wife came on to Sherman county, where he had previously filed on land, a mile northeast from his father's place. The country being new and settled with poor people, they were compelled to seek labor elsewhere through the summer. They saw much hardship and adversity but had good health and were thus enabled to pull through. Being of cheerful and bright spirits, they made the best of everything and soon began to make headway. They now own one thousand acres of fine land three and one-half miles from Moro, the county seat. The estate has two orchards, good well and spring and other improvements. They also own a residence in town and a third interest in a steam threshing outfit.

Mr. and Mrs. Martin are members of the United Presbyterian church. Politically, Mr. Martin is a good active Republican and has frequently been delegate to the county convention. When Mr. and Mrs. Martin first came here, the country looked uninviting and desolate but they came for the purpose of making this their home so they went to work with a will and the result is that they have made a splendid success and not only so but they have won the esteem, the confidence and the love of all who know them. Mr. Martin is a sturdy upright man of ability and Mrs. Martin is a genuine helpmeet and they are among the leading people of this part of the state.

FRANCIS M. VENABLE, pre-eminently a pioneer of Oregon, a highly respected citizen and a retired Sherman county farmer, resides three miles south of Rufus. He was born in Pike county, Missouri, October 25, 1825. His parents were natives of North Carolina. John Venable, the father, was a farmer and wheelwright, a staunch Democrat and a prominent, well-to-do and influential citizen. The mother of our subject was Rachel (Pursley) Venable.

Until he was fifteen years of age our subject lived with his parents in Missouri. Then the family removed to Illinois and remained there until 1853. At that time Mr. Venable had, for four or five years, been conducting a farm on rented land, for himself. Then with his wife, and one child, Mary, he crossed the plains with an ox train to Oregon City. When near Fort Hall his wife's sister died. She was quite ill at the time the party started. The first winter after their arrival, Mr. Venable worked for wages. In the fall of 1854 the family removed to Douglas county, on the Umpqua river. Remaining there one year they went to Marion county, where our subject rented land a few years. In 1859 they left for Walla Walla, Washington, and got as far as across the John Day, but owing to serious reports of Indian troubles, they returned to The Dalles and shortly went thence to Klickitat county, Washington, where they remained until 1864. Thence they returned to Marion county, Oregon, and were there until 1874. Here our subject purchased a quarter section of land. Returning to Klickitat county in 1874 he engaged in stock-raising, and he remained there until 1888, and then disposed of his property and came to Sherman county. He purchased this place—five hundred and seven acres—and the same is now conducted by his youngest son, Perry.

March 6, 1850, at Pleasant Hill, Illinois, Mr. Venable was united in marriage to Jane Hubbard, the daughter of David and Hannah (Morrow) Hubbard, the father a native of Kentucky; the mother of Missouri. The ancestors of David Hubbard were natives of Virginia. He was a Baptist preacher, and a graduate of a Baptist college in Missouri. He was one of the best known preachers in Willamette valley, and highly respected by all with whom he was acquainted. He came to Oregon in the same party as our subject, and died in Polk county, Oregon, over eighty years of age. The mother died in Pike county, Illinois, in 1856. David Hubbard subsequently married Mary Thurman, a member of the distinguished Thurman family. Allan Granbery Thurman was born at Lynchburg, Virginia, November 13, 1813; died December 12, 1895. He was an American statesman and jurist; a Democratic member of congress from Ohio from 1845 to 1847; became justice of the Ohio supreme court in 1851; was United States Senator from 1869 to 1881, and author of the famous "Thurman Act," compelling the Pacific railroads to fulfill their obligations, and was the unsuccessful candidate for vice-president, on the ticket with Grover Cleveland in 1888. Other members of the family were prominent members of the bench and bar and extensive farmers in Illinois.

Mr. Venable, our subject, has no brothers living; five being dead, James, Edward, Robert, Newton and Andrew. He has two sisters, Martha, wife of Preston Holman, of Illinois, and Nancy, wife of Joshua Zumwalt, also of Illinois. Four sisters are dead, Jaley E., Eliza, Sarah and Mary. Mrs. Venable has two brothers living: Goalman, near Endicott, Washington, and Gid-con, in Benton county, Oregon. Two are dead, John and Charles. She has six half-brothers and three half-sisters living; George, Frank, Joseph; Perry, in Polk county; James and Edward B., hop raisers in Polk county; Lydia, wife of William Ford, of Polk county; Isephenia, wife of Samuel Tetherough; and Amanda, in Idaho.

Our subject has the following named children; Andrew, a farmer at Columbus, Washington; John, at Rufus, mentioned elsewhere; James, at Wasco; Perry, at home; Mary, wife of Austin Smith, at Silverton, Oregon; Laura, single, at Wasco; Fanny, wife of Robert Payne, in San Francisco; Addie, wife of Antone Courtway, in Goldendale, Washington; Rose, wife of Ernest Weld, of Klickitat county, Washington. Eva, wife of Raymond Doane, at Rufus; Goalman, a son, died at Baker City, September 28, 1898, aged forty-one years, Walter, aged four, was killed in a runaway accident in Klickitat county. Martha, aged six months, and eight days, died in Silverton.

Mrs. Venable is a member of the United Baptist church. Politically our subject is a Democrat. He made two trips of six months each, from The Dalles to Fort Colville, freighting government supplies, without encountering any trouble with Indians. And in 1865 he made one trip with freight from Silverton to Canyon City. Mr. and Mrs. Venable, considering their age and the hardships that they have necessarily gone through in their pioneer course, are well preserved, and enjoy good health. They have a large circle of warm friends, have labored faithfully and have done much for the good of the country and their fellowmen.

J. HENRY KRAUSE, a highly respected and influential citizen of Wasco, Sherman county, Oregon, conducts a saddler and harness making establishment in that place. He was born in Germany, near Leipsic. His parents, J. Henry and Crestina (Wendler) Krause, were natives of Germany, where the father died in 1882. He was a farmer.

Our subject came to the United States, landing in New York, in 1879. Within a few days afterward he went to Florida where he remained thirteen months employed in a store. Going to St. Louis, Missouri, he worked at carriage trimming for a while, a trade which he had learned in Germany. One year afterward he went to Colorado where for two years he worked at his trade and, to some extent, prospected for mineral. Thence he went to Spokane, Washington, remained two years and one-half engaged in harness making, and from that city he went to Heppner, Oregon, where he followed the same line of business in Noble's harness shop. He was two months in the Puget Sound country, and two years in Snohomish county. In 1888 he came to Sherman county and opened a harness shop in Wasco. In 1890 Mr. Krause erected the convenient and well-appointed building he now occupies and where he carries on an extensive and lucrative business. He has recently proved up on a homestead in Gilliam county, Oregon. Mr. Krause is a single man. He has two brothers, F. Wilhelm, a harness maker, and F. Herman, a farmer in Germany, and one sister, Rosa, wife of Bernard Fischer, a landowner and proprietor of a blacksmith shop in Germany.

Mr. Krause, who is most highly esteemed in Wasco for his many sterling qualities of character, was two years in the city council. He is a member of the Methodist Episcopal church, of which he is trustee and treasurer. Fraternally he is a member of Aurora Lodge, No. 54, K. of P., of which he is a charter member and has been in office ever since its organization. He is Past C. C., and is at present Master of the Exchequer.

JOHN HULL, in every sense a progressive and energetic Sherman county farmer, residing six miles northwest of Wasco, is a native of the Buckeye State, having been born in Ohio, January 29, 1838. His father, Levin Hull, was born in Virginia, as were his parents, descendants of the distinguished American family of Hulls, who have won historical records as soldiers, naval commanders and prominent southern planters. The mother, Mary A. (Kaylor) Hull, was born in Maryland; her parents were natives of Germany.

Our subject was reared in Ohio until he was thirteen years of age, and there he first attended the district schools in his vicinity. He was taken to Illinois in 1851, and seven years later, in 1858, struck out into the world for himself. He rented a farm in Illinois which he cultivated until 1888, when he came to Sherman county with his son; one year later he was followed by the rest of the family.

In Pike county, Illinois, in 1858, he was joined in marriage with Mary F. Johnston, born in Illinois. When she was quite a small child her father died. He was a member of the old Johnston family, of Scotch ancestry, many of the members of which became prominent in the Revolutionary war and the war of 1812. They were early pioneers in Virginia.

Our subject has four brothers and four sisters;

David, a farmer living in Adams county, Illinois; William, a Missouri farmer; George and Thomas, also of Adams county; Rebecca, wife of George Shearer, a farmer in Missouri; Catherine, single, residing in Adams county; Caroline, wife of Squire Mink, of Christian county, Illinois; Mary, wife of Henry Nebergall, a farmer in Missouri. Mrs. Hull has two brothers and two sisters; Alexander, a physician, living in Missouri; Edward T., an Ohio farmer; Sarah A., widow of Amos Emmerson, late of Texas; Elizabeth E., wife of George W. Pine, a farmer in Nebraska. The fraternal affiliations of our subject are with Griggsville Lodge, No. 45, A. F. & A. M., of which he has been a member since 1868. At present he is unaffiliated with the I. O. O. F. and M. V. A. Politically he is a Democrat, and has served as delegate to every Democratic county convention for twelve years past. For twenty-five years or more he was school director in Illinois and Oregon, for six years road commissioner in Illinois, for four terms justice of the peace in Sherman county, and for six years treasurer of the commissioners. He came to Sherman county with practically no capital, and has since accumulated a competence.

JOHN RUSCO MARTIN is one of the substantial agriculturists of Sherman county and has gained his present holding by virtue of his industry and thrift since coming here. He resides now about three miles southeast from Moro, where he has a fine estate of four hundred acres. He has bought and sold much land since coming to the county and has largely given his attention to farming and stock raising. He was born in Chautauqua county, New York, on March 9, 1831. John Allen Martin, his father, was a native of Glasgow, Scotland and came to the United States when sixteen years of age, being a drummer boy in the British Navy. He settled in Chautauqua county, New York, and there married. Our subject was six years of age when the family moved to Ohio and there engaged in farming. Later, the father took up the woolen manufacture business and about 1850, moved to Pennsylvania and bought a woolen mill. Later he sold out and started in near Waterford, Erie county. Four years later, this property was destroyed by fire and then they moved to Wisconsin where he farmed until his death. In 1853, our subject, being one of a company of eighteen young men, crossed the plains with ox teams to Hangtown, California. For eighteen months he wrought in the mines, then bought a pack train and went to Salt Lake City where he met his wife and two children, who had come on from Pennsylvania. After wintering in Salt Lake City, they journeyed on to San Bernardino, California, where Mr. Martin farmed about three years and operated a steam sawmill for a short time. Then he went to Alameda county and did diversified farming. After that, he was in Los Angeles county and did farming for fifteen years. He operated a threshing outfit for a short time, but owing to the fact that he lost three crops in succession and to a defect in the title of his land, he lost nearly his entire property. Selling as best he could what little he had left, he came on to Oregon, landing here in May, 1880. After spending a year in Umatilla county, he took up the place where he now lives and since then, this has been his headquarters for his operations.

In Waterford township, Erie county, Pennsylvania, in 1851, Mr. Martin married Jane C. Brown, who was born in Green township in the same county. Her parents, Ezekiel and Catherine (Slauson) Brown, were natives of Pennsylvania and descended from Pennsylvania-Dutch stock. Mr. Martin has one brother, James, living in Sherman county, and one sister, Hulda, the widow of Dan Troops, in Geneva, Ohio. Mrs. Martin has three sisters living; Eliza, wife of George Rust, in Utah; Amelia, wife of Andrew McComb, in Utah; and Isadore, the wife of Mr. Peck, in Utah. Mr. and Mrs. Martin have the following named children; Dwight, near Marysville, California; Leroy H., near our subject, a farmer; Wilbert, in Morrow county, Oregon; Julius, in Moscow, Idaho; Harvey U., a farmer near Kent, Oregon; Elwin, at home with subject; Etta, single, living in Moro.

Since the organization of the Republican party, our subject has been a member of the same although he has not been especially active in this realm. For fifteen years, he has been school director and has always labored for the welfare of the country and community. Mr. and Mrs. Martin are excellent people, highly esteemed and among the best citizens of the county.

LADRU BARNUM, who is the assistant manager of the W. W. & M. Company Bank and warehouse at Moro, Oregon, is one of the most successful young business men of this part of the state. He has come to the front rapidly, owing to his worth and stability and is being prospered in his efforts excellently. Mr. Barnum is a native Oregonian, being born in Moro, on May 17, 1877, in the only house then standing in Moro. The postoffice was not established here until some thirteen years later. His father, Henry B., came to Oregon in the forties when a boy and settled in Wasco county, in about 1857. He went away once and came back in 1861 and took a squatter's right, later purchasing a quarter section with military script. He was one of the promoters of the military road and died when our subject was four years of age. He married Elmira M. Massiker, who was born near Portland, Oregon. After Mr. Barnum's death, his widow married J. A. West, and they now live in Tillamook county, this state. Our subject was reared on the old homestead with his brothers and sisters and received his education from the public schools. In 1897, he entered the employ of the M. M. Company, having charge of a store, which they opened at Klondyke in this county. After eight months of service there, he came to their store in Moro and two months later, entered the business college of Portland, where he completed the commercial course, receiving a full diploma. Then he returned to Moro and engaged in the same company until 1900, when he entered his present position and in this capacity, he has been operating since. Mr. Barnum has shown himself to be a keen financier, a man possessed of foresight and excellent judgment, which have combined to win and make the success that he now enjoys.

On June 30, 1900, Mr. Barnum married May Kunsman, who was born in Iowa where also her parents, John W. and Mary (Thorne) Kunsman, were born. The mother died in Moro, in February, 1904, and the father lives in Wasco county. Mr. Barnum has two brothers, Elvin E. and Artimus H., who live a few miles east from Moro. The three brothers own about three thousand acres of land, half of which is under cultivation. They feed from two to three hundred head of cattle each winter, generally have about one hundred head of hogs, mostly Berkshires, and do a general farming and stock raising business. They have three registered bulls and also raise first class mules. They use about thirty head of cattle and horses on their estate and are among the heaviest and most substantial operators of the county. Upon the father's death, the boys inherited three thousand dollars from the estate which is invested in this large farm. Our subject has a nice home in Moro and is one of the leading business men of the county. He has one sister, Ora M., wife of Louie L. Peetz, who is mentioned elsewhere in this volume. She was born at The Dalles.

Mr. Barnum is a member of the A. F. & A. M., being senior warden of the same and past grand of the I. O. O. F. and belongs to the Encampment of the I. O. O. F. He is a member of the Elks. Politically, he is allied with the Republican party and three times has been delegate to the county conventions. He is as active in this realm as his business will permit and takes a deep interest in the improvement and building up of the country for which he has always labored faithfully and wisely. Mr. and Mrs. Barnum are very highly respected people and are leaders in society, while they have hosts of friends in every part of the country, being widely and favorably known.

GEORGE W. BROCK, who stands at the head of a nice furniture and house furnishing business at Moro, Sherman county, is one of the leading business men of the county and was born in Illinois on October 25, 1857. Thomas Brock, his father, was a native of Tennessee and his parents of Virginia. The paternal grandfather of our subject fought in the Revolution and had one heel shot away. He endured all manner of hardships and afterward was frozen to death while hunting, after the war was over. Our subject's father served three years in Company K, One Hundred and Twenty-second Regiment of Illinois Volunteer Infantry, fighting for the union and his death occurred on January 15, 1888. He had married Margaret A. Etter, a native of Illinois, and now residing in Moro. Our subject spent the first thirteen years of his life in Illinois attending the district school and then the family moved to Missouri, where they remained ten years. During this time, he learned the miller's trade, then went to Arkansas, later to Texas and afterward returned to Illinois and in all these places, was occupied at his trade. In 1888, Mr. Brock arrived in Sherman county, having a family of a wife and two children and the capital of eight dollars. He took government land, worked at various employments and gradually improved his place, later adding one-fourth of a section. He also rented government land and farmed on an extensive scale. In 1897, Mr. Brock came to Moro and erected a building for a restaurant, which he operated for a little over two years. In February, 1901, he opened his present business and has since given his entire attention to conducting the same, having met with splendid success in it.

In 1886, while in Missouri, Mr. Brock married Alice Miller, who was born in Indiana where also her parents were born. Her mother, Susan E. (Stephens) Miller, died in Moro in 1897. Mr. Brock has four brothers; Thomas R., a farmer in Kansas; Isaac N., a railroad man in Missouri; Samuel J., a farmer in Sherman county; and Charles W., a partner of our subject. Mrs. Brock has three brothers; John I., in the Hood River Valley; Abraham H., in Idaho; and Edgar B., in Snerman county. She also has two sisters; Clara, the wife of Wesley Roark, in Indian Territory; and Ida M., wife of Horace M. Strong, who lives adjacent to Moro and mentioned elsewhere in this work. Mr. and Mrs. Brock have four children, Edith P., aged eighteen; Alice J., aged twelve; George H., aged seven; and Esther, eight months of age.

Mr. Brock is a member of the I. O. O. F., having been noble grand and delegate to the county lodge in 1903. He is also a member of the A. O. U. W., and is past M. W. of that order. He is a good strong Republican, has been delegate to the conventions and since the incorporation of Moro, has been a member of the city council. He also is justice of the peace and is one of the substantial and leading men of the town. Mr. and Mrs. Brock are both members of the United Presbyterian church and he is a trustee of that organization.

CHARLES E. HULL, the subject of this sketch, is a successful and industrial farmer in Sherman county, residing four miles northwest of Wasco. He was born in Pike county, Illinois, August 12, 1867. His father, John, a native of Ohio, born January 29, 1838, was a Virginian, and a member of the old and distinguished Hull family, distinguished in American history as extensive planters, military and naval officers. The mother, Frances (Stafford) Hull, is a native of Illinois. She lives in Sherman county with her husband, and mention of both will be found in another column.

In Illinois our subject grew up, attended the public schools where he laid the foundation of a good business education, until he was twenty years of age. In 1888 he came to Sherman county, accompanied by his father, the family following one year later. Here the father filed on a homestead and purchased a half section of land later. Our subject bought four hundred and eighty acres.

October 31, 1894, at Chico, California, Mr. Charles E. Hull was united in marriage to Miss Annie E. Gray, a native of Butte county, born March 21, 1874. She is the daughter of Jeremiah and Rachel (Meeker) Gray, natives of Illinois. Jeremiah Gray was a descendant of an old American family. He died in 1888. The mother lives at Chico, California. Her parents were well-to-do farmers in Illinois.

Our subject has five brothers and four sisters living: J. William, a miner at Taylorville, Illinois; Albert, a drayman at Goldendale, Washington; Frank; Delphus, a barber in Wasco;

Cecil, at home with his parents; Kate, wife of John C. Fields, living near our subject; Mary J., single, at Moro; Carrie, wife of Frank L. Morrow, a blacksmith at Wasco; Emma, wife of William M. Haggard, city marshal of Moro.

Mr. Hull is a member of Sherman Lodge, No. 157, I. O. O. F., of Wasco, of which he is at present noble grand. In partnership with Edward Miller he owns a steam thresher. Among a large circle of acquaintances he is highly esteemed and popular throughout the county.

ISAAC C. LARGE, proprietor of the Blue Barn livery stable at Moro, Sherman county, was born in Tennessee, July 9, 1864, the son of Perry and Eliza (Spurgeon) Large, both natives of Tennessee. The ancestry of Perry Large were members of an old and distinguished southern family, and several of his brothers served in the Mexican War. Eliza (Spurgeon) Large descended from a noted Pennsylvania family numbering many distinguished members through the succeeding generations.

Until he was nineteen years old our subject was reared in Tennessee, where he attended district schools and subsequently was a clerk in a general merchandise store. On attaining his majority he migrated to Oregon, locating first at Heppner, Morrow county. For five years he was in the employment of W. H. Rush, an extensive stock raiser, and he then purchased sheep and devoted himself to that enterprise ten years in Morrow and Grant counties. He finally disposed of his sheep and for several years was engaged in buying and selling stock. After passing a year in the Sumpter Mountain country, he purchased an interest in the livery business in Moro, associating himself with Will A. Waterman, a sketch of whom appears in another column.

June 30, 1903, at John Day, Grant county, our subject was united in marriage to Mrs. Bernice Moss (Moosier), born at John Day in 1869. Her father, Manuel Moosier, was a native of Connecticut, the descendant of an old New England family, and who crossed the plains with an ox train. Our subject has two brothers: Robert L., with the Palace Hotel, Heppner, and John, a resident of Knoxville, Tennessee.

His fraternal affiliations are with Heppner Lodge No. 69, A. F. & A. M. Although he is a Republican, he is not by any means an active worker in the party ranks. He has, however, patriotically served as delegate to county conventions. At the present writing he owns some rich placer mining land in Grant county, which property he leases to the Empire Gold Dredging Company. Mr. Large is an excellent business man, of sound judgment and one who has won the confidence of the community in which he is an influential and progressive citizen.

On November 1, 1904, Mr. Large purchased the interest of his partner, W. A. Waterman, in the livery business and is now conducting it alone. By his careful treatment of all customers and his pains to secure their comfort and safety, together with his strict business principles, he is receiving a steadily increasing patronage and his place of business is known as first class.

FREDERIC MEDLER. The subject of the following biographical mention is the youngest son of Bruno F. and Minerva J. Medler, and at present he resides with his parents, three and one-half miles northeast of Wasco, Sherman county. He is a native Oregonian, having been born in the county in which he now lives, July 25, 1883, and is, at the present writing in his twenty-second year. He has secured a good business education in the public schools of Sherman county, and assists his father and brothers in the multifarious details of farm work on so extensive a scale as they are conducted in this part of Oregon. Our subject has three brothers and four sisters living, Julius, Albert, Walter, Fannie, Mollie, Ida and May. One other sister, Henrietta, who was the wife of William Herricks, ex-county clerk and assessor of Sherman county, died in 1902 at Moro. Mr. Medler is a popular young man in the community in which he resides and numbers a host of friends.

Our subject is in partnership with his brother, Julius, and they operate their father's farm, raising annually four hundred and fifty acres of grain, mostly wheat. They have the best of stock and machinery, and the farm is one of the landmarks of Sherman county, being one of the very first improved here and producing one of the first crops of wheat grown in what is now Sherman county.

JOHN W. WATERMAN, of the firm of Waterman & Large, proprietors of the leading livery stable in Sherman county, resides at Moro, where he numbers a wide circle of friends and acquaintances. He is a true Oregonian, having been born June 22, 1878, near Waterman post-office, Wheeler county, named after his grandfather Waterman, who is mentioned elsewhere in this work. His father, John W. Waterman, is sketched biographically also in this volume. The latter was proprietor of a stock ranch, and upon this our subject was reared, and from which he attended the public schools, acquiring a good, business education.

Upon attaining his majority he secured land near Antone, Wheeler county, and subsequently purchased more until he at present owns three hundred and twenty acres. During several years he raised cattle and horses, and in October, 1903, came to Moro and purchased a livery business from George Eaton. June 1, 1904, he disposed of a one-half interest in this enterprise to T. C. Large. They have sixteen head of horses, ten rigs and the most extensive business in this line in the county.

At Caleb, Wheeler county, our subject was married to Carrie Wolever, a native of Indiana, born March 10, 1876. Her father, Sylvester Wolever, a native Indianian, lives at Antone where he is extensively engaged in cattle raising. Mrs. Waterman has one brother and two sisters; W. Frank, with his father; Hattie, wife of George Hart, of Malheur county; and Letta, wife of Charles Crowder, an Indiana newspaper man. Mr. and Mrs. Waterman have one child, Oscar L., born in November, 1903. Mr. Waterman is a member of the M. W. A., of Caleb. He is an active and staunch Republican and has been delegate to county conventions in Wheeler county, where he was quite active and influential, as he has been since coming to Sherman county.

WILL A. RAYMOND, one of the energetic and progressive citizens of Moro, Sherman county, is a contractor, builder and photographer. He was born in Lenawee county, Michigan, October 13, 1864, the son of Charles and Caroline (Golden) Raymond, both natives of the Wolverine State. The parents of Charles Raymond were New Yorkers, of an old and distinguished American family. The father of the mother of our subject was a native of Ireland; her mother was born in Michigan. Charles and Caroline Raymond are both deceased.

Until our subject was twenty-five years of age he continued to reside in Michigan, the greater portion of the time in Branch county. Here he attended public schools, receiving a good business education, and learned the trade of a carpenter. Later he devoted his attention to farming, and subsequently came to the Willamette Valley where he remained four years engaged in general carpenter work, contracting and building. He was at The Dalles, Falls City, and various other localities, going thence to Yakima county, Washington, where he still continued in the line of his business. He, also, divided a portion of his time between Montana and California. It was in 1898 that he came to Sherman county, locating at Moro, and one year after his arrival he opened a fine and well appointed photograph gallery from which he turns out most excellent work in that line.

Fraternally, he is a member of the W. W., of Moro, and No. 113, I. O. O. F., and the Order of Washington. Mr. Raymond has one brother, Fred C., at Nampa, Idaho. In his line of business our subject built the Methodist Episcopal church, the handsome residence of C. P. Ragsdale and many other buildings, the finest within the limits of the city.

WALTER MEDLER. The subject of this biographical article is one of the two youngest sons of Bruno F. Medler, one of the leading citizens of Sherman county. The latter was born in Germany, and his wife, the mother of our subject, Minerva J. (McLavey) Medler, is a native of West Virginia. Walter Medler was born in Walla Walla, Washington, in 1880. In partnership with his brother, Albert, he handles two sections of land belonging to his father, Bruno Medler, which property they rent. They are successful agriculturists and are very prosperous young men. Important details of our subject's family will be found in the sketch devoted to Bruno F. Medler.

GEORGE E. JAMES, deputy county clerk of Sherman county, resides at Moro, the county seat. He was born in Yamhill county, Oregon, January 29, 1879, the son of George W. and Mary E. (Bennington) James, both natives of Illinois. The parents of the father were from Ohio or Indiana, and were descendants of the old James family, early colonial settlers in America. The first family came over in the Mayflower, and were farmers. George W. James enlisted in 1862 in Company H, Seventy-seventh Illinois Volunteer Infantry, and served until the end of the war, participating in many battles and skirmishes. He was captured at the first assault on Vicksburg and paroled the same day. He was a prominent member of the G. A. R., and our subscriber is a member of the Sons of Veterans at Eugene, Oregon, No. 78.

Until he was six years of age our subscriber was reared in Yamhill county, Oregon, and then the family removed to Sherman county. This was in 1885. The parents, who had come to the state in 1878, secured land nine miles southeast of Moro. Young James received his early education in the district schools in his vicinity. In 1894 the family removed to Polk county, and he entered the Monmouth State Normal School, from which he was graduated in 1897. He then entered the university at Eugene, where he pursued a thorough course in electrical engineering, and thence he went to Pennsylvania, where he enjoyed the benefits of a year's course in telegraphy in the Fisk Telegraph School at Lebanon. Returning to Oregon he found lucrative employment with the Wells-Fargo Express Company and the Western Union Telegraph Company at Eugene, and he was, also, six months with the Southern Pacific Railway Company as assistant night operator. At the termination of six months he rented his father's farm, and the latter moved to Portland, where he died in 1901. At present the mother resides at Moro with her son. The farm is now conducted by our subject.

July 5, 1904, he was appointed deputy county clerk, under H. S. McDanel. October 17, 1900, at Monkland, he was united in marriage to May Axtell, born in Iowa, September 25, 1878, the daughter of Oliver W. and Lizzie M. (Black) Axtell, both natives of Pennsylvania, and now living at Moro. The father is a retired farmer who came to Sherman county in 1886. Our subject has no brothers living; one, Arthur F., died at the age of five years in Sherman county. Mr. James has three sisters; Luella L., wife of J. C. Teale, a farmer near Monkland; Metta G., wife of Perry C. Axtell, of Monkland; and Jerusha C., wife of James W. Hollenback, of Moro. Mr. and Mrs. James have one boy, Earl, born July 23, 1903. Mrs. James has four brothers and two sisters living: Perry C., at Monkland; Chester, a school boy at Moro; Herschel and Herbert, twins and school boys; Bertha V., wife of Robert K. Hartsock, of Albany, Oregon; and Nanna C., a school girl. Another sisters, Nellie, died in Iowa in childhood.

JULIUS MEDLER. The subject of this sketch, one of the younger members of the Medler family, is a Sherman county farmer and general business man. He was born in Cabell county, West Virginia, September 30, 1869. His father, Bruno F. Medler, who is mentioned fully in another part of this volume, is one of the most substantial and prominent citizens of Sherman county. He was born in Germany, October 2, 1839. The mother of our subject, Minerva J.

(McLavey) Medler, was born in West Virginia. Her ancestors were Pennsylvanians.

Julius Medler, our subject, is a single man and resides with his parents, taking an active part in the cultivation of the farm. He was educated in the public schools of Sherman county, and at Walla Walla, Washington. Politically the principles of Mr. Medler are in line with those of the Democratic party.

Mr. Medler is in partnership with his father and brother, Frederic, in farming the old home place of seven hundred acres. They handle about four hundred and fifty acres to wheat annually, and have the place fully equipped with all modern conveniences and machinery, among which may be mentioned the combined harvester which requires thirty-two horses to operate and which harvests and threshes thirty-five acres of wheat in one day.

PRESTON A. HAMILTON, an energetic young business man in Sherman county, is proprietor of the steam laundry at Moro, Oregon, of which state he is a native, having been born at Prineville, Crook county, March 10, 1879. His father, George W. Hamilton, was a native of Kansas City, Missouri; his father of Scotland, his mother of Wales. The father of our subject died at Fossil, Wheeler county, Oregon, in the fall of 1898. He came to the state in 1853 with his parents, crossing the plains with an ox train, via The Dalles. His father conducted a grist mill at Salem, the capital, for a number of years. He worked, also, for quite an extended period in the Salem woolen mills, being a weaver by trade. He was among the first weavers employed in Oregon City. He was married in Salem. Our subject's mother, Cynthia (Pugh) Hamilton, is a native of Kansas; her parents of Scotland. At present she lives with the subject at Moro. She crossed the plains in 1860, going to Marysville, California. In 1872, the family removed to Salem, Oregon, and later went to Wheeler county, where her father engaged in the stock business. He died in Fossil in the spring of 1896.

In 1878 our subject's parents moved to Prineville where they engaged in the stock business. It was at Prineville that he laid the foundation of an excellent business education and was, also, three years at the Northwestern University, at Salem. He then learned the machinist's trade at Portland, returning to Fossil in 1903. Here he assumed charge of the electric plant for several months, going thence to Condon, Gilliam county, where he installed an electric plant and conducted the same two months. Mr. Hamilton then came to Moro, opened a fine steam laundry in which he placed three thousand five hundred dollars worth of the latest improved machinery, including a ten-horse power steam engine. He has established agencies in Sherman, Wheeler and Crook counties, and is doing as good work as can be found anywhere on the northwestern coast.

Our subject is single. Fraternally his affiliations are with Fossil Lodge, No. 110, I. O. O. F., and the W. W. Politically he is in line with the principles of the Republican party, although by no means an active politician. It should be here remarked that the father of our subject was a very successful cattle raiser, an influential citizen and one who was highly respected by all. Our subject is an only child.

CHARLES K. COCHRAN is one of the largest landholders and most extensive farmers in the northern portion of Sherman county. He is a southerner by birth, the place of his nativity being Macon county, North Carolina, and the date June 29, 1869. He is the son of Washington and Amanda (Davis) Cochran, the father a native North Carolinian; the mother a native of Scotland. The ancestry of the father were Irish. The latter was a farmer, but served four years in the confederate army during the Civil War. Following the close of the trouble he returned to his farm and remained a staunch Republican until the day of his death, in 1899. He was a highly esteemed and respected citizen throughout his life. The mother of our subject passed away when he was about seven years of age.

The subject of this sketch, Charles K. Cochran, was educated in the public schools and worked with his father on the farm until he was twenty-two years old. He then went to Cripple Creek, Colorado, and visited other mining towns, and worked at various employments for eighteen years. After that he came to The Dalles, Oregon, where he found employment on the sheep ranch of H. W. Wells, near Bakeoven, Wasco county. Here he remained two years and then engaged in the same business for himself two years, and was eminently successful. Purchasing a section of land four miles south of Moro he began raising cattle, having at present two hundred and seventy-five head on his place. He has the present season (spring of 1905) one thousand four hundred acres in wheat, and for a range he rents seven sections of land. In June, 1904, Mr. Cochran opened a meat market in Moro.

May 10, 1896, at the residence of the bride's parents, our subject was united in marriage to Mary O. Powell, born in Prineville, Crook county, Oregon. She is the daughter of J. Marion and Elza (Barr) Powell, who crossed the plains with ox teams and were married in the Willamette Valley. Our subject has one brother, three half-brothers, three sisters and three half-sisters, viz.: James, of Grass Valley; William, on subject's ranch; Edward and Harley, both at home in North Carolina; Jennie, wife of Ransom Brown, a blacksmith and wagon maker, of Highlands, North Carolina; Emma, wife of Robert Bethel, of Crescent City, Florida; Sarah, wife of Jesse Dewese, a farmer near Hewitts, North Carolina; Hattie, Carrie, and Ollie, all single and at the old home in North Carolina.

To Mr. and Mrs. Cochran have been born four boys, Loy, Lorin, Clarence and Norval. Our subject is a member of Eureka Lodge, No. 121, A. F. & A. M., of Moro, and No. 113, I. O. O. F. His political affiliations are with the Republican party. He is a man of sterling character, honest and upright in his dealings, and of superior business sagacity and sound judgment. Socially and in a business way he has won, and retains the confidence of his acquaintances and numbers a wide circle of friends.

ALBERT MEDLER, who, with his brother, Walter, rents two sections of his father's land, which they cultivate together, is a native of West Virginia. He was born in Cabell county, October 26, 1875. His parents were Bruno and Minerva J. (McLavey) Medler, the father a native of Germany; the mother of West Virginia, and who are mentioned prominently in another portion of this work. Our subject came to Sherman county with his parents at a very early age and it may be said that his life has been passed in this vicinity. Here he received the education offered by the public schools of Oregon, and here he worked with his father and brothers on the home farm. He is an industrious young man of most exemplary habits, and numbers many friends in a wide circle of acquaintances.

FRANK MEDLER. The subject of our biographical sketch is one of the enterprising family of Medlers who have accomplished so much in the settlement and upbuilding of Sherman county, and who reside six miles northeast of Rufus. He was born in Cabell county, West Virginia, the son of John and Eliza J. (Hull) Medler, mentioned elsewhere.

In the public schools of West Virginia and in Sherman county our subject received a good business education, worked on his father's farm and at various other pursuits. February 9, 1895, near Grant, he was united in marriage to Miss Hattie M. Lovelace, born in Marion county, Oregon. She is the daughter of Almanson and Allie (White) Lovelace. The father is living in Vancouver, Washington; the mother is now the wife of Mr. Peter Fleck, of Rufus. Mrs. Medler has three half-brothers, James and Joseph Brady, and Roy Fleck, all farmers and residents of Gilliam county, Oregon. Mr. and Mrs. Medler have two children living: Francis J., born March 24, 1898; Della M., born November 8, 1903. They have lost two little girls, Idabel, born September 17, 1900, and died February 1, 1904; Winnie M., born January 3, 1896, died January 10, the same month.

Mr. Medler is a member of the M. W. A., of Klondike. Politically he is independent.

PERRY A. VENABLE, who resides with his father, Francis A. Venable, and whose farm he conducts, three miles south of Rufus, Sherman county, was born in Klickitat county, Washington, September 7, 1875. The mother of our subject, previous to her marriage, was Jane Hubbard.

It was in Klickitat county that our subject attended district and graded schools and here he acquired a good business education. He, also, added to his by terms in the schools of Silverton, and Sherman county, Oregon. Mr. Venable has always resided with his parents and at present is the chief factor on his father's farm, comprising about five hundred acres of land. He has been thus occupied for the past seven years. Our subject is a single man, energetic and industrious. Politically he is a Democrat, but is by no means an active partisan in the successive campaigns.

BENJAMIN F. PEETZ, deputy sheriff of Sherman county, and one of the most popular young citizens, resides at Moro. He is a Washingtonian by birth, the place of his nativity being on his father's ranch, on the Snoqualmie river, Novelty, King county, eighteen miles east of Seattle. His father, Carl Peetz, mentioned elsewhere, was a native of Germany; his mother, Christina (Schact) Peetz, the same. At present she resides in Sherman county.

Our subject is a brother of Otto Peetz, assessor of Sherman county, a sketch of whom appears in another column of this work. Benjamin F.

Peetz came to the county with his family when he was about four years of age. He received a good business education in the public schools of Erskineville, and subsequently took a profitable course in the Portland Business College. He then engaged in the general mercantile business with R. W. Montgomery, who is mentioned elsewhere, at Kent. Two years later they disposed of the business to Balfour, Guthrie & Company, and returned to Moro, where our subject entered the employment of the Moro Implement Company which position he retained until he received the appointment of deputy sheriff, in July, 1904. He is a Republican, although not an active politician. Fraternally, he is a member of Lodge No. 131, I. O. O. F., of Grass Valley; and Cascade Lodge No. 303, B. P. O. E., of The Dalles. Mr. Peetz is a man of sterling integrity and of superior business capacity, and one who is highly esteemed in the community in which he resides, both socially and in a business sense.

At the home of the bride's parents, on April 9, 1905, Mr. Peetz was united in marriage to Miss Ethel Norcross, the daughter of W. A. and Rose Norcross, prominent farmers of Sherman county dwelling near Moro.

HENRY A. MEDLER, a progressive and prosperous Sherman county farmer, living two and one-half miles from Wasco, was born in West Virginia, June 24, 1864. His father, John Medler, mentioned in another portion of this work, is a native of Germany. His mother, Eliza J. (Hull) Medler, was a native of West Virginia.

In the latter state our subject was reared until 1881. He then came with the family to Sherman county. His education up to that period had been gained in the district schools of West Virginia. Until 1888 he remained with his father, and then purchased a section of land of the East Oregon Land Company. Upon attaining his majority he had taken a homestead, and he now owns an entire section, having sold one quarter to a brother. Three-quarters of his land he rents. He has built a handsome story and a half house, a commodious barn and other outbuildings; has a windmill and an orchard of three hundred trees. It is a model place in every particular.

April 9, 1897, at Moro, Mr. Medler was married to Miss Annie Miners, born in Illinois, April 22, 1874. She is the daughter of Everett and Margretta (Bose) Miners. Her father is a native of Germany, and is an extensive farmer in Umatilla county, where he cultivates a section and a half of land. Mrs. Medler has four brothers and five sisters; Henry and William, of Umatilla county; Martin, of Nez Perces county, Idaho; Cornelius M., deceased; Hannah, wife of John Hendricks, of Nez Perces county, Idaho; Minnie, wife of A. B. McMillan, of Auburn, Washington; Grace, wife of Gustave Rohel, also of Auburn; Elizabeth Pafley, who died in Juneau, Alaska, June 11, 1898; and Eva, the wife of Wallace Cargil, a farmer of Umatilla county, Oregon.

Mr. and Mrs. Medler have two children, Henry Arthur and Leona. He is a member of the A. O. U. W., and, politically, a Democrat, although not an active partisan. In the community in which he resides he is quite popular and numbers many warm personal friends.

Mr. Medler has three brothers living: Ernest A. and Frank, mentioned elsewhere in this volume; John G., an extensive farmer dwelling near our subject. He also had one sister and one brother who were burned to death with their mother when our subject's uncle's dwelling burned in Walla Walla, Washington, in January, 1882.

HARRY ORNDUFF, one of the prosperous and energetic agriculturists of Sherman county, residing four miles east and two and one-half miles north of Wasco, was born in Missouri, September 16, 1879. His parents were Samuel and Nancy M. (Everett) Ornduff, both natives of Ohio.

When our subject was three years of age his parents removed to Iowa where they remained nearly three years. Thence, in 1885, they came to Sherman county, and the father filed on a homestead and purchased another quarter section of land. On this place he died in February, 1900, aged sixty-four years. The mother is now the wife of John Medler, elsewhere mentioned in this work. Young Harry attended the Bigelow district school and worked on the farm with his parents until the fall of 1902. He then went to McCook, Nebraska, where he remained about one year, returning and renting the old home place, one-half section, from his mother.

March 25, 1903, at McCook, Nebraska, Mr. Ornduff was united in marriage to Miss Eva L. Carson, a native of Iowa, and the daughter of William and Annie T. (Everett) Carson. Her father is dead; her mother lives at Ione, Oregon, with her sons. Mr. Ornduff has three brothers and one sister; Joseph, a Sherman county farmer, at Emigrant Springs, eight miles from Wasco; Pearl, on his uncle's place, Sherman county; Ross, clerk for the Wasco Commercial Company, at Wasco; and Addie, wife of Charles Harper, a farmer in Wasco.

Mr. and Mrs. Ornduff have one child. Augusta, born June 26, 1904. Politically, he is independent. The mother of our subject is a sister of S. J. Everett, popularly known as "Vene" Everett, proprietor of the hotel and livery stable at Dufur, mentioned elsewhere. Mr. Ornduff is a young man of progressive views and of excellent business ability.

BENJAMIN F. PIKE is a retired farmer residing at Moro, but a distinguished soldier of the Civil War, and one who has experienced many adventures and vicissitudes in his career. He was born at Newburyport, Massachusetts, November 24, 1840. His father, Benjamin S. Pike, was a native of New Hampshire, a farmer and mechanic. For many years he was foreman in a shipyard. He passed from earth in 1852. The distinguished Pike family first settled on Ring's Island, across the river from Newburyport, about 1648. Nathan Pike, the great-grandfather of our subject, was a captain during the Revolutionary War, in the Massachusetts Line Infantry. Zebulon Pike, an uncle of our subject's father, was a lieutenant colonel, and was killed at Fort George during the War of 1812. As is well known the Pike family hold an annual reunion in New England.

Benjamin F. Pike was reared in Massachusetts until the opening of the Civil War, when he patriotically enlisted in Company B, Fortieth New York Infantry, in June, 1861, and was mustered into service on the fourteenth of the same month. He served until January 13, 1866, when he was mustered out at Richmond, Virginia. He participated in the battle of Williamsburg, and he first saw active service during McClellan's Peninsular campaign. He was in Pope's campaign in Virginia; Chancellorsville and Gettysburg. He then accompanied the Army of the James to Richmond where his command became a part of the Twenty-fourth corps, and took part in the capture of Petersburg and the surrender at Appomattox. Subsequently he served in the military police and provost guard in Richmond until mustered out. He returned to Massachusetts for a short visit, and then accompanied Colonel Morrison's New York Battalion to Mexico, joining Colonel Cortma's regiment in the Mexican army. The next year saw the end of the war and he returned to the United States, arriving at San Francisco in April, 1867. He came to Portland, Oregon, from San Francisco, going to Linn county. Thence he went to Umatilla county, where he located a sawmill on Butter creek, and then returned to Linn county where he married and remained about eight years, returning to Umatilla county, where he became one of the first settlers in the Cold Springs country. Here he secured land, remaining five years, going thence to The Dalles where for two years he was engaged in freighting. In 1883 Mr. Pike located in Sherman county, three miles from Moro, where he purchased land and has continued to add more ever since. He owns at present one thousand acres which is conducted by his son, Irwin D., his only living child.

May 7, 1871, our subscriber, at Lebanon, Linn county, was united in marriage to Mahala G. Denny, a native of Ohio, born October 30, 1842. She is the daughter of Christen and Eliza (Nickerson) Denny, the former a native of Virginia; the latter of Massachusetts. The father was a descendant of a distinguished Virginia family, the mother of Cape Cod colonial people. Mrs. Pike, the wife of our subject, has one brother living, John F., a retired farmer living at Albany, Oregon. Judge Owen N. Denny, who became prominent in Oregon affairs, died at Portland, in 1900. Another brother, Presley, died at Salt Lake City, Utah, in 1900. He was a leading attorney in that state. She has one sister, Sarah E., wife of William H. Goltra, of Albany, Oregon.

Our subject is a member of William T. Sherman Post, G. A. R., of Wasco, of which he is commander. He is also commander of the Department of Oregon, G. A. R.

Mrs. Pike was about eight years old when her family crossed the plains in 1852 with fifty-two wagons in the train. The party was constantly annoyed by Indians, who ran off their stock and committed other depredations. They, also, captured two men of the party, who escaped three weeks later. While on this perilous trip her father contracted typhoid fever, dying one week after their arrival in Linn county. Judge Owen Denny, her deceased brother, was a minister to Corea.

Mr. Pike was elected assessor of Sherman county in 1896, and re-elected in 1898, and again in 1900, serving three terms in the office.

WILLIAM H. RAGSDALE, attorney at law and member of the law firm of Hosford & Ragsdale, Moro, Sherman county, was born in Missouri, January 25, 1872, the son of Christopher C. and Mary L. (Hampton) Ragsdale, who are mentioned in this volume in the biographical sketch of Commodore P. Ragsdale. At present the mother resides in the house adjoining that of our subject.

The latter was reared in Sherman county since attaining the age of ten years. Here he attended the public schools, laying the foundation of an excellent education, and subsequently was matriculated in the State Normal School at Monmouth, from which he graduated in 1896. Until June, 1898, he taught school, and was then elected by the Republicans county superintendent of instruction, and re-elected in 1900, receiving handsome majorities at each election. In 1899 he began reading law with J. B. Hosford, who had practiced in Moro for a number of years. December 23, 1898, he formed a partial partnership with Mr. Hosford, and in 1901 they were full partners. Mr. Hosford opened an office in Portland in 1904.

At the residence of the bride's parents, Sherman county, October 20, 1900, our subject was united in marriage to Lida H. Belchel, a native of Oregon, born at McMinneville, Yamhill county. Her parents were Charles H. and Mary (Sink) Belchel. Her mother is a sister of George Sink, mentioned elsewhere. Mrs. Ragsdale has one brother and six sisters; George, living at Woodland, California, where his parents also reside; Ella, wife of Warren Myers, of Woodland; Jennie, wife of J. B. Morrison, also of Woodland; Maud, wife of Thomas Collins, of Collins, California; Evalyn, Vera and Mary, all single. Mr. and Mrs. Ragsdale have one child, Evalyn R., aged twenty months.

The fraternal affiliations of our subject are with Moro Lodge No. 113, I. O. O. F., and A. O. U. W., No. 64, of Moro, of which he is past master workman. Mrs. Ragsdale is a member of the United Presbyterian church.

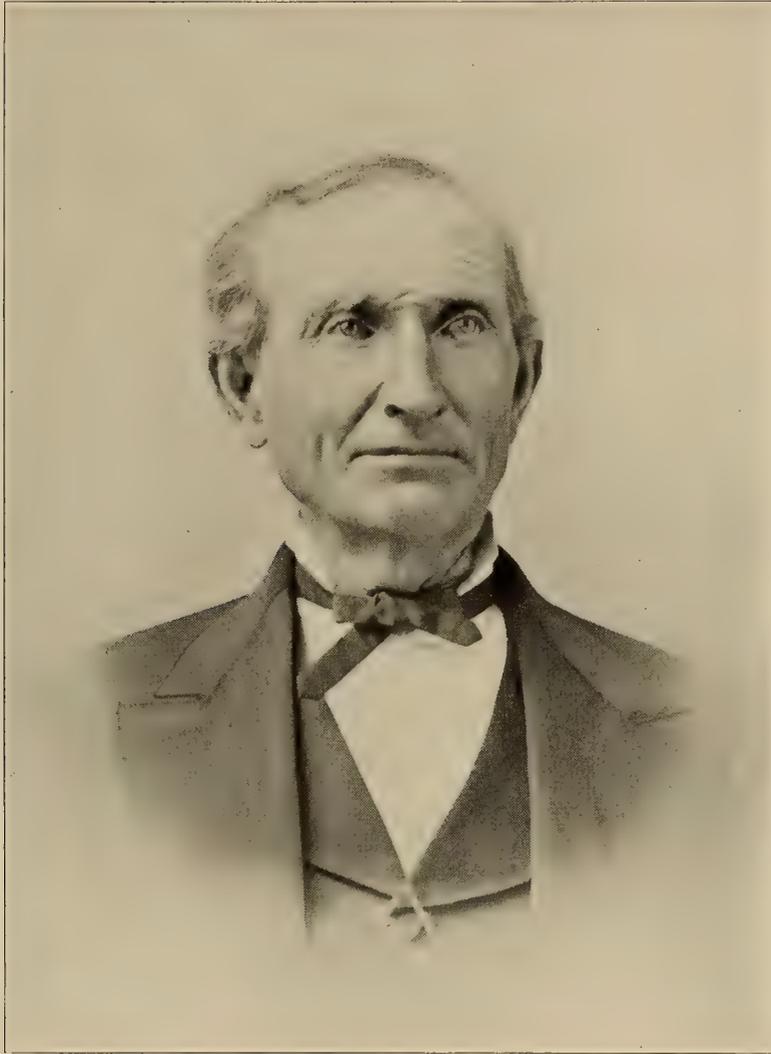

Mr. Ragsdale is a member of the city council, and was a delegate to the last county Republican convention. During the Civil war his father enlisted in the Second Kansas Cavalry, in 1862, serving until the close of the war. He was mustered out at New Orleans, having been in active service from the date of his enlistment. Our subject is one of the promising and rising young men of the state. He has recently completed a handsome two-story and a half house, Queen Anne style of architecture, on an eligible site overlooking the town of Moro.

COLONEL JAMES FULTON was one of the best known men of Sherman and Wasco counties, being a forceful and leading character in all good work of forwarding the interests of the country, as well as in pioneer efforts. He was born in Indiana while his father and mother were natives of Virginia and North Carolina, respectively, being of Irish and German extraction and were married in 1793. He was reared in his native haunts until the time of his marriage, which, also, was celebrated in Indiana. His chosen bride, Priscilla Wells in maiden life, was born in Kentucky, her parents being natives of North Carolina or Virginia. The family of Wells came on to the territory now embraced in Kentucky in very early days and, in fact, Mrs. Fulton's father was a scout for Daniel Boone, which celebrity was a relative of the Fulton family. The Wells family was one of the strong American families of early colonial days and was well known, possessing many members who were personages of note. General Wells, a noted Indian fighter and pioneer of Indiana, was a member of this family. The Fulton family, also, was one of those strong ones which furnished patriots for the various struggles that fell to the lot of the colonists and the rising young republic destined to throw its shadow around the globe. Our subject partook of the strong pioneer spirit that was so developed in his family, and sought fields to explore, and determined to take forward in its onward course the star of empire that was shining westward. Soon after his marriage he took his bride and together they traveled to Missouri where they opened a place and remained for seven years. Then, it being 1847, his spirit burned to try the fortune of the westmost west, and, accordingly, he prepared ox teams and with his young family started across the plains toward the "mecca of the west," the Willamette valley. They threaded the unknown regions with the help of the light trail so recently marked out and in due time, after innumerable hardships, they came to the Cascades, having utilized their wagon boxes for ferries, as occasions required, especially having a hard time at Buck Hollow on the Des Chutes, where they had thus used the improvised boat. They made their way over the new Barlow trail across the Cascades and in the end landed, weary and worn, in the Willamette valley. After search, Mr. Fulton made settlement in what is now Yamhill county, and at once set to work to improve and subdue the donation claim he had taken. The next year, 1848, he went to California to mine, was successful and then returned in a Spanish sailing vessel to Astoria. He was a prominent man in all lines of worthy endeavor there from the start and was soon elected colonel of the militia. Later, in 1855-6, he served in the Indian wars, being private and quartermaster.

During his business life Colonel Fulton was engaged in general farming; stock raising and speculating in land and on stock drives. He used to drive stock to the mines and as early as 1857, he located a stock ranch east of the Cascades, his home being on Tenmile creek, but the stock being placed mostly east of the Des Chutes. The winter of 1861 was a hard one and his losses aggregated one thousand head. From the time of this move until his death the colonel was a resident of Wasco and Sherman counties.

On March 16, 1896 the summons came for him to lay down the cares of life and enter upon the realities of another world. He lacked then but one day of being eighty years of age. He had hosts of friends and many evidences of sincere mourning, widespread and universal, were to be seen on every hand. In January, 1902, the widow, aged eighty-six, was taken by death, being at the time in St. Vincent hospital in Portland.

Colonel Fulton always took an active part in political matters and held many responsible positions. In 1870 he represented the county of Wasco in the state legislature. In 1880 he was presidential elector for eastern Oregon. From Paoli, Orange county, Indiana, his birth place, he traveled by wagon to the coast and was a sturdy and progressive man. His mother Catherine (Lynch) Fulton, a native of North Carolina was a cousin of Thomas Lynch who signed the Declaration of Independence. She was, also, the granddaughter of Mollie Souther, who loaned the Continental Congress two hundred thousand dollars of Dutch money to assist in the prosecution of the war of independence. The families on both sides have not been wanting in that patriotism and stamina which marks the real American citizen, and before the United States existed they showed that same commendable spirit, and Colonel Fulton, a worthy descendant of such ancestors, lived and died a man of honor, uprightness and wisdom.

CAESAR C. HUCK, one of the solid, substantial German agriculturists of Sherman county, residing two and one-half miles northeast of Wasco, was born in Hamburg, Germany, December 24, 1847. His parents, John and Maria (Brunkhorst) Huck, were German born. The father died in 1861; the mother in 1856. For many years John Huck was engaged in market gardening on the outskirts of Hamburg on his own land, about ten acres which had descended from his father and several generations.

Our subject came to the United States in 1872 and remained nine months in Iowa. Thence he went to California where he purchased land in Solano county, near Dixon. In 1884 he disposed of this place to advantage and moved to Sherman county. Here he purchased four hundred acres and also filed on a homestead adjoining. Later he purchased more land and he now owns eight hundred acres nearly all of which is tillable.

Our subject was married June 10, 1877, at Dixon, California, to Louisa Hanke, born near Dixon. Her parents, Herman and Sophy Hanke, came to Dixon in 1857. They had been married in St. Louis, Missouri.

Our subject has one brother and one sister, John, a bookkeeper in San Francisco, and Bertha, wife of Richard Peterson, of Hamburg, Germany. Another sister, Ida, is deceased. Mrs. Huck has four brothers and three sisters; Henry, of Sanger, California; William, the same; Louis, of Dixon; and Charles, of Sanger, all farmers; Carrie, wife of Victor Thompson; Annie, wife of Woodford Ward; Minnie, wife of Harry Gallagher, all farmers near Sanger, California. Mr. and Mrs. Huck have seven children; Herman, a farmer near Wasco; Charles, aged nineteen, at home; William McK., aged seven, at home; Mary, wife of Isaac Ross, a lumberman of Kelso, Washington; Annie, aged seventeen; Bertha, aged fifteen; Hazel, aged ten, all at home.

Politically, our subject is a Republican, not active, but stanch enough to name one of his sons William McKinley. Both himself and wife are members of the Lutheran church. Our subject's parents were well-to-do people in Germany. There he received an excellent public school education. He served three years in the German army and passed through the Franco-Prussian War. Mr. Huck was apprenticed to learn farming and served two years. He paid his board the first year and the second received his board for his work. He was then fitted to assume charge of large farms and was foreman of an extensive plantation with from fifty to one hundred men under him, for two and one-half years. He then entered the army. At the expiration of his term of service he came to the United States.

OSCAR P. HULSE, who is one of the leading and influential citizens of Sherman county, and a heavy dealer in groceries and farming implements at Moro, is an Ohioan, having been born in Clinton county, July 10, 1855. His father, Paul Hulse, was a native of the Buckeye State; his parents of Kentucky. The family is of German ancestry. Paul Hulse was for many years one of the leading stock-dealers in Ohio, a stanch Republican and prominently identified with state politics. At various times he held every office within the gift of his county, and was closely connected with the anti-slavery movement and one of the leading spirits of the "underground railway" in Ohio. He spent much of his time and money freely in aid of escaping slaves. With the opening of the war he was so closely tied up with the movement for the liberation of slaves that it was impossible for him to go to the front without seriously hampering the work. Throughout the whole course of the war he was in close touch with the principal leader of the cause. He died in Ohio, in 1868, on the place where he was born and reared, and was sincerely mourned by all who knew him; a man of strict integrity and honesty of purpose. The mother, Mary (Lyon) Hulse, was a native of the same state and county. Her family came from Ireland with the forebears of the Blaine family, one of them the grandfather of Hon. James G. Blaine, and a firm and unalterable friendship has always existed from generation to generation between them. General Lyon, killed at the battle of Wilson's Creek, Missouri, during the Civil war, was her first cousin, and a life-long friend of James G. Blaine. At present she lives at Astoria, aged seventy-six years.

Until he attained the age of twenty-five our subject lived in Ohio. He was educated in Sabina, graduating from the high school. Subsequently he learned the drug business and studied medicine three years. He then opened a drug store, disposed of it later and went to Lafayette county, Kansas, where for nine years he dealt in stock. He was then located for a year in Ray county, Missouri, in the same line of business, coming to Sherman county in 1890. He purchased land and farmed until 1902, when he disposed of his property, a section, and engaged in the real estate and loan business. Disposing of this enterprise he took up his present business in March, 1904. Politically, Mr. Hulse is a Republican, but not active.

He has five brothers and four sisters; John; Squire, a Missouri farmer; Richard, in the insurance business; Charles, in Oregon; and Reed, a farmer of Sherman county; Sally, wife of William Reed, of Royerton; Martha, wife of Milton E. Hunt, of Clinton county, Ohio; Lillie, wife of William Taylor, of Washington, Iowa; and Jennie, a teacher in the high school at Astoria.

At Wilmington, Ohio, December 16, 1876, our subject was married to Mary A. Howard, born in Ohio, the daughter of Cornelius and Maria (Lytle) Howard, the father a native of Ohio; the mother of Pennsylvania. The latter now lives in Ohio; the father died in that state in 1904. Mrs. Hulse has five brothers and four sisters; William, James, George, Elmer and Grant, all Ohio farmers; Elizabeth, wife of William Clara; Ellen, wife of Thomas West; Diana, wife of Daniel Baker, and Minerva, wife of Cary Clark. To our subscriber and his estimable wife have been born three children; Roy, in partnership with his father; Guy and Ray, in attendance at the Astoria high school. Our subscriber's maternal grandmother (Roberts) was a first cousin of Elizabeth Meeks, famous in the pioneer history of Kentucky. At the time her house was attacked by Indians, who cut a hole through the door, she killed them and dragged them in through the aperture. She was not molested herself, but her family had many narrow escapes; the barn was burned, stock stolen, etc.

In conclusion let us say that Mr. Hulse is a man of sterling worth, popular in both social and business circles, and highly esteemed by all.

THOMAS R. MCGINNIS, a retired farmer, now residing at Moro, Sherman county, is a native of the Buckeye state, having been born in Carroll county, Ohio, December 2, 1855. His father, James McGinnis, was a native of Pennsylvania, Allegheny county; his parents the same. His grandfather came from Scotland. James McGinnis was a farmer, and was prominently identified with the United Presbyterian church. The mother of our subject, Mary (Ramsey) McGinnis, was a native of Ohio; her grandparents of Scotch and German descent.

The subject of our sketch was reared principally in the states of Indiana and Illinois. His parents removed west when he was an infant, subsequently going as far as Iowa, where he completed his education in Amity College, College Springs, Iowa. The twelve following years he was engaged in farming for himself in Iowa and Nebraska, where he secured land. These agricultural enterprises did not prove successful and he decided to cast his fortunes with the comparatively new state of Oregon, and, accordingly, in the spring of 1895, he came to Sherman county, without capital, and entered the employment of the Hon. R. J. Ginn, serving as clerk in the latter's store. At the termination of three years he purchased a farm containing three hundred and twenty acres, later selling the same, and still later buying more land. At present he owns four hundred and eighty acres, all superior, arable and tillable land, and one of the best ranches in Sherman county.

At College Springs, Iowa, January 30, 1883, our subject was united in marriage to Maggie Coleman, a native of Bremer county, Iowa. Her father, William Coleman, mentioned elsewhere in this work, was a native of Pennsylvania. Her mother, Mary (Woods) Coleman, also a native of the Keystone State, was descended from old Pennsylvania stock, of Irish ancestry. At present she lives with our subject at Moro. The latter has two brothers, John M. and William, both farmers in Iowa, and two sisters, Anna E., wife of John George, of Carroll county, Ohio, and Emma, wife of David McAfee, a Page county, Iowa, farmer. Mr. and Mrs. McGinnis have been blessed with five interesting children, who are living; Leroy, now at home and recently graduated from the Capital Business College, of Salem; Alice, aged sixteen; Forrest, aged fourteen; Iva B., a beautiful girl of eleven years of age; and J. Lewis, aged eight. Jessie, another girl, died April 21, 1901, aged sixteen, at the Lidgerwood Sanitarium, Spokane, Washington.

Mr. McGinnis, the subject of this brief sketch, is a genial broad-minded and progressive citizen, enjoying wide popularity and esteem throughout the community. He has won the confidence of all in his circle of acquaintances, and is a man with a clean record. He has been a staunch Republican throughout his life, with the exception of a temporary affiliation with the People's party in Nebraska, where he was a member of the state central committee. In 1900 Mr. McGinnis was nominated by the people's independent party in Sherman county for the office of sheriff, and elected, running ahead of his ticket, by a majority of eighty-six. In 1902 he announced himself as an independent candidate for the same office, was endorsed by the Democratic party, and elected by a majority of one hundred and ten.

BRUNO F. MEDLER, one of the most substantial farmers and prominent citizens of Sherman county, lives three and one-half miles north-east of Wasco. He was born in Germany, October 2, 1839, the son of Henry and Doris (Sense) Medler, Germans. Henry, who was born in Brunswick, Prussia, was for many years engaged in the manufacture of jewelry in Magdeburg, near Berlin. He died in Cincinnati, Ohio, where he was employed in jewelry work for many years. At this trade he was very expert doing the finest kind of diamond setting, enameling, etc. The mother, born at Magdeburg, died in Sherman county in 1883. The couple came to the United States in 1847 when our subject was nearly six years old. They lived in New York city two years. Here our subject attended the public schools. When sixteen years of age he, with his brother, John, were apprenticed to G. R. Downing & Sons, manufacturers of jewelry on Maiden Lane. Our subject only served one, while the brother served two, years. Close confinement undermined their health and physicians advised the father to place them on a farm. He purchased one in West Virginia. The father, who had rented this land three years previously, returned to New York city and remained three years, going back to West Virginia. Until 1876 Bruno remained on the farm, going thence to Walla Walla, Washington, accompanied by his half brother who had settled in the Walla Walla country in 1861. Our subject brought his family with him and they lived with the half-brother, Julius Wiesick, four years. From Walla Walla Mr. Medler came to Sherman county in 1880. He filed on a pre-emption claim, purchased three quarter sections of railroad land and engaged in the business of raising wheat. He harvested his first crop in 1881—sixty acres. Although he had, practically, no capital, he gradually increased his holdings. The half-brother came to Sherman county and, also secured land, which he sold to C. C. Huck, a sketch of whom appears in another column. Julius Weisick died at Grant, Sherman county.

At present our subject owns two thousand six hundred and twenty acres which is, mostly, devoted to wheat. Some of this land he rents, but the greater portion of it is farmed by his sons. His residence is a comfortable two-story house, surrounded with many shade trees and four acres of orchard. He is now retired, passing most of the summer months in his garden in which he takes especial pride. It is freely irrigated, and he grows the finest quality of fruit and vegetables. He is a partner with J. Marsh, firm of Marsh & Medler, in Wasco, and he has other commercial interests in town.

Near Huntington, West Virginia, November 26, 1864, our subject was united in marriage to Minerva J. McLavey, born in West Virginia. Her parents, originally from Pennsylvania, were born in America. She is the daughter of David and Mary McLavey, the mother a native of Pennsylvania. They both died in West Virginia on the old home place. Our subject has one brother, John, mentioned elsewhere. Mr. and Mrs. Medler have eight children living; Julius with subject; Albert and Walter, renting two sections of subject's land; Frederick, at home; Fannie E., wife of John Hood, near Walla Walla, Washington, a member of the Hood family historically prominent in the annals of Walla Walla county; Mollie, wife of Elvin Barnum, mentioned in another column; Ida, wife of Howard Woolen, who rents one-half section of land from our subject; May, single, and residing at home. Henrietta died in 1902 at Moro. She was the wife of William Herricks, ex-county clerk and assessor of Sherman county.

Politically, Mr. Medler is a Democrat, and takes an active part in the campaigns of his party.

He has frequently been delegate to Democratic county conventions and has served one term as county commissioner before the cutting off of Sherman county. He at one time was a candidate for the legislature but was defeated. Of late years he has given little attention to politics.

The paternal ancestors of Mr. Medler came of a race of skilled mechanics. His great-grandfather was a saddler to the Duke of Brunswick. Personally he is a popular man and a progressive, influential citizen.

Mr. Medler operated the first header and thresher in the territory now embraced in Sherman county. In 1881 he cut and threshed all the wheat and other small grain grown between the John Day and the Des Chutes rivers.

DE WITT C. IRELAND, senior member of the firm of Ireland & Son, printers and publishers of the Sherman County Observer, at Moro, is a veteran journalist whose career has embraced a most extensive field in the great newspaper world. He comes of good old New England stock, having been born at Rutland, Vermont, July 4, 1836, the son of William and Marinda (Ellsworth) Ireland.

The family of our subject migrated to Indiana when he was about three or four years of age, and he received an excellent education in an Episcopal school, the pastor of which, in addition to a judiciously selected curriculum, taught him the printing trade, at which he became exceedingly expert. This was in Mishawaka, Indiana. His subsequent career in the newspaper field is full of interest. Removing to South Bend, Indiana, when he was fifteen years old, he worked on a journal edited by Schuyler Colfax, who became vice-president of the United States under President U. S. Grant, three years later he returned to Mishawaka and projected the Free Press. This was on July 14, 1855, and the paper was conducted a year or two. Disposing of this property he went to Detroit, Michigan, where he was engaged by Wilbur F. Story, of the Detroit Free Press, as a reporter. From here he went to St. Paul, Minnesota, where he was connected with the Pioneer Press. At one period he was superintendent of the penitentiary printing office, at Jackson, Michigan. While there he invented a scientific gear for printing presses, and later worked for the eminent old-time journalist, Horace Greeley, on the New York Tribune, in the mechanical and editorial departments. Mr. Ireland was, also, for a time connected with the mechanical department of the great publishing house of Harper & Brothers, New York city.

Returning west as a secretary of the Egbert Commission of Congress, he visited New Ulm, Fort Ridgely, and so forth, in the effort to settle timber stealing and liquor selling on the Sioux reservation. He conveyed machinery for the steamer Anson Northrup, overland, to Red River—the first steamboat in the country. In the early part of the Civil war our subject enlisted for three months, but on reaching St. Louis the company was disbanded, and its officers tried to induce its members to join the ranks for three years or during the war. Returning to St. Paul he outfitted for Oregon, and with a mule train he crossed the plains in the fall of 1861, bringing with him the famous stallion, "Emigrant." While at The Dalles Mr. Ireland set up the first job press—a Gordon—ever put into commission east of the Cascades in the Oregon country. It came west via the "Horn" and was sent out to W. H. Newell of The Dalles Mountaineer. During five or six years he was more or less in gold mining. In 1870 he entered the employment of the famous Ben Holliday, assisting in securing the right of way for the O. & C. railway from Oregon City to Salem on the east side of the Willamette river. He then became editor of the Portland Bulletin, Holliday's paper, was previously city editor of the Portland Oregonian, during which time he employed Harvey Scott, its present proprietor, as editorial writer and as custodian of the Portland library. Going to Oregon City Mr. Ireland established the Enterprise in 1866 and subsequently the Astorian, in 1873; disposing of the property in 1880. Going to the Fraser river in 1882 he became interested in salmon canning, and afterwards he established a job printing office in company with F. W. Baltes in Portland at the instance of Henry Villard. Going to The Dalles he became editor of the Chronicle, and later for a few months he was editor of the Wasco County Sun. The flood of 1894 ruined the plant, and in May, of that year, he came to Sherman county and purchased the Moro Observer, subsequently changing the name to the Sherman County Observer.

Our subject has, by his first wife, one child living: Alba, a Chicago painter; by his second wife, Lillie, wife of Grant L. Rohr, an orchardist, of Moro; De Witt L., of Sidney, Australia; C. Leonard. The latter was born February 22, 1875, at Astoria, at present he is in partnership in the printing business with his father. C. Leonard Ireland was united in marriage, October 15, 1903, at Randall, Minnesota, to Laura Thomas, a native of Canada, the daughter of Samuel Thomas, also of the Old Dominion. Another son of our subject is Francis C., at present in the De Moss Springs Printing office.

C. Leonard grew up in the printing business and has been a partner of his father since 1885, with the exception of two years passed in Portland.

Our subject is, fraternally, a member of the A. F. & A. M., the I. O. O. F. and the K. P. He is a member of the Episcopal church and politically a Republican. In 1880 he was elected a delegate to the Republican national convention, at Chicago, which nominated President Garfield, and was Garfield's private secretary during the convention. Mr. Ireland is a broad-minded and progressive citizen, and one who has won the confidence of the community in which he resides.

HORACE STRONG, one of the leading citizens and successful agriculturists of Sherman county, resides at Moro, Oregon, the state of his nativity. He was born at Myrtle creek, Douglas county, January 2, 1869.

His father, John Strong, a native of Missouri, was a descendant of an old American family, who originally spelled the name "Armstrong." The mother, Margaret (Badger) Strong, was a native of Arkansas; her parents, members of a distinguished American family, were born in Missouri. Both families were pioneers in new states, each generation assisting energetically in building up numerous commonwealths.

In 1852 the subscriber's parents, then young children, made the trip across the plains with their parents. These families came from Missouri and located near each other in Linn county, Oregon. But up to that time they were not acquainted with each other. They acquired land by purchase, and here the parents of our subject grew to manhood and womanhood and were married. When our subject was thirteen years of age his parents came to Sherman county, where his father filed on land. In the fall of 1881 he harvested some wheat. But his attention was devoted principally to the rearing of stock. Gradually he grew more and more wheat until he had one hundred and sixty acres devoted to that cereal. At one period he owned three-fourths of a section of land, but he never cultivated wheat on a large scale. He died on the home place near Moro in 1891. The mother of our subject now lives at Newberg, Oregon.

The year following the death of his father Mr. Strong began life on his own account. He first rented the place where he at present lives, in 1897. It comprised five hundred and twenty acres, and was owned by three different parties. At different periods he bought out each of these partners. This handsome property is eligibly located three-quarters of a mile from the Sherman county court house, at Moro.

June 6, 1892, at Moro, Mr. Strong was married to Ida M. Miller, born in Kansas September 21, 1867. Her father, William, was a native of Indiana, and died when Mrs. Strong was four years of age. He was a member of an old American family. Her mother, Susan E. (Stephens) Miller, was born in Tennessee. Her brother served in the Mexican War and died from the effects of hardship and exposure on his way home. His name was Hiram, and he was descended from the old American family of Stephens, distinguished in war, literature and law.

Mr. Strong, our subject, has three brothers and one sister: George E., of Sherwood, Oregon; Ephraim, of Wilcox, Sherman county; Harvey, with our subject; Ella, wife of A. B. Walford, in the employment of the railroad at Shaniko, Wasco county. Mrs. Strong has three brothers and two sisters: John J., mentioned elsewhere, of Hood River; Abraham H.; Edgar, of Moro; Alice, wife of G. W. Brock, a merchant of Moro, who is mentioned elsewhere in this volume; Clara, wife of Wesley R. Roark, of the Indian Territory. Our subscriber and wife have three children: Leon, born March 13, 1893; Trueman, born March 16, 1895; and Mable V., born October 30, 1898. Mr. Strong is a member of Moro Lodge, I. O. O. F. Mrs. Strong is a member of the Baptist church. Politically he is a Democrat, and although not particularly active, has frequently been a member of county conventions. He aspires to no office. He owns a substantial story and one-half house, pleasantly situated. In the community in which he resides Mr. Strong and his estimable wife are highly esteemed.

HON. ROBERT J. GINN, manager of the Moro Implement Company, of Moro, Sherman county, is a Canadian, having been born in Stormont county, Eastern Ontario, December 15, 1857. His father, Richard Ginn, was a native of Scotland, dying at Walla Walla, Washington, in 1899. His mother, Catherine (Kinnere) Ginn is a native of Canada, of Irish descent, and at present resides at Walla Walla. The family removed to Minnesota when our subject was nearly three years of age, in the fall of 1860, arriving there on the day Abraham Lincoln was elected president of the United States. There they remained ten years, and in the fall of 1870 came to Oregon, via the railroad to Kelton, Utah. Here the father, who had preceded them in the spring, met them with teams, and they all took their way thence to Umatilla county, Oregon.

They located one mile from Weston where they lived until 1897 and then moved to Walla Walla, Washington.

In the public schools of Weston our subject received his education, remaining with his parents until 1880. He then migrated to Sherman county, then Wasco county, and located a pre-emption claim, May 17, 1880. Alexander D. McDonald, now of Spokane, Washington, came with him and they were the only settlers one mile east of what is now DeMoss Springs. At that period no claims had been taken up south of them and but a few north, in the county. He sowed one hundred and eighty acres to wheat in the fall of 1881; harvested it in 1882 and hauled it to Grants, the first load ever taken out of the county. He purchased more land, originally railroad land, but later reverted to the government and school. He had one thousand two hundred and twenty-eight acres in one tract, and tracts of four hundred and eighty and one thousand and forty acres, which he purchased since, nearly all of which is tillable. Of this land Mr. Ginn cultivates one thousand two hundred and twenty-eight acres and rents the rest. In February, 1888, he left the farm and repairing to Biggs, where he conducted a warehouse and sold farm machinery for Staver & Walker, of Portland until May, 1892. Then he came to Moro and engaged in the hardware and agricultural machinery business. Subsequently he was one of the incorporators of the Moro Mercantile Company which was afterward sold to the Sherman Trading Company. In June, 1904, Mr. Ginn and Moore Brothers purchased the hardware and farming implement stock of the Moro Implement Company and they carry a stock of from $16,000 to $18,000 worth of implements and hardware.

In October, 1882, Mr. Ginn was united in marriage to Jeanette McDonald, sister of Dixon McDonald, subscriber's partner at Biggs, in the warehouse business. She died at Biggs, December 29, 1889. November 22, 1894, at The Dalles, Mr. Ginn was married to Carrie B. Coleman, a native of Iowa. She is the daughter of William and Mary (Woods) Coleman. Her father died when she was about four years of age, from an accident while operating a threshing machine. Her mother, a native of Pennsylvania, lives at Moro. Our subject has five sisters living; Ellen, wife of John R. Morrison, of British Columbia, near Fort Langley; Annie, wife of William Elliott, a Umatilla county farmer; Caroline, wife of Thomas Thompson, a farmer near Pendleton, Oregon; Maggie, wife of Alexander Brady, of Marysville, Washington, a Congregational minister; and Minnie, wife of Howard Haley, a railroad man of Walla Walla. Mrs. Ginn has two half-brothers, James and Leslie, farmers in Nebraska; Leslie was treasurer of his county two terms. She also has one half sister, widow of Robert McKeown, of Kansas. She has three full sisters, Agnes, wife of Archie Smiley, of College Springs, Iowa; Maggie, wife of Thomas R. McGinnis, ex-sheriff of Sherman county; and Mary L., widow of R. E. Hoskenson, of Moro. Mr. Ginn has two brothers, Walter and George, farmers near Walla Walla.

Our subject has six children; by his first wife, Arthur, Ellwood and Jennie, and by his second wife, Harold, Faith and Richard. Both he and wife are members of the Methodist Episcopal church. During the past seven years he has been superintendent of that Sunday school, and in May, 1904, he was delegate from the Columbia River Conference to the Methodist General Conference at Los Angeles, California. Fraternally he is a member of the W. W., of Moro, and Mrs. Ginn is president of the W. C. T. U., of Sherman county. His political affiliations are with the Republican party and in 1902 he was elected member of the state legislature, running far ahead of his ticket. During his term he introduced and secured the passage of the Portage railroad bill, from The Dalles to Celilo. He has served two terms in the city council and is serving his third term as school director.

WILLIAM W. WALKER, one of the commissioners of Sherman county and a substantial business man, resides at Wasco. He is an Oregonian, having been born near Dufur, Wasco county, July 6, 1860. His father, Washington P. Walker, died at Wasco, in 1894. The mother, Polly (Thompson) Walker, passed away at Wasco, in 1900. So early as 1852 the parents of our subject crossed the plains with ox teams, locating in Linn county, Oregon, where they remained until 1858. Thence they removed to a place near Dufur. Our subject was reared principally at The Dalles, where he laid the foundation of an excellent business education in the graded schools of that city. While the family was at The Dalles the brothers of Mr. Walker conducted the farm. At the age of twenty our subject went to Montana where he remained four years. Returning to Sherman county he filed on a preemption, to which he added other lands until he, at present, owns one thousand and seventy acres, most excellent wheat land. He owns a three-fourths interest in a combination harvester and a half-interest in a thresher.

Mr. Walker was married, March 25, 1889, to Mabel Love, a native of California and the daughter of John R. and Ellen (McBride) Love. Her father was a native of Canada, who came to Sherman county in 1880 with W. H. Biggs, mentioned elsewhere.

Mrs. Mabel Walker, the first wife of our subject, passed from earth December 25, 1891. October 26, 1896, Mr. Walker was united in marriage to Lottie A. Haskell, born in Klickitat county, Washington, the daughter of John Haskell. The marriage was solemnized at The Dalles. Mr. Walker has four brothers and one sister living; Arthur M., of Shedd, Linn county, Oregon; Joseph P., of Pendleton; James G., a Sherman county farmer; Harry H.; and Tempy J., widow of John Robinett, of Wasco. Mr. Walker has the following named children; Arthur, Samuel, and Walter, Lura and Frankie. Our subject is a member of the W. O. T. W., and is, politically, a Republican and has served frequently as delegate to county conventions. Throughout the community he is highly respected as a man of excellent business judgment, a patriotic citizen and a broad-minded, progressive man.

In 1880, Mr. Walker and Judge Fulton raised their first crop of wheat in Sherman county, which is supposed to be the first produced in the territory now embraced in this county.

SETH S. HAYES, a leading and influential citizen of Sherman county, and one of the best known and highly esteemed, is at present manager of W. A. Gordon & Company's Bank, at Moro. He is the son of Seth W. and Polly A. (Stillwell) Hayes, both natives of Ohio. The paternal grandparents of our subject were early pioneers in the Buckeye State. The family came to Linn county, Oregon, in 1853, having made the perilous trip across the plains with ox teams. A sister of the father died while crossing the Blue Mountains. Seth W. Hayes located a donation claim where now stands the town of Halsey, Linn county. It was a sad tragedy that ended the life of the worthy father of a worthy son. November 1, 1876, the elder Hayes was killed by an illicit liquor seller. For this foul crime the murdered was executed. The assassin first accused him of criticizing his business and then deliberately stabbed him. Seth W. Hayes was a staunch Republican, but never was an aspirant for official position. In life he had made a financial success and was a highly respected citizen. To the entire community his wanton, cold-blooded murder was a great shock.

The subject of this biographical sketch received the rudiments of a solid business education in the district schools of his neighborhood. He was then matriculated in the Portland Business College where he took a full course in book-keeping and commercial law, subsequently keeping books one year for the Grange store in Halsey. He then served as administrator of his father's estate, which included the townsite of Halsey. The elder Hayes donated forty acres of land to the railroad. The mother of our subject died on the old farm.

For the two succeeding years our subject engaged in the drug business, and then disposed of the property owing to the illness of his wife, remaining entirely out of business nearly two years, and taking her to various climates in the hope of regaining her health. Their marriage occurred in June, 1880, at Halsey. The bride's name was Almira Stevenson, a native of Michigan. She died October 10, 1881. In June, 1882, Mr. Hayes came to Sherman county where he secured land and engaged in stock raising for a number of years. In 1892 he was elected county clerk, succeeding V. C. Brock, the first clerk of Sherman county. He served two terms, and a few months after his last term, with a number of associates, he organized the Moro Mercantile Company, of which he was secretary until 1900, when he disposed of his interest and became connected with the Columbia Southern Warehouse Company and has charge of the three warehouses at Moro, De Moss and Hay Canyon. March 20, 1903, the W. A. Gordon Company, of Portland established a bank at Moro of which our subject assumed the management. He also buys grain for them.

At Halsey, Mr. Hayes was united in marriage to Ella E. Porter, born in Linn county, Oregon. She is the daughter of James T. and Nancy (Knott) Porter, the father a native of Virginia. The latter died at Harrisburg, Linn county, Oregon, in 1880. He came to Oregon in 1853, crossing the plains with ox teams, and secured donation land in the county in which he died.

Our subscriber has one brother, Daniel J., in Halsey; one half brother, Frank, at Hoquiam, Washington; and one half sister, Gertrude, wife of Edwin C. Pentland, a newspaper man of Eureka, California. Mrs. Hayes has one brother, James C., a farmer near Halsey, and two sisters, Elizabeth, wife of James McCartney, a retired farmer and carpenter, residing at Portland, and Melinda, widow of John McCartney, a brother of the above, living at Harrisburg.

Our subject has three children; Dean H., born July 7, 1888; Beulah, born November 12, 1893; and Seth Seymour, born January 5, 1897. Fraternally he is a member of Eureka Lodge,

No. 121, A. F. & A. M., and Moro Lodge, No. 113, I. O. O. F., of which he is past grand, both fraternities of Moro. He has been delegate to the grand lodges. Mrs. Hayes is a member of the Presbyterian church. Politically our subject is a Republican, but not active. He owns one of the finest residences in Moro, a two-story edifice surrounded by spacious grounds, and shade trees, orchard, etc., situated at the upper end of the principal street and but one block beyond the business portion of the town.

WILLIAM H. ANDREWS, a progressive citizen, sound business man and leading farmer of Sherman county, resides two miles west of Wasco. He was born in Kalamazoo county, Michigan, October 23, 1854. His parents, Simeon J. and Rachael A. (Wigley) Andrews, were natives of the Empire State, the father having been born in Herkimer, the mother in Otsego county. The ancestors of the father were members of an old American family; those of the mother came from England.

Until he was six years of age our subject was reared in Michigan. At that period his family removed to Janesville, Wisconsin, where the father purchased a farm two and one-half miles from town. Here our subject attended district school, but this was interrupted four years later by the removal of his family to Cedar Falls, Iowa. There he remained until he was about twenty-two years old, when he faced the world on his own account, going to Minneapolis, Minnesota, where he found work in various lines of employment. In the fall of 1884 he returned to Iowa, subsequently going to New Mexico, remaining there until the following summer engaged in mining. In August, 1885, he came to Oregon where he located his present home in Sherman county. He purchased railroad land, to which he has since added, and at present is in litigation with the Eastern Oregon Land Company over some landed interests. He owns a half section, and rents fifty-one acres from the Eastern Oregon Land Company. Recently Mr. Andrews erected a handsome and substantial Queen Anne cottage containing eleven rooms, bathrooms, store rooms, etc.

February 22, 1889, at the residence of the bride's sister, Sherman county, our subject was married to Miss Hester A. Benton, a native of Michigan, and the daughter of Clark and Mary F. Benton.

Mr. Andrews has two brothers and two sisters; Charles M., Ernest A., the former a farmer opposite the residence of subject, the latter living five miles west of Wasco; Augusta C., deceased, wife of Joseph B. McHenry, of Monett, Barry county, Missouri; Lillie M., wife of Albert Murchie, a farmer living one mile west of Wasco. Mrs. Andrews has four half brothers, one full sister, and three half sisters; Rose, wife of Gilbert Woodworth, of Hood River, mentioned elsewhere; Millie, wife of Lawrence Jones, a Michigan farm; and Myrtie, wife of Harry Cattell, also of Michigan.

Mr. Andrews is a member of the W. O. W., of Wasco. His wife is a member of the Christian church. Politically he is a Republican, one of the solid, energetic business men of Sherman county; popular with all and whose many social qualities have won a host of friends throughout the county and state.

WALTER C. RUTLEDGE, proprietor of the Moro House, one of the best hotels west of Pendleton and east of Portland, and one of the progressive business men of Sherman county, was born in Audrain county, Missouri, June 3, 1859. He is the son of Joseph H. and Margaret (Brown) Rutledge, the former a native of Virginia; the latter of Kentucky. His parents were natives of the same state, and among his ancestors were pioneers of the Jamestown settlement, and the family was represented with distinction by several members in the Revolution, the War of 1812 and the Civil war. Edward Rutledge, born at Charleston, South Carolina, was one of the signers of the Declaration of Independence; was member of congress and governor of South Carolina from 1798 until 1800. His brother, John, was a member of the Stamp Act Congress of 1765, and was, also, governor of that state. He was, from 1789 to 1791 associate justice of the United States Supreme Court. Joseph H. Rutledge, the father of our subject, died in Sherman county. The mother is a descendant of an old and prominent southern family, and at present lives in Ellensburg, Washington.

Until he was three years old our subject was reared in Missouri, crossing the plains with his parents, in ox teams, in 1862. They settled in Amador county, California, where the father was engaged in copper mining near Ione. Here the family remained five years, going thence to Woodbridge, San Joaquin county, where they remained another five years. Here our subject attended the public schools and alternately worked with his father on the farm. Subsequently he was two years with a carpenter in Stockton, California, going thence to Butte county. Here Joseph H.

Rutledge purchased a farm upon which they remained eleven years, removing thence to Sherman county, Oregon, where more land was secured fourteen miles south of Moro. Here the father died. The Rutledge and Ruggles families were the first settlers in that vicinity. Grass Valley, eight miles distant, at that period consisted of a small store and a hotel. With the incoming of settlers the need of a postoffice was experienced, and one was established in Joseph H. Rutledge's house, and he was appointed postmaster which office he continued until the time of his death.

Following the death of his father our subject continued farming on rented land, but May 1, 1904, he purchased the old Moro Hotel and, making extensive alterations, adding much new and modern furniture, he has made it one of the best hostleries in the state, as well as one of the most popular. In the satisfactory conduct of the hotel Mrs. Rutledge is a most important factor and contributes her personal attention to the dining room, kitchen and other details.

Mr. Rutledge has one sister living, Elizabeth, wife of C. H. Steward, engaged in the real estate business at Ellensburg, Washington. Mrs. Rutledge has four brothers and four sisters who receive personal mention elsewhere. She is a sister of Mrs. Jacob Rinearson, of the Vinton Hotel, Grass Valley, who holds a teacher's life certificate. Mr. and Mrs. Rutledge have four children, and all living with their parents; Joseph V., aged thirteen; W. Clarence, aged eleven; Jeanette, aged nine; and Francis, seven years old.

Our subject was married to Maggie V. Vinton, born in Butte county, California. Politically Mr. Rutledge is a Democrat, and has served several terms as school director.

FRED H. MEADER, engaged in the real estate and loan business, and a prominent wheat buyer of Wasco, Sherman county, was born in Albion, Maine, August 25, 1872. His parents were, also, natives of the Pine Tree State. George Meader, his father, is a descendant of an old and distinguished New England colonial family. He served eleven months during the Civil war in Company G, Twenty-fourth Maine Volunteer Infantry. At present he lives at Wasco with our subject. The mother of the latter, Julia (Hanson) Meader, is of an old Maine family. Her father was a farmer and school teacher.

Our subject was seven years old when the family moved to Dixon, California, where they remained five years. Thence they went to Petaluma, remaining eighteen months. In September, 1886, they came to Sherman county, and homestead land near Moro. With them our subject remained, attending the public schools and assisting on the farm until 1893. George Meader, the father, had one-half section which, it transpired, was Dalles Military land, and in 1898 the company took possession of it after our subject had purchased it from his father and sold it in 1897 to F. R. Messinger. Our subject brought suit against the company for the value of the improvements and secured a judgment and lien on the property for two thousand dollars. He paid Messinger back his money, and the company now has possession of land for which our subject has a patent issued by the United States government.

December 6, 1893, at the residence of the bride's parents, Sherman county, Mr. Meader was united in marriage to Mable Peabody, born in Saybrook, McLean county, Illinois. She is a lineal descendant of the old and distinguished Peabody family, well known in American history for many generations. Nathaniel Peabody was born at Topsfield, Massachusetts, March 1, 1741, and died at Exeter, New Hampshire, June 27, 1823. He was an officer in the American Revolutionary war and a delegate to the Continental Congress. George Peabody, the eminent philanthropist, was a native of Massachusetts, born at Beverly, February 18, 1795. He was an American merchant and banker and justly celebrated for his practical benevolence. He died in London, November 4, 1869. The mother of Mrs. Meader, Elizabeth Peabody, died at Wasco, in December, 1902. Her father now lives with our subject at Wasco. He was one of the first settlers of Sherman county, and for a time conducted the John Day bridge by virtue of a lease. He secured a homestead and other lands, and recently sold eight hundred acres. He feeds as high as five hundred head of cattle.

Our subject has one brother and one sister; Ernest, of Sherman county; and Lillian, wife of Harry A. Page, of Moro. Mrs. Meader has two half brothers, Edward and William Froebe, both in New Mexico, and one sister, Callie, wife of Sidney Blakeman, a farmer in Kansas. Mr. and Mrs. Meader have three children, boys; Harland, aged nine; Harold, aged seven and Glenn, a little fellow one year old.

Our subject is a member of Sherman Lodge, No. 157, I. O. O. F., of Moro, and the W. O. W., of Wasco. Politically he is independent. From 1897 until 1901 he was engaged in the mercantile business in Moro, where he erected the first brick building. Mr. Meader is a bright, young business man, liberal and progressive and numbers many friends throughout the county and state.

HIBBARD S. McDANEL, one of the prominent farmers and influential citizens of Sherman county, resides at Moro. He is a native of Delaware, having been born at Stanton, January 22, 1858. His father, Thomas McDanel, was a native of Pennsylvania, as were his ancestors, descendants of an old and distinguished American family. The father of our subject died in California, January 1, 1869. The mother, Margaret (Haring) McDanel, was born in New York city. Her parents came from Holland. At the present writing she resides at Oakland, California.

When our subject was but six months of age his family removed to Butte county, California, where the father was engaged in mining and the mercantile business. Until 1873 he lived with the family, at which period they removed to Oakland. He received a four years' course in the excellent public schools in his neighborhood; was subsequently in the graded schools of Oakland, and also profited by a course in the Oakland Business College. During three years he served in the capacity of clerk in a large business house in that city. It was in January, 1882, that he came to Sherman county where he secured land four and one-half miles from Moro. To this holding he has since added until he now owns five hundred sixty acres which he rents out.

Mr. McDanel was married at a short distance from Moro, February 15, 1891, to Mary Cushman, a native of California. Her father, Obed Cushman, was a native of Pennsylvania, and an early pioneer in California. He came to Sherman county in 1882, dying at Moro in 1901. The mother, Elizabeth (Hufford) Cushman, was born in Iowa and at present resides at Moro. Our subject has one sister, Kate, single, living at Oakland. Mrs. McDanel has one brother, Eugene A., a farmer living six miles south of Moro; and three sisters; Laura H., wife of Walter H. Moore, a Moro merchant; America, wife of Henry A. Moore, of Moro; and Cora, wife of David Vinton, a farmer living near Grass Valley.

The fraternal affiliations of Mr. McDanel include Eureka Lodge, No. 121, A. F. & A. M., of which he is secretary, at Moro; Moro Lodge, No. 113, I. O. O. F., of which he is past grand, and he has, also, been delegate to the Grand Lodge. He is a member of the A. O. U. W., past master workman, and he has served as delegate to the grand lodge. Politically he is a Republican, and frequently a delegate to county conventions; once a delegate to the state convention. At present he is serving his third term as clerk of Sherman county, and has been deputy clerk six years. Mrs. McDanel is a member of the Presbyterian church. Both socially and in a business way our subject is a popular, wide-awake and progressive man, and both he and his wife are highly esteemed throughout the community.

CHARLES BUHMAN, a prosperous Sherman county farmer, resides at Wasco. He is a native of the Golden State, having been born in Solano county, California, June 18, 1861. His parents, Detlef and Annie (Jahn) Buhman, were born in Germany. The father came to the United States in 1859, settled in Solano county, returned to Germany, and returned to California in 1861. He died in Dixon, California, in 1874. The mother still lives there.

It was in Dixon that our subject, Charles Buhman, was reared and educated until he was twenty-two years of age. He then came to Umatilla county, Oregon, where he worked a few months and then returned home, remaining eighteen months. In the fall of 1884 he came to Sherman county and located land four miles from Wasco, and purchased more later. He now owns four hundred acres of excellent wheat land, and a ten-acre tract on the outskirts of the town of Wasco where he resides, most comfortably situated and surrounded by many literary works of high merit and of which he is very fond. He rents his farm property. He is a single man, having three brothers; Arnold, a farmer, residing four and one-half miles from Wasco; William, at the home place in California; and Reinhard, at Dixon. He has no sisters. Politically our subject is a Prohibitionist. He is a popular citizen in the community in which he resides and numbers many warm personal friends.

MILON A. VAN GILDER. The subject of this biographical sketch is a prosperous and successful farmer living three miles west of Wasco. He was born in Livingston county, New York, November 4, 1854. His father, Hiram Van Gilder, also a native of the Empire State, born in Washington county, was a descendant of an old and distinguished Holland family. Three brothers formed what was known as the "Van Gilder Settlement." The father of Hiram was in the War of 1812; two of our subject's brothers were killed in the Civil war; Thomas and Eli. The mother of our subject, Juliet (Russell) Van Gilder, also a native of New York, born in Hartford, Washington county, is a descendant of one of the oldest New England families, a family that furnished two governors of Massachusetts. Hiram Van Gilder, the father of our subject, died in Nunda, New York, in 1897. The mother still lives at Perry, Wyoming county, New York.

It was in the old Empire State that our subject was reared until 1889. He became a farmer and carpenter, but came to Sherman county finally and purchased four hundred acres of land. In 1904 he increased the estate to six hundred acres. On this he erected a handsome, two-story house and large, well-appointed barn. This was in 1897.

March 26, 1884, at Nunda, Mr. Van Gilder was united in marriage to Miss Jennie Porter, a native of New York, born February 15, 1864. Her parents, Richard and Jane (Shepherd) Porter, were also natives of New York state. Her father was a descendant of the old Porter family distinguished for many years in American history. David Porter was an American naval officer, born at Chester, Boston, Massachusetts, February 1, 1780, dying at Washington, March 3, 1843; David Dixon Porter was an American Admiral, son of the preceding, born at Chester, Pennsylvania, June 8, 1813, and dying at Washington, D. C., February 13, 1891. Fitz-John Porter, distinguished in the Civil war, and a cousin of D. D. Porter, was born at Portsmouth, New Hampshire, August 31, 1822. He was a graduate of West Point and served as police commissioner of New York city from 1884 to 1888.

Milon A. Van Gilder, our subject, has three brothers and one sister; Charles, in the ice business in New York city; Frank, a farmer at Nunda, New York; Elmer, a cement manufacturer, at the same place; Julia, wife of Herbert Kenyon, of Perry, Wyoming county, New York. Mrs. Van Gilder has three brothers and three sisters; James, a Pennsylvania lumberman; Albert, and Delbert, farmers in Sherman county; Othelia, wife of George Knox, an attorney in Los Angeles, California; Julia, wife of William Clark, a carpenter at Mount Morris, New York; and Inez, wife of Morris Nash, of Sherman county. Mr. and Mrs. Van Gilder have five children, Inez, Harry, Vernon, Bryan, and Darwin.

It should not escape mention that Fort Porter, at Buffalo, New York, was named after Commodore Porter, distinguished in the War of 1812.

Fraternally Mr. Van Gilder is a member of Taylor Lodge, No. 99, of Wasco, of which he is past master, the first master of the lodge, a charter member and at present master. He has served as delegate to the grand lodge of the state. Politically he is a Prohibitionist and as such has frequently served as delegate to the county conventions of that party. He and his wife are members of the United Brethren church.

Our subject has a fine, though small orchard, and he owns several three-quarter blood Percheron horses. He is one of the solid, substantial business men of Sherman county, a broad-minded and liberal citizen in every respect. His residence is built in a very desirable and eligible location, surrounded by a spacious lawn which will, in the future, be irrigated.

COMMODORE P. RAGSDALE, the leading agriculturalist and stock raiser in the southern portion of Sherman county, resides four and one-half miles northeast of Kent. He was born in Missouri, December 7, 1869, the son of Christopher and Mary L. (Hampton) Ragsdale, both natives of Missouri. The father was born while his parents were moving to Missouri, just over the state line. He died in 1894, in Portland, Oregon. The mother, a native of Missouri, is a descendant of an old Virginia family, her father having been a resident of that state. She at present lives at Moro, Sherman county.

The parents of our subject came to the Willamette valley from Missouri when he was four years of age. In Polk county, near Sheridan, the father secured land, but when our subject was twelve years of age his parents removed to Sherman county, and here he attended the public schools, where he laid the foundation of an excellent business education, and began the world for himself. When sixteen years old he worked at farming and freighting, and when only eighteen purchased land near Moro, a half a section, and this he farmed successfully until he was married. He then disposed of this property and migrated to Benton county, Oregon, where he engaged in hop raising, purchasing three hundred and ninety acres of land, paying eight thousand dollars for the same; four thousand dollars in cash. At the termination of three years he became insolvent and returned to Sherman county where he engaged in the sheep business. He purchased his stock on time and was eminently successful in this enterprise. In November, 1900, he purchased a section and a half of land, leased six and a quarter sections more, and at present cultivates two thousand acres. The remainder of this land is devoted to pasture. He has now a band of four thousand sheep, twenty head of cattle and seventy head of horses. In the prosecution of his extensive farm work he employs forty head of horses. He owns a combined harvester and all other modern implements necessary for large-scale farming in the west.

February 29, 1892, at Wasco, our subject was married to Junia E. Rigdon, a native of Nebraska, the daughter of Charles and Lida Rigdon. Her father was a native of Ohio and now lives in Lincoln county, Oregon. Mr. Ragsdale has three brothers and one sister; William H., an attorney at Moro, and a graduate of the State Normal School at Monmouth; Charles, residing in Idaho; Ray, living at Moro with his parents; Elsie, single, also living at home. Four children have been born to Mr. and Mrs. Ragsdale; Edna, aged eleven; Cordon, aged nine, and a babe, Allegra, aged nine months. These are all living. Vera died February 10, 1900, aged two years and six months.

The fraternal affiliations of Mr. Ragsdale are with the A. O. U. W., of Moro, and the M. W. A., of Kent. Politically he is a Republican, quite active in the interests of his party. He has twice been elected a delegate to county conventions and last year was a delegate to the Republican state convention at Portland. He is, also, a leading and influential member of the Wool Growers' Association, of Wasco county. He is a young man of fine executive ability and superior business talents, popular with all classes and highly esteemed by all.

HENRY ROOT, one of the early settlers of Sherman county and a leading and influential citizen, resides three miles west of Wasco. He was born in Wisconsin, April 7, 1842, the son of William and Catherine (Cook) Root, the former a native of Vermont; the latter of Ohio. The parents of William Root were of Scotch-Welsh ancestry, an old and distinguished family. His brothers were participants in the War of 1812. Austin served during the entire war and was at the battle of Plattsburg and others. He died later from disease contracted in the service. His three younger brothers, mere boys, ventured out to get a view of the battle of Plattsburg, and were given guns and compelled to stand guard over the baggage train. William Root was too small to accompany them, but living twelve miles away he heard the roar of the cannon and of this he told our subject frequently. He died at Healdsburg, Sonoma county, California, aged eighty-one years. For many years he was a sailor on the great lakes and later mate on a Mississippi steamboat trading up from New Orleans, and also a deep water sailor from the Crescent City to Liverpool. In 1835 he enlisted in the regular army and was sent to Fort Snelling, Minnesota. Here he was discharged on account of a broken arm. He was present at the treaty following the historical Black Hawk war.

Thence William Root went to Ohio where he married Catherine Cook, the mother of our subject. She was the descendant of an old and prominent family, merchants, steamboat men, western pioneers, etc. The newly married couple removed to Indiana where they conducted a farm, going thence to Wisconsin, and from there to Iowa. When our subject was ten years of age they all went to California, crossing the plains with ox teams and being six months on the route. They at first settled in Placerville, and there our subject attended school two winters. In 1854 they went to Iowa Hill, Placer county, and engaged in mining. Here William Root owned good, paying placer claims and our subject frequently washed out twenty dollars a day by himself. In the fall of 1858 they moved into the redwoods, in Sonoma county. Here the father and an uncle of our subject built a sawmill, sold it later and purchased a farm three miles west of Santa Rosa. About this period our subject began herding stock on Tulare Plains; two years, 1862 and 1863, and elsewhere until 1869. He then worked on several extensive stock ranches. In 1870 he took a band of one thousand cattle to Nevada for Hildreth & Dumphy; returned to San Francisco and then went to Humboldt county. In 1871 he took a band of fourteen hundred cattle from there to Harney Valley; returned and remained until 1881, and where he farmed and kept a stage station. He then came to Sherman county, overland, and took up the place where he now resides. His nearest neighbors were G. D. Woodworth, now of Hood River, who lived one mile away, and Mr. Barnum, at Moro, and Mr. Eaton, at Wasco.

December 21, 1873, in Humboldt county, California, our subject was united in marriage to Harriet A. Goodyear, a native of Wisconsin. She is the daughter of Joseph D. and Sophina Goodyear. Her father was a native of New York, a member of the old Goodyear family, one of whom was the inventor of the Goodyear rubber process. Our subject has four brothers and one sister; Austin, a farmer living ten miles east of Eugene, Oregon; John C., a stockman of Weiser, Idaho; Washington T., of Idaho; Albert E., living near Weiser, in the stock business; Keziah E., wife of G. S. Pitts, of California.

Mrs. Root has three brothers and one sister; Eugene, a mining man in Weaversville, California; William E., an extensive bean raiser in Ventura county, California; Edward, of the same place; and Fanny, wife of Lee Ferguson, an orchardist near Ventura. Three children have been born to Mr. and Mrs. Root; William D., a graduate of the University of California, and who taught school six years in Sherman county, and is now in Tokio, Japan, teaching English in the government high school; George H., at home, a student in the Oregon Agricultural College, at Corvallis, a famous foot-ball player and athlete, captain of the O. A. C. foot-ball team, and took a medal in 1903 for the best drill in the manual at arms; he also took a silver medal in 1903 for putting the shot at a track meet in Portland; Nora F., wife of Harry E. Morrow, an extensive Sherman county farmer on the John Day river. Hon. Elihu Root, late Secretary of War, is a grandson of our subject's father's brother. His name was Dudley Root.

For ten years Mr. Root has been road supervisor of his district, the largest in Sherman county. For thirty years our subject was a Republican. In 1896 he supported Bryan and now he is, politically, independent. Mr. Root is a very estimable and highly respected citizen, influential and progressive in his views.

JAMES W. LEONARD, residing three miles east of Kent, Sherman county, was born in Sheridan, Worth county, Missouri, February 9, 1853, the son of James M. and Martha (Coy) Leonard. The parents of the father were descended from an old Southern family, of Kentucky. James M. Leonard, the father of our subject, served three years in the confederate army under General Price, and later in a guerrilla regiment where he was killed. The ancestry of the mother were members of an old southern family. She died in 1855 when our subject was an infant.

Until attaining his majority the latter lived with his maternal grandparents, attending the public schools and working on the farm with his grandfather. He then migrated to California where he remained nearly a year, and thence to Oregon where he arrived July first, 1875, locating in Polk county. Here, for a few years he rented land, and then purchased a place on which he remained two years, following which he was engaged in the harness business, conducting the same two years, in Independence, Polk county. His failing health, caused by indoor life, induced him to dispose of his business and return to the occupation of farming. During two years he rented a place and then came to Crook county where he engaged in the stock business three years. The severe winter of 1889-90 killed all of his stock, and he returned to the valley where he continued farming for eight years. It was in 1898 that he came to Sherman county, purchased a half section and, also, rented a section and a quarter of other land, of which he cultivates about eight hundred acres. He owns a comfortable one-story five-room frame cottage, and has a small orchard; a large barn thirty-six by fifty-two feet in size, with necessary out-buildings and a windmill with a six thousand gallon reservoir, water piped for domestic, stock and irrigation purposes.

September 20, 1876, at Monmouth, Polk county, Oregon, our subject was united in marriage to Jennie M. Ireland, born in Iowa in December, 1853. Her parents, David and Jane (Sanderson) Ireland, were natives of Indiana. They are both dead. Our subject has one half brother and two half sisters: Edward, a farmer in Kansas; Laura, wife of Frank Slotte, a Colorado stockman; and Kate, wife of Charles Wilson, of Colorado. Mrs. Leonard has three brothers, Theron A., William P. and James S., farmers in Polk county, Oregon. Mr. and Mrs. Leonard have no children living, but have an adopted son, Ralph. Politically our subject is a Democrat, and has served as delegate to the county conventions. He was the Democratic nominee for county commissioner; he is a school director and has been such ever since the organization of the district. He, also, served one year as road supervisor. Fraternally he is a member of the W. O. T. W., of Kent. In the community in which he resides he is highly esteemed and regarded as one of the leading citizens of the county.

DAVID FULTON, one of the earliest settlers in Sherman county and a prominent and influential citizen, resides six miles northwest of Wasco. He was born in Yamhill county, March 17, 1855. His parents are mentioned in another portion of this work.

Our subject was reared principally in Wasco and Sherman counties, and for many years was associated with his father and brothers in the business of stock-raising. Mr. Fulton is a man of superior education, having attended the best schools in The Dalles, Oregon, Walla Walla, Washington, Boise City, Idaho, St. Paul's Episcopal School at Walla Walla, Whitman College, and St. Michael's Parish School at Boise City. Since the period of his school days he has resided here almost constantly, with the exception of one or two years elsewhere. In 1879 he filed on a timber culture, homestead and later secured railroad land. At present he owns between two thousand five hundred and three thousand acres, of which he has rented some at different periods. On the "home place" he cultivates about seven hundred acres, raising some cattle, horses and hogs.

At Kansas City, Missouri, February 7, 1899, Mr. Fulton was married to Miss Lulu Bussey, a native of Versailles, Missouri. She is the daughter of Gettis and Sarah A. (Gibson) Bussey, the former a native of Pennsylvania, the latter of Indiana. Gettis Bussey lives at Rich Hill, Missouri, where he is a stone mason, contractor and builder.

Politically Mr. Fulton is a Democrat, and has frequently served as delegate to Democratic county conventions. He is a member of Cascade Lodge, No. 303, B. P. O. E., of The Dalles. They have one child, David J. Mrs. Fulton has three brothers and four sisters: Bertram and Earl, at Rich Hill, Missouri, with their parents; Frank, living with our subject; Cora, single, with her parents; Myrtle, wife of William Jones; Ella, with subject; and Ota, single and living with her parents.

Mr. Fulton is a liberal minded, progressive gentleman, a good citizen, sagacious business man and one who has made a deep impress on the welfare and interests of Sherman county in which vicinity he has so long resided.

ANNIE L. FULTON, the subject of the following biographical sketch was born in Wasco county, Oregon, and educated in the excellent high school at The Dalles. In 1881, she accompanied her parents to what is now Sherman county, but then a portion of Wasco county.

In securing possession of public lands Miss Fulton shared equal advantages with her brothers under the preemption and timber culture laws. At present she owns over one thousand acres, six hundred and forty of which she cultivates. She resided with her parents until their death. Following a long visit to the southern states she returned and made her home at Shade Land Farm, the former home of her parents, which she inherited as her portion of the estate. She has been uniformly successful in her farming operations and raises a number of fine cattle and horses. So closely was Miss Fulton associated with her father in his business, for years, that she has as thorough knowledge of the details of farming as the average man.

Fraternally she is a member of the Order of the Eastern Star and at all time manifests an active interest in the schools and public enterprises of the country.

JOHN RECKMANN, a popular and progressive Sherman county farmer, was born in Germany, August 25, 1865, the son of Hermann and Cathrina (Kilkel) Reckmann, both natives of Germany, where the mother died when our subject was twelve years of age. At present the father, a farmer, lives three miles from Grass Valley.

Our subject was educated at the public schools and in the gymnasium in the old country. His father was a carpenter and from him he learned that trade. The Reckmann family came from Germany to the United States in 1881, and went directly to Minnesota, where they remained four years, but results not being satisfactory, the subject's father sent his son, John, to Oregon. In Sherman county the latter secured land and returned to Minnesota for his father and brought him here. They had some capital and improved their places. In the line of carpenter work they constructed only two school houses. At present our subject owns half a section of fine land, devoted to grain culture, and he rents a section of military land. His father owns a quarter-section and with his son, Diedrich, who, also, owns a quarter section of land, rents a section of military land.

June 23, 1888, on his place near Kent, Mr. Reckmann, was married to Mary Stilling, a native of Germany, daughter of Henry and Lena Stilling, who died in Germany. Our subject has only one brother living, Diedrich, living with his father, and one sister, Jessie, wife of John Ditjen, of The Dalles. He rents his Sherman county farm, of a section in extent.

The wife of our subject has two brothers; Deiderich and Claus, both of whom are Minnesota farmers. Fraternaly, Mr. Reckmann is a member of Grass Valley Lodge, No. 131, I. O. O. F., and Modoc Encampment, No. 39, of Grass Valley, and the Modern Woodmen of America, of Kent. His political affiliations are with the Democratic party, but he can be correctly termed an administration (Roosevelt) man. Both he and his wife are members of the Lutheran church. They have no children.

In 1897 their house, a fine frame residence, was burned to the ground. The contents of the house were destroyed as well as their clothing; they escaped with their lives in their night clothes and were compelled to sleep the rest of the night in a hay stack. At that time our subject was completely out of debt, but owing to this disaster, he was compelled to incur a new indebtedness for lumber with which to build a new house. His fine, young orchard was, also, destroyed by this fire.

In 1905, Mr. Reckmann has just completed a well three hundred and four feet in depth, which furnishes abundance of water, good and pure. It was dug at a cost of one thousand six hundred and fifty dollars. When they were down one hundred and fifty-two feet, they encountered a vein of coal which was shown to be sixteen feet in thickness. When one hundred and eighty-seven feet down, they opened another coal vein, this one being two feet thick. The coal is of a fine bituminous quality and its existence will open a new and valuable industry in Central Oregon, owing to the scarcity of coal there.

JOHN W. CLARK, a general farmer and progressive business man of Sherman county, resides on his ranch four miles southeast of the town of Kent. He was born in Illinois, May 13, 1861, the son of Robert and Jane (Chapman) Clark, the father a native of New York, the mother of Kentucky. The parents of Robert Clark were Canadians, of English descent. He died in Polk county, Oregon, in May, 1901. The ancestry of the mother were also, Canadians and English. She passed from earth in 1871, in Illinois.

In the latter state our subject was reared and educated, attending the graded schools of Bloomington. At this time his father was engaged in the livery business, and purchasing and shipping horses east. He was a skilled horseman and well and favorably known throughout the state of Illinois. He was a staunch Democrat, aspiring to no office for himself, but taking a patriotic interest in elections.

To Polk county, Oregon, the family of our subject removed in 1876. The following year our subject began life for himself, finding various employments and learning the carpenter's trade. In 1885 he came to Eastern Oregon and, in 1886, filed on a preemption claim in Grass Valley. Here he remained two years, disposed of the property and engaged in the livery business. This was at Grant's Station. He exploited the first daily stage in Sherman county; running from Grant to Rutledge. During the spring of 1889 he returned to Polk county, where for six years he followed the business of a carpenter. Thence he returned to Sherman county and for four years was engaged in freighting from The Dalles to southern points of Oregon. He then secured a homestead four miles southeast of Kent where he at present resides. He rents other land and, in all, cultivates about seven hundred acres.

July 17, 1887, at Grant's Station, Sherman county, our subject was united in marriage to Jessie E. Harris, born at Goose Lake, Oregon. She is the daughter of John and Eliza (Smith) Harris. Her father was born on the plains while his family were en route to Oregon with ox teams. His parents were natives of Indiana, coming to Oregon in the early 40's. Her mother was a native of Missouri, coming to Oregon with her parents when a child. Our subject has two brothers, George, in Portland, and Robert, a Benton county stockman. His wife has four brothers and three sisters; Wesley, an east Oregon stockman; William, a stock buyer; Frank, at Grass Valley; George, with his parents, at Grass Valley; Leona, single; Clare, wife of Ray Vinton, of Grass Valley; Beatrice, married and living at Astoria. Mr. and Mrs. Clark have one child, Jessie B., aged fifteen years.

The political principles of Mr. Clark are in line with those of the Republican party. He has been road supervisor and school director, and is a popular man and highly esteemed in his community.

OTTO PEETZ, assessor of Sherman county, Oregon, and proprietor of a billiard hall and cigar store, in Kent, was born in Douglas county, Minnesota, March 16, 1873, the son of Carl and Catherine (Schott) Peetz. At present the father is a retired farmer residing near Moro.

When our subject was about one year of age his parents removed from Minnesota to King county, Washington. This was in 1874, and there they remained until 1886, when the family came to Sherman county, and with them our subject. In 1892 the latter went to Grant county, Oregon, where he found employment on several farms, and also conducted a sheep ranch for others, and, at one time, for himself. During the month of December, 1899, he returned to Sherman county, and remained with his parents on the farm about one year. When about fifteen years of age he was severely injured by a horse which fell upon him, the principal injury being confined to one of his legs. In 1898 he suffered an attack of measles, which seriously affected this limb, and three years later it became necessary to amputate it in order to save his life. Under the care of physicians he remained for a period of eleven months, three months of which time were passed in St. Vincent's Hospital, Portland. A number of operations were made in endeavors to save the injured limb, and following amputation of the same it was twice opened for the purpose of removing dead and decaying bone which might have seriously affected his health, and perhaps caused his death.

On his recovery, in March, 1903, he came to Kent, erected a building, and engaged in his present business. He conducts a billiard table and has a fine stock of cigars, tobaccos and temperance beverages. During the summer of the same year of his arrival he secured land under the homestead laws, nine miles southeast of Kent.

rick was a Pennsylvanian; his mother was born in Vermont, the former being a member of the old American family of Porters, early settlers of the Mohawk valley. Derrick Porter died in Livingstone county, New York, in 1894.

In the state of New York our subject lived until he was twenty years of age. Thence he migrated to California where he remained five years in Solano county and the Sacramento valley. Here he joined an uncle and was with him until 1882, coming thence to Sherman county where he secured some land, a portion of his present holdings. At present he owns one thousand and sixty acres, all joining. He has a fine orchard of two hundred trees, and rears stock for his own use, having several graded Clyde and Percheron horses.

At Livonia Center, Livingstone county, New York, December 25, 1875, Mr. Porter was united in marriage to Miss Harriet Proctor, a native of Kingston, Canada. Her father, William Procter, also born in Canada, was a hardware merchant and a tin and copper smith by trade and well and favorably known. He died in Canada about 1869. Her mother was Ann McGorman, whose death occurred in New York, in 1873. Mrs. Porter's great-grandfather, General John Proctor, was a general in the English army. His son, James Proctor, was captain in the Royal Artillery, and married Miss Sarah Marion, the grand niece of General Marion, of Revolutionary fame. Mrs. Porter's great uncle, Alexander Proctor, was an admiral in the English navy. The Proctors were a strong and prominent family.

Our subject has two brothers and four sisters; Albert, foreman in the flour mill at Wasco; James, a farmer in Pennsylvania; Jennie, wife of M. A. VanGilder, mentioned in another portion of this work; Inez, wife of J. M. Nash, of Wasco; Athalia, wife of George W. Knox, for twenty years a prominent attorney in Los Angeles, California; and Julia, wife of William Clark, a millwright at Mount Morris, Livingstone county, New York. Mrs. Porter has one sister living, Maggie J., wife of John Carty, a farmer near Livonia Center, New York.

Mr. Porter is a member of Aurora Lodge, No. 54, K. of P. Although formerly a Republican he is, at present, a Prohibitionist, and has been elected delegate to county conventions but has never acted. He has frequently served as delegate to Republican conventions; and has been school director for fifteen years and is such at present. Mrs. Porter is a devout and consistent member of the Roman Catholic church. They have three children: George, born May 31, 1879, near Dixon, Solano county, California, and who was married at The Dalles, in 1901, to Alice Frazier, daughter of William Frazier, of Hood River; Albert R., born in California, April 7, 1881, and married March 3, 1905, to Maud Hearing of Sweet Home, Oregon; Laverne, born in Sherman county, May 3, 1889.

Mr. Porter is a gentleman of culture and refinement, and one of the enterprising and influential citizens of the county.

CHARLES A. BUCKLEY, one of the heaviest real estate owners of Sherman county, resides in Grass Valley. He has about five thousand acres of land, three thousand of which are tillable. He has about one thousand into grain and the entire estate is one of the best in the country. Mr. Buckley is a man of recognized business ability, which is thoroughly attested by the exceptional success which he has won in his career. Everybody will be pleased to see an account of his life which will be both beneficial and inspiring. Charles A. Buckley was born in Sag Harbor, New York, on September 29, 1858. His father, Abel C. Buckley, was also a native of New York, descended from English and Irish ancestry. He was a tanner by trade and died in Brooklyn, New York, in 1887. He had married Ann E. Penney, a native of Long Island, who died in Brooklyn, New York, on July 30, 1903. Our subject lived in his birthplace until ten years of age, when he accompanied the family to Brooklyn, New York, where he received a liberal education in the public schools and private institutions. Afterwards, he took a commercial course and also learned the sole cutting trade in New York City. He followed this for five years, then came to Wasco county, having been induced there by reading literature descriptive of the state. Four days after landing in The Dalles, he entered into partnership with William J. Kerr and Edward Williams, who came west with him. In November, 1883, they bought the Tilford Moore ranch, fifteen miles southwest of Grass Valley. Mr. Kerr was a practical farmer and the other two were not. Finally our subject and Mr. Kerr purchased the interest of Williams and operated together until 1899, when Mr. Buckley bought his partner's interest and Mr. Kerr returned east. Mr. Buckley has since conducted the business with splendid success and generally winters about five thousand sheep although at the present time he owns eight thousand. He has about sixty head of choice graded and registered cattle and has one registered Shorthorn bull. He also owns a Belgian stallion imported and takes great pride in breeding excellent stock.

On November 24, 1888, at Portland, Oregon, Mr. Buckley married Minnie F. Patterson, a native of Connecticut and niece of Mr. Kerr, our subject's former partner. She had come to Oregon with her mother some time previous to the marriage. Mr. Buckley has one brother, William C., in the leather business in Brooklyn, New York, and three sisters, Mary, wife of A. G. Bassett; Carrie, wife of E. H. Osborne and Annie L., wife of A. S. French, all of Brooklyn, New York. Mrs. Buckley is an only child. To our subject and his wife, two children have been born, A. Conklin, and William H. Mr. Buckley is a member of the I. O. O. F. and of the Encampment, while he and his wife both belong to the Rebekahs. Politically, he is a good strong Republican and is frequently in the conventions. He is a progressive, wide awake business man and does not forget to labor continuously for the betterment of school facilities, the building up of the country and the general advancement of the county and state. He has many friends and is considered one of the leading men of this part of the state.

JOHN MEDLER, one of the first commissioners of Sherman county, and a leading and influential citizen, residing at Wasco, was born at Magdeburg, Germany, October 9, 1837. His parents were Henry and Doris (Sense) Medler, who are mentioned elsewhere. The family came to the United States in August, 1847, and the father, an expert jeweler, went to work for Frank & Pfeiffer, manufacturing jewelers, No. 39 Courtland street, New York city. He remained in their employment until the spring of 1849. But he had come to this country with the intention of buying a farm, and he, consequently, went to Cabell county, West Virginia and made the purchase. Until 1852 the family continued to live there and then moved back to New York in order to afford their children the advantages of schooling. Up to that period our subject had enjoyed only three months at school, as the West Virginia facilities were very poor. In New York he attended a graded school which accommodated one thousand pupils. He remained there two years which completed his education.

Mr. John Medler and his brother, Bruno, then began to learn the jeweler's trade, at which our subject worked two years. The health of the boys failed and the physician declared that they must seek out of door employment. In 1865 they removed to Missouri. Meantime the father died. In 1869 our subject returned to assume charge of the family. His brother was engaged in saw milling. In 1881 he sold the farm for his mother and then came to Oregon. In Sherman county he took up a homestead and purchased more land. On his arrival he had very little money left. He brought his wife and six children with him. February 1, 1882, during the absence of Mr. Medler, his half-brother's house was destroyed by fire and our subject's wife and two children were burned to death. Following this terrible disaster Mr. Medler preempted land, built a fine, commodious house, prospered financially and remained single until December 6, 1903, when he was united in marriage to Mrs. Nancy Ornduff, a native of Ohio.

The first marriage of our subject occurred in West Virginia, September 19, 1861, when he was united to Eliza J. Hull, a native of Cabell County, West Virginia. Her parents were Martin and Nancy (Morgan) Hull, the father a native of Virginia; the mother of the same state. The Hull family has been a distinguished one in American history, as planters, jurists and soldiers in the Revolutionary war and the War of 1812. William Hull, born at Derby, Connecticut, June 24, 1753, served as an American general through the Revolutionary war and was governor of Michigan Territory from 1805 until 1814. He died at Newton, Massachusetts, November 29, 1825. Isaac Hull, born at Derby, Connecticut, March 9, 1773, died at Philadelphia, February 13, 1843. He was an American commodore and commanded the Constitution, which defeated and captured the Guerriere, August 19, 1812.

Martin Hull was noted as an athlete, being endowed with great physical powers. He was married three times and was the father of twenty-five children. When quite young he could easily shoulder a three-bushel sack of wheat, with feet standing in a half bushel measure. He served in the War of 1812. Our subject has four children living; Henry, living two and one-half miles north-east of Wasco; Ernest A., a farmer and saloon keeper, at Wasco; John G., now conducting our subject's two ranches; Frank, who rents the "Cooper place" on the John Day river. Emma Isadore, aged twenty, and her brother, Arthur M., aged six, two other children, were burned to death with their mother February 1, 1882.

At present Mr. Medler owns two thousand and forty acres of land all devoted to wheat. In 1891 he became president of the Farmers Co-operative Warehouse Association, which enterprise he organized and continued president until he disposed of his interest. He, also, engaged in the banking business, but later sold out. He was instrumental in the organization of the Wasco Union Lumber Company, of which he was treasurer. For two years he was president of the Union Warehouse Company and was one of the organizers. March 4, 1903, he purchased an interest in the Wasco Commercial Company and to this he devotes his attention. He owns a handsome cottage home in town. Politically he is in line with the Democratic party, and Governor Pennoyer appointed him a county commissioner on the organization of Sherman county. We also wish to mention that Mr. Medler has taken a very active and prominent part in promoting the State Grange of Oregon, having spent much money and time in this important enterprise. He has the distinction of being the overseer for this order for the state of Oregon, and is considered one of the most thorough and up-to-date parliamentarians in the state.

ROBERT W. MONTGOMERY, manager of the Interior Warehouse Company, of Kent, Sherman county, is a native Oregonian, having been born in Umatilla county, August 30, 1881, the son of Benjamin and Mary A. (Peck) Montgomery. The father of our subject was a native of Ireland, coming to Canada about the year 1865. He at first located in Montreal, where he remained until 1879, engaged in railroading. Thence he removed to Albany, in the Willamette valley, where he farmed on rented land for a period of two years, when he went to Umatilla county and secured land. Here he died in 1883. The mother of our subject was a native of Prince Edward Island, Canada; her parents were English. At present she resides in the town of Helix, Umatilla county, renting the farm to her son.

Our subject was reared in Umatilla county until he reached the age of twenty years, where he received an excellent education in the public schools; attended the Pendleton Academy one year; was one year at the Willamette University, at Salem, and, also, prosecuted a course in the Portland Business College. In 1901 he came to Kent. Here he accepted his present responsible position.

June 28, of the same year, at Moro, he was united in marriage to Miss Annie Peetz, born in Tacoma, Washington, November 24, 1886. The bride's parents were Carl and Catherine (Schoot) Peetz, the former being a retired farmer living near Moro.

Our subject has three brothers and three sisters; Thomas, manager of the Puget Sound Warehouse, at Pendleton; Alexander, a lumber dealer and manager of the Puget Sound Warehouse, at Helix, Oregon; John, a farmer and manager of the Balfour-Guthrie Warehouse, at Warren, Umatilla county; Lydia, wife of William Alby, a Franklin county, Oregon, farmer; Sarah, single, residing with her mother, and Lucy, single, a twin sister of our subject.

Fraternally Mr. Montgomery is a member of Cascade Lodge, No. 303, B. P. O. E., at The Dalles. Politically his affiliations are with the Republican party, of which he is committeeman for his precinct. He is, also, constable and deputy sheriff. Mr. Montgomery has won the confidence of all in the community in which he resides, and is a broad-minded, progressive and sagacious business young man of marked ability.

GEORGE P. SINK, a very extensive general farmer and stockraiser, of Sherman county, resides three miles east and two miles north of Kent. He is a native of Illinois, born June 2, 1847. His parents were natives of North Carolina, descendants of old and distinguished American families. The father, Thomas W., was born in 1819. The mother, Luzina (Thomas) Sink, was born in 1824. Her ancestors, of the old colonial period, were originally from Virginia. Both the paternal and maternal grandfathers of our subject served with distinction in the Revolutionary war and the War of 1812. The brothers of the parents of our subject were engaged in the Civil war, serving on both sides of the controversy. At present these parents, living at a graceful and green old age, reside three miles northwest of Wasco, Sherman county. The family came to Oregon in 1876, locating in Yamhill county.

Until the year 1867 our subject was reared in Illinois, from whence the family removed to Clark county, Missouri. In early youth the lad lived in town and attended the public schools until he had reached the age of fourteen years. At that period his parents were proprietors of a boarding house; subsequently they followed farming.

In 1870, at the age of twenty-three years, our subject struck out to face the world and from it wrest a living for himself and, perchance a handsome competence. He followed various occupations in various states, such as riding the ranges, attending a surveying party, acting as usher for Barnum & Bailey's circus, etc., and in 1876 he came west. His father and family, had gone to California and met our subject there, and they all went to Oregon. The father purchased land in Yamhill county, upon which he remained one year. In 1882 the subject of this sketch secured a homestead three miles below Wasco, Sherman county, in Spanish Hollow. It was on this farm that his wife died, March 9, 1883. Our subject remained there until the financial panic of 1893 when he went to Portland, where he was enabled to give his children the advantages of superior educational facilities. Here he engaged in various employments, including teaming and contracting, until the development of the Klondyke sensation, when he went to Alaska, remaining two seasons, the first on the trail; the second at Dawson. Here he was fairly successful, but returned and passed about two years in search of a suitable location for business. It was in 1900 that Mr. Sink came to Sherman county, where he purchased land to the extent of five quarter sections, and subsequently added more. He now owns one thousand four hundred acres, and cultivates one thousand acres of grain. He raises some stock, and during the winter of 1903-4 he fed four thousand head of sheep. Mr. Sink is the possessor of one of the best and most eligible ranches in the southern portion of Sherman county. He extensively cultivates small fruits and vegetables.

In October, 1877, at Newberg, Yamhill county, he was united in marriage to Henrietta Everest, born in the same county. She was the daughter of David and Irene (Jones) Everest. The father was a native of England, and came to Oregon overland, with an ox train, in 1846, from Iowa, accompanied by his parents. Mrs. Everest had preceded him, with her parents, in 1845, emigrating from Missouri.

Our subject has two brothers and two sisters; Thomas E. and Everett, both farmers living near Wasco; Mary, wife of Charles D. Belcher, a farmer near Woodland, Yolo county, California; Jennie, wife of Charles Chandler, of Clackamas county, Oregon. Seven brothers and sisters survive the wife of our subject, nearly all of them living in Yamhill county.

Mr. Sink has three daughters, Georgetta, wife of Horace Cuthill, living with subject; Charletta, at Los Angeles, California, and Henrietta.

The fraternal affiliations of Mr. Sink are with the A. F. & A. M., having been demitted from another lodge. Politically he is a staunch Republican, but has never aspired to office, with the exception of school director. Mr. Sink is a progressive, liberal spirited citizen, popular and influential in the community in which he resides.

WILLIAM E. TATE, postmaster of Wasco, Sherman county, Oregon, was born in Chicago, Illinois, June 18, 1865. His parents and their lineage are mentioned elsewhere in this work.

At Chicago our subject attained the graded and high schools, where he laid the foundation of an excellent education. He then came to California and thence to Sherman county. He secured a homestead near his father's place, cultivated the same for some time, and later sold the property and passed eight years near Hood River. It was in 1893 that he returned to Sherman county where he resumed farming, rented land and, also, conducted his father's ranch, two years. Recently he sold his farm. In April, 1903, he was appointed postmaster of Wasco.

September 10, 1890, Mr. Tate was united in marriage to Miss Louisa Hansen, born near Althouse, Josephine county, Oregon. Her parents were Germans. Mr. and Mrs. Tate have six children, Florence, Bessie, Mary, Frances, Ailene and Gladys.

The fraternal affiliations of our subject are with Cascade Lodge, No. 303, B. P. O. E., Taylor Lodge, No. 99, A. F. & A. M., Sherman Lodge, No. 157, I. O. O. F., of Wasco, Modoc Encampment, Grass Valley; the A. O. U. W., of which he is past master workman and has served as delegate to the grand lodge. Politically Mr. Tate is an active and patriotic Republican and was delegate to state and congressional conventions during the past spring, and frequently delegate to county conventions. He has, also, served as school director. In the community in which he resides Mr. Tate is quite popular, and he numbers many friends in a wide circle of acquaintances throughout the county and state.

FRED BLAU, a prominent, progressive and prosperous farmer of Sherman county, resides five miles northwest of Wasco. He was born in Saxony, Germany, December 5, 1867, the son of George and Katherina (Kratzmer) Blau, natives of Germany, where they died. George Blau, the father was a tailor.

In 1885 Fred Blau, our subject, came to the United States, and the first two years were passed in Iowa. In 1887 he came to Sherman county and purchased a squatter's rights on disputed railroad land. He had no capital, but worked out for wages and gradually improved his holdings and now he owns one thousand two hundred acres, over one thousand acres of which are cultivated. He owns, also, a combination harvester and thresher.

Mr. Blau was married at Moro, Sherman county, November 28, 1897, to Minnie Gibson, born in Oregon, the daughter of James Gibson, a native of Pennsylvania. Our subject has two brothers and one sister; August, a wagon-maker in Germany; Wilhelm, a tailor, in the old country; and Freda, who is married and living in Germany. Julius, another brother, died in San Francisco. Mr. and Mrs. Blau have one child, Walter. Fraternally Mr. Blau is a member of Sherman Lodge, No. 137, I. O. O. F., of Wasco, and the A. O. U. W. Mrs. Blau has five brothers and two sisters; Ellsworth, Omar and Lyman, of Walla Walla; Will, in Wasco; Charles, living with his father in Crook county; Belle, wife of Harold Stanil, of La Grande; and Maud, single, and living with her father. Politically Mr. Blau is a Democrat, although not particularly active. He is an energetic and industrious business man and one highly esteemed by all.

HENRY RICHELDERFER, a retired farmer of Sherman county, resides two miles northwest of Wasco. March 8, 1846, he was born at Port Clinton, Schuylkill county, Pennsylvania. His father, Nathan, was, also, a native of the Keystone State, as was his mother, Matilda (Mengle) Richelderfer, both descendants of old and prominent Pennsylvania Dutch families. The father was for many years a railway engineer running on the Philadelphia & Reading road. He died at Port Clinton, in 1870. The mother died when our subject was one year old.

At the public schools of Port Clinton he acquired a good business education, and in the spring of 1865 enlisted in Two Hundred and Fourteenth Pennsylvania Volunteer Infantry, Colonel McGibbons, commanding. The company in which our subject served was commanded by Captain Kauffman. He participated in a number of skirmishes but was engaged in no important battles. The greater portion of his time was passed in Virginia and at Washington, D. C., at which latter place he was mustered out. He then returned home and engaged in railroad work which he followed until 1877, as brakeman and conductor, on the Philadelphia & Reading, Morris & Essex and New York Central lines. In 1877 he migrated to Kansas where he passed one year engaged in farming, thence going to the Willamette valley. He came to Sherman county in the fall of 1880. At that period Eaton and Love were the only settlers living near Mr. Richelderfer. He took up a homestead and purchased other land. Here he left, for a time, his family and became a conductor on the Oregon Railroad & Navigation Company's road, nearly three years, at the same time gradually improving his place.

Our subject was married April 29, 1870, at New York city, to Miss Mary Evans, born in Berks county, Pennsylvania. She was the daughter of James Evans, also a native of the Keystone State.

Our subject has one sister, Isabella, wife of Joseph Mengle, of Port Clinton, Pennsylvania, formerly a railroad man but now retired. Mr. and Mrs. Richelderfer have five children living; Harry N., at home; Asa D. and Earl H., conducting the farm; Laura N., wife of W. Robert Foryce, of White Salmon, Washington; Emma E., at home. Their parents are both members of the Methodist Episcopal church.

The parents of James Evans, father of our subject's wife, were Irish; his grandparents English. Mrs. Richelderfer's mother, Annie (Breisch) Evans, was a native of Pennsylvania, of Pennsylvania Dutch ancestry. She died when our subject's wife was about nine years of age. The latter's great-grandfather—father's maternal grandfather—Glance, was in the War of the Revolution. James Evans served in the Civil war, in Captain Nangle's company. He was wounded in battle. He died in 1874, and is buried at Pottsville, Pennsylvania.

The farm of our subject comprises two sections which are conducted by his sons. With the exception of about one hundred acres it is all under cultivation. He owns a steam threshing outfit. In 1902 he erected a handsome and substantial two-story, sixteen-room house, including two bath-rooms, pantry and store-room, costing about three thousand dollars. It is provided with an excellent water system piped into the house. The political principles of Mr. Richelderfer are in line with those of the Republican party. He is a sagacious business man, of sound judgment and highly esteemed in both social and financial circles.

ARTHUR K. HALL, the leading druggist of Kent, Sherman county, and one of the prosperous and popular business men of the community, was born in Iowa, November 22, 1866. His father, Dr. David M. Hall, was a native of Ohio, as was his father. The paternal great-grandfather of our subject was a pioneer of the country now embraced by West Virginia, and also of Ohio. He was a hunter and trapper and served with distinction in the War of 1812. Dr. David Hall, the father of our subject, was for many years a practicing physician and a pioneer in Western Iowa—the only physician in practice there for several years, and continued practice for a period of thirty years, in that locality. He died in June, 1887, in Harrison county, Iowa.

The mother, Sarah (Kennedy) Hall, is a native of Philadelphia, Pennsylvania; her parents were born in Ireland. At present she resides on her homestead, three and one-half miles from Kent.

In the state of Iowa our subject was reared where he attended district and high schools, at Logan, Harrison county. In July, 1890, he came to Vancouver, Washington, where he was employed by A. L. Ross, a prominent druggist of that place. Here he remained eighteen months, and the following four years he was engaged in logging. It was in 1896 that he went to The Dalles where he passed one winter; thence to Sherman county, where he rented a quarter section of land, and, also, secured another quarter section under the homestead laws, which he still owns. It is located three miles northwest of Kent, and for which he receives a fair rental. In April, 1903, Mr. Hall erected a building in Kent and opened a fine drug store, in which he conducts a profitable trade.

September 20, 1899, our subject, at Antelope, Wasco county, was united in marriage to Cora C. Elkin, a native of Missouri. Her father, Edward E. Elkin, was born in the same state and his parents were natives of Virginia. The father of Edward E. Elkin served with distinction on the union side during the Civil war, in a Missouri regiment. At present Edward E. Elkin lives in Crook county, Oregon, near Ashwood, engaged in the stock business. Mrs. Hall's mother, Margaret (Marrs) Elkin, is a native of West Virginia, as were her parents, although at their period the state was known as Virginia. Her father and brothers served in the Civil war, in the army of the Confederacy. At present she lives at Ashwood, Crook county, with her family; her mother resides in Missouri.

Our subject, Arthur K. Hall, has two brothers, Marshall, living in Iowa, and Willard, a farmer living one and one-half miles from Kent. He has, also, two half brothers, John, residing at Woodbine, Iowa, and a member of the board of supervisors of Harrison county, and Charles, living in Michigan. Mrs. Hall has five brothers and two sisters; Marvin, in Crook county, Oregon; Milo, Roy, Arthur and Charles, living at home. Her sisters are Eunice and Ruby, also living at home.

Mr. and Mrs. Hall have one child, Grace, born November 15, 1902. Our subject, fraternally, is a member of the I. O. O. F. and the Modern Woodmen of America, and both he and his estimable wife are members of the Ladies' auxiliary of the latter order, the Royal Neighbors. Politically he is a Republican, although not particularly active in the successive campaigns. He has, at different times served as road supervisor and school director of his district.

In September, 1904, Mr. Hall received his commission as postmaster of Kent, the office being located in his drug store. He was appointed justice of the peace for Kent precinct by the county commissioners and at the following election he refused to allow his name to come up for balloting. He is one of the promoters and stockholders of the Kent Telephone Company, which maintains lines to Grass Valley and to other local points.

JOHN H. BOTTEMILLER, the principal lumber dealer of Kent, Sherman county, Oregon, was born in Minnesota, December 2, 1867, the son of Henry and Mary (Mahlman) Bottemiller, both natives of Germany. When fourteen years of age the father came to the United States with his parents. They located first in Missouri, and engaged in the industry of tobacco raising. Later they removed to Minnesota where they devoted their attention to general farming. The father died in 1898 at Courtney, eight miles from Portland.

When twelve years of age the mother of our subject came to the United States with her parents, and at present resides on the old homestead, near Portland.

Until he was sixteen years of age our subject was reared in Minnesota, living with the family and dividing his attention between the farm and the public schools in his neighborhood. The family then removed to Santa Rosa, Sonoma county, California, where they purchased property two and one-half miles northwest of Santa Rosa. Here they remained three years, and then disposed of the place, including a vineyard and orchard, and migrated to Oregon, where they bought a farm of sixty-nine acres, near Portland, a portion of which was devoted to an orchard and vegetable garden. Following the death of his father our subject conducted the place until 1902, when he came to Sherman county and secured a homestead. On this he remained three months, then relinquished to the government. He then removed to Kent where he engaged in the lumber business. He still owns fourteen acres of his father's old place; this he receives a rental for.

July 20, 1897, at the old home, our subject was united in marriage to Minnie Thun, a native of Minnesota, the daughter of Charles and Cristina Thun, both born in Germany. At present they reside at Courtney on property adjoining the subject's place. They were married in Germany, and came to the United States about the year 1876, locating first in Minnesota. At that time the father was a carpenter; later he turned his attention to farming. At present he is retired, although he owns a farm of eighty acres at Logan which his sons conduct.

Our subject, John H. Bottemiller, has five brothers and seven sisters; August, a farmer near Richfield, Washington; Charles, a merchant, saw and planing mill man, residing at Bertha, Minnesota; William, a farmer at Clarks, Oregon, twenty miles southeast of Portland; Edward, a gardener near Portland; Emil, a shipping clerk for the Oregon Casket Company, of Portland; Louisa, wife of Jacob Kohlhase, of Bertha, Minnesota; Amelia, wife of Adam Leyh, of Bertha, Minnesota; Mary, wife of Ralph Ganyard, a commercial traveler, residing at Sellwood; Emma, single, living at Oregon City; Lena, wife of Gottlieb Keller, in the Milwaukee, Oregon, car shops; Lydia, a trained nurse in The Dalles hospital; and Augusta, a cook in The Dalles hospital.

To our subject and his estimable wife four children have been born, Laura, Leslie, William, and an infant unnamed. The parents are both members of the Methodist Episcopal church. Politically Mr. Bottemiller is a Republican, although not active. He is a progressive and broad-minded citizen of Kent, and highly popular with all classes of society in the community in which he resides.

In connection with his lumber yard Mr. Bottemiller operates a feed mill, having a gasoline engine to run the mill and also to handle a wood saw. He carries a full line of building materials, as sash, doors, builders hardware, and so forth, has a complete stock of mill feed and hay, besides wood.

JOSEPH J. MILLER, of the firm of Miller Brothers, proprietors of a meat market and extensive stock-raisers and farmers of Sherman county, resides at Wasco. He was born at Miller Bridge, on the Sherman county side of the Des Chutes river, October 3, 1871, the son of T. Jefferson and Sarah (Ford) Miller, the former a native of Indiana, the latter of Iowa.

Our subject was reared in Klickitat county, Washington, until he was thirteen years of age. His parents had moved there when he was two years old. They came back to Sherman county, where he attended district schools, the graded schools of Oregon City and to this education he added a course at the Portland Business College. Until 1901 he remained with his father the most of the time. He then engaged in stock-raising, wheat buying and steamboating, etc. He is largely interested in the Columbia & Okanogan Steamboat Company, with headquarters at Wenatchee, Washington. For two years our subject was in active service, 1902 and 1903, at the head office of the upper district. Then, with his brothers, Thomas J. and Edward E., he bought out O. H. Rich, mentioned elsewhere, a meat business, and which they have conducted ever since. Shortly after purchasing this interest our subject discovered that it demanded his attention personally and accordingly he resigned his position with the steamboat company and came to Sherman county. Here he owns about one thousand seven hundred acres of land, and in Klickitat county, Washington, six hundred acres more. He has about six acres of orchard and winters about one hundred and fifty head of cattle. He also raises a few hogs.

April 19, 1902, at The Dalles, our subject was united in marriage to Miss Rosa Klimt, born at The Dalles and reared in Portland. Her father is dead; her mother resides at The Dalles. She has two brothers, George and Frank, now with their mother.

Mr. and Mrs. Miller have one child, Jenna M., born in Wenatchee, Washington, September 8, 1903. Fraternaly, our subject is a member of the W. O. T. W. Politically, he is a Republican, although far from being a partisan.

JOHN J. SCHAEFFER, a member of the Eastern Oregon Trading Company, at Kent, Sherman county, was born in Milan township, Erie county, Ohio, June 16, 1845. His father, Michael Schaeffer, was a native of Pennsylvania, as were his parents. In Milan township Michael Schaeffer was, for a period of fifty years, a well-to-do and highly respected farmer. He passed away on his homestead in Erie county in 1884. The mother of our subject, Mary E. (Ganby) Schaeffer, was a native of Seneca county, New York, a descendant of an old and distinguished American family. She died on the old Ohio homestead.

It was in the Buckeye State that our subject was reared until 1887, where he attended the public schools and assisted his parents on the farm. He then came to Sherman county, Oregon, and purchased a timber claim right one-half mile south of Moro, and also a quarter section of land of Samuel L. Brooks, of The Dalles, mentioned elsewhere, which adjoined his timber culture claim. This property he cultivated for about fourteen years, and disposing of it, engaged in the mercantile business in Moro. This he continued one year, sold out and removed to Kent, where he opened another store in a new building which he erected. At the same period he was proprietor of another mercantile establishment at Moro, having at the time a partner in both these enterprises, P. G. Hickenbotham. These gentlemen disposed of their business to the commercial company, at Kent, and also the Moro business. This was in 1901. The following year Mr. Schaeffer built another edifice and commenced business alone. At the organization of the Eastern Oregon Trading Company he turned in his mercantile stock for shares in the new company, and also purchased the building which has since been enlarged.

At the residence of the bride's parents, in Crook county, Oregon, five miles from Prineville, our subject was united in marriage to Mary E. Snoderley, born in Linn county, Oregon. Her father, James H. Snoderley, a native of Tennessee, was an early Oregon pioneer, crossing the plains in 1852 with an ox train, and settling in Linn county. He died in May, 1898, on the old homestead, near Prineville. Her mother, Eliza (Curl) Snoderley, a native of Missouri, with ox teams, crossed the plains in 1853, and located in Linn county. At present she resides at Prineville.

Mrs. Schaeffer, the wife of our subject, has four brothers and one sister; Walter and William, at Prineville; Joseph, in California; and Fred, residing in Crook county, Oregon. The sister is America, wife of Jacob Boone, of Prineville, the latter a member of the old distinguished Boone family, of which Daniel Boone was a prominent character. Another sister, Ellen, is dead. Mr. and Mrs. Schaeffer have one child, Lois E., aged eight years.

Our subject has six brothers living and three sisters; Jacob, a millwright, at Decatur, Illinois; George, of Milan, Ohio; William, a farmer, near Milan, Ohio; Benjamin, a farmer near Moro, Oregon; Reuben, Frank, in the insurance business at Bellevue, Ohio. Joseph, another brother, is dead. The sisters are: Elizabeth, wife of Orlando Bassett, a retired farmer of Milan, Ohio; Rebecca, wife of James McLean, a farmer in Huron county, Ohio; Susannah, single, living with her brother, William. Sarah, wife of Peter Williams, and Mandana, wife of Charles Mixer, are dead. Mary C., died in infancy, aged two and one-half years.

The political principles of our subject are in line with those of the Democratic party. He has frequently been a delegate to county conventions, and at present is school director in his district. He and wife are members of the Baptist church. Socially and in a business sense Mr. Schaeffer is a popular and influential citizen.

In March, 1864, Mr. Schaeffer enlisted in Company F, One Hundred and Forty-fifth Ohio

Infantry, together with his brothers, George William and Benjamin, all being in the same company. They served until honorably discharged at camp Chase, Columbus, Ohio, having been in much active contest.

SARAH TROTTER, the mother of Mrs. Milton H. Bennett, mentioned elsewhere in this work, was born in North Carolina, July 10, 1851. She is now a resident of Kent, Sherman county, Oregon. Her father, Jonathan Wheeler, was also a native of North Carolina, and the descendant of an old and distinguished American family. His grandfather, as well as other members of the family, served with distinction in the Revolutionary War. The mother of our subject, Esther (Stephens) Wheeler, was, also, born in North Carolina, and was a cousin of the late Hon. Alexander H. Stephens, vice president of the Southern Confederacy from 1861 to 1865. He was born near Crawfordville, Georgia, February 11, 1812; died at Atlanta, Georgia, March 4, 1883. He graduated at the University of Georgia in 1832; studied law; was chosen member of the state legislature in 1836; was member of congress from Georgia from 1843 to 1859; opposed secession in 1860; was Democratic member of congress from Georgia from 1873 to 1882, and was governor of Georgia in 1883. He was the author of "The War Between the States," and a "History of the United States."

Our subject was married, in Missouri, January 26, 1868, to James A. Trotter, a native of Missouri. His father, Allen S. Trotter, was a native of Indiana, and claimed to be the first white child born on that side of the Ohio river, in Indiana, near Vincennes. He was reared in Boone county. His parents, of Irish descent, came from Virginia. He was one of twelve children descended from an old, distinguished and wealthy Irish family.

Our subject and her husband lived in Missouri nearly six years; thence they came to Clarke county, Washington, locating near Vancouver. He secured a homestead in the timber, and worked hard and industriously in clearing this land, for twelve years; he then sold it for eight hundred dollars. They lived in Vancouver about two years. In 1894 they came to Sherman county, principally on account of the ill health of Mr. Trotter; thence they returned to Vancouver where he passed away May 14, 1899. After his death our subject returned to Sherman county and took a homestead on which the town of Kent was subsequently built. In 1901 she platted the townsite and has since disposed of a number of lots. Mrs. Trotter has two brothers; Julius, at Carthage, Missouri; and David, at Eureka Springs, Arkansas. They are both veterans of the Civil war, having served in the union army. She has one sister, Mary, the wife of Henry Barnes, of Arkansas. Her husband had one brother, Joseph W., living at Vancouver. He served in the First Washington Volunteer Regiment during the Philippine war. He had, also, one half-sister, Mrs. Hattie Culton, of Portland, Oregon. Our subject has five children living; William F., a blacksmith in Okanogan county, Washington; Maggie, wife of Milton Bennett, mentioned elsewhere; James S., a farmer of Sherman county; Mamie, living at home; and Iva, widow of Ned Lane, of Kent. Mrs. Trotter is a member of the United Presbyterian church, and a lady who is highly esteemed throughout the community.

HENRY SCHADEWITZ, a prominent and influential business man of Kent, Sherman county, president of the Eastern Oregon Trading Company, and postmaster, is a native of the Empire State, having been born at Rochester, New York, September 16, 1856.

His father, Carl H. Schadewitz, a native of Berlin, Germany, was a wagonmaker by trade. At the age of eighteen years he came to the United States, where he completed learning his trade, and then traveled throughout the country, working in a number of states, and finally reaching California via the Isthmus of Panama, and was engaged in the business of minning for several years. In 1852 he returned to New York. Later he was married at Rochester, returning to California shortly after the birth of our subject, and subsequently he was in the wagonmaking business at Stockton, California. He sold out this business when our subject was about seven years of age, and purchased a farm in San Joaquin county, California, where the family remained until they came to Oregon, overland, in the fall of 1887. Here he joined his sons, who had preceded him as early as 1884. He died in Sherman county, near Kent, in December, 1892. The mother, also a native of Germany, passed away in California in 1874.

Our subject, accompanied by two brothers, arrived in Sherman county in 1884, and secured land about three miles from the town of Kent. Mr. Schadewitz owns nearly one thousand acres of excellent farming land. In 1901 he bought out the business of Benjamin Brown, the pioneer merchant of Kent. Later he was associated with Milton Bennett, whose biographical sketch appears in another portion of this work.

February 13, 1891, at Acampo, San Joaquin county, California, our subject was married to Emma May Parks, a native of California. Her father, John Parks, a native of Missouri, came to California in the days of the early Argonauts, where he died in 1892. Her mother, Olive H. (Walston) Parks, is a native of Illinois. At the age of sixteen she came to California with friends, and now survives her husband at Acampo.

Our subscriber has two brothers, Charles, engaged in the stock business at Mitchell, Oregon, and Louis, a farmer living in Kent, where he conducts a meat market. Mrs. Schadewitz has two brothers and five sisters: John and Adelbert, farmers, in Sherman county; Annie, wife of a brother of our subject, Louis Schadewitz; Cynthia, wife of Adolph Phrenn, of San Joaquin county, California; Mattie, in California; Louisa, wife of Elmer Needham, a Sherman county farmer; Alzada, single, and residing with her mother in California. Mr. and Mrs. Schadewitz have six children living, Carl H., Olive M., Lola, Melvin, Louis M., and Theodore. John, one of the sons, is dead.

Our subject is a member of Kent Lodge No. 185, I. O. O. F. Politically, he is a Republican; has been a notary public, justice of the peace, school director, road supervisor, etc. His wife is a devout and consistent member of the Christian church. Mr. Schadewitz is a man of excellent business judgment and sagacity, is widely and favorably known, and an influential and popular citizen.

BYRON W. ANSON, at present a farmer in Sherman county, residing one-half mile east and one mile south, of Klondike, has enjoyed an eventful and distinguished career. He was born in New York city, April 25, 1854, the son of John and Julia (Derby) Anson, the latter a native of Indiana and now living at Hastings, Nebraska. The father is dead.

When only seven years of age our subject ran away from home and wandered to Lexington, Missouri, where for several years he resided with an old bachelor, attending district schools and working at various employments. When twelve years old he entered the service of the United States government as a messenger and was thus employed three years. Subsequently he served seven years as a government scout in Kansas, Colorado, Montana and the Black Hills. At the time of the Custer massacre on the Little Big Horn he was away after reinforcements and thus escaped with his life. In 1872 Mr. Anson went to San Francisco with a car-load of horses for Colonel Potter, U. S. A., and there left the employment of the government. He then went to Colusa county, California, where he rented land and engaged in farming. In 1887 he came to Sherman county, filed on a claim and purchased other land, although he had but moderate capital, and now owns four hundred and eighty acres. In 1898 he erected a handsome six-room Queen Anne cottage, which is well supplied with water piped into the house. He has twenty-five head of stock, horses and cows; five head of thoroughbred trotting horses of Phalmont stock, sired by Phalmont Boy, with a record of 2:18 $\frac{1}{4}$ ; eight head of thoroughbred Clydesdales and two Shires. He has two cows, full Durham and eligible to register.

Mr. Anson was married, September 13, 1887, at Wheatland, California, to Miss Josephine C. Hilderbrand, sister of George W. Hilderbrand, a sketch of whom appears elsewhere. Mr. Anson has one brother, Augustine, a plumber and gas-fitter, living at Hastings, Nebraska. Captain Anson, the famous base-ball player of the Chicago "White Stockings," known as "Baby Anson," and now a candidate for city clerk of Chicago, is a first cousin of our subscriber. Both Mr. and Mrs. Anson are members of the United Brethren church. He is a Democrat, and although not active, has served two years as road supervisor. Mr. Anson is a thorough gentleman, genial, popular and of excellent business principles. He bears a striking resemblance to the celebrated ball player. He and his wife are highly esteemed in their home community.

LOUIS SCHADEWITZ, a leading business man, general farmer and proprietor of the meat market, in Kent, Sherman county, was born in Liberty township, San Joaquin county, California, April 12, 1863. He is a brother of Henry Schadewitz, mentioned elsewhere in this volume. His parents, Carl H. and Maria (Washer) Schadewitz, were natives of Germany, who came to the United States at an early age. In December, 1892, the father died at Kent, Sherman county; the mother passed away in 1874, in California.

With his brothers our subject came to Oregon in 1884, and secured a homestead which he now cultivates successfully. At present he owns two sections of land, and rents another section. Four-fifths of all his land is tillable. He raises some cattle, usually wintering about seventy-five head, and has now thirty horses and sixty hogs.

It was only recently that he commenced the meat business, and he is running a supply wagon and erecting a two-story frame building, 30x60 feet, with 20-foot studding. A portion of the lower floor will be utilized for meat market purposes, and the rest for a residence. The upper floor is devoted to a commodious hall.

February 13, 1895, Mr. Schadewitz was united in marriage to Miss Mary A. Parks, a native Californian, born September 3, 1869. She is the daughter of John M. and Olive (Walston) Parks. The father was born in Missouri; the mother in Iowa. In 1850 the father, with an ox team, crossed the plains, and in the Golden State became an industrious and fairly successful miner. He died in California. The mother still lives at Acampo, California. Mrs. Schadewitz, the wife of our subject, is a sister of the wife of Henry Schadewitz, our subject's brother. Three children have blessed the union of Mr. and Mrs. Schadewitz: Oliver E., aged nine; Edna G., aged seven, and Olive M., aged two years. Mr. Schadewitz is an active member of the M. W. A. Royal Neighbors, and is vice noble grand of the I. O. O. F., all of Kent. Politically he is a Republican, but not an active participant in the campaigns of that party. For three successive terms he has been elected clerk of the school district in which he resides. Socially, and in a business sense, Mr. Schadewitz is a broad-minded, progressive and liberal man, popular with all and a highly respected member of the community in which he resides.

FREDERIC W. MATTHIAS, one of the most successful and prosperous farmers in Sherman county, lives three miles southeast of Klondike. He was born in Prussia, Germany, December 29, 1855. His parents were Christ and Elizabeth (Peeper) Matthias. The father served in the Prussian army in the war of 1848, and died in Kansas in 1891. At present the mother lives with her son and the subject of this sketch.

The latter came to the United States in May, 1884. In October of the same year he was followed by his parents, and the family settled in Kansas. In 1890 our subject came to Sherman county with his family and mother. He had, at this time, no capital and worked out for wages among the neighboring farmers. During five years he herded sheep, the family at that period living at De Moss Springs. Subsequently Mr. Matthias took a homestead and has purchased more land since until he now owns one thousand seven hundred and fifty acres. He also owns a combined harvester and thresher. In 1901 he built a two thousand five hundred dollar house. He has sixty-five head of cattle; eighty head of horses, Clydesdale and Percherons, the cattle being in the main graded Short-horn stock.

Mr. Matthias was married in Germany to Dora Hillem, a native of Germany, as were her parents. Our subject has two brothers and three sisters; Christ, a brick mason in Germany; William, in Kansas; Dora, wife of Willie Gieg, of Iowa; Minnie, wife of William Schaeffer, of Oklahoma; and Lizzie, wife of John Gieg. Mrs. Matthias has one sister, Mary, wife of Thomas Colbert, of Cheney, Washington. Mr. and Mrs. Matthias have four children, Fred, John, Alvina, wife of George Robinson, and Amelia. Our subject is a member of the M. W. A., of which he is venerable consul. Politically he is a Democrat, although not active. By industry combined with excellent business sagacity Mr. Matthias has built up a fine property and has, also, won the respect and esteem of the community in which he resides.

MILTON H. BENNETT, manager of the Eastern Oregon Trading Company, and one of the prominent and influential citizens of Kent, Sherman county, was born in Jones county, Iowa, October 13, 1863. His father, Craig Bennett, was a native of Guernsey county, Ohio. He died in 1890, in Sherman county, Oregon. His parents were natives of Ireland.

The mother of our subject, Isabel (Comstock) Bennett, is a native of New York, and at present resides with her son, Milton.

Until he was twenty-one years of age the latter was reared in Iowa, where he attended the public schools in his neighborhood, and worked on his father's farm. In 1874 the family removed to Kansas, but at the age of seventeen he returned to Iowa remaining there until 1886. Thence he moved to Oregon, whither his parents had preceded him by two years. His father took up land under the homestead laws, in Sherman county. This was in 1886 after the arrival of our subject. For two years the family had resided near Goldendale, Washington. The same year our subject secured land in Sherman county, two miles from the town of Kent. In 1890 he secured another place under the homestead laws, selling the preemption he had first located. He still owns the homestead which adjoins the town of Kent. In 1900 he erected a warehouse at Kent which was the first building in the town. This he conducted one season, and then sold out to the W. W. Company, but continued to conduct it for them one season. January 1, 1902, he engaged in the general merchandise business in company with Henry Schadewitz under the firm name of Schadewitz & Company. This firm was continued fourteen months when our subject disposed of his interest to his partner. August 1, 1903, he purchased the interest of Schadewitz & Company, and organized the Eastern Oregon Trading Company with a capital of $15,000. The officers are Henry Schadewitz, president; our subject secretary, treasurer and manager. The subject's brother, Walter H. Bennett, and John J. Schaeffer are, also, stockholders.

June 25, 1895, our subject was united in marriage to Maggie Trotter, a native of Vancouver, Washington. The nuptial ceremony was solemnized at Kent. The bride's parents were James A. and Sarah (Wheeler) Trotter. The mother, of whom a biographical sketch appears elsewhere, was born in North Carolina, July 10, 1851.

Our subject has four brothers: Abel C., of Everett, Washington; Ralph C., living near Grass Valley, a farmer; Walter H., a member of the Eastern Oregon Trading Company, residing at Kent; and Frank L., a Sherman county farmer on the John Day river. He has two sisters: Jennie, wife of Joseph Patterson, a farmer residing three and one-half miles southwest of Kent; and Belle, wife of Ormond C. Hogue, a farmer living near Kent. Fraternally our subject is a member of M. W. A., of Kent, and politically he is a Prohibitionist. Mrs. Bennett is a member of the United Presbyterian church. They are the parents of four children: Bessie, Earl, Cecil, and Ross.

Mr. Bennett has served several terms as school director. In 1887 the postoffice of Kent was established in his farm house and he was appointed postmaster, in which responsible position he remained ten years. At present he is deputy postmaster, the office being in the Eastern Oregon Trading Company's store. Mr. Bennett is a citizen of whom any community might be justly proud; energetic, public spirited, influential and locally patriotic to the core. Both himself and estimable wife are popular in social circles and highly esteemed by all.

WALTER H. BENNETT, a younger brother of Milton H. Bennett, a sketch of whom appears in this work, is, also, a member of the Eastern Oregon Trading Company, at Kent, Sherman county, Oregon. He was born in Iowa, April 25, 1868, the son of Craig and Isabel (Comstock) Bennett. The father was a native of Guernsey county, Ohio, and died in Sherman county, Oregon. The mother is a native of New York and at present resides at Kent with her son, Milton H. Bennett.

Our subject attended the public schools in his vicinity, acquiring a good business education, and worked on the farm with his parents, with whom he came west. When he arrived at man's estate he secured a fine tract of land adjoining that of his brother's and parents', and then he engaged in farming and freighting until August, 1903, when he became a member of the Eastern Oregon Trading Company, of which his brother, Milton, is manager, secretary and treasurer.

November 28, 1900, at Moro, Sherman county, our subject was married to Ella Craig, a native of Kansas. Her father, Thomas Craig, is a native of Ireland, and is at present engaged in truck farming at Buck Hollow, five miles from Kent. Her mother, Jennie Craig, was a native of Ireland, and died in Kansas. Mrs. Bennett had five brothers, three sisters and two half-sisters; John K., a Methodist Episcopal preacher, of Richmond, Wheeler county, Oregon; James, a plasterer and mason, at Fort Collins, Colorado; Thomas R., a plasterer and mason at Tillamook, Oregon; Ted, a mason and plasterer of Iola, Kansas; Hugh, of Red Cloud, Nebraska. The sisters are Mary, wife of Sylvester P. Small, a farmer and stockman, of North Branch, Kansas; Margaret, wife of Charles Gates, a butcher of Iola, Kansas; and Jennie, wife of George Neill, a farmer, living seven miles south of Kent. The two half-sisters are Lois and Pearl, living at home.

Mr. Bennett is, fraternally, a member of the M. W. A., and the Royal Neighbors. Politically he is a Prohibitionist. He and his estimable wife are devout and consistent members of the United Presbyterian church. He is director of the school district and has served as clerk of the same.

During a period of fourteen years our subject and his brother, Milton, were engaged in freighting from The Dalles into the interior. Walter H. Bennett served as special deputy sheriff and constable for several years, and is popular and highly esteemed in the community both socially and in a business way.

JOHN SCHASSEN, one of the most extensive and prosperous farmers of Sherman county, Oregon, resides in a most eligible location six miles northwest of Kent. He was born in Germany, June 4, 1862, in the province of Hanover, the son of John and Margaret (Witte) Schassen. Both parents are natives of the province of Hanover, where they at present reside, on a farm.

Having received a good education in the district schools of his neighborhood our subject came to the United States in 1884, and at once went to Sherman county, Oregon, where he joined a friend who had gone there some time before. The same year Mr. Schassen took up land under the homestead laws, and being almost entirely without capital, worked for wages, but continued to gradually improve his land, and, from time to time purchasing more, until he now owns one thousand four hundred and forty acres. One thousand acres of this he cultivates and raises some stock, usually wintering some fifty or sixty head of cattle and a few horses.

In 1901 he suffered the loss of his residence which was burned. Soon after this he erected in its place a large two-story, "L" house in which at present he resides. At The Dalles, in 1886, our subject was married to Margaret Patjeus, a native of Germany, born in Hanover province. She was the daughter of Andrew and Lizzie Patjeus. John Schassen, our subject, has one brother and three sisters; Henry, a hotel-keeper, in Assel, Hanover; Trinchen, wife of Deiderich Wilkins, of Germany, who is a pilot; Annie, wife of Johannes Stomberg, a merchant of Kiel, Germany; Emma, at home in Germany.

Mr. and Mrs. Schassen have five children: John, Emma, Annie, Lillie and Minnie, all at home with their parents. Fraternally our subject is a member of the A. O. U. W., of which he is G. V. Politically he is a Democrat, though in no sense an active politician. He was school director for a period of ten years. He is a man of excellent business ability and has acquired a good competence in the way of this world's goods, is industrious, energetic and influential in the community in which he resides.

HENRY FROCK, an extensive and prominent farmer of Sherman county, three and one-half miles north of Grass Valley, was born in Germany, March 28, 1865. His parents, Marx and Katherine (Hass) Frock, were both natives of Germany, where they died, the father in 1893 and the mother in 1903.

In the fall of 1885, our subject, Henry Frock, came to the United States, landing October first. He had learned the stone cutting trade in Germany, and at this business he worked in various places in this country, going first to Arkansas, one year; thence to Missouri, one year; then to Colorado, Utah, California and many other states and territories, twenty-eight in all, finally arriving in Portland in 1893, where he worked at his trade for some time, going thence to Umatilla county, where he found employment on a farm for about two years. In 1894 he came to Sherman county, filed on land, for which he was compelled to borrow money to pay the fees, and as he was without capital, he worked at his trade on a railroad and, also, did some grading, meanwhile improving his land to the best of his ability. He now owns a section of land, well stocked and supplied with all necessary conveniences for practical farming.

October 13, 1895, Mr. Frock was married to Alberta Hembree, born at Santa Rosa, California. Her parents were Albert and Josephine (Stone) Hembree, both natives of California, the father now living at Grass Valley, Sherman county. Her mother died near Portland, Oregon.

Our subject has three brothers and one sister, Marx, Claus, John and Christina, widow of Henry Harmeister, of Van Buren, Arkansas. Mr. and Mrs. Frock have three children living, Neta, Marx and Clarence; one, Harold, is dead.

Fraternally our subject is a member of the A. O. U. W., of which he is grand vice. Politically he is a Democrat, but not active in campaigns.

Mr. Frock came to Arkansas with a sister and her husband. He is an excellent workman and earned good wages, and was for three years a foreman in Colorado and earned seven dollars and fifty cents a day. He came to Sherman county in embarrassed circumstances and, as has been stated, was compelled to borrow money in order to pay for his filing. Here he found plenty of work and commenced to save money. He is now one of the respected farmers of the vicinity, very energetic and thoroughly Americanized, and a popular citizen.

SAMUEL B. HOLMES, one of the extensive farmers of Sherman county, where he resides, ten miles south of Grass Valley, was born in Nova Scotia, December 25, 1857. He is the son of William and Deborah (Roberts) Holmes, both natives of Nova Scotia, and the parents of both were English. William Holmes was by trade a cooper, and he died in Nova Scotia, May 26, 1903. The mother at present resides in Nova Scotia.

It was in Nova Scotia that our subject was reared until 1880, receiving a fair education in the neighboring district schools, and assisting his parents on the farm. That year he migrated to Leadville, Colorado, during the mining excitement which that season stampeded so many from the east. Here Mr. Holmes engaged in general teaming until the spring of 1883, when he started across the country, his destination being Puget Sound. Two years were passed in Tacoma in teaming and in the summer of 1885 he came to his present location in Sherman county, and in October secured some land under the homestead law, purchased more until he had increased his holdings to one thousand two hundred acres, to which he added by rental three hundred and twenty acres. At the present writing he cultivates about seven hundred acres, wintering seventy-five head of cattle and some horses and hogs.

August 15, 1889, at Nicholville, New York, our subject was married to Carrie Sherar, niece of Joseph H. Sherar, of Sherar Bridge, Wasco county, Oregon, mentioned elsewhere. Her father, James Sherar, was a native of Ireland, and died in 1881 at Nicholville, New York. The mother, Elizabeth (Wright) Sherar, also a native of Ireland, died at Nicholville in 1892. James Sherar was engaged in the general merchandise business and was a well-to-do, highly respected and prominent citizen.

Our subject has eight brothers: Henry, an Alaska mining man; Charles, engaged in the iron business in Nova Scotia; Thomas, a physician practicing in Oakland, California; Isaac, a civil engineer in Laramie, Wyoming; Alfred, of Reno, Nevada; Sovereign; Harvey, at home in Nova Scotia; and Weymouth, a carpenter of Oakland, California. He has one sister, Sadie A., single, who has been a trained nurse for fourteen years, now living in Boston, Massachusetts. Mrs. Holmes has one brother, Henry, a drayman, residing at Nicholville, New York.

Our subject is a member of the A. O. U. W., and the M. W. A., of Kent, Sherman county. Politically he is a Republican and frequently a delegate to county conventions; fairly active, but is not an aspirant for political preferment. At present he is clerk of school district No. 25, Sherman county. To Mr. and Mrs. Holmes have been born five children: Mabel, aged fourteen; Cassie, twelve; Millie, ten; Lela, eight, and Willie, four.

Mr. Holmes is quite an extensive farmer and a sagacious business man; popular with all while he and his estimable wife are highly esteemed in the community in which they have made their home.

JOHN A. WALTER, a Sherman county farmer, resides at Klondike, opposite the post-office. He was born in Illinois, August 14, 1868, the son of William and Elizabeth (Bailey) Walter, the former a native of Pennsylvania; the latter of Indiana. The ancestry of the father were Pennsylvania Dutch. He now lives at Dallas City, Illinois, where he follows the trade of a blacksmith. The mother of our subject died when he was eleven months old. John A. Walter was reared in Illinois by his grandparents until he was nineteen years of age. Here he attended the district schools and secured a good business education. In 1887 he went to Yuba county, California, where he remained nine months and thence came to Sherman county, where he worked out and rented land for four years. He then, in 1891, filed on land and subsequently purchased more. At present he owns a section on which he raises stock for his own use. He has twenty head of graded Hambeltonian and Clydesdale horses.

Our subject was married January 19, 1893, to Fanny M. Hilderbrand, born in Colusa, Illinois, sister of George W. Hilderbrand, mentioned in another portion of this work. The marriage ceremony was solemnized at Colusa.

Our subject has two half-sisters, Jessie, wife of William McKee, of Chicago, and Mamie, wife of Edward Hubner, a merchant of Dallas, Illinois. Three children have been born to Mr. and Mrs. Walter: William M., aged twelve; Alta M., aged five; John A., aged three.

Politically, Mr. Walter is an independent and is now serving his second term as school director. He is a member of the United Brethren church, and has been Sunday school superintendent for a number of years. He is at present class leader, a most exemplary citizen and one who has won and retains the confidence and respect of the community in which he has cast his lot.

In his immediate vicinity, Mr. Walter is one of the pioneers, for when he first came only a portion of the country was settled. He has seen the virgin prairie transformed to one of the greatest wheat producing sections of Oregon, for Sherman county, one of the smallest of the entire state, is rated as producing one fifth of the entire wheat crop raised in Oregon.

TIRPIN HILL is recognized as one of the prosperous and enterprising farmers and general business men of Sherman county, residing nine and one-half miles southeast of Grass Valley. The date of his birth was August 25, 1858, and the place of his nativity Wapello county, Iowa.

The father of our subject, William T. Hill, was born in Illinois, but his parents were Kentuckians. He died June 7, 1903, in Umatilla county, Oregon, near Athena. The mother, Delilah (Coleman) Hill, was, also, a native of Illinois, and at present resides at the old home about six miles northeast of Athena.

Until he reached the age of fourteen years our subject was reared and received a common school education in Iowa. Thence, accompanied by his parents, he removed to Oregon, where the family settled in Umatilla county. This was in 1872. Tirpin Hill remained with his family until 1883, when he removed to Sherman county, Oregon, and filed on his present homestead of one-half section of fine agricultural land, which is mostly devoted to the raising of grain.

July 1, 1884, he was united in marriage to Mina E. Dennison. The marriage was solemnized near the town of Eugene, Oregon, the birthplace of the bride. Her father was Fay Dennison, a native of Vermont. Her mother, Mary A. (Hite) Dennison, came to Oregon, overland, from the east with her parents when she was twelve years of age. Fay Dennison was an orphan boy, and came west to Oregon in 1853, crossing the plains with an ox train. He died December 11, 1875. At present the mother of Mrs. Hill lives in Grant county.

The subject of this sketch has five brothers and three sisters; Heaton, of Antelope; Oscar, a farmer in Umatilla county; Perry, of Hartline, Douglas county, Washington; Jerome, living with his mother on the old homestead; Reed, of Athena; Mary T., single; Ida M., wife of Charles Downing, a farmer near Athena; and Carrie, wife of Frank O. Rogers, of Athens. Mrs. Hill has three brothers, Charles, a resident of California; and Percy and Frank, both living near Spray, Wheeler county, Oregon. She has, also, two half-sisters, Effie, wife of Melvin Conger, a Grant county stockman, and Edna, wife of Charles Bayless, of Grant county, Oregon.

To Mr. and Mrs. Hill have been born two children, Elsie and Fay, girls. Politically, Mr. Hill is a Democrat, although by no means an active worker in the ranks of that element. Socially he is one of the most popular and highly esteemed residents of his community, and through years of industry, combined with excellent business sagacity, he has acquired a competence in the way of worldly possessions, thus ensuring a life free from anxiety and forebodings.

HUGH E. SMITH, a prominent and prosperous Sherman county farmer, resides three-quarters of a mile east of Klondike. He was born in Canada, in Ontario province, near Ottawa, January 14, 1850, the son of John and Mary (McHugh) Smith, the father a native of Canada; the mother of Ireland. The paternal grandfather of our subject was born in County Cavan, Ireland, and was at the battle of Lundy's Lane, July 25, 1814; the grandmother was born in Perthshire, Scotland. Her husband was a lumberman and farmer.

The parents of our subject's mother, Mary (McHugh) Smith, were members of an old Irish family. John Smith and his wife went to Solano county, California, in 1856. The father now lives at Oakland; the mother died in Solano county in 1887. For many years her husband was a prominent stockman there, but is now retired. Here our subject was reared and attended the public schools in his vicinity. When about twenty years of age he faced the world on his own account. He first went to Stanislaus county with a brother, Michael, and engaged in wheat raising. He was there four years when he disposed of his property interests and returned to Solano county where he remained two years running a threshing machine the most of the time. Thence, in 1883, he came to Sherman county, Oregon, secured three-quarters of a section of land and purchased more later. He now owns two thousand two hundred and forty acres, all of which is under cultivation. He owns a combination harvester, headers, etc., and raises horses and mules, of which he has one hundred head. Mr. Smith also owns the celebrated registered jack, "Governor Goble," reared in Colusa county, California, and which captured the first prize at The Dalles fair in 1902. His horses are graded Hambletonians.

May 3, 1876, at Hill's Ferry, Stanislaus county, California, at the residence of the bride's parents, Mr. Smith was married to Georgia A. Spriggs, born in Yolo county, California, the daughter of John M. and Sarah (Carroll) Spriggs, the father a native of North Carolina; the mother of Georgia. John M. Spriggs was born near Greenville, a descendant of an old southern family of planters. He settled in Yolo county in 1852, but was also engaged in the mercantile business in St. Helena, Napa county, for some time, and where he was an influential and prominent citizen.

The mother of Mrs. Smith is a descendant of the old Carroll family, famous in southern history. Charles Carroll, "of Carrollton," was born at Annapolis, Maryland, September 20, 1737, and died at Baltimore, November 14, 1832. He was a distinguished American patriot, a signer of the Declaration of Independence and United States Senator from Maryland from 1789 for some years. John Carroll was born at Upper Marlborough, Maryland, January 8, 1735, and died at Georgetown, D. C., December 3, 1815. He was an American archbishop of the Roman Catholic church. He founded Georgetown College in 1788. With Charles Carroll, Samuel Chase and Benjamin Franklin he was sent by the Continental Congress on a political mission to Canada in 1776.

Hugh E. Smith, our subject, has four brothers and two sisters; James, a justice of the peace at Elmira, Solano county, California; Michael L., a capitalist in Oakland, California; Matthias P., a farmer near Monkland, Sherman county; John A., who owns jointly with his brother nine thousand acres of land in Gilliam and Sherman counties; Elizabeth, wife of J. William Martin, of Woodville, Tulare county, California, a farmer, county supervisor and prominent Democrat; Mary J., single, living with her father. Kate, Nannie and Lucy, three other sisters, are dead. Mrs. Smith has two sisters; Florida A., wife of T. D. Griffin, a farmer near Williams, Colusa county, California; Mary J., wife of Henry Gentry, of the same place.

Both Mr. Smith and his estimable wife are members of the Roman Catholic church. Politically, he is a Democrat, and was delegate to county conventions previous to the organization of Sherman county. Mr. and Mrs. Smith have nine children; John L., a Gilliam county farmer; Carl E., of Wasco; Clarence, Lawrence H., Leo A., George McHugh, all at home; Irene, wife of Earl D. Griffin, a hotel proprietor at Cacheville, Yolo county, California; Inez P. and Zela.

RICHMOND L. CAMPBELL, who resides at Grass Valley, Oregon, was born in Elliott, California, on July 28, 1865. His father, Washington L. Campbell, was born in Virginia and his ancestors were among the earliest Jamestown settlers. In the early forties of the last century, he came to Tennessee, and in 1849 crossed the plains with ox teams to California, consuming eleven months in the trip. After mining until 1852, he took a homestead where our subject was born and there resided until 1883. Then he journeyed to Oregon, settling near Mitchell, where the father bought a section of land and engaged in stockraising, and there he now resides. Our subject was educated in the district schools of California and remained with his father until 1887. Then he engaged in the stock business for himself near Mitchell but, owing to the hard winter, lost his cattle. Next we see him in Ellensburg, Washington, where he spent two years in the wood business. In 1891, he returned to Mitchell and remained three years. After that, he opened a restaurant in Moro, and six months later took charge of the old Grass Valley Hotel. After two years in this business, he was occupied variously and for six years was road supervisor. In June, 1902, he was elected assessor of Sherman county and made an excellent record in the office. In politics, he is a Democrat, and, as the county is Republican, at the next election he suffered defeat with his ticket. On August 4, 1887, at Anatone, Grant county, now Wheeler county, Mr. Campbell married Maude L. Buker, who was born in The Dalles, on November 8, 1869. Her father, John H. Buker, lives in Grass Valley. He married Annie Benjamin. Mrs. Campbell's parents both descended from early colonial families. On the father's side, the ancestors fought in the Revolution and were staunch patriots. Her father followed the sea for many years in various capacities and afterwards entered business in Grass Valley as a merchant, where he is at the present time. Her mother was the daughter of Richard and Elmira Benjamin, who crossed the plains with ox teams in 1852. Mr. Benjamin at one time owned much of the land where Spokane, Washington, is now situated. He operated the first sawmill there and was one of the earliest pioneers. Mr. Campbell has four brothers, Winslow A., Washington L., Abdiel R., and Walter. He also has four sisters, Mrs. Sallie E. Eaton, Mrs. Cora E. Cannon, Mrs. Lena F. Sigfrit. To Mr. and Mrs. Campbell two children have been born, Richmond L., aged eight, and Guy R., who died at Ellensburg, Washington, on June 2, 1891, being two years of age. Mr. Campbell is a member of the I. O. O. F., while he and his wife belong to the Rebekahs. He is past grand of the order and has been delegate to the grand lodge, and also belongs to the W. W. In political matters, Mr. Campbell is a Democrat and a staunch supporter of his party. Mrs. Campbell has the following named brothers and sisters: John, Harry, Bert, Paul, Mrs. Dollie Hart, Mrs. Grace Bourhill and Mrs. Stella Ottman, and Echo Buker.

JOHN SIMPSON, a prominent and influential citizen of Sherman county, resides five miles west of Wasco. He was born in Ohio, June 23, 1859, the son of William and Margaret (Taylor) Simpson. William Simpson was a native of Scotland, born near Aberdeen, where he followed the avocation of a farmer until his death. At present the mother lives in Ohio with other children.

It was in the Buckeye State that our subject was reared until 1881, when he came direct to his present location in Sherman county. He took up a homestead near his present residence and has since purchased more land. Some of this he has sold but he still owns one thousand acres, eight hundred and fifty of which he cultivates. Mr. Simpson has lived here continuously with the exception of eighteen months at The Dalles and six months in California.

October 6, 1884, at The Dalles, our subject was married to Lenora Ritchey, born in Ohio, April 12, 1863. Her parents were Emanuel and Rebecca (Zimmerman) Ritchey. The mother was a descendant of an old Pennsylvania Dutch family of distinguished lineage. Emanuel Ritchey, the father of our subject's wife, served in the Civil war. Mr. Simpson has three brothers and six sisters; James, at Salt Lake, Utah; David, a merchant in Oak Shade, Ohio; George, in Wyoming; Annie, wife of William Bath, of Sandhill, Erie county, Ohio; Maggie, wife of William Cook, a merchant in Huron, Ohio; Mary, wife of Charles Cleveland, a carpenter in Huron; Jennie, wife of Christopher Cleveland, of Marion, Ohio; Lizzie, wife of Dudley Morrill, a merchant in Stockton, California; and Clara, wife of John McQuillan, of Delta, Fulton county, Ohio. Mrs. Simpson has two brothers and two sisters; John and Burt, the latter living in Spokane; Bertha, wife of Eugene Sindel, of San Juan, California; and Estella, who is single.

Mr. and Mrs. Simpson have two children; Fay, a girl of sixteen, and Linn, a boy aged eleven years. Politically, Mr. Simpson is a Republican, but is not particularly active in the campaigns. He has been school director of his district. He is a man of sterling integrity and one who has been very successful in financial circles.

Mr. Simpson has, without doubt, one of the most handsome farm residences in Sherman county. It is a strictly modern, eight-room structure, finished throughout in hard oil, and is of exceptionally beautiful architectural design. All his other buildings are in keeping with his residence, and his is one of the choice and beautiful places of this prosperous country. Mr. Simpson, also, has the distinction of bringing the first automobile to Sherman county. Being of a mechanical turn of mind, he is adding a machine shop to the other improvements of the estate, not, however, for commercial purposes, but that he may have at hand the necessities for the pursuit of his desires as his inclinations have always been in the direction of inventions and mechanical investigations.

GEORGE W. HILDERBRAND, a prosperous and successful farmer of Sherman county, resides three and one-half miles east of Wasco. He was born in Hancock county, Illinois, February 19, 1865. His father, Michael, was a native of the Keystone State, of Pennsylvania Dutch descent. He died in Illinois, April 28, 1876. The mother, Rebecca (Royce) Hilberbrand, was born in McDonough county, Illinois; her father in Indiana, and her mother in Tobias county, North Carolina. At present she lives near Klondike, Sherman county, with the family of her son-in-law, John A. Walter.

Until he had attained his majority, our subject was reared in Illinois on the home farm, where he attended the public schools. In 1886 he migrated to Yuba county, California, where he remained one year near Marysville. Thence, with slender capital, he came to Sherman county where he purchased land on credit. At present he owns one thousand or more acres of land, a fine, two-story brick house, good outbuildings, threshing outfit, etc.

He was married May 17, 1897, at The Dalles, to Rebecca Chamberlain, a native of Missouri, the daughter of Joseph and Ruth (Corell) Chamberlain. Her father was a native of England, and died at Lyle, Washington, in June, 1902. Her mother, a native of Missouri, now lives at Lyle, on the homestead. They moved from Missouri to Lyle about 1889 and secured a homestead where the mother now lives.

Our subject has one brother and five sisters; Douglass, a farmer living ten miles east of Wasco; Ellen, widow of John Bailey; Lillie, wife of William Lyons, a farmer in Illinois; Josephine, wife of Byron W. Anson, living near Klondike, and mentioned elsewhere; Lutherie, wife of Cyrus Lofton, of Tygh Valley, Wasco county, and Fannie, wife of John A. Walters, a farmer near Klondike postoffice. He had three sisters, now deceased: Annie E., wife of George Strand, died October 6, 1902, aged thirty-five years; Laura, wife of William Harding, died in Yuba county, California, February 6, 1880; Martha J., died in Hancock county, Illinois, aged two years. Mrs. Hilderbrand has two brothers and five sisters: Robert and Fred, at Lyle, Washington; Nettie, wife of Clark McCarty; Fanny, wife of John Spitzenberger, of Salem, Oregon; Emma, single, living with our subject; Neta, aged sixteen, and Minnie, aged twelve, with her mother at Lyle. Mr. Hilderbrand is a member of the M. W. of A., of Klondike, and politically is a Democrat, and serving his fourth term as clerk of his school district. Mr. and Mrs. Hilderbrand have four children, Vestia, Ormond, Joseph, and Roscoe. Mr. Hilderbrand is a genial and popular member of his community, and one who has won and retains the confidence of a wide circle of friends and acquaintances.

WILLIAM I. WESTERFIELD is the proprietor of the Grass Valley Journal, a bright and newsy sheet of Sherman county, the product of his skill and brain. He was born in Lafayette, Oregon, on December 13, 1863, the son of Alexander B. and Rebecca A. (Chrisman) Westerfield, who were married in the east and came to Oregon in the forties. The father died when our subject was six years of age and the mother died on July 4, 1895. The father was a physician and surgeon in the Mexican War and practiced many years in Yamhill county, Oregon. Our subject spent his life until 1898 in the county of his birth. He received his education in the Lafayette public schools and when ten years of age entered the office of the old Lafayette Courier. For five or six years he labored there and became master of every portion of the printer's trade. Then he spent two years in a drug store. After that, in company with his brother, Alexander B., he bought the Lafayette Register and job office, which they operated for three or four years. At about that time, the county seat was removed from Lafayette to McMinnville, and six months previous to that Mr. Westerfield sold the Register. The plant was removed later to McMinnville. Our subject then took up the printing and undertaking business and conducted it, together with a store, for three and one-half years, then he worked at various employments through the hard times, and in 1898 he came to Grass Valley. For a few months he was in the employ of the Journal Publishing Company, and then leased the Grass Valley Journal. In February, 1902, he bought the newspaper and printing plant and since then has handled it in person. He has made the Journal a very attractive and good paper, which is highly prized throughout this part of the state. In addition to his printing establishment, he owns a residence and two lots in Grass Valley, besides other property.

In 1890, at Lafayette, Oregon, Mr. Westerfield married Anna B. Gardiner, who was born near Kalama, Washington. Her father, William A. Gardiner, was born in Scotland and died in Portland, in 1902. He married Clara B. Martin, who died at Portland, in 1898. Our subject has three brothers; George, in Dayton; Alexander B., in McMinnville, Oregon; Cornelius, deceased. To Mr. and Mrs. Westerfield four children have been born, Floyd C., Elvena, and Veda and Vera, twins.

Mr. Westerfield is past grand of the I. O. O. F., and present chief patriarch of the Encampment. He also belongs to the A. O. U. W., and he and his wife are members of the Degree of Honor. For five years Mr. Westerfield has been city recorder and in this capacity has given excellent satisfaction. Personally, he is a man well informed, retiring and with little ostentation, and the success he has made of his paper indicates his ability.

GEORGE V. STANTON, one of the young and progressive business men of Grass Valley, is occupied in the lumber business. He handles a thriving trade and is well known in this part of the country. He was born in Kent county, Michigan, on April 4, 1877, the son of George H. and Etha (Bell) Stanton, a native of Oswego county, New York, and now living a retired life in Grass Valley. The family came here when our subject was fourteen years of age, and he completed his education in the public schools of this town. The father took a homestead and bought other land some seven miles southwest from Grass Valley and our subject was reared on the farm. When twenty-one years of age, he took a quarter section of land by government right, and bought a half section more. After conducting the place for a couple of years, he sold out and in 1903 bought out the lumber yard owned in Grass Valley by Porter Brothers. Since then he has given his entire attention to the handling of this business and carries a nice stock of lumber and all kinds of building material.

On October 9, 1898, Mr. Stanton married Miss Alva E. Farra, a native of Benton county, Oregon, the daughter of Thomas J. and Lizzie (Porter) Farra, natives of Missouri and Benton county, respectively. The father crossed the plains in very early days and met his death in 1901 by drowning in the Red river in the northwest territory. Our subject has two brothers, Charles A. and Edwin D., the former in Grass Valley and the latter in Marysville, Washington. He also has four sisters; Ella, the wife of Frank M. French, a stockman in Heppner, Oregon; Lorinda, wife of Hollis W. Wilcox; Edna M., wife of Howard C. Coon; Carrie, at home. Mrs. Stanton has three brothers, John, Samuel and Harley, school boys; and three sisters, Maude, the wife of Brack Wiseman, of this county; Maggie, wife of Artimus Barnum, a farmer near Moro; and Frankie, at home.

Mr. Stanton is a member of the I. O. O. F. and the W. W. He is a staunch Republican though not especially active. To our subject and his wife one child, Floyd, has been born, aged three. Mr. Stanton is an industrious man, attends closely to business and is esteemed by all who know him.

JAMES L. VAN WINKLE, who stands at the head of a furniture and shoe house in Grass Valley, Oregon, is one of the substantial and popular men of this part of Sherman county. He was born in Morgan county, Illinois, on November 6, 1849, his parents being Thomas and Orpha A. (Barlow) Van Winkle, natives of Illinois. The father's parents were natives of Kentucky and came from Dutch ancestry. He had three brothers in the Civil war, Alexander E., Edward and John. The first two were wounded. The family crossed the plains with ox and horse teams in 1854 and settled in Petaluma, California. Later they came to Sacramento, where the mother died. The father was occupied in freighting from Sacramento to various points in Nevada, and our subject assisted him in this business when not attending school. Later the father came to Washington and died in Yakima county in 1889. Our subject bought a farm on Grand Island, about twelve miles below Colusa, which he sold later and removed to Stanislaus county. There he lived nine years then went to Alameda county. For five years he was occupied in breaking and training horses, and in 1883 took a homestead, preemption and timber claim. It was about 1898 when he came to Grass Valley and engaged in his present business which he has conducted successfully since.

On November 6, 1877, in Graysonville, California, Mr. Van Winkle married Jennie E. McReynold, a native of Sonoma county, California. Later they were divorced and on May 30, 1895, Mr. Van Winkle married Myrtle Shintaffer, a native of Hixton, Wisconsin. Her father, Cornelius D. Hinman, was born in New York and his father participated in the War of 1812. The Hinman family was one of the old colonial families, well known in history and prominent in the professions and commercial life. Many of them are in New England, New York and other portions of the country. Our subject has no brothers living; and has one sister, Fannie, the wife of R. Sisk, in Yakima county, Washington. Mrs. Van Winkle has one brother, George E. Hinman, a musician, in Tacoma. By his first marriage, our subject has the following named children: Wesley, of Stockton, California, who recently invented a friction clutch for automobiles that transfers the pulling power to the front as well as the rear wheels, for the American patents for which he has refused fifty thousand dollars; Archie, of Farmington, California; May, wife of Edward McReynolds, in Umatilla, Oregon; and Daisy, the wife of Ray McReynolds, at Ukiah, Oregon. To our subject and his wife two children have been born, E. Guy, and Thomas A., the latter March 10, 1905. By her first marriage Mrs. Van Winkle has one child, Ella, who is at home. Politically, Mr. Van Winkle is a Republican and is a member of the city council. His wife belongs to the Women of Woodcraft, and is also organist of the Methodist Episcopal church. Mr. and Mrs. Van Winkle are popular people and among the substantial and leading citizens of this part of the county.

EDWARD D. McKEE, the leading druggist of Sherman county, has a fine store and stock in Wasco, in every respect an up-to-date emporium. He is a native Oregonian, having been born in Marion county, June 20, 1873, the son of David A. and Caroline (Hall) McKee, the father a native of Kentucky; the mother of Illinois. The ancestry of David McKee were members of an old southern family. Both the parents of our subject came to Oregon in 1852, with their parents, David A. at the age of fifteen; Caroline, four years old. The parents located in the Willamette valley. The family of our subject remained in Oregon City two years, where the father's father conducted the first blacksmith shop in town. Thence he migrated to Marion county where he secured a donation claim which land he retained until his death. Nearly all of it still remains in the McKee family. David A. McKee, the father of our subject, lives in Woodburn with his second wife; he is retired from active business. The mother of our subject died in February, 1897, on the old donation claim.

On this same place our subject was reared until he was nineteen years of age. He attended various public schools, and also pursued a course in pharmacy at the Willamette University, in the pharmaceutical department. He was graduated in 1895 and began work in a drug store at Portland, where he remained five years. Following a six months' visit home and a six months' trip east, Mr. McKee came to Wasco, Sherman county, August 1, 1899, and opened a drug store in which he was eminently successful. May 5, 1904, he moved into a one-story brick building, which he had erected, twenty-six by sixty feet in size; the largest drug store in the county. He carries stock and fixtures to an amount of over four thousand dollars.

February 20, 1901, at the residence of the bride's parents in Wasco, Mr. McKee was united in marriage to Miss Virginia Dunlap, daughter of Clark Dunlap, mentioned elsewhere. Our subject has four brothers and four sisters living: Charles, a Marion county farmer; Leonard, a druggist in Goldendale, Klickitat county, Washington; Wiley, a bookkeeper in Portland; Herman, a druggist in Goldendale; Ada, wife of Charles B. Hill, a member of the Portland police force; Emma, wife of William Owen, a merchant of Monitor, Oregon; Ivy and Minnie, single, living at Woodburn.

Mr. and Mrs. McKee have one child, Marion, aged ten months. He is a member of Cascade Lodge, No. 303, B. P. O. E., of The Dalles, Aurora Lodge, No. 54, K. of P., of Wasco, the A. O. U. W., of which he is past master workman, and the M. W. A. Mrs. McKee is a member of the Methodist church. He and his wife are highly esteemed and popular in the community in which they reside.

JAMES DENNIS, a retired stockman, is now residing at Grass Valley, Oregon. He was born at Stockton, California on January 27, 1859, being the son of Robert and Mary T. (Wheatley) Dennis, natives of Connecticut. The father came to Stockton, California, in 1847 and for years was in the employ of the Fish and Dooley Stage and Steamboat Company. His death occurred in 1882. The mother died when our subject was four years old. The next year his father sent him to a private school in San Rafael, where he studied two years. Then he left the school, being desirous of more freedom, and worked at farming and other occupations until he was twenty-two years of age. In 1882, he came to Oregon and for sixteen years, altogether, was in the employ of J. H. Sherar. He labored one year for Mr. Sherar, then took a claim on Summitt prairie and with a partner started stock raising, beginning with one hundred head of cattle. One year later, Mr. Sherar wrote him to return and he did so and remained with him for fifteen years. Then he came to Grass Valley and purchased one and one half acres in the edge of town and erected a house. After that, he went to Portland and resided three years, whence he returned to his home in Grass Valley where he has remained ever since.

In February, 1901, at The Dalles, Oregon, Mr. Dennis married Margaret Scott, a native of New Brunswick and the daughter of Adam and Jeannette (Amos) Scott, natives of Scotland and New Brunswick, respectively, and now living on the old place. Mr. Dennis has the following named brothers and sisters, Robert, Thomas, John, James, all farming in New Brunswick; Ellen, the wife of Andrew Brant; Elizabeth, the wife of Robert Walton; Jessie, single; Barbara, the wife of Thomas Walton; Agnes, the wife of Fred Krusow, mentioned elsewhere in this work; and Annie, wife of George Swartz, a farmer near Grass Valley. Mrs. Dennis had come with her sister Annie, to visit their sister, Mrs. Krusow, in 1900.

Our subject is a member of the I. O. O. F. and in politics is a Republican, though not especially active. During his association with Mr. Sherar, Mr. Dennis was in charge of the well known Finnegan ranch, which was owned by Mr. Sherar. This was a large estate of three sections and Mr. Dennis made an excellent record in the management of the same. His stock interests have been continued all these years and he has now a nice holding of property.

EDMOND HANNAFIN of the firm of Hannafin and Wiley, proprietors of the Bank Saloon, Grass Valley and of the Abbey, in Kent, was born in Ireland, on November 11, 1856. His parents, Michael and Margaret (Dowling) Hannafin were also natives of County Kerry, of the Emerald Isle. The father followed farming and contracting. Our subject was educated in the public schools and with the Christian brothers and remained there with his father until nearly twenty years of age. In 1874, he went to New Zealand and followed sheep shearing for some years. Also he owned some city property there and did mining, being there and in Australia for ten years. In 1884, he came to San Francisco and then came to Oregon. For three years he followed sheep shearing in California, Oregon and Montana and in 1887, took up land in Sherman county and engaged in sheep raising for some time. He handled from two to three thousand but during Cleveland's administration gave up sheep business for a time. Upon Mr. McKinley's election, he again took up sheep raising and followed it until 1902. Then he purchased a saloon in Grass Valley and the next year erected a two story brick building and opened his present establishment. He entered into partnership with Mr. Wiley and they have continued thus since. Mr. Hannafin has never seen fit to take to himself a wife and is one of the most popular men in Grass Valley. He has one brother, Dennis, a farmer in Ireland and two sisters, Mary and Katherine, in Ireland. He is a member of the I. O. O. F. and the Elks. In politics, he is a Republican and shows a keen interest in this realm. He is frequently delegate to the county conventions and always labors for the measures that he deems best for the country.

HOLLIS W. WILCOX, one of the younger business men of Grass Valley, has also the distinction of being postmaster of the town; and it may be stated that the business of the United States postoffice was never conducted better in the history of Grass Valley than it is under his management. He is careful, prompt, obliging and well informed and the result is, he gives the people a service second to none. Owing to the carefulness mentioned, Mr. Wilcox has scores of friends and is known as a kind, upright and substantial man. He was born in Marion county this state, on August 6, 1875, his parents being John D. and Ella S. (Van Nuys) Wilcox, who are especially mentioned in this work elsewhere. He grew up in the various places where his parents lived, working on the farm and attending the district schools. After completing the training to be gained there, he entered the Baptist academy at Grass Valley and studied some time. In 1898, he was appointed deputy postmaster and on June 20 of the following year, he received the appointment of postmaster with the office in his store. He handles cigars, tobacco, ice cream, confectionery and so forth and has a very popular place.

On May 20, 1897, Mr. Wilcox married Loxie J. Stanton, a native of Michigan. The wedding occurred at the home of the bride's parents and our subject and his wife are parents of two children: Willard, born December 22, 1900, and Bernard, born February 4, 1904. Mrs. Wilcox's parents are George H. and Ethel (Bell) Stanton, esteemed residents of this section, and are mentioned in this volume.

Mr. Wilcox is a member of the I. O. O. F., being past grand of the order, while he and his wife belong to the Rebekahs. In politics, he adheres to the principles of the Republican party and is especially active in that realm. He is a thorough business man and gentleman and a popular citizen.

FRED KRUSOW, who was born in Wisconsin on June 24, 1858, now resides four miles southwest of Grass Valley. He is one of the leading men of Sherman county and is also one of the heaviest property owners. His parents, Henry and Elizabeth (Stoneman) Krusow, were natives of Germany, where they married. About 1843 they came to the United States and settled in Wisconsin. Later, they moved to Minnesota where the father died on February 12, 1902. The day that he was buried he would have been eighty-four years of age. The mother died in Minnesota when ninety-two. When our subject was six years of age a move was made from Wisconsin to Minnesota where the father bought land. The public schools of this latter place furnished the educational training for our subject and he remained there until 1884. Being then desirous of exploring the west, he turned his face toward the setting sun and visited various portions until he arrived in what is now Sherman county. On April 3, 1884, he filed on a homestead which was the nucleus of his estate. Being without capital he was forced to work out on the adjoining farms and, as he was able, improved the place and from time to time purchased more land until he has now the magnificent estate of eighteen hundred and forty acres. Fourteen hundred acres of this are in a high state of cultivation. His principal crops are wheat and barley. He raises some horses and cattle, and is known far and near as one of the largest grain growers of Sherman county. He recently purchased a fine residence in Grass Valley, and eighty acres more of land. Mr. Krusow's thrift, industry and business ability have been amply testified by the success he has won and he is deserving of the position which he holds, having earned it by virtue of merit.

On July 16, 1898, Mr. Krusow married Agnes Scott, a native of New Brunswick and a sister of Mrs. George W. Schwartz and Mrs. James W. Dennis, who are mentioned elsewhere in this volume. Mr. Krusow has three brothers, Robert, William and Henry, farmers in Minnesota; and one sister, Minnie, wife of Ernest Lange, a farmer in Minnesota.

Mr. Krusow is a member of the I. O. O. F. and the Encampment. In political matters he is a Republican but not especially active. He has served four years as county commissioner, being appointed once and once elected. In this capacity he made a splendid record and is a very popular man throughout the county. Personally, Mr. Krusow is a genial, public spirited man and makes many friends. He and his wife are leading people and are very favorably known.

DAN W. MYERS, one of the farmers of Sherman county, living six miles south from Grass Valley, was born in Ohio on July 8, 1867, the son of John W. and Margaret (Stratton) Myers. The mother was a native of Ohio and died there when our subject was six years old. Our subject was reared in Ohio until six then after his mother's death came to Iowa with his father, where they remained six years and he attended the public schools. When our subject was twelve, the family came on to Oregon and the father purchased three hundred acres in Linn county, where he remained until his death, a very successful and highly respected man. Upon the death of his father, our subject being seventeen years of age, he started out for himself and worked on the farm and at various other employments for a long time. For eight years of this time, he was foreman in the finishing department in a large furniture factory in Linn county. In 1898, he left his family in Albany and came on to Sherman county and sought out a location. After cruising about for some time in the summer and doing some work on the ranches, he rented land for a year, and brought his family to Sherman county. Then in 1901, he purchased a place about six miles south from Grass Valley, his estate being one section of good land. He rents more and has about ten hundred and eighty-eight acres in cultivation. Mr. Myers gives attention almost exclusively to farming and raising stock sufficient for use on the estate.

On March 29, 1891, Mr. Myers married Miss Nellie Rhoades, the wedding occurring at Albany, Oregon. To Mr. and Mrs. Myers, the following named children have been born: Frances, Helen, Hallie, and Lyndon.

Mr. Myers is a member of the W. W. and the and his wife belong to the Christian church. He takes great interest in building up school facilities and gives of his time to serve upon the board. He and his wife are people of excellent standing and they are achieving a good success here in their labors.

EMMITT OLDS is one of the highly respected and worthy citizens of Sherman county and he and his estimable wife have labored together here for years in worthy effort to build up the country and to improve the morals of the people and better the conditions of every one. They have shown thrift and wisdom in their labors and are reaping the deserved success.

Emmitt Olds was born in Yamhill county, Oregon, on September 13, 1846. His father, Ruel Olds, was a native of New York and crossed the plains with ox teams in 1844, settling on a donation claim in Yamhill county. There he remained until his death in 1883. He married Elmina Perkins, also a native of New York, the wedding occurring in Chicago. The father's parents died when he was a lad and he grew up to manhood in Illinois. He did farm work there and also learned to make brick and wrought at that trade in Chicago for some years. Later, he established a brick manufactory in Yamhill county and burned the only brick made there for years. Our subject remained under the parental roof until his father's death then came to Sherman county and engaged in sheep raising. He took the place where he now resides, a mile and one-half northeast from Grass Valley, as a homestead and since then has bought other land in various portions of the county. He owns four hundred and eighty acres of good land, has thirty head of horses and as many well bred cattle. His efforts principally, however, are confined to grain raising, in which he has made a good success.

On November 23, 1873, in Yamhill county, near Lafayette, Mr. Olds married Miss Elizabeth Messinger, who was born in Guthrie county, Iowa, on October 22, 1857. Her father, Solomon Messinger died in 1862 at Burnt River, Idaho, while he was crossing the plains. His wife, Elizabeth (Brown) Messinger, was accompanying him and was forced to make the balance of the journey alone. The trip was a very severe one owing to trouble with the Indians, sickness in the family and the death of her husband. She bought land in Yamhill county and there remained, a widow, until her death in 1867. Mr. Olds has three brothers and three sisters, Elzina, widow of James L. Steward, at McMinnville, Oregon; Burzilda, wife of John W. Messinger, at Moro, Oregon; May, wife of Charles B. Taylor, who died in 1885; Eli, in Tillamook county; Nelson, in Yamhill county; D. J., South Bend, Washington. Mrs. Olds has the following named brothers and sisters: Michael, a farmer in Idaho; Monroe, a miner; Annie, widow of Taylor Morris, in Phoenix, Arizona; Phoebe, wife of George Cornwall; and Mary, wife of John W. Dunn. The last two named are deceased.

Our subject is a member of the A. O. U. W. and takes an active interest in political matters. He has been delegate to nearly every county convention since he was twenty-one and has held such offices as constable, school director and so forth. He was the second postmaster of Grass Valley and is now serving his fifth term as stock inspector of this county. In this capacity, Mr. Olds has shown a faithfulness and wisdom that commend him to his constituents.

The children born to our subject and his wife are named as follows: Lewis, living three miles southeast of his father's place, a farmer; Charles B., Willie R., Frank, Dell, A. Dean, Chester E., all at home; Lela, wife of M. Brittam, Tygh Valley; Bertie wife of George L. Brown, of Tygh Valley; Myrtle I., at home.

JOHN D. WILCOX, a retired farmer, residing in Grass Valley, Oregon, is one of the leading business men and citizens of Sherman county. He was born in Marion county, Oregon, on August 18, 1853. Thomas J. Wilcox, his father, was a native of Kentucky and came from an old American family of English ancestry. His death occurred at Monmouth, Oregon in 1894. He married Elizabeth Johnson, a native of Tennessee and of German parentage. She died in Marion county, in 1873. They were married in Missouri and crossed the plains with ox teams in 1853, arriving at Silverton, three weeks before the birth of our subject. They took a donation claim three miles out from Silverton and lived there until 1865, when Mr. Wilcox sold and moved to Mill Creek, Marion county. Later, he sold the property there and came to Monmouth, where he died. He was a staunch Republican, a leading man and a very successful stockraiser and farmer. Our subject grew up on the farm, received his education from the district schools and when twenty years old went to Walla Walla, where he wrought on the farm as teamster and breaking horses for some time. Then he returned to the Willamette valley and farmed for some years and afterwards wrought in a shingle and lumber mill in Clackamas county. In the spring of 1882, he returned to Walla Walla and the fall of the next year, came to Sherman county, locating at what is now Wilcox station on the Columbia & Southern Railroad. First he took land there and farmed until 1898 then he rented and in the fall of 1903, sold his estate of one-half section. In 1898, he had come to Grass Valley and here opened a feed store and also bought and sold grain. A year later, he retired, although he still owns an interest in the mercantile firm of E. E. Porter & Company which is a large dry goods and gents furnishing establishment.

On October 4, 1874, Mr. Wilcox married Ella S. Van Nuys, the wedding occurring at the residence of the bride's parents, ten miles east from Salem. Mrs. Wilcox was born in Marion county and her parents crossed the plains from the east in 1852. Mr. Wilcox has one brother, Alva R., a stockman in Wasco county and two sisters, Margaret, the widow of Sidney Blackerby of Tygh Valley and Emma, the wife of Albert Stewart of Wathena, Kansas. Mrs. Wilcox has two brothers, Ralph W. and Charles, both in Marion county, and one sister, Ada, wife of John H. Porter, also in Marion county. Mr. and Mrs. Wilcox have one child, Hollis, who is mentioned elsewhere in this work.

Mr. Wilcox is a member of the I. O. O. F., being past noble grand, and of the Encampment, being past C. P. He has been delegate to the grand lodge several times. He and his wife also belong to the Rebekahs. Mr. Wilcox is a staunch Republican, is often delegate to the county and state conventions and for eight consecutive years was a leading figure in the state conventions. He takes an active interest in politics but never aspires to office himself. He has labored assiduously not only to gain a good competence but to build up the county, to advance educational interests, and to forward every movement for the general good of the people. Personally, Mr. Wilcox is a genial, public spirited and generous man who has hosts of friends and is looked up to by all.

JACOB H. RINEARSON, the popular host of the Vintin hotel, at Grass Valley, is a native Oregonian, his birthplace being Oregon City and the date of that event, July 23, 1875. Peter Rinearson, his father, was a native of Ohio where also his parents were born. Their parents came from England. In 1845, Peter Rinearson came with ox teams to Oregon City and took a donation claim just north of the Clackamas river and resided for four years and there died in 1885. He was a very influential man and was not only a leader among the pioneers but a very prominent citizen until his death. He did more perhaps than any one man to get the state fairs started and to make them popular institutions. The first one was held on his farm. He spent much time and labor in raising well bred stock and his animals took the prizes on many occasions. He was a generous, public spirited man and made many friends and did a vast amount of good in opening up and building up Oregon. He married Isabella McDonald, a native of Scotland, who came to Oregon with her aunt. Her parents died in Scotland and she came first to California, in the United States, that being in 1849 and dwelt with her aunt in Stockton for some time. Then she came to Portland, where she met Mr. Rinearson and the wedding occurred either in that city or Oregon City. This worthy lady died in 1890, at Oregon City. Our subject was reared and educated in Oregon City and later studied in the State University, entering that institution in 1891. After that, we find him in British Columbia weighing ore for the LeRoi mine one year. Then he returned to Oregon City and in 1897, came to Grass Valley, looking after the stock which belonged to his father's estate. The next year, he purchased the hotel which he now owns, from George Vintin, who erected the same. Since that time, Mr. Rinearson has given his undivided attention to conducting the hotel which he has made very popular with the traveling public.

On February 14, 1900, at Grass Valley, occurred the marriage of Mr. Rinearson and Lottie A. Vintin, who was born in Butte county, California, in 1875. Mrs. Rinearson is the daughter of George C. and Martha (Evans) Vintin, who are mentioned elsewhere in this work. Mr. Rinearson has two brothers, George, an attorney at Baker City, Oregon and Edward, in Portland.

Our subject is a member of the I. O. O. F., the Elks and the Red Men. He and his wife are well known throughout this part of the state and have hosts of friends. Their genialty and hospitality are well known and they have striven, not only to build up their business in a becoming manner, but to assist in the improvement of the country and have certainly done a commendable work.

HARVEY U. MARTIN is a young, industrious and energetic farmer, living four miles east of Kent, Sherman county, Oregon. He was born May 15, 1867 in Los Angeles county, California, the son of John R. and Jane (Brown) Martin, the father a native of Ohio; his parents of Scottish ancestry. John R. Martin, the father, was kidnapped, or rather, "shanghaied" as the sea term is, and taken aboard a vessel and brought to the United States and here held in bondage. From his captors he managed to escape and for awhile worked in a mill. He was one of the early pioneers of Ohio, in a sparsely settled portion of the state. At present he is a successful farmer in Sherman county, three miles east of Moro.

Our subject lived at Los Angeles until 1879, when he came to Oregon with his parents. The family located at Athena, Umatilla county, where they remained one year, thence coming to Sherman county. Here our subject's parents secured land. On attaining his majority Harvey U. Martin filed on a preemption claim, which he afterward sold, having proved up on the same. During the four years following he was engaged in the cattle business, with gratifying success. This business enterprise he disposed of and purchasing horses, shipped them to California. The horse market broke and our subject lost the entire amount of his investment. He then went to Palouse City, Washington, where he was engaged two years working in a machine shop. Returning to Sherman county he located a homestead, purchased more land, a quarter section, later, all of which is tillable.

December 27, 1894, at Palouse City the marriage contract was solemnized between himself and Lilah Rowe, a native of Nebraska, born August 31, 1876. Her father, James P. Rowe, a native of Pennsylvania, was a blacksmith and farmer. He died July 4, 1902, in Jackson county, Oregon. The mother was a native of Ohio, and now resides in Jackson county, Oregon. Mrs. Martin's parents, James P. and Margaret (Caldwell) Lowe, were married in Iowa and then journey to the southwest part of Nebraska.

In 1890 they went to Idaho, and five years later removed to Jackson county, Oregon.

Our subject has five brothers who are mentioned in sketches of the parents to be found in another portion of this volume, and one sister. Mrs. Martin has one brother, Burt, a resident of Redding, Shasta county, California, and four sisters; May, and Ina; Blanche, wife of George Robertson, a farmer of Josephine county, Oregon, a cattleman; Edith, wife of Ralph Moon, a cattleman of Klamath county, Oregon. To Mr. and Mrs. Martin two children have been born, Netah Okel, on November 19, 1895, and Telra May, on February 15, 1900. Both are natives of Sherman county.

The fraternal affiliations of Mr. Martin are with Moro Lodge, No. 31, I. O. O. F. Although a patriotic Republican he is not especially active in political affairs, although he has served four terms as clerk of his school district, and one year as road supervisor. Personally he is a liberal-minded, progressive man, a good citizen and highly esteemed in his home community.

GEORGE W. SCHWARTZ, of the firm of Schwartz Brothers, a farmer and stock raiser, living two and one-half miles south from Grass Valley, was born in Hennepin county, Minnesota, on October 2, 1860. His parents, William and Elizabeth (Browand) Schwartz, were natives of Germany and Switzerland, respectively. The father came to the United States when a boy alone and settled first near Rochester, New York. Later, he journeyed to Iowa and then to Minnesota. His death occurred in May, 1904, on the old homestead where the mother still resides. Our subject was reared and educated in Minnesota and when twenty-three, came thence to Oregon. For a month he was occupied in farming on Tygh Ridge then came to his present location and took up a homestead. His brother, Charles H., had come to Oregon with him, took a homestead and timberculture claim near the land taken by our subject and since, they have been more or less in partnership and have purchased a good many hundred acres of land. Our subject owns eight hundred acres in his own right and handles that in connection with a quarter section owned by his sisters. He has about two hundred head of fine graded Percheron horses besides considerable other property. He is a thrifty, well-to-do man, has gained a splendid success in farming and stock raising and stands well in the community. He is a man of business ability and has demonstrated the same in his career. On May 13, 1904, Mr. Schwartz married Annie M. Scott, a sister of Mrs. James Dennis, who is mentioned elsewhere in this volume. Our subject's brother, Charles H., resides with him and besides that he has two brothers deceased, William V., and Fred R., the former died in Minnesota and the latter here in 1898. Mr. Schwartz has two sisters, Mary, the wife of Otto Bucholz in Hennepin county, Minnesota, and Annie F., who lives with our subject. Fraternally, Mr. Schwartz is connected with the I. O. O. F., while in political life, he stands for the principles of the Republican party, though not especially active. He and his wife are estimable people and have won hosts of friends and labor together always for the general welfare and upbuilding of the community.

CALEB W. CURL, a retired farmer living in Grass Valley, Oregon, was born in Carroll county, Missouri, on October 31, 1829. He is to be mentioned among the leading pioneers of the state of Oregon and his life has been fraught with great hardships and extensive labors. His parents James and Anna (Elliott) Curl, were natives of Kentucky and Virginia, respectively. The father's father was born in England and married a native German lady. The mother's ancestors were old colonial people and early settlers in the New World. Our subject remained in northwest Missouri until 1847, when he came across the plains with ox teams to the Williamette Valley, accompanied by his parents. They took a donation claim in Linn county and there remained until the father's death on January 7, 1864. When nineteen, our subject began to work for the neighboring farmers and continued in that occupation until he was married, when he took a donation claim in Linn county, also. After proving up on the property, he sold it and purchased another and sold and bought several farms until December, 1884, when he came to Sherman county and took a homestead and preemption. Later, he added a timber culture claim and in all secured twelve hundred and eighty acres about six miles east from Grass Valley. For nearly twenty years, Mr. Curl resided there, doing general farming and stock raising and in 1902, he sold the entire property and purchased a half block in Grass Valley, where he erected his present dwelling. It is a comfortable two-story, six room house. Mr. Curl is living a retired life, enjoying the competence that his labors and skill have provided. He is a man respected and esteemed by all and has done a lion's share in the development of the country and deserves well the esteem which is generously accorded him.

On March 21, 1850, in Polk county, Mr. Curl married Margaret E. Fulkerson, who was born in Cole county, Missouri, on June 4, 1831. Her father, James M. Fulkerson, was born in Virginia and came from an old colonial family. His father served in the Revolution. The mother of Mrs. Cole was Mary R. (Miller) Fulkerson, a native of Virginia and also descended from an old colonial family. The Fulkersons remained in Missouri until 1847, when they crossed the plains with ox teams to the Willamette valley. They were in the same train with Mr. Curl, and as nearly all the people of the train were members of the Baptist church, they organized a class on the road and had their services every Sunday. Mrs. Fulkerson died at the crossing of the Green river, having suffered from a severe attack of mountain fever. There was very much sickness in the train and several deaths occurred. Mrs. Curl's brother, Frederick R., took the fever, and Mr. Fulkerson, with two other families, remained while the others went on. After nine days the young man, being then aged eighteen, died near Devil's Gate, on the Sweetwater. The mother died a month later. Mrs. Curl's uncle, William Hines, died at the first crossing of the Snake river. Then her sister's husband died in the Cascades. So much sickness had delayed them until they were very late and their cattle had become so enfeebled that they were unable to pull the wagons. Mrs. Curl unyoked nine in one day, that had given out. Finally, they were about to give up in despair when a company, headed by Mr. Snelling, the son of Vincent Snelling, a Baptist preacher, arrived with wagons and provisions. Mr. Fulkerson had been carrying his daughter, who was ill, who was a large woman weighing one hundred and seventy pounds, and was nearly exhausted, as were the rest of the party. The end of these hardships occurred on the Barlow road over the Cascades and just as they were descending the Laurel hill, succor came. Upon arriving in the Willamette valley Mr. Fulkerson took a donation claim and gave his attention to farming. Mr. Curl, the subject of our sketch, has three brothers living, James M., near Lisle, Washington; John, in Oregon; and Thomas R., deceased, Malheur county, Oregon. He also has three sisters; Samirah, the widow of Lewis Paine, of Dayton, Washington; Parthana J., the widow of Joel Calavan, of Linn county, Oregon; and Martha, the widow of Robert Moorehead, of Oakland, Oregon. Mrs. Curl has one brother, W. Holt, a retired farmer in Polk county, and three sisters; Sarah A., the widow of Ambrose Cain, of Monmouth, Oregon; Virginia A., wife of Joshua McDaniel, a retired farmer in Polk county; and Hannah R., the wife of Solomon

Crowley, of Polk county. To Mr. and Mrs. Curl seven children have been born, named as follows: James W., a farmer at Spangle, Washington; Dr. Riley H., a dentist, at Albany, Oregon; David H., at Lebanon, Oregon; Dr. Ambrose M., a dentist, at Weiser, Idaho; Laughlin M., at Albany, Oregon; Sarah A., widow of Harry Gliesing, Grass Valley; Maggie, wife of Elmer F. Heath, a merchant in Grass Valley.

Mr. and Mrs. Curl are both members of the Baptist church and staunch supporters of their faith. He has served at various times as road supervisor and school trustee, and in politics he is a Democrat.

In 1848 Mr. Curl enlisted in the Oregon State Militia and saw service in the Indian wars of that time. In 1856 he again enlisted and fought all through the Cayuse wars until the savages were subdued. For this service he now receives a pension from the government.

GEORGE B. BOURHILL is well known in Sherman county and needs no introduction to the people of this part of Oregon. A sufficient account of his labors is the best encomium to grant Mr. Bourhill according to the old proverb, "Let their works praise them in the gates."

George B. Bourhill was born in North Berwick, Scotland, on October 9, 1864, and came from the stanch blood that has made that race renowned the world over. His father, George Bourhill, was also a native of Scotland and remained there until his death. He married Jane M. Wright, a native of Edinburgh. They resided on the farm and died in their native land. Our subject was educated in private schools in his native town and when fourteen went to Edinburgh and accepted a clerkship in a large printing establishment. He wrought two and one-half years, then spent a year at home, and in 1882 started for the United States. He landed in Iowa and took a position at farm work, continuing eighteen months. Next we see him in Yamhill county, Oregon, where he spent two years in tilling the soil. It was 1886 that he came to Sherman county and took land some six miles east of Grass Valley. For ten years he was one of the enterprising agriculturists of the county and then came to Grass Valley and engaged in the hardware business with Milton Damon. A few months later Mr. Bourhill purchased his partner's interest and with various changes in ownership, the business has continued until the present time. He still owns one-fourth interest in the mercantile house and gives his attention to the W. A. Gordon & Company bank at Grass Valley, of which he is manager. In 1902 the style of the firm name of the hardware business was changed to Weigand & Company, which continues until the present. Mr. Bourhill has been more or less engaged in grain buying and other enterprises during his residence in Grass Valley, and in 1903, W. A. Gordon & Company, of Portland, established the Bank of Grass Valley and Mr. Bourhill has conducted it since. He also is president and general manager of the Columbia Southern Warehouse Company, the owners being himself, W. A. Gordon & Company, S. S. Hays, of Moro, and George Vintin. Our subject owns a nice residence and also a choice farm of one-half section near Grass Valley.

On August 23, 1897, Mr. Bourhill married Grace Buker at Grass Valley. To them have been born two children, Bessie and Clarence G., the former six years of age and the latter an infant. Mr. Bourhill has one brother, Frank W., at Johannesburg, South Africa, and three sisters, Frances, in North Berwick, Scotland; Margaret G., at Durham, South Africa; and Isabella C., who has ably assisted her brother in conducting the business in the bank, she being assistant cashier.

Politically, Mr. Bourhill is a Republican and in June, 1904, was elected judge of Sherman county. He is not especially active in the political world yet has frequently attended the county conventions and is a man who makes his presence felt in these places. He is past noble grand of the I. O. O. F., and past C. P. in the Encampment, and has also been delegate to the grand lodge. Mrs. Bourhill is a member of the Methodist church. They are highly respected people and have shown a substantiality and integrity that commend them to the confidence and esteem of every one.

TALMON NEWCOMB, who owns three-fourths of a section of land eight miles south from Grass Valley, was born in Ohio on November 13, 1850. His parents, Shepherd and Sarah A. (Crim) Newcomb, are natives of Ohio and Virginia, respectively. The former lived with our subject and the latter died at our subject's home on December 25, 1903. Mr. Newcomb was raised in Ohio and there received his education. In 1870 he came with the balance of the family to California where he and his father leased land in Colusa county. They continued laboring there together until 1883 and then came to Sherman county. The father and son both took land and our subject now owns the entire estate, three hundred acres of which are in cultivation, and it is one of the good places of the country. Since coming Mr. Newcomb has given his attention to general farming, and has displayed integrity and stability.

On November 12, 1874, in Marysville, California, Mr. Newcomb married Julia E. Cummings, a native of New York. To them have been born seven children, Bertie E., Elvin R., Joseph, William, Arthur, Jessie and May. All are at home, except the oldest, who is in Portland. Mr. Newcomb has three brothers, Daniel, Joseph and Albert. All three reside in California; the first two mentioned being carpenters and the last one a painter.

Mr. Newcomb is a member of the I. O. O. F., and politically is a good, strong Democrat. He has held the office of school director for some time and has frequently been delegate to the county conventions. Mr. Newcomb takes an interest in public affairs, the progress of the country and has ever shown a disposition to labor for and support every measure that is for the general good.

CHARLES W. MOORE, who has been mayor of Grass Valley since its incorporation, is also one of the leading business men in north central Oregon. He is president and general manager of the Citizens' Commercial Company, one of the leading mercantile institutions of this part of the county.

Charles W. Moore was born in Indiana, on July 22, 1858, the son of Rufus A. and Sarah J. (Brown) Moore, natives of Londonderry, New Hampshire, and Indiana, respectively. The father's ancestors were an old English family of colonial days and prominent in those times. The mother's parents were also early settlers in the new world. The family left Illinois about 1859 for Kansas and dwelt there six years. Then they journeyed to Idaho, settling on Indian creek, about twenty-four miles from Boise, where they remained two years. Then came a trip to Cherokee, Butte county, California, where they rented until 1882, they then came to Sherman county, Oregon, and our subject, his brother and the father all took government land about five miles north from Grass Valley. The father remained on the farm until his death in 1893. The mother died in August, 1898, at Moro, Oregon. Our subject was educated in the various places where the family lived, completing this important part of life's training in the Pacific Business College at San Francisco. He was with his parents until coming to Oregon when he and his brother, Henry, preceded them to the fertile region now embraced in Sherman county. In 1889 Mr. Moore rented his land and came to Grass Valley, where he engaged in the general merchandise business with Dr. C. R. Rollins. For several years they did business together and then our subject's brother, L. K., bought the doctor's interest. Two years later the brother resold to the doctor again, and later John Karlin bought Dr. Rollin's interest. Five years later Karlin sold his interest to the Citizens' Commercial Company, which Mr. Moore and his associates organized. They started with a capital of seventy-five thousand dollars, incorporating under the laws of Oregon. They purchased considerable property and erected a fine, two-story brick building, eighty-eight feet square. They carry a stock of merchandise of fifty thousand dollars or more and they own the most complete mercantile establishment to be found in Oregon. They are the general agents for the John Deering implements, Daniel Best combined harvesters, Moline wagons and carriages, and also handle a full line of agricultural implements besides. They have a large stock of groceries, clothing, boots and shoes, dry goods, hardware, crockery, and so forth. L. R. French is secretary; Samuel H. Baker is treasurer, and as stated before, our subject is president and general manager.

On November 21, 1886, at Portland, Oregon, Mr. Moore married Eva L. Rollins, who was born in Minnesota, the daughter of Dr. Charles R. Rollins, who is now retired and dwells in Grass Valley. Mr. Moore has three brothers, Walter H., a real estate man at Moro; Henry A., retired in Portland; and Lawrence K., a real estate man at Moro. Mrs. Moore has three brothers and one sister. To our subject and his wife two children have been born, Mabel and Ray, aged fourteen and twelve, respectively.

Fraternally, Mr. Moore is quite prominent, being past grand of the I. O. O. F., past M. W. of the A. O. U. W., past C. P. of the Encampment, and a member of the Foresters. He has several times been delegate of the grand lodge of the Odd Fellows, and he and his wife are members of the degree of honor of the A. O. U. W.

Politically, Mr. Moore is a Republican and has frequently been delegate to the county conventions. He is a sterling and progressive business man and one of the leading citizens of Sherman county.

ELMER F. HEATH, of the firm of C. A. Heath & Sons, real estate and loans, is one of the stirring young business men of Grass Valley. He was born on March 12, 1867, in Kent county, Michigan, the son of Chancy A. and Elizabeth J. (Rose) Heath, who are mentioned elsewhere in this work. Elmer F. was educated in the district schools and in 1884 came with the family to Oregon. He has been associated with his father and brothers since 1891. At first they did farming and stock raising, and in 1900 they engaged in the general merchandise business with Alexander Scott. This was conducted until the formation of the Citizens' Commercial Company, with which they merged, taking stock in that concern. Our subject and his brothers are directors of that company, in addition to handling the real estate business above mentioned.

On November 10, 1891, at Wasco, Mr. Heath married Maggie M. Curl, who was born in Linn county, Oregon, on April 15, 1874. Her parents, Caleb and Margaret (Fulkerson) Curl, are mentioned elsewhere in this volume. The children born to this union are Arlie and Loyal, aged twelve and seven respectively.

Politically, Mr. Heath is interested and active, is a man of excellent standing, is genial and upright in business and has won hosts of friends in this country.

GEORGE C. VINTIN, JR., the foreman of the Columbia Southern Warehouse Company at Grass Valley, is one of the leading business men of that prosperous town and has shown himself a man of stability and worth. He was born in Butte county, California, on February 10, 1863. His father, George C. Vintin, a native of Wisconsin, came to California in 1849. After mining for a few years he purchased a farm in Butte county where he lived until June 27, 1882. At that time he started to Grass Valley and on August 5, of the same year, he took land three miles east from town. He gave his attention to cultivating the same until 1900, then rented the estate, it being half a section, when he came to town and on November, 1903, finished the erection of the Vintin Hotel. He also has erected a fine residence, and now lives in Portland, being retired. In 1902, he sold the hotel to Jacob Rinearson. Mr. Vintin had married a native Scotch lady who died when our subject was four years old. Then the father married Martha Evans, it being 1870, in Butte county, California. Our subject was reared in his native county and remained with his people until they came to Sherman county. His education was received in the public schools, and in 1883 he took a homestead adjoining his brother's, whose land was contiguous to his father's land. After farming for some years he rented the land and in 1901 engaged in stock-raising, and is still prosecuting that business. The next year, however, he accepted his present position and is now conducting the increasing business of the warehouse.

Fraternally, Mr. Vinton is a member of the I. O. O. F., being past noble grand of the Encampment and of the Rebekahs. Politically, he is a Republican and active in that field. Mr. Vinton has one brother living, David E., who resides about two miles east from Grass Valley. He also has two half-brothers, Edwin and Roy, the former with his parents and the latter renting his father's farm. He also has four half-sisters; Sadie, single; Stella, the wife of Dr. W. H. Snooks, of Crook county; Mrs. Rinearson and Mrs. Rutledge, in Sherman county. Mr. Vinton has one full sister, Mamie, the wife of Edward J. Rollin. Mr. Vinton is an enterprising young man and is one of the progressive citizens of the county.

JAMES H. MILLER, a farmer, living about one-half mile northeast from Rutledge, in Sherman county, was born in Indiana, on November 9, 1840. His father, Hulings Miller, was of Quaker ancestry, and his father, the grandfather of our subject, enlisted under General Harrison, of Tippecanoe fame, of Indiana, to repel the savages, and was accidentally killed while helping to construct a fort at Cincinnati, Ohio. His mother, the paternal grandmother of our subject, was a Miss Ball before marriage to Mr. Miller. Our subject's mother was born in the Carolinas, and is now residing with her son, Joaquin Miller, the "poet of the Sierras," at Oakland Heights, California, aged eighty-eight. She was descended from a Dutch family in the Oglethorpe colony, which were among the first settlers in Georgia. The family moved to the Carolinas later, where Mrs. Miller was raised. Our subject's parents left Indiana in February, 1852, and started across the plains with horses and ox teams. The family consisted of the father and mother, three sons and one daughter. They had a pleasant trip and, although they saw many who had died from the ravages of small-pox and cholera, they had no particular sickness and suffered no attacks from the Indians. The first winter on the coast was spent at Parish Gap, near Salem, Oregon, and in the spring they moved to Lane county, where the father took a donation claim. He was killed in a runaway accident, concerning which, it is believed to this day, there was foul play. He lived about a month after the alleged accident. Our subject lived with his parents nine years in the Willamette valley and there completed his educational training. Then he came to The Dalles and worked at the carpenter trade for a few months, which he had learned previously. Being of an adventurous spirit, he sought to the mines of the west and we next find him in Pierce, Idaho. After a year there he returned home, and about that time was stricken with the measles which were terribly epidemic at that time in the Willamette valley. So fierce was the disease that he never fully recovered from the effects. Later he went to eastern Oregon and was occupied at packing and freighting for three years. Then he spent a winter in the Willamette valley after which he went to Crook county, which was then Wasco county, and remained there thirty years, stock-raising and farming, and there also he was married on July 25, 1877, to Kate Pringle, who was born near Salem, Oregon, on September 20, 1852. Her father, Clark S. Pringle, was a native of Missouri and crossed the plains, with ox teams, in 1846. He had a very trying time as a portion of his stock died and the Indians stole some and they were beset with many other hardships. He came by the Klamath Lake route, being among the very first over that road, and the train nearly starved to death. They reached Salem on Christmas day, 1846. His father took a donation claim and he remained with him for two years, then being twenty-one, struck out for himself. He married Katherine Sager and they now live in Spokane. She was born in Ohio and crossed the plains with her parents, with ox teams, in 1844. At least she started across the plains with her parents, but on the road her father and mother died, leaving a family of seven children, the eldest being fourteen and the youngest an infant in arms. A young German physician took charge of the children and cared for them until they reached Walla Walla. Captain Shaw was in charge of the train and when they reached Walla Walla, the children were given to Dr. Whitman to care for for the winter. He was appointed legal guardian of them all and they were with him at the time of the massacre. Following that, they were raised in the Willamette valley, where homes were found for them. It must be remembered that on this occasion these girls were captured by the Indians and to the great credit of Peter Steen Ogden it should be stated that he, the chief factor of the Hudson's Bay Company, at Vancouver, Washington, ransomed them with his own private means at the risk of losing his position with the company. The two boys, John and Frances, were killed. The girls were Catherine, Elizabeth, Martha, Louise and Henrietta. Louise died shortly after from the shock and exposure. Catherine, who is Mrs. Miller's mother, was brought up by Reverend William Roberts at Salem.

In 1897, Mr. Miller removed to Sherman county and he owned two different farms of one half section each, in the county. For five years he lived on a leased place near DeMoss Springs.

Now he is dwelling on a farm of four hundred and forty acres, owned by his son. He has sold all his own property in the county. To Mr. and Mrs. Miller nine children have been born: Ella, who married John Grimes, and died in 1900, in Crook county, aged twenty-three; James R., living in this county; Perry P., who owns the place where his father resides; Warren S., Melvin G., Ola P., Phernie N., Eugene H., and Earl K., all at home. Mr. Miller has two brothers living, Cinnatus Hiner, the "poet of the Sierras," who writes under the nom de plume of "Joaquin Miller," living at Oakland Heights, California; and George M., an attorney in Eugene, Oregon. Mr. Miller also has one brother and one sister deceased, John B. and Ella. Mrs. Miller has one brother, Sanford S., deceased, and two sisters living, Annie, wife of John D. Bentley, of Colfax, Washington, and Lucie, wife of D. Collins, trainmaster in Spokane. She has three other brothers deceased, Frank F., Marcus W., and Orva C., and one sister deceased, Emma.

Mr. Miller is a Republican and while in Crook county was quite active in political affairs and was county surveyor there for some time. Mr. Miller is a man who gained his educational training by his own efforts and is deserving of much credit in that he fitted himself for the important position of surveyor.

In 1852, Mr. Miller passed by the territory now embraced in Sherman county, and then there was not a solitary white settler in it. He and his wife have spent their lives in developing and building up Oregon, especially that portion now embraced in this work. He enlisted to fight in the Rogue River Indian war, but owing to his youth, he was placed with the wagon train, and there served till the close of the war. He joined the Oregon Militia in 1861, expecting to see service in the Civil war, but, owing to the continued outbreaks of the savages, his command was detained here to quell the Indians.

CHANCY A. HEATH, of the firm of C. A. Heath & Sons, real estate and loans, Grass Valley, Oregon, was born in Andover, Ohio, on October 6, 1842. His father, Albert Heath, born in Massachusetts, came from an old colonial family and died when ninety years and two months of age. Three brothers of the Heath family came to the United States long before the Revolution and their descendants are scattered well over the continent. In the Heath reunions in Ohio the attendance is four hundred and more each year. Eleazer Heath, the paternal grandfather of our subject, was a Baptist preacher in New York and Ohio, and an early pioneer of the latter state. His father, the great-grandfather of our subject died at ninety-seven, and Eleazer Heath died when eighty-four years of age. Our subject's father was a mill wright and farmer. Our subject's great-grandfather had the following named children: David, Ebenezer, Eleazer, Joshua, Job, Timothy, Dorcas, who died aged ninety, Anna, and Polly, all early Ohio pioneers. The later generations of the family have many members who are prominent at the bench and bar and in every professional line. Many of the family served in the Revolution and the War of 1812, and in the Civil war. The brothers of our subject's father were William, Warren, Joseph, Phyletus and James. His sisters were Marinda, Emmeline, Phydalia, Caroline and Phoebe. This latter woman was the mother of triplets, two boys and one girl, being named Clarence W., Clarendon W., and Caroline W. Their father was a Mr. Spaulding. Our subject's mother was Lucy (Cook) Heath, a native of New England and from a prominent colonial family. She was born in 1806. Our subject remained in Ohio until twenty-one years of age, being educated in the district schools. He was preparing for college when taken with a severe attack of western fever and he journeyed out west to Michigan and hired in the woods for sixteen dollars a month. When his first month was up, it was the only month he ever worked for wages, he began contracting for himself and remained until 1883. His health being broken, he came west and settled on land some five miles southwest of Grass Valley. He took a homestead and timber culture, and bought school land and, together with his sons, owns twenty-four hundred acres, twenty-one hundred of which are under cultivation. Mr. Heath and his two sons and their wives own nine hundred and sixty acres in Klamath county. They own in addition, some mining property in Crook county, and are prosperous people.

On January 1, 1865, in Kent county, Michigan, Mr. Heath married Eliza J. Rhodes, a native of Schuyler county, New York. Her father, Erasmus W. Rose, was a native of England and in early life was master on a canal. He died in Michigan, on September 29, 1880. He had married Susan Simmons, a native of Catskill county, New York, who died in Michigan, on December 3, 1896. Our subject has three brothers living; Herman L., a farmer in Ohio, who has been blind since eighteen years of age; Adinoram J., a farmer in Ashtabula county, Ohio; William H., also a farmer, in Andover, Ohio. Mr. Heath also has three sisters, Clarissa P., the widow of R. E. French, of Grass Valley; Betsey E., the wife of N. S. Butler, in Ashtabula county, Ohio; Josephine L., the wife of B. F. Downing, in Lincoln county, Washington. He also has two brothers who died in infancy, Joseph L., and Luke W. Mrs. Heath has two brothers, Albert G., a merchant in St. Louis, and Elmer S., of Cedar Springs, Michigan, also a merchant. She also has the following named sisters: Emma A., the wife of A. B. Fairchild, a retired farmer of The Dalles; Viola S., the wife of Henry Carner, of Redfields, South Dakota; Almira, who died in infancy; and Elizabeth, who died when eleven.

Mr. and Mrs. Heath are members of the Baptist church. He is a Republican and an active, energetic business man. He is also director of the Grass Valley Academy. Mr. Heath's two sons who are living are named elsewhere in this work, and he also has three who died in infancy, Arthur C., Milo M. and Ona L. Mr. Heath was very much broken in health when coming to this country, but is now strong and hearty and is one of the leading citizens of Sherman county.

HISTORY OF GILLIAM COUNTY

PASSING EVENTS—1860 TO 1905.

The old immigrant road through Gilliam county crossed the John Day river one half mile below where now stands Leonard's bridge, and ran in an easterly and westerly direction over the prairie to a point in Alkali canyon about seven miles south of what is now Arlington; here there was a stage station afterwards known as the "Junction House;" thence easterly to Willow creek, about twelve miles south of the Columbia river, and crossed Willow creek and the Sissel ranch.

The old Utah, Idaho and Oregon stage road was established in the fifties, crossed Leonard's bridge on the John Day river, and ran almost due east to a point about seven miles south of what is now Arlington, in Alkali canyon, where there was a stage station, thence easterly to the old Umatilla Landing.

In the earlier history of Gilliam county, even prior to its subdivision, stock-raising was the principal industry. While this business still occupies an important place it can, however, no longer be considered paramount. And this was the truth so early as 1900. As the wave of immigration rolled westward from the sun-baked plains beyond the Great Divide, the grassy slopes and fertile valleys of Gilliam county arrested the attention of the travel-worn farmers. It was still a far cry to the Willamette Valley, and here was arable land all around them. "Prairie schooners" were suddenly brought up "all standing," by the sharp application of the brake; mules were unhitched, or "ouspanned" as Rider Haggard would describe an episode in African travel, and turned loose to graze; wives, children and scanty household goods were unloaded; tents were pitched and foundations of future homes were laid. There is, at present, every indication throughout Gilliam county that these settlers have been eminently successful. There are hundreds of comfortable homes; the "head-centers" of boundless wheat fields and handsome orchards, and these homes are surrounded by fertile garden spots. Here dwell a happy, contented, self-reliant and self-supporting people.

The first men to graze cattle on the bunch grass prairies of what is now Gilliam county, were Thomas Richmond and J. W. Whitley. They came here in 1862. In 1865 there were only five settlers in the country now embraced within the limits of Gilliam county. All of them were located on Rock creek. Their exclusive attention was devoted to stock breeding. Their names were Conrad Shott, ——— Shalliday, Josephus Martin, D. F. Strickland and Charles Pincense, colloquially known as "French Charlie." In 1866 James Richardson and ——— Staggs moved into the county. They located on Rock creek and engaged in stock raising.

The first grain raised for hay on the creek bottoms, in the district of which we write, was produced, the same year, by Conrad Shott, Josephus Martin, J. R. Phillips, Cyrus Butler, D. F. Strickland and "French Charlie." This was on Rock creek. In 1877 John Edden raised grain crops, but this was on "hill land." Mr. Edden sowed wheat but his first crop burned out. The succeeding year he again sowed wheat and thus raised the first wheat hay on hill land.

In 1870 John Maddon, R. G. Robinson, Al Henshaw, A. Crawford, T. M. Ward and John McCurdy, all located on Lone Rock creek. Alexander Smith, Tip Mobley, Thomas Woodland, J. R. Phillips, George Flett, Henry Moore, Silas Brown, James Bennett and Hendrix Brothers settled the same year on Rock creek.

The settlers of 1872 comprised Flynn & Sullivan, on Sniptia Flat; George Boone, Lone Rock creek; William Keyes on Keyes Flat; George Evans settled where Mayville now stands; Robert Watson and H. C. Matney on Matney Flat. Stevens Brothers came to this locality in 1873 and founded their homes on Lone Rock creek. It was in 1874 that Charles Richmond and Hugh Strickland came, and at once directed their attention to stock-raising.

The first sawmill in this vicinity was erected by Edward Wineland in 1874. The power was an old time water wheel and the capacity of the mill was about 1,500 feet per day. All of the pioneer buildings in Gilliam county were constructed of lumber sawed at this mill. In 1881 Mr. Wineland substituted steam power—the first in the county—and removed the mill from Lone Rock creek into the Blue Mountains. Mr. Lowe Smith built the second steam sawmill on Trailfork creek in 1883. Brown Brothers settled on Sniptia creek, near Thirty-Mile creek, in 1874, where they engaged in the stock business. In 1875 William Edden came to what is at present Edden canyon, two miles south of Condon. C. O. Portwood in the Pacific Homestead of November 4, 1904, said:

On March 30, 1876, William E. Campbell, then county surveyor of Wasco county, Oregon, under the direction of James R. Alfrey, Pitt A. Eddy and M. Fisk, made the survey of the first channel through which the commerce of the territory now within the boundaries of Gilliam county might flow, and reported their actions to the county court of Wasco county in the following words:

"The proposed county road passes through one of the richest valleys in Eastern Oregon and in direct line with the southern portion of Umatilla county, and we consider the road to be of great importance to The Dalles, as it will secure a large amount of trade for said town. We further advise that Rock creek is fast settling up; many new settlers having located along the creek within the last year. We would, therefore, recommend that said road be adopted at the next term of the county court and that the same be ordered opened by the supervisor as soon as practicable."

Agreeable to the suggestion of this board of viewers the county court, at its regular May term, in the year 1876, ordered the county road opened along this line of survey, and a few years later vast quantities of wool loaded on heavy wagons, drawn by teams consisting of six and eight horses, could have been seen wending their way along this county road to The Dalles, ninety miles distant, to be loaded in boats for shipment. Great herds of horses, cattle and sheep were also driven along this road or directly across the county to this market.

The first store in what is now Gilliam county was conducted by R. G. Robinson. This was in 1876. It was situated on Lone Rock creek. The settlers of 1877 were George Coffin, on Thirty-Mile creek, near John Day river; James and George Ladd, on Thirty-Mile; Lowe Smith and William Sanders on Trailfork creek, and J. H. Downing near what is now the capital of Gilliam county, Condon. The second store was established by John Maddon at Lone Rock, in 1877.

The first postoffice within the limits of the present Gilliam county was in the store of R. G. Robinson, and that gentleman officiated as postmaster. D. F. Strickland was appointed the second postmaster. The office was situated on Rock creek, about five miles east of the present site of Olex.

The inhabitants of the territory comprising Gilliam county were the victims of an "Indian scare" in 1878. When the Warm Springs tribe went to Umatilla county to assist other tribes in their uprising against the whites, known as the Nez Perce war, they passed directly through the center of the county. The few scattered settlers heard of the approach of the savages and became greatly excited. Many of them abandoned their homes and sought the protection of their neighbors' houses. As a rule they gathered at centralized places and prepared to defend themselves if necessary. This anticipated necessity, however, did not arise, and within a few days they all returned to their homes.

In 1880, on Rock creek, was established the third store by Mr. Varney. Among those who came to the country in 1879 were John Davis, A. Henderson and John Maddock, all locators on Thirty-Mile creek. Mr. Varney was postmaster. William and Al Weatherford raised the first crop of wheat that was threshed in Gilliam county. This was in 1881. The machine employed for this purpose was owned by Charles Richmond and Fred Smith. It was one of the old time tread-power implements; it threshed the grain but did not separate it from the chaff. Having run their grain through this primitive machine the farmers waited for a breezy day; threw the grain into the air with shovels; the chaff disappeared and the clean grain fell upon large sheets spread for that purpose.

Shuttler Flat, which was the first hill land settled and utilized for agricultural purposes, was so named because of the fact that on the old immigrant road passing through the place a "Shuttler" wagon had broken down and been left there.

What is remembered as the "double winter" of 1881-2 was, without doubt, the most severe winter ever experienced by the residents of the present Gilliam county. Thousands of cattle, horses and sheep were frozen and starved to death. A conservative estimate places the loss at from 90 to 95 per cent. During the spring of 1882 stockmen gathered the pelts of the dead animals and from their sales realized sufficiently to enable them to live through the coming summer.

It was not until the summer of 1884 that the people of the territory now embraced in Gilliam county realized the need of closer relationship for the transaction of civil business, and accordingly they took up the matter of the organization of Gilliam county, which was created by an act of the Oregon legislature, approved February 25, 1885, with the temporary county seat at Alkali. It was the thirty-second county formed in the state. Following is the organic act:

Be it enacted by the Legislative Assembly of the State of Oregon:

Section 1. That all that portion of the State of Oregon embraced within the following boundaries be, and the same is, hereby created and organized into a separate county by the name of Gilliam, to wit: Beginning at a point in the middle of the Columbia river, where the east line of range 22 east of Willamette meridian crosses said river; thence south across said east line to the south line of township three, south; from thence east along said south line to the east line of range 23 east; thence south along said range line to the south line of township four south; thence east to the east line of range 24 east; thence south to the Grant county line; thence west to the east line of range 22 east; thence south to the John Day river; thence down the center of the main channel of the said river to a point in the middle of the Columbia river opposite the mouth of the John Day river; thence up the center of the main channel of the Columbia river to the place of beginning.

Section 2. The territory embraced within said county lines shall compose a county for all civil and military purposes, and shall be subject to the same laws and restrictions, and be entitled to elect the same officers as other counties of the state; Provided, That it shall be the duty of the Governor, as soon as convenient after this act shall become a law, to appoint for Gilliam county, and from her resident citizens the several county officers allowed by law to other counties of this State; which said officers, after duly qualifying according to law, shall be entitled to hold their respective offices until their successors shall be duly elected at the general election of 1886, and shall have duly qualified as required by law.

Section 3. The temporary county seat of Gilliam county shall be located at Alkali, in said county, until a permanent location shall be adopted. At the next general election the question shall be submitted to the legal voters of said county, and the place, if any, which shall receive a majority of all the votes cast at said election shall be the permanent county seat of said county; but if no place shall receive a majority of all the votes cast, the question shall again be submitted to the legal voters of said county at the next general election between the two points having the highest number of votes at said election; and the place receiving the highest number of votes at such election shall be the permanent county seat of said county.

Section 4. Said county of Gilliam shall, for representative purposes, be annexed to the seventeenth representative district; and for senatorial purposes said county shall be annexed to the sixteenth senatorial district.

Section 5. The county clerks of Wasco and Umatilla counties shall, within thirty days after this act shall have gone into operation, make out and deliver to the county clerk of Gilliam county transcripts of all taxes assessed upon persons and property within the said county, and which were previously included within the limits of their respective counties, and all taxes which shall remain unpaid on the day when this act shall become a law, shall be paid to the proper officers of Gilliam county. The said county clerks of Wasco and Umatilla counties shall also make and deliver to the county clerk of Gilliam county, within the time above limited, a transcript of all cases pending in the circuit and county courts of their respective counties between parties residing in Gilliam county, and transfer all original papers in such cases to be tried in Gilliam county.

Section 6. The said county of Gilliam is hereby attached to the fifth judicial district for judicial purposes; and the term of the circuit court for said county shall be held at the county seat of said county on the third Monday in February and the first Monday of September of each year.

Section 7. The county court of Gilliam county shall be held at the county seat of said county on the first Monday of every alternate month beginning on the first Monday of the month next after the appointment by the Governor of county officers as provided by this act.

Section 8. Until otherwise provided for the county judge of Gilliam county shall receive an annual salary of four hundred dollars, and the county treasurer of said county shall receive an annual salary of two hundred and fifty dollars; the clerk and sheriff of said county shall receive the same fees as are now allowed by law to the sheriff and county clerk of Wasco county.

Section 9. As the citizens living within the boundaries of the proposed county of Gilliam labor under a great inconvenience in the transaction of their business at their present respective county seats, this act shall take effect and be in force from and after its approval by the Governor.

Approved February 25, 1885.

Among those who were responsible for the creation of Gilliam county may be mentioned: T. B. Hoover, L. W. Darling, W. W. Steiwer, Thomas Cartwright, C. W. Sanderson, Coffin Brothers & McFarland, and J. W. Smith. W. W. Steiwer and Thomas Cartwright were sent to Salem to lobby for the bill. W. L. Wilcox, who was then representative from this part of Wasco county, introduced the measure and was largely responsible for its passage. The new county was named after Colonel Gilliam who commanded the Oregon Volunteers during the Cayuse war of 1847. Colonel Gilliam was accidentally killed by one of his own soldiers who carelessly drew a gun from a wagon while in camp near Wells Springs the same year. In 1885 the population of the county was about 2,500. The first meeting of the new county officers was held at Alkali, April 6, 1885. The following officials who had been appointed by the governor were present and took the oath of office: Hon. J. W. Smith, county judge; A. H. Weatherford, W. W. Steiwer, county commissioners; J. A. Blakely, sheriff; H. C. Condon, treasurer; T. J. Cartwright, assessor; H. H. Hendricks, school superintendent; J. P. Lucas, county clerk.

At a meeting of the Gilliam county court held April 6, 1885, the following order was spread upon the records:

"Now, it appearing to the court that there have been taxes paid to Wasco county, Oregon, which rightfully belong, and should have been paid to, Gilliam county:

"Thereupon it is ordered that H. C. Condon, treasurer of said Gilliam county, be instructed and ordered to demand said money from the county court of Wasco county, Oregon."

The next day the following additional order was recorded:

"Now, it appearing to the court that there are taxes due Gilliam county from Umatilla county, Oregon:

"Therefore it is ordered by the court that the county clerk shall request of the county clerk of Umatilla county to make a transcript of such taxes and forward to the clerk of Gilliam county, and also request the county clerk of said Umatilla county to order such money paid to the treasurer of said Gilliam county."

At the time of the organization of Gilliam county it was a portion of that vast, if somewhat indefinite region known as the "cow country," fit only, in popular belief, for the raising of range stock. Wonderful changes were soon wrought in business methods. Where, at that period the long-horned cow and the "watch-eyed" cayuse roamed at will amid a rich luxuriance of waving bunch grass are now found rich farms, thriving towns, spired churches and good schools. In 1885 the population, according to the state census, was 2,520.

Prior to the date of the creation of the county the idea was prevalent that grain and fruit could be grown only along the streams, and very little farming was done on the uplands until it became absolutely necessary to raise hay to feed stock through the winter months. The discovery was made that the highest hill lands produced fair crops. Gradually this fertile soil became broken up and cropped with various grains; the plows of the farmer began to drive away the stock to other ranges. No longer was farming merely an experiment.

When the organic act creating Gilliam county was framed, that document, also, advertised the inevitable county seat contest of the future. And the expected happened. It will be recalled that the act provided for the selection of a permanent county seat at the general election to be held in June, 1886, with the proviso that the town of Alkali was to remain the capital of the county until another selection should be made at the polls. Should any one town receive a two-thirds majority of all votes cast that town was to become the county seat. In case no town received such a majority the question was to be again submitted at the general election of 1888, the contestants being limited to the two points receiving the highest number of votes in 1886.

This contest in Gilliam county developed into one most remarkable. It was not finally settled until the general election of 1890. This delay was brought about by a singular coincidence—a tie vote between two towns which had received the highest vote in 1886.

The Gilliam county seat fight was one of the most bitter and exciting contests in the history of Eastern Oregon. At the first election following the location of the temporary county capital at Alkali, five towns in the county entered the lists. They were Arlington (which had changed its name from Alkali), Condon, Fossil, Olex and Mayville. The journals of Eastern Oregon were warm, nay, blistering, with columns of "mud-slinging," which lurid literary pabulum was prepared by champions of the different villages in line for county seat "honors." Personalities were sharp and truculent. Those favoring one of the interior towns were vociferous in their accusation that Arlington was nothing more than a bed of alkali with surrounding grounds of arid sand dunes. People favorable to Arlington urged their claims in a most forcible manner and defended their location in vigorous English. A correspondent of The Dalles Times-Mountaineer said that "any person who has sense enough to keep out of the fire would rather pass a week in Olex, Condon or Fossil, without even tents, barns or attics, than to spend a week in the alkali dust and sand of Arlington, with the best hotel accommodations that it can or ever will afford." In the same paper, of April 24, 1886, the friends of Fossil advanced the following claims:

The reason that we claim that the county seat should be at Fossil is that it is the most suitable place in the county—that is, it is the most convenient to the majority of the people, as there are already five county roads leading to Fossil, and there is now a petition in circulation for another. Another reason that the county seat should be at Fossil is that it would keep thousands of dollars in the county that would be sent out if the county seat was at Arlington, as all the material for county buildings would come from some other locality; consequently the money is sent out of the county; and the material can be laid down in Fossil for fifty per cent. less than it can be laid down in Arlington. The Gilliam county officers and jail bugs would be fed on Gilliam county produce, but if the county seat is at Arlington a large portion of the provisions would be shipped from Washington Territory and the Willamette Valley, such as bacon, fruit, flour and vegetables; besides if we get the county seat at Fossil we would, also, get the Bridge Creek and Haystack country attached to our county, which would make it nearly one-third larger, and Fossil would be almost in the center of the county. As for the people of Fossil being compelled to go to Arlington to trade, that is all bosh, for where is the stockman or farmer who can afford to leave his family and spend five or six days with his team for a thousand pounds or so of produce, when freight is only three-fourths of a cent a pound? What Gilliam county wants is opposition, and if the county seat is at Fossil that we will have, for it will bring more business men into our county; but if it is at Arlington the chances are that we will lose the Mitchell trade.

In behalf of Arlington it was said that it was the only town with railroad facilities; was the largest place and, from a business viewpoint the really only available site for a county seat in Gilliam county. Condon, although considerably smaller, declared that she was the most centrally located of any of the contestants.

The election of 1886 showed Arlington with 260; Condon 260; Fossil 373 and Olex, with 92 votes, Mayville having, apparently, abandoned the field. Following is the vote by precincts:

Of course the result of this poll produced complications, thus causing a postponement of final adjustment. No one town had received a two-thirds majority and, in compliance with the terms of the enabling act, "the question shall again be submitted to the legal voters of said county at the next general election between the two points having the highest number of votes at said election." But there were three points having the highest number of votes, and at the election of 1888 we find these three principal towns again contesting, Olex, of course, having retired from the lists. The final result of this long drawn-out contest will be found farther on in its chronological order.

In 1886 there were in Gilliam county only 443 taxpayers. In December of this year an effort was made by some of the citizens of the county to include portions of Cook and Wasco within its boundaries. For that purpose a bill was introduced in the succeeding legislature. It was the expressed opinion of The Dalles Times-Mountaineer that "Dividing and subdividing counties, except where the population and wealth are sufficient to warrant the increased burden of taxation made necessary in the creation of the new political division, is not for the best interests of the citizens. It makes little or no difference how large the area of a county may be, this same argument will apply against division. For this reason we consider the late formation of Gilliam county as an ill-advised measure and legislation not calculated to benefit those directly interested; This new project of cutting a generous slice from Crook and another one from Wasco and splicing them on to Gilliam is, apparently, an effort to benefit the latter at the expense of the former. The portion of Crook will include the precinct of Mitchell, and will leave the old county with less wealth and less population, and therefore, with increased taxation upon the individual. If the conveniences to be derived are greater than the disadvantages suffered, then the matter readjusts itself. We will very gladly hear any argument of this patching on to Gilliam county certain portions of Crook and Wasco; but until such time shall oppose any such action as detrimental to the majority of those concerned."

This effort, it appears, was a signal failure. But in 1887 another measure was introduced. It was "To annex the northern portions of Crook and Grant counties to Gilliam. There were no results and a month later, in February, 1887, another bill was framed and presented to the senate with the intent to cut off the northwestern part of Grant, and add it to Gilliam county, making the north fork of the John Day river the boundary between the two counties. This measure was defeated by a majority of four.

According to the assessor's roll for 1887 the gross value of Gilliam county property was $1,858,813.

With the approach of the general election of 1888 the county seat question again reached a simmering point and from that increased to a boiling temperature. Again were the three principal towns in the county pitted against each other and it became a battle royal. Again there was no choice between Arlington, Condon and Fossil. We give the vote by precincts:

The solons who had framed the enabling act had not anticipated so close a contest; they had not provided for an election later than 1888. More legislative action was demanded; this was had at the session of 1889. Another bill was provided for the selection of a permanent county seat of Gilliam county to be decided at the regular election on the first Monday in June, 1890. Arlington and Condon were the towns named in the bill to be voted for. This eliminated the town of Fossil which had received only a small number of votes less than the other participants. In the 1890 election Condon came out a winner by a majority of 171. Commenting on this result the Condon Globe magnanimously said:

From the start the town of Condon was a candidate for county seat honors. It took three elections two years apart to settle the vexed question, which resulted finally in a victory for Condon. She now reaches out her arms to Arlington and Fossil and asks her late rivals in the county seat warfare—now that it is ended—to grasp in fellowship and wish her God speed while she tries to further interests which she honestly believes to be for the common good.

Following the settlement of this vexatious question the central and southern portions of the county immediately began to settle up with colonies of progressive and industrial people. Homesteads were rapidly taken up; comfortable and substantial houses were built and permanent homes established; orchards were planted, which thrived and bore luscious fruit; the productive capacity and value of lands were no longer doubted. Within a few years conditions underwent wonderful changes; cow trails and pack trains were abandoned; postoffices and mail routes were established; small towns sprang into existence; good roads were constructed and tillable lands were fenced, plowed and farmed; throughout the county was heard the hum of threshing machines. In any direction that the traveler passed through the county his way lay along good roads between fields of waving grain and he found a comfortable and hospitable haven in any one of the towns and cities.

Following the adjustment of the county seat contention some time elapsed before official buildings could be completed. Therefore the county records were not moved immediately and Condon did not become, de facto, the county seat until September 17, 1890.

In 1891 the total taxable property of the county was $987,883. The number of acres of deeded land was 129,806, valued at $335,279.

May 25, 1891, Rock Creek was visited by a decidedly vicious and destructive water spout and hurricane. Roads and bridges were swept away by the torrents of water; huge boulders were thrown out into the fields and meadows, demolishing much grain and grass.

In December, 1894, the assessed valuation of the county was: gross, $1,657,782; net, $1,500,786.

Meanwhile business throughout Gilliam county was suffering from the general stagnation incident to the financial crisis of 1893. Prices for farm products were extremely low, as well as for wool, sheep and cattle, creating distress among the agricultural and stock raising communities which could not but react upon the towns, resulting in a condition of business depression and uncertainty hard to be borne. Gilliam county suffered as little, perhaps, as any other in the state from these depressing conditions. Still, it must be admitted that for a few years succeeding 1893 retrogression and not progress was the experience of the county. Throughout the whole of the years 1894 and 1895 the darkness of financial eclipse continued. Before 1896 had passed, however, it became evident that the intervening body which was obscuring the light was slowly passing from the disk of the financial sun, and by the fall of 1897 prosperity was beaming in all its former glory. With the return of "good times" Gilliam county took up the forward march in earnest and signs of business revival were apparent on every hand. Good prices and crops brought wealth to the farmers, enabling them to pay off the indebtedness which had oppressed them during the years of darkness; to inaugurate improvements, buy needed machinery and indulge more liberally in the conveniences of civilized life.

The population of Gilliam county, by the state census of 1895, was 3,016.

During the closing days of the year 1897 there was, probably, not another county in the state more prosperous than Gilliam, with its population of slightly over 3,000 and its income of over $1,200,000—an average of $400 for every man, woman and child within its borders—all derived from the soil. This amount of $1,200,000 was divided among the different industries as follows: grain, $850,000; wool, $150,000; cattle, $120,000; mutton sheep, $75,000; hogs, $8,000; miscellaneous products, $34,000. January 1, 1898, Mr. James S. Stewart said that "The county is a mixed stock and farming county, but principally farming. Not many years ago stock-raising overshadowed farming, but then it was thought that very little of the land was adapted to cultivation, but during the last few years a great change has taken place, and now the farmer is king, and the stockman is second in importance."

This year, 1898, the total taxable property of the county was $1,254,691.

The irony of fate is well illustrated in the history of Gilliam county as regards the question of territory. It will be recalled that a number of abortive attempts had been made to secure portions of other counties contiguous to Gilliam. But early in the year 1899 Gilliam was called upon for a generous slice of her own territory. This was for the creation of the county of Wheeler. The territory demanded was a nearly square piece extending from about the south line of township 5 to the John Day river on the south, and from the east line of range 22 to the John Day river on the west. This was not yielded to with the best of grace possible; citizens of Gilliam considered the cutting off of the county to be the work of a few designing gentlemen residing in Fossil. The bill, as originally introduced, proposed to take from Gilliam county nearly all of Mayville, Trail Fork and Lone Rock precincts, three of the best communities in the county. Before the bill was passed, however, the boundary was moved farther to the south, as a compromise; the line being fixed at one section south of the present standard parallel. While this was not entirely agreeable to the people of Gilliam county, it was far more satisfactory than was the line first proposed. However, the story of this "territorial amputation" will be found more amplified in the History of Wheeler county.

September 20, 1899, there was effected a temporary organization of a Pioneers' Association, with Reverend Hurlburt as chairman and George Tatom, secretary. Following are the names of those present with the date of their arrival in Oregon: Rev. Hurlburt, 1851; George Tatom, 1853; G. W. Rinehart, 1853; R. H. Ramsey, 1852; J. W. Elbert, 1852; W. C. Caldwell, 1853; John Palmer, 1852; Dr. Dodson, 1853; Mrs. Young, 1844; Mrs. Hurlburt, 1853. The membership of this association was open to all who came to the state of Oregon before 1878.

In 1899 the amount of taxable property in the county was $1,005,264. The same year witnessed a large increase in settlement, especially in the section known as Ferry Canyon. It was estimated that it received ninety per cent. of the immigration of that year. The same year there was a county seat "scare," and although nothing eventuated the editor of the Morning Oregonian, a newspaper published at Portland, was moved to revel in imagination, in September, as follows:

Condon, the county seat of Gilliam county, will have to look to its laurels, according to Representative S. G. Hawson, who hails from Arlington, the original county seat of Gilliam, and an important railroad town, whose citizens have never lost faith in one day regaining the seat of the county government. Mr. Hawson, who was seen at the Perkins yesterday, said that Arlington business men propose to ask the next legislature to pass an act enabling Gilliam county citizens to reconsider the question of county seat, and the candidate for legislative honors who asks Arlington citizens for votes must declare himself in favor of the enabling act.

Condon, which is forty miles south of Arlington, was very near the geographical center of Gilliam county, until Wheeler county was cut off the south end last winter, taking the Fossil country along with it, and as Arlington has a larger population than Condon, its citizens now see their chance to bring the court house records back again to the town on the line of the Oregon Railroad & Navigation Company.

Condon, Mr. Hawson says, is situated high up on the open prairie, in a rich agricultural and stock country, but the railroads penetrating that portion of Eastern Oregon have thus far left Condon to one side. No court house has yet been built at Condon on account of the opposition in the northern end of the county, and so the seat of county government has not been anchored at Condon in any way. * * *

Arlington citizens have always disliked the 40-mile stage ride into the interior of Gilliam county when official business compelled their presence at the county seat. Lately a telephone line has shown itself quite a convenience between Arlington and Condon, but still the Arlingtonians continue to yearn for the presence of the sheriff, the treasurer and the semi-annual visit of the circuit judge, with a train of witnesses, jurors and litigants, who fill the hotels and drop lots of silver in the retail stores. It is only natural, Mr. Hawson says, that Condon people should oppose the passage of the proposed enabling act.

The year of 1901 was one of progress and prosperity in the county of Gilliam. Still, it was unaccompanied by any sensational boom, but it was a period of steady, healthy growth which, since the early days has been characteristic of Oregon. New settlers came into the county by scores. And each one appeared to be doing his best to develop the latent resources of one of the richest sections of the state of Oregon. But when a movement was on foot to erect a new court house at Condon, the proposition was lost at the general election by a vote of 350 to 345.

Monday, January 19, 1903, articles incorporating the Arlington & Pacific Coast Railroad Company were filed in the office of the Multnomah county clerk, at Portland, by J. P. Findlay, J. R. Smails and J. E. Simmons. The authorized capital stock was $1,500,000. The object announced in the articles of incorporation was to construct and operate a railroad from Arlington to the Pacific ocean. The route proposed at the eastern terminus was from Arlington south to Fossil.

Of course, a court house and other county buildings were imperatively necessary to Gilliam county. The apparent reluctance of the citizens to build them is difficult to appreciate in the present era of progressive ideas and up-to-date methods. At last the town of Condon came forward with an offer of $1,000 toward the proposed structures. At the June election, 1902, Gilliam county citizens had voted against any tax for court house purposes. But the county court at a meeting in January, 1903, decided to go ahead and appropriate $10,000. The contract for building the court house was let, March 21st, to A. F. Peterson, of Corvallis, his bid being $13,440. Mr. Peterson was the same contractor who had erected the Sherman county court house. December 17th the Condon Globe said:

"The court house is now the actual property of Gilliam county, the building having been inspected and accepted by the board of county commissioners on Monday, December 14, 1903. * * * The county offices are being moved this week from the old shack which has for so many years been honored with the title of court house."

In the way of ringing out the old and ringing in the new, to paraphrase from Tennyson, the Globe in its issue of December 31, 1903, said:

"The year which closes tonight has been marked by the greatest degree of progress of any twelve months in the history of Gilliam county. A large area of fertile farm land has been brought under cultivation, and many improvements of every description have been the order of the day. Farm houses and barns have been erected, miles of fencing built, orchards have been planted and flocks and herds are being constantly improved."

With the opening of the new year of 1904 the total value of taxable property in Gilliam county was $2,315,164. The grain crop of this year was an exceptionally good one. At a conservative estimate the wheat yielded 750,000 bushels, and there was besides a large yield of oats, barley, rye, etc., the total being 1,500,000 bushels.

To hark back to railroad matters it was announced in April, 1903, that within sixty days work on the Arlington & Pacific Railroad would begin; from Arlington to Condon. Surveyors were at once put on the work. But there was "another Richmond in the field." Saturday, August 22, 1903, the Columbia River & Central Oregon Railroad Company filed articles of incorporation at Portland. The authorized capital stock was $500,000. The avowed purpose of this company was to build, equip and operate a railroad from Arlington to Condon. The incorporators were John C. Ainsworth, Henry F. Conner and Lewis Gerlinger, residents of Portland. They claimed that the company was financed by eastern men of ample capital, who had other extensive railroad and manufacturing interests on the coast, and that construction work would be commenced at once.

The Arlington & Pacific Railway Company had already done considerable preliminary work. Right of way had been secured from the county, city and individuals. Preliminary surveys had been made and a general outline of the route had been, practically, determined upon. A representative of the company had recently returned from New York and reported that no trouble would be experienced in that quarter. He affirmed that he had the assurance of capitalists there that ample funds were available for the purpose. Upon his return to Portland an effort was made to make the customary traffic arrangement with the Oregon Railroad & Navigation Company. And right there came the "sticking point." The older company desired time in which to consider the matter. When they were later called upon for a definite answer, the Arlington & Pacific officials claimed, that the O. R. & N. Company announced that another company was preparing to build through the same territory and that it already had assurance of satisfactory traffic arrangements with the Oregon Railroad & Navigation Company. Apparently this indicated that the latter company was, in reality, behind the new project, and the fact that Mr. Ainsworth would not positively deny that they were interested lent some color to the belief.

Meanwhile the Arlington & Pacific people announced that they expected to commence work on their road in about thirty days, regardless of competing lines or the lack of traffic arrangements, and that if the coming winter did not prove too severe they expected to have it completed to Olex by the following spring, and on into Condon the succeeding summer. August 27, 1903, the Condon Globe said:

"It is well known that the Oregon Railroad & Navigation Company has always looked upon the Condon country as its own particular territory, and that it resents the efforts of any independent concern to give the people here the transportation facilities which are so much needed, preferring to have the country await the pleasure of the Harriman interests in the matter."

In October, 1903, indications of the early completion of a railroad into Gilliam county were promising. With three companies in the field, each declaring that they would surely build a road from Arlington to Condon, and that they would commence work in the immediate future, the outlook was, certainly, favorable. Apparently the question of most interest to the people was, "which road shall it be?" Assuming that all three of the companies were acting in good faith and that each expected to build the road, it may here be interesting to briefly consider their status at that period, so far as known; what they had accomplished and their apparent ability to prosecute the work to a successful issue.

The company then represented by Mr. Morris and his associates, then in Condon, had secured the survey and right of way acquired by Elrod & Moore, two years previous. They admitted their inability to build the road without the support and assistance of the people of Gilliam county, but they did not ask for a subsidy or a donation. They did ask the people of the county, however, to subscribe for a certain amount of the company's bonds, agreeing to redeem the same within five years with six per cent interest added. They had no traffic arrangements with the Oregon Railroad & Navigation Company.

The incorporation of which Messrs. Findlay and Simmons were at the head had been organized about a year previous. They had made a partial preliminary survey of the route, with some estimates of cost of construction. Their representative had visited New York and the report was current that the project had been satisfactorily financed by New York capitalists, and that all that was then restraining them from work on the line was lack of satisfactory traffic arrangement with the Oregon Railroad & Navigation Company. The Findlay organization had not yet indicated what concessions, if any, they would demand from the people of Gilliam county.

The organization of the third company, that of which John C. Ainsworth, of Portland, was president, had occurred only two months previous. As has been stated, associated with him were Lewis Gerlinger and Henry F. Conner, all gentlemen standing high in financial circles in Portland. They had done no work in the field, but the fact that they had satisfactory traffic arrangements with the Oregon Railroad & Navigation Company gave them some advantage. These gentlemen declared that they would build, and that they would do so without one dollar from the county in subsidies.

In October, 1903 three surveying parties, representing as many different railroad companies, were at work running lines between Arlington and Condon. Mr. Simmons put his surveyors to work at Arlington; the company represented by Mr. Morris sent out a crew of stake drivers and the third party commenced work at the William Head ranch, on Rock Creek, a short distance below the "French Charlie" place. They were working toward Condon. They were employed by the company of which John C. Ainsworth, of Portland, was president.

During the fall of 1903 there were exceedingly warm times in the railroad business. Strife between the different companies was, apparently, bitter. There were wordy clashes between the different interests at council meetings at Arlington, excited by attempts to secure franchises and rights of way through the city.

It was not until the latter part of July, 1904, that a statement was made which meant business. E. E. Calvin, general manager of the Oregon Railroad & Navigation Company, accompanied by other officials, came to Gilliam county and announced that construction would be immediately commenced. Mr. Calvin stated distinctly, according to the Globe, that Arlington and Condon would be the termini of the road. But previous to this, and after the excitement attendant upon the struggle for possession of three roads, there had been very little done in the way of building a road. The contract for grading was let in August; the first dirt was thrown Tuesday, September 13th. Work was somewhat retarded by severe weather in February. During the latter part of this month track-laying was commenced south of Arlington. But the year 1905 witnessed the completion of the road, and at the present writing, (May, 1905), construction trains are running and the road will soon be open for service, passenger and freight.

Following is the list of postoffices in Gilliam county at the present date: Ajax, Alville, Arlington, Blalock, Clem, Condon, Croy, Lone Rock, Mayville, Olex, Quinton, Trail Fork and Willows.

CHAPTER II

CITIES AND TOWNS.

CONDON.

The capital of Gilliam county lies forty miles south of Arlington. Previous to the organization of Wheeler, Condon was within a mile of the geographical center of Gilliam county. "A city that is built on a hill cannot be hid." Truly a trite saying, but one that is appropriate to Condon. The town is located on a high, rolling prairie, in the heart of the most productive mixed agricultural and stock-raising countries in Eastern Oregon. The elevation above sea level is 3,025 feet. Although it is located on a high plateau the climatic conditions are quite uniform, the temperature rarely going below the zero mark in winter or 80 degrees in summer. Snow sufficient for sleighing is a treat seldom experienced. Condon is known as the "Summit City." On every side the town is fringed with wheat fields stretching away, fan-like, for miles in golden, graceful waves.

That all roads lead to Condon is, practically, true. This is, perhaps, owing to the peculiar topographical features surrounding it, placing the county seat almost at the confluence of all the principal highways. To the east lies the productive body of land known as Matney Flat. A little further are the rich, alluvial foot-hills, in the midst of which are the fertile valleys in which are situated Lone Rock, Lost Valley and Trail Fork. To the south lies the beautiful and extensive table lands of the Mayville country, stretching away for fifteen miles; while on the west the Ferry Canyon country contains some of the finest lands in the county. In short, the country immediately adjacent is distinctively agricultural; for 35 miles east and west by 30 north and south is one mammoth grain field, broken only by a few narrow canyons and water courses.

Before a town came into existence at this locality a strong stream of pure, crystal water flowing from a bed of black, basaltic rock, with grass knee-deep in every direction, made this spot the halting place of peregrinating Indian tribes on the trail from the "Wauna chuck," (Columbia river) to the western spurs of the Blue mountains. Here the pioneer stockmen rounded up fat steers and "Summit Springs" became known far and wide. The inevitable herder, with his corral and cabin followed.

The first house built on the site of Condon was erected by William F. Potter, in 1879, when he filed on this quarter section of land as a homestead. About the year 1884 a postoffice was established at Summit Springs on the claim of Mr. Trimble. Around this governmental center Condon sprang up and, ultimately, entered the race for the county seat. David B. Trimble was the pioneer merchant of Condon, or rather, the locality of Condon. He opened a small store about one-half mile from the original site of the town. This office was in Mr. Trimble's store and he became the postmaster.

At the time Trimble made application for a postoffice he went to Alkali (now Arlington) where he secured the services of a young lawyer, named Harry Condon, in drawing up the necessary papers. They completed everything with the exception of naming the proposed postoffice. Without having settled upon a name Mr. Trimble left for home. On his way he made up his mind that, inasmuch as Mr. Condon had drawn up the papers without asking any pay for his services, he would name the new postoffice Condon. He at once filled in the papers to that effect, forwarded them to the postoffice department at Washington, D. C., and Condon was born.

There is another version concerning the naming of this town to the effect that the postoffice was named after a Professor Condon, but the story vouched for by Mr. Trimble is correct.

The original house built in Condon by Mr. Potter was erected by the side of the famous "Summit Springs," on what is now lot 7, block 3, of Condon. In April, 1885, the town was platted by Mr. Potter on section 10, township 4, south range 21. While Mr. Trimble might be claimed as the original merchant in Condon's vicinity, his store was located one-half mile from the present site of Condon. The distinction of having been Condon's first merchants belongs to T. H. McBride and John Miller, who established the initial general merchandise store in the present county seat. This was in 1885. Thomas Strickland built the first saloon and the first livery barn in 1885, and Mr. Vining, the same year erected the first hotel, soon afterward selling out to Pliter Brothers, who conducted it. The store building occupied by Miller & McBride was erected, also, by Mr. Vining. In 1886 Thomas Hall built and occupied a blacksmith shop, and the following year L. W. Darling erected a building in which he opened a drug store. The same year the postoffice was removed from Mr. Trimble's to Mr. Darling's drug store, and the latter was appointed deputy postmaster. In 1888 J. H. Downing became the third merchant within the platted limits of Condon.

The first fire of any importance in Condon occurred Sunday, September 27, 1891. About 8 o'clock p. m., the large livery stable of John Glasgow was discovered to be on fire. Within twenty minutes this structure, the fine residence of George W. Rhinehart, F. Ward's new hotel, William Dunlap's blacksmith shop, the large tent and entire outfit belonging to the Western Photograph Association, and C. C. Shaw's barber shop, were a seething mass of flames. Previous to its discovery the fire had gained considerable headway. There prevailed at this time a brisk wind from the northeast. The Rhinehart family had retired and barely escaped with their lives in their night clothes. The citizens of the town were wild with excitement. Every man, woman and child and a squad of Indians were on the scene working as if their lives were at stake. By heroic efforts the rest of the town was saved from destruction. The roofs of surrounding buildings were covered with blankets and large quantities of water were dashed against them, and on the burning coals as they fell throughout the town. The loss was estimated at $10,000, divided about as follows: Western Photograph Association, $5,000; no insurance; C. Glasgow, $1,600, no insurance; G. W. Rhinehart, $1,000, no insurance; F. H. Ward, $2,000, insurance $1,300; G. H. Nelson, $250, no insurance; damage to moving property, $300. It was supposed that the fire was of incendiary origin.

January 1, 1892, a tri-weekly mail service was established between Condon and Heppner. In July, 1892, an Armory Hall company was incorporated at Condon by members of H Company, Oregon National Guard. Arrangements were at once perfected to build a hall 30x70 feet in size. The estimated cost was $1,300, and this was readily subscribed. In 1893 a bill incorporating the city of Condon passed both houses of the legislature. In March the population of the town was about 400. During 1898 improvements in Condon amounted to $10,000, although rapid growth had been made during the two years previous. September 3, 1898, by a vote of 24 to 1 Condon decided to issue bonds for water works.

In the spring of 1899 they were completed. The first test of the new system was highly satisfactory. Water was easily thrown over the highest buildings in the city.

In June, 1899, a permanent organization was effected of the Condon Fire Department. These officers were elected: Chief Engineer, W. L. Wilcox; Assistant Chief, C. S. Palmer; Secretary, John Jackson. In September, 1899, a telephone line was in operation between Condon and outside points. During the year previous the city had made many substantial improvements. A number of new business enterprises were undertaken, prominent among which was the new water works system, supplying an inexhaustible flow of pure, sparkling water for all domestic purposes, irrigation and fire protection. Two church edifices, also, were erected.

Early in 1901 an act was passed by the Oregon legislature amending the charter of the city of Condon. There were only two changes of importance; one making the office of city marshal elective instead of appointive, and the other providing that the city recorder should be, ex officio, justice of the peace. December 25, 1902, the Condon Globe said:

"The year which is about to close has been marked, in Condon, as the banner year in the town's history in the way of substantial and permanent improvements. Twenty-eight business houses and dwellings have been completed during the year at an aggregate cost of $40,000."

The progress of 1903 was accentuated by the building of a brick court house, four brick business blocks, a school house, a store, eleven frame business houses, about twenty residences and the establishment of an electric lighting system. The latter was an enterprise of the Condon Milling Company, and was in operation in December. October 13, 1904, the Globe said:

"Condon is growing livelier every day. The demand for city property is increasing and every stage comes in loaded with people seeking business locations in what is surely destined to become the most important business center in this section of Eastern Oregon."

This condition was the result of the commencement of the railway toward Condon. October 26, 1904, the Condon Commercial Club was organized with the following 38 members: N. Farnsworth, C. O. Portwood, secretary; W. A. Campbell, J. E. Lancaster, G. A. Berry, J. W. Snover, R. W. Cooke, George B. Dudeck, J. Q. Jarvis, C. F. Armstrong, John F. Reisacher, president; A. S. Hollen, J. H. Downing, J. M. Cameron, B. F. Butler, E. W. Moore, John Stewart, D. R. Parker, John Jackson, Edward Dum, Pearl Jarvis, R. M. Rogers, C. A. Devens, A. J.

Shelton, E. T. Hollenbeck, S. A. Pattison, Edward Curran, R. McKinney, Jay Bowerman, "Condon Pharmacy," E. G. Merrifield, Frank Wilson, F. M. Pliter, J. K. Fitzwater, M. H. Abbey, P. H. Stevenson, J. A. McMorris and M. O. Clarke.

The commendable object of this organization was to advance the substantial commercial interests of Condon and Gilliam county. This club was largely instrumental in securing a line of railway to this point, and the water works, the latter costing $23,000, for which the town was bonded. It should be remarked that the citizens of Condon have always manifested a patriotic interest in municipal affairs with the gratifying result that the city has excellent fire apparatus, first-class sidewalks and a very moderate debt.

In the closing days of 1904 the city had, during the four preceding years, more than quadrupled in assessed valuation and population. A $17,000 court house and a $7,000 public school building had been erected, also a 75-barrel flouring mill, aside from more than 100 dwelling houses. Trade conditions fully justified all of these investments, for nearly one-third of the county transacted its merchandise and banking business in Condon. The range of delivery from the local postoffice covered a territory larger in area than were some of the other counties in the state.

In February, 1905, the Condon city charter was again amended by the legislature. Apparently the election of city marshal had not proved satisfactory, for we find that the amendments provided that this office should revert to an appointive one, by the city council, and that the city be authorized to bond itself for $50,000.

The fraternal societies of Condon are represented as follows: A. F. & A. M., Mt. Moriah No. 95; O. E. S., Condon Chapter, No. 23; I. O. O. F., Summit Lodge No. 130, Rebekahs, Minnehaha No. 109; W. O. W., No. 58, Condon Camp; Women of Woodcraft, Wallula Circle No. 282; K. of P., Endymion Lodge No. —; Foresters of America, Court Condon No. 54. At one period there were lodges of the A. O. U. W. and Degree of Honor, but they have disbanded.

The following have officiated as postmasters in the Condon office since its establishment: David B. Trimble, L. W. Darling, John Lyons and J. F. Reisacher.

The Roman Catholic Church was organized and built in 1889, the edifice costing $400. The present membership is sixty. In 1890 the Congregational church was organized and erected at a cost of $900. It now has a membership of 52. It was in 1898 that the Latter Day Saints erected a house of worship at a cost of $400, the present membership being eighty. At a cost of $900 the Baptist Church was erected in 1900. Its present membership is thirty-five. The Church of Christ, organized in 1901, and in 1905 erected an edifice at a cost of $600. The present membership is twenty. All of the churches mentioned have regular services.

Following are the city officials who have served Condon since its incorporation in 1893:

1893—Mayor, Geo. Tatom; council, J. Maddock, S. P. Shutt, J. H. Downing, D. M. Rhinehart, J. P. Lucas, A. Henshaw, J. W. Barr; recorder, H. N. Frazer; treasurer, G. W. Rhinehart; marshal, E. E. Smith, W. F. Thurnagle.

1894—Mayor, J. P. Lucas; council, S. B. Barker, J. W. Barr, J. H. Miller, J. Maddock; recorder, H. N. Frazer; treasurer, G. W. Rhinehart; marshal, E. E. Smith.

1895—Mayor, S. B. Barker; council, J. W. Barr, A. Henshaw, E. W. Moore, E. E. Smith; recorder, Edward Dunn; treasurer, G. W. Rhinehart; marshal, W. F. Thurnagle.

1896—Mayor, J. W. Barr; council, S. B. Barker, P. H. Stephenson, W. L. Wilcox, A. Henshaw; recorder, Edward Dunn; treasurer, J. H. Hudson; marshal, W. C. Caldwell.

1897—Mayor, S. B. Barker; council, W. L. Wilcox, C. C. Wilson, A. Henshaw, P. H. Stephenson; recorder, H. B. Hendricks; treasurer, J. H. Hudson; marshal, E. E. Smith.

1898—Mayor, Edward Dunn; council, T. G. Johnson, Chas. Fix, G. W. Rhinehart, S. V. Moore; recorder, W. A. Darling; treasurer, Wm. Dunlap; marshal, A. Anderson.

1899—Mayor, Edward Dunn; council, T. G. Johnson, S. B. Barker, S. V. Moore, G. W. Rhinehart; recorder, Geo. Tatom; treasurer, J. H. Hudson; marshal, R. H. Pattison.

1900—Mayor, Edward Dunn; council, Chas. Fix, F. M. Springston, Fred Wilson, W. L. Wilcox; recorder, E. A. May; treasurer, P. H. Stephenson; marshal, R. Pattison.

1901—Mayor, P. H. Stephenson; council, F. M. Springston, Fred Wilson, John Portwood, W. O. Clark; recorder, E. A. May; treasurer, Edgar Moore; marshal, Mauley Downing.

1902—Mayor, W. O. Clark; council, A. S. Hollen, S. B. Barker, F. M. Pliter, T. G. Johnson; recorder, E. A. May; treasurer, E. W. Moore; marshal, W. M. Dunlap.

1903—Mayor, F. M. Pliter; council, James Kiser, A. S. Hollen, S. B. Barker, Al Moore; recorder, W. A. Darling; treasurer, E. W. Moore; marshal, E. Armstrong.

1904—Mayor, W. L. Wilcox, J. F. Reisacher; council, J. Q. Jarvis, J. Jackson, D. McBain, E. Merri-field; recorder, W. A. Goodwin; treasurer, E. W. Moore; marshal, Bert Ramsey.

1905—Mayor, J. W. Snover; council, Edward Dunn, S. A. Pattison, J. Jackson, N. Farnsworth, C. O. Portwood, S. B. Barker; recorder, W. A. Goodwin; treasurer, A. Schilling; marshal, Frank Macy.

ARLINGTON.

The Oregon Railroad & Navigation Company, in the summer of 1880, built a line of road from Portland to Huntington, passing along the south bank of the Columbia river. In the year 1881 the town of Alkali, now Arlington, was located by James W. Smith. The site selected was at the mouth of the sand canyon of uniform grade leading to the Columbia river. This place at once became the distributing point of the products of the entire country for 100 miles south, and within a few years became one of the principal shipping points along the line of the Oregon Railroad & Navigation Company.

In 1880 Elijah Ray erected the first house in Arlington. The first mercantile business was established in 1881 by T. L. Bradbury and E. B. Comfort, and the postoffice was in their store. Mr. Comfort was postmaster. Its business at this period was extremely limited. Since the establishment of the Arlington office the following have served as postmasters: E. B. Comfort, T. L. Bradbury, Joseph Keeney, F. T. Hurlburt, Cal Ardrey, W. O. Ziegler, Charles W. Shurte, J. M. Johns, E. B. Trum and R. H. Robinson.

In the month of April, 1882, the townsite of Alkali was platted by J. W. Smith. Its location was in section 28, township 3, north range 21, E. W. M. The same year J. W. Smith, who had previously conducted a store at "The Willows," erected a building at Alkali and moved in with a stock of goods. But he was destined to experience no little difficulty in making a settlement. He had collected a considerable quantity of driftwood and timber, and he conceived the idea of floating his goods down the Columbia on a raft. This rude craft was constructed, loaded with about $2,000 worth of merchandise and began the voyage. Mr. Smith passed Alkali in the dark; could not effect a landing at that point, and drifted down stream about four miles, and found his raft hung up on a rock. The following day a number of people from Alkali came to Mr. Smith's assistance. They succeeded in salvaging all the goods and hauled the raft back to Alkali.

Mr. Smith's was the second store. A little later the same year Henry Heppner, "Father of the town of Heppner," erected the third store and opened out with a stock of general merchandise. It was Elijah Ray who built the first hotel and lodging house in Alkali in 1882. Of this locality The Dalles Times of March 29, 1882, said:

This little town, about 54 miles east of The Dalles, on the line of the Oregon Railroad & Navigation Company, displays considerable business activity and has bright hopes for the future. There is a good agricultural country adjacent, some of the best portions of the county, which will make it their shipping point. There are four mercantile establishments, two restaurants, hotel, blacksmith and butcher shops, large livery stable, drug store, school house and four saloons. Strange to say there are no doctors or lawyers, but these necessary adjuncts to civilization will soon make their appearance. City property is quite high, and some of the most sanguine have already picked out a location for a court house.

In 1885 The Dalles Times-Mountaineer had this to say of Alkali:

Alkali is the most important point, outside of The Dalles, in Wasco county. It is fifty-four miles east by railroad from this city. The population numbers about 400 and there are dry goods, hardware and drug stores, and commodious hotels for the traveling public. Roads lead from this town into the interior, and quite a brisk trade is done by merchants with the farmers of the adjacent country. A stage runs from here every week to Fossil.

In 1888 an excellent gravity system of water works was established by John and D. Parrot. The water pressure in the business sections was 95 pounds.

Tuesday afternoon, May 25, 1891, at 2 o'clock p. m., Arlington was visited by a terrific cyclone. With an ominous roar the storm suddenly burst upon the town, and within a few seconds the large merchandise store of D. S. Sprinkle was lifted into the air and splintered into a thousand pieces. The same fate befel the skating rink and many other buildings were more or less damaged. It was, seemingly, miraculous that Mr. and Mrs. Sprinkle and Nathan Baird, who were in the store building at the time were not instantly killed. Mrs. Sprinkle was injured, but not seriously.

In 1895 the city of Arlington purchased a portion of the stock of the Arlington Water Works Company, and in 1897 the city bought in the rest of the stock and became sole owner of the system.

Fortunately the fire history of Arlington has not been very disastrous. In August, 1885, the town was sufficiently large to suffer some considerable loss by fire. Friday morning, August 10th, flames were discovered in a building occupied by the agents of a lottery company. The fire spread with great rapidity and soon Linder's saloon, Hendrick's butcher shop and a building owned by J. Service and W. A. Rodney's general merchandise store were destroyed. The loss was about $10,000.

In 1886 the population was estimated at 300. By an act of the Oregon legislature passed the winter of 1886-7 the town of Arlington (Alkali) was incorporated. The new name of the town was selected at a mass meeting of the citizens, Tuesday, December 29, 1886, the following city officials were elected: J. A. Thomas, mayor; J. E. Haskin, M. U. Harrison, Joseph Frizzell and Nathan Baird, councilmen; Frank Hurlburt, recorder; Homer Comfort, treasurer.

In April, 1905, a railroad project which had been long maturing began to assume definite shape. The history of this line between Arlington and Condon, the county seat, has been given in the story of the latter town. In this year the population of Arlington was about 400. At present the city has two church organizations and two handsome church buildings. The Methodists were the first to erect an edifice in 1883. This was enlarged in 1899. The latter year the Baptist church was completed at a cost of $2,500. In 1883 a Congregational church had been erected, but the organization of this denominational society existed only five years; the building was sold and is now converted into a residence.

MAYVILLE.

When platted in June, 1884, by William and Phoebe McConnell, this town was called Clyde. It is located on the southwest corner of section 34, town 5, range 21 E. W. M. It is located six miles north of Fossil, Wheeler county. Mayville is now a town of about 150 inhabitants, and was so named in 1884 by Mrs. Samuel Thurston, at the time of the establishment of the postoffice. This town has the distinction of operating one of the best flouring mills in the Inland Empire; and while the capacity of the mill is not so great as some others, the quality of the flour produced is of the very best grade and is in demand through out the surrounding country. Mayville is located 194 miles southeast of Portland, 12 miles south of Condon and 52 miles south of Arlington. There is at this point a union church, telephone connections with all points and daily mail and stages to Fossil. The town's business comprises a general merchandise store, flouring mill, livery stable, hotel, blacksmith shop and a millinery and dressmaking establishment.

BLALOCK.

Blalock was platted in July, 1881, by the Blalock Wheat Growing Company, on section 31, township 3, range 20, and section 36, township 19, range 20. The first buildings erected at Blalock were a railroad station house, 28x28, two stories in height, and a commodious warehouse for the storage of goods. These were built in January, 1881, by A. J. McLellan, superintendent of construction of bridges and buildings for the Oregon Railroad & Navigation Company. The town derives its name from the immense Blalock farm of several thousand acres which is adjacent. In 1904 the town handled about 750,000 bushels of wheat. It is surrounded by some of the most picturesque scenery in eastern Oregon, and one of the richest and most productive wheat growing sections of Gilliam county. Aside from the wheat growing industry there are annually shipped many cattle, horses and hogs. It is, also, a fine fruit country, there being scarcely a farm in this section but has a good, thrifty orchard of mixed fruits. At one period it was said with considerable emphasis that fruit would not grow in this locality. But successful experiment has proved this idea erroneous. The town has two grain warehouses, hotel, general merchandise store, livery and stage stable, a real estate office and an agricultural implement factory.

LONE ROCK.

The elevation above sea level of this place is 3,000 feet. The town was founded in 1881 by R. G. Robinson and Albert Henshaw, on the headwaters of Rock creek, in a valley surrounded by the foothills of the Blue Mountains, about sixty miles southeast of Arlington. In the course of time it became a typical western town, where stockmen for miles around could get their mail and supplies for their camps, which were usually transported by pack horses to the headquarters of the various stock ranches.

February 22, 1882, the store of John Madden and his stock of general merchandise were destroyed by fire. A house adjoining, belonging to J. E. Parenta, was also burned. The latter's loss was $4,000, while that of Mr. Madden amounted to $6,000. The town was platted in October, 1882, by R. G. Robinson, on section 36, township 5, south range 23. In 1885 Lone Rock was described as follows by The Dalles Times-Mountaineer:

"Lone Rock is the trading point for the valley of the same name, and is about sixty miles southeast from Alkali (Arlington). A stage from Heppner reaches this place every week.

The residents are principally engaged in stock-raising, and some of the finest cattle and sheep roam over the hills that can be seen in this county."

In 1901 the city officials of Lone Rock were: R. G. Robinson, mayor; H. Neal, W. T. Matlock, E. D. Vineland, D. Z. Robinette, councilmen; F. H. Robinson, recorder; P. L. Ham, treasurer. In November, 1904, the People's Herald said:

Lone Rock is a small trading point in the southeastern part of Gilliam county, twenty miles from Condon, the county seat, and is connected with that city by stage line, there being a postoffice at Lone Rock. The townsite was laid out, and that not sold, is owned by R. S. Robinson, the moving spirit of the town in a business sense. There are now about one hundred inhabitants in the town, and the business houses include a general merchandise store, blacksmith shop and a livery and feed barn. A good system of gravity water works is owned by R. G. Robinson, with large reservoirs, with sufficient storage capacity to afford protection to the town from fire. There are two churches and a good school house.

Lone Rock received its name from a large, picturesque rock which stands within the town limits, near the creek, as an alert sentinel on the lookout for approaching danger. The town is surrounded by a large and rich farming and stock country, stock being the principal industry, and large quantities of alfalfa are raised each year, and the one store in Lone Rock does a large business.

At present there are two sawmills at Lone Rock, a general merchandise store, hotel, blacksmith shop, livery stable, one lawyer and a saloon.

OLEX.

This town was platted in April, 1903, by H. S. and Ordella Randall, at the corners of sections 2, 3, 10 and 11, township 1, south range 21. The elevation above sea level is 1,015 feet. Articles of incorporation of the Olex Townsite Company were filed with the clerk of Gilliam county in December, 1903. The incorporators were W. C. Morris, H. S. Randall and Ordella Randall. It is situated eighteen miles south of Arlington on the north bank of Rock creek. This town, of about fifty inhabitants, is supported by the extensive farming country surrounding it. On the creek bottoms, above and below, are many alfalfa fields which, on an average, are cut twice each year and, occasionally three times, the yield being from three and one-half to five tons an acre. A quantity of fine fruits and vegetables.

are grown in the vicinity and marketed principally in Olex, Condon and Arlington.

At the first election of the newly incorporated city of Olex held Wednesday, March 11, 1903, the following officials were selected: W. L. Tobey, mayor; J. F. Thomas, marshal; Charles Martin, recorder; F. Little, Grant Wade and F. Tobey, councilmen.

CLEM.

This is simply a stage station and postoffice; of the latter Mr. Clem Danneman is postmaster. He has a well-improved place and a comfortable house which is also used as a wayside inn for the weary traveler. The elevation of the town of Clem is 2,112 feet above sea level. Evidently the town derives its name from Clem Danneman, its original settler, as the neighboring ranchers invariably spoke of "going to Clem's," and when the postoffice was established it was named Clem. In February, 1905, a townsite was platted here by James Larch, between sections 4 and 9 township 2, south range 21. The postoffice was established in 1880. It is situated 203 miles east of Portland, 12 miles north of Condon and 26 miles south of Arlington. It has a hotel, blacksmith shop, telephone connections and stages.

ALVILLE,

although not considered in the light of a city, is quite a convenient trading post located about 14 miles west of Condon. It has a general store, lodge hall, blacksmith shop, school house and a church. It is a postoffice located 37 miles south of Arlington and 12 miles from Condon. Mails are semi-weekly.

WILLOWS.

This is a postoffice and station on the line of the Oregon Railroad & Navigation Company and the Columbia river 151 miles east of Portland. Its principal shipments consists of wool and wheat. It has a grocery store and daily mails.

TRAIL FORKS

has a population of about 25. It is a postoffice 16 miles southeast of Condon and was primarily settled in 1880. It lies 200 miles east of Portland and 50 miles almost due south of Arlington. It has a daily stage to and from Condon, and stock-raising is the principal industry in that locality.

QUINN'S

is the name of a station on the line of the Oregon Railroad & Navigation Company, 127 miles east of Portland, 15 miles west of Arlington and 5 miles west of Blalock. The name of the postoffice is Quinton.

CROY,

a postoffice on the John Day river, is 120 miles east of Portland, 12 miles south of Blalock, 31 miles northwest of Condon and 22 miles southwest of Arlington, its shipping point. It receives its mail semi-weekly.

WELSHONS

was platted in February, 1905, by George and Ida Welshons in section 4, township 2, south range 20. It lies just across the road from the townsite of Clem, on the new railway between Arlington and Condon.

DESCRIPTIVE.

During the past few years Oregon has been, as it will continue to be, following the Lewis and Clark Centennial Exposition at Portland, the objective point of thousands from the eastern, middle and middle western states, who are desirous of establishing new homes. Gilliam is one of the best counties in Eastern Oregon, or that country east of the Cascade mountains known as the "Inland Empire." Increasing scarcity of good lands that may be purchased at a low figure has stimulated a desire on the part of many to come to this portion of the country and improve their condition. One figurative writer has said: "Nature modeled Oregon on plans furnished by the Goddess of Plenty, who sought to form a land where the tiller of the soil and the garner of grain might live happily and peacefully, with every want supplied."

The county is comprised of about 738,000 acres of land, of which over 600,000 acres are tillable, the rest being better adapted to grazing purposes. At the present writing there are between 175,000 and 200,000 acres under cultivation. Only a few years ago this county was regarded as fit for nothing but stock-raising. A few practical farmers came in and they proceeded to demonstrate the fact that Gilliam was one of the best agricultural counties in the state of Oregon. The yield of wheat runs from 15 to 45 bushels per acre; a crop failure has never been known. Nor is the cereal production of this county confined to wheat; there are grown quantities of rye, oats and barley, aside from fruits and vegetables along the numerous streams; on the low lands alfalfa is produced in abundance. The climate is fully as satisfactory as can be found in any other locality; the winters being mild and the temperature seldom falling below zero. The summers are not accompanied by hot sultry days, with an atmosphere overflowing with oppressive humidity; the nights are cool.

The contour of the country varies from the alluvial bottom lands lying along the streams by which the lands are watered, to the equally fertile, though differently constituted plateau, or table lands of the higher altitudes. The first named lands are particularly adapted to fruit culture and vegetable gardening; the latter lands yield bountiful harvests of cereal crops in return for the labor of the thorough and progressive farmer.

The elevation of Gilliam county ranges from 200 feet on the Columbia river, which skirts its northern boundary, to 2,800 feet on the plateau lands in the central and southern sections. The general elevation is about 1,200 feet. Following are elevations in different points in the county: Arlington, 212 feet; Shuttler Flat, 1,267; Olex, 1,015; Clem, 2,112; Keizur Flat, 2,220; Condon, 3,025; Matney Flat, 2,700; Lone Rock, 3,000. In the Morning Oregonian of January 1, 1900, Mr. S. A. Pattison waxes alliterative as follows:

Although Gilliam county is one of the small counties of Oregon, in point of area, it is a land of big things in all other respects. Pigs, peaches and potatoes, carrots, cattle and cucumbers, hay, horses and hen fruit, beans, barley and babies, all attain the highest degree of perfection in point of size and general excellence, within her favored borders.

While many of our sister counties in Eastern Oregon are heralded far and wide as wonderful wealth producers in gold and silver, it must not be forgotten that Gilliam county "ground" gives forth abundant wealth in dazzling dollars. Ours are all surface "diggings," but we have passed the primitive period of the pioneer prospector's pick and pan, and gather up our wealth with eight-horse gang plows and 32-horse combined harvesters and threshers.

A fair idea of climatic conditions prevailing throughout Gilliam county may be gained from the following table prepared from observations by L. A. Miller and W. H. Colwell, at Lone Rock, giving mean temperature and precipitation:

Year.	Mean Temperature.	Precipitation.
1886 .....		* 9.13
1887 .....		13.89
1888 .....		10.88
1889 .....		12.81
1890 .....	46.3	13.72
1891 .....	46.3	15.92
1892 .....	46.4	12.31

* For 11 months.

By months the mean temperature and precipitation for the period between 1886 and 1896 was:

Month.	Mean Temperature.	Precipitation.
January .....	29.2	1.26
February .....	31.0	1.27
March .....	36.5	1.37
April .....	43.6	1.39
May .....	50.2	2.06
June .....	53.6	1.60

August .....	62.8	.29
September .....	54.1	.73
October .....	46.4	1.03
November .....	40.0	.97
December .....	32.4	1.47

Annual mean temperature, 45.0; annual mean precipitation, 13.98.

The land of Gilliam county is rolling, but mainly lies in large bodies well adapted to the use of modern farming machinery. The soil is a dark, sandy loam, of fertility almost inexhaustible; it does not require irrigation for cereals, and is remarkable for the ease with which it is cultivated. True, stock breeding is still an important industry, but the palmy days of big cattle and sheep kings are waning; the yearly encroachments of the farmer making it more and more difficult for the stockman to travel back and forth with their bands between summer and winter ranges. In Gilliam county wheat is destined to become king; its a wheat country par excellence, and Nature's laws must be obeyed.

As illustrative of the peculiarity of Gilliam county's climate, the following from the Condon Globe of April 19, 1895, is apropos:

"It will surprise our eastern readers to learn that D. C. Henry, whose excellent farm lies four miles south of Condon, is cutting wheat this week with a reaper. Mr. Henry did not get through cutting last fall when the threshers quit work, so he just left it until this spring. The grain is in just as good condition now as it was last fall and will yield just as much to the acre. This speaks volumes for our mild climate and fertility of soil."

The Arlington Record of January 5, 1905, said:

"Mankind has ever sought a land where his material wants and necessities might be most easily obtained. Diversified tastes and inclinations have led him to the furthestmost parts of the globe in quest of this ideal. The movement has been on for many thousands of years and seems destined never to end, although the earth has been traversed from its tropic center to the icebound barriers of the poles. Under the great diversity of conditions therein the many achievements of modern civilization are not the most pronounced in either of the extremes of climatic environment. The languor of perpetual summer and the rigors of prolonged winter are in a great degree avoided, and in the intermediate zones are found the nations of the earth that lead in intelligence, commerce and civilization. A blessed land therefore is that which suffers neither the extremes of winter's cold nor summer heat. Such a land is found in Eastern Oregon. Winter is little more than a name in this favored section while the summer is free from sultry weather and the nights are always cool and refreshing.

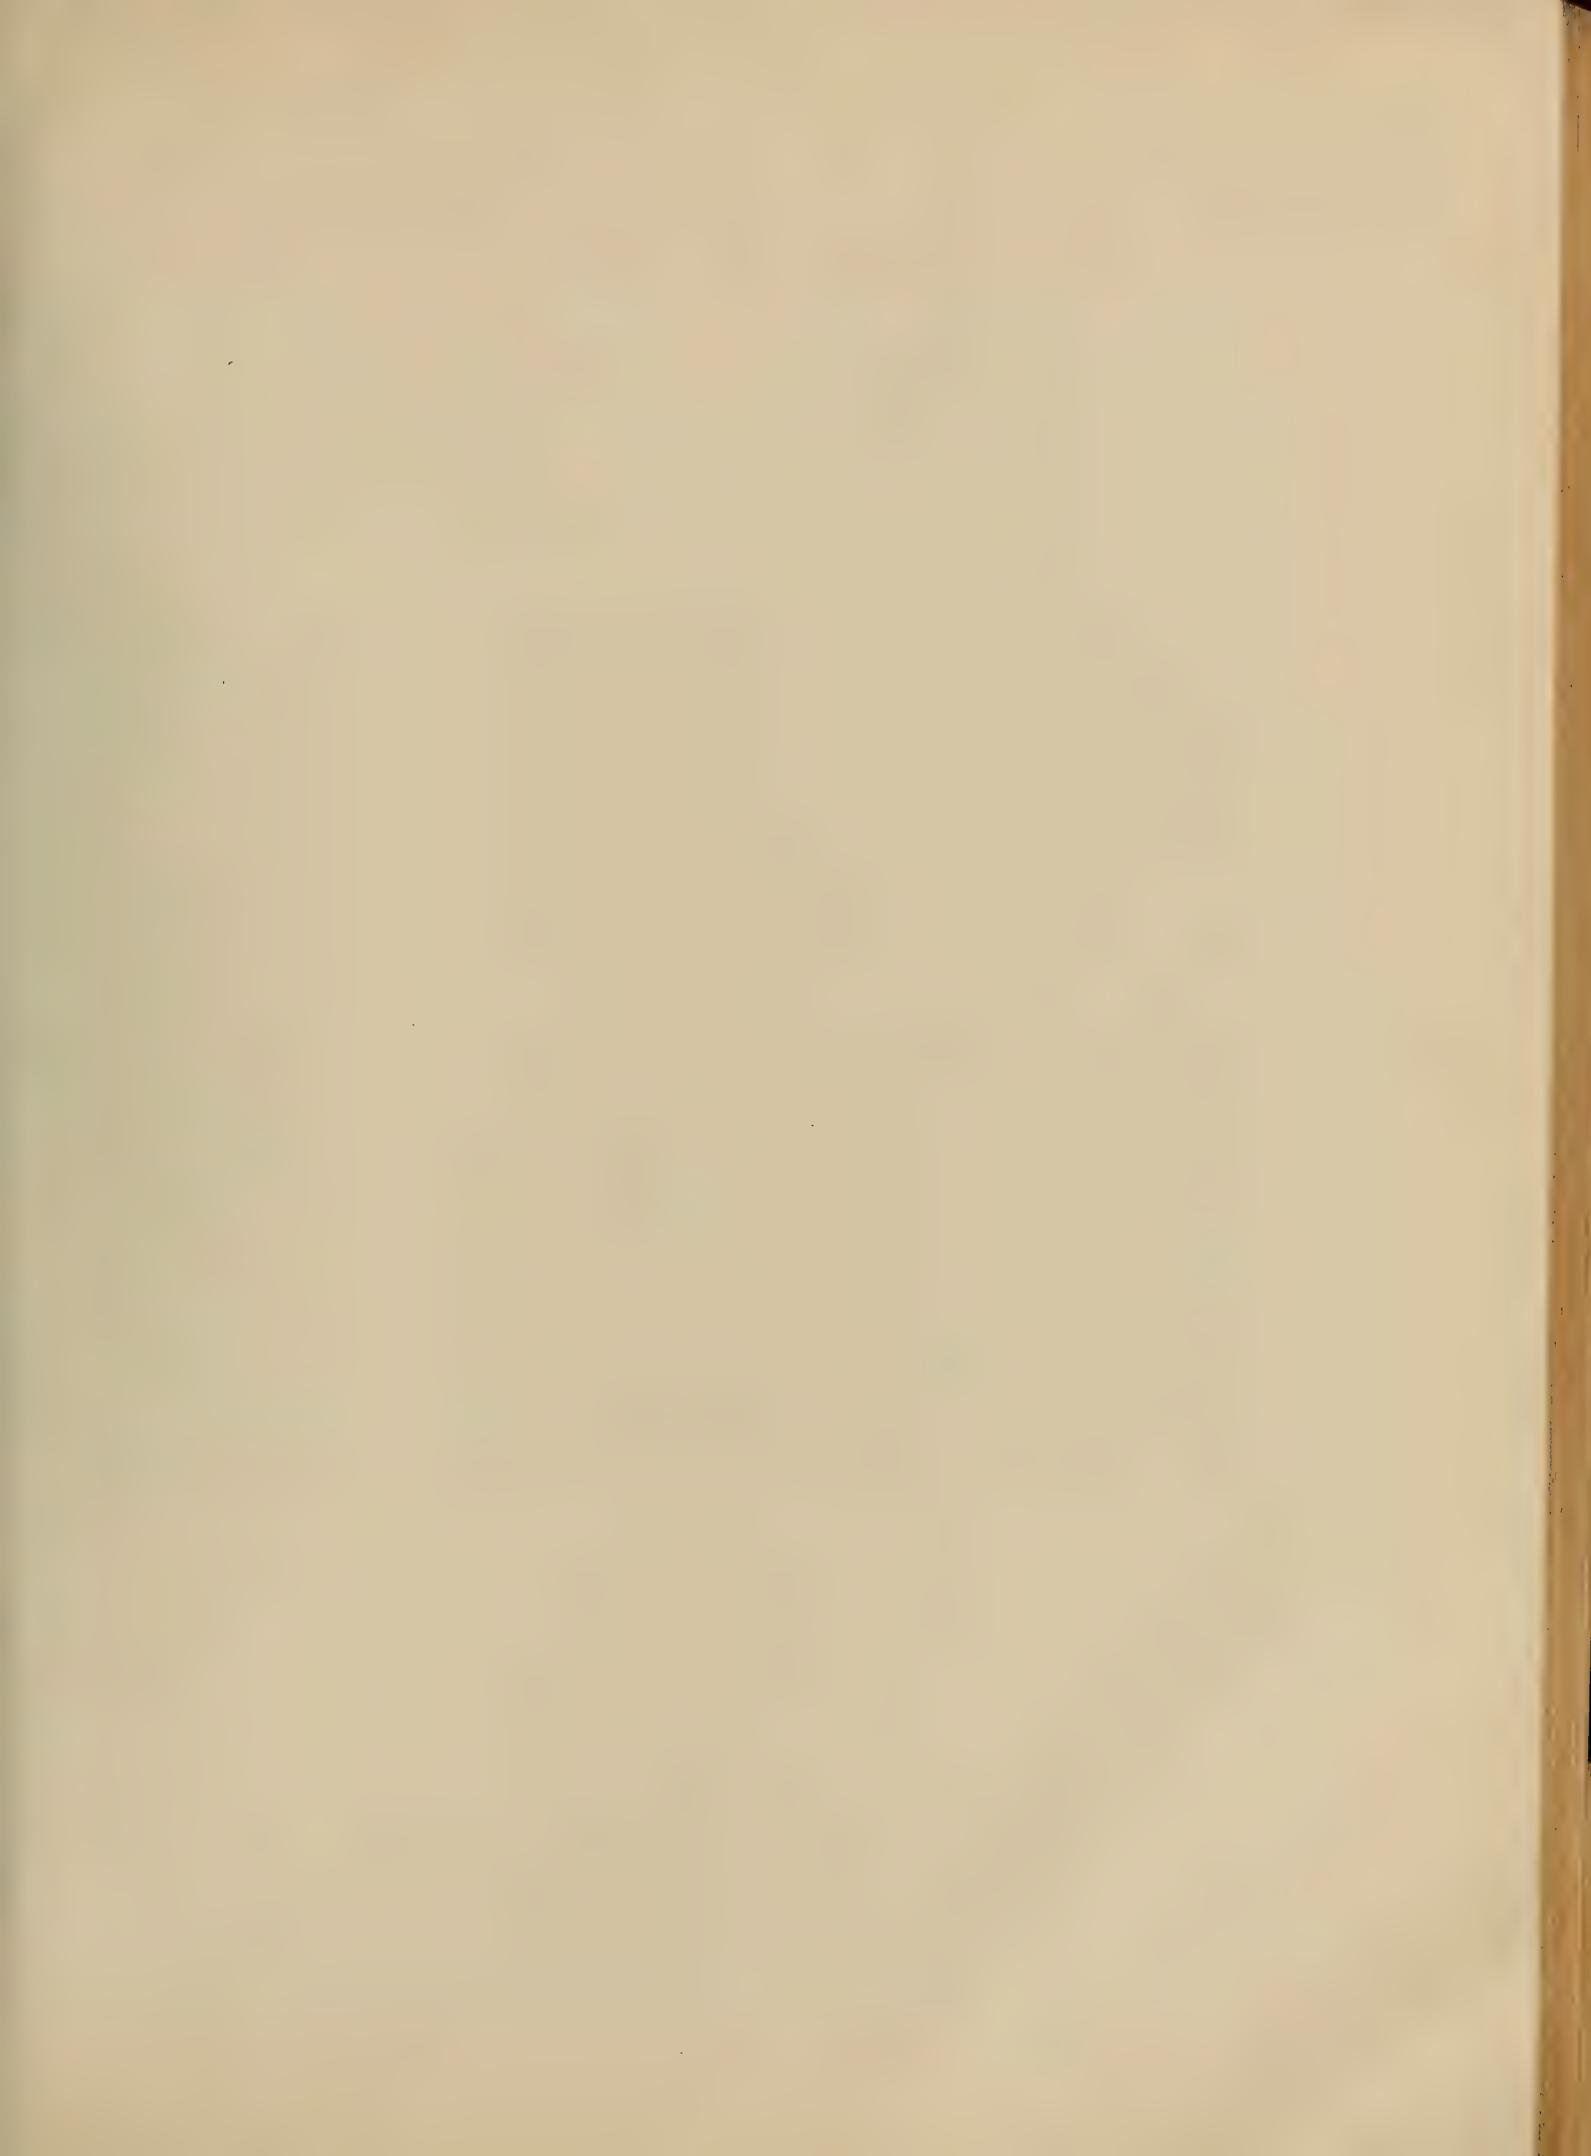

It is not our purpose to discuss fully the advantages offered in Eastern Oregon, but to confine our remarks to Gilliam county. Gilliam county comprises three-quarters of a million acres and is rich in natural resources. About eighty per cent. of the land is susceptible of cultivation and about fifteen per cent. is in actual cultivation. The soil is a heavy loam, with just enough sand to make it warm and responsive. It is very fertile and the peculiarity of the soil is the fact that the longer it is cultivated the better crops it raises. The land is free from stone or gravel and the soil on top of the highest hills is deep and fully as productive as in the valleys. Good water is found in plenty in all parts of the county at a depth of from 15 to 40 feet. Wheat is the principal crop and the chief article of export from the county, although barley, oats, tame grasses and fruits of all kinds grow to perfection and are extensively cultivated. A mild climate, plenty of good pasturage, pure water and good shipping facilities combine to make it an ideal stock country. Diversified farming, poultry raising and dairying will prove quite profitable in this county at no distant day."

Throughout Gilliam county there is an abundant supply of pure water. Almost everywhere it is available for ranch purposes and is obtained in a plentiful supply; on many farms volumes of water course down from springs on the high uplands and hillsides.

On the flats of the Rock Creek country stretching away for miles on either side of the creek, are extensive wheat fields, some of them reaching into several thousand acres. "Twenty-five years ago," said an old cattleman, "if any one had told me that my land would grow wheat I would have thought him a fit subject for an insane asylum." In 1904 this same ex-stockman was an extensive wheat grower. Nothing was then lacking to more extended farming along these same "cereal" lines" but suitable means of transportation.

What is known as the Mayville Flats cover an area of about twelve miles square. The entire section of this country is almost level, being slightly indented by a few ravines and gulches leading from the eastern portion of the flats westward to the John Day river. Some sections of land within this territory are as level as a floor. It is not unusual to see a single field of wheat covering 640 acres of land. This may appear small to some prairie wheat growers who cultivate several thousand acres; however, it is large enough for southern Gilliam county. The soil on this flat may be favorably compared with the rich lands of Illinois or Ohio, being a dark clay loam. Twenty-five years ago the Mayville Flats were wholly undeveloped, there being at that period very few residents within their borders. Sixteen years ago, however, showed a slight change; five or six individuals controlled the entire region and utilized it for pasture. Eleven years ago Mayville Flats began to be more thickly populated with homesteaders and homeseekers. About that time and shortly after, the entire territory, affording the best of alluvial soil, was filed on in homesteads of 160 acres each. These homeseekers have faithfully cultivated this land and produced the present conditions of splendid development. True, for the first four or five years they met with many discouragements; but faithfully they labored on, improving their holdings until the climatic change of about six years ago occurred, since which period they have been eminently successful. Each succeeding year has added to their credit. In November, 1904, it was reported by the bank at Fossil that, with the exception of a few out of some sixty residents of Mayville Flats, every property owner had a bank account. Of course, some of these accounts were, comparatively, small, but many of them were exceedingly large. However, the average shows that the Mayville Flats are, as a whole, very productive regions.

The country tributary to Alville is rich in the production of cereals. Throughout that entire locality, especially west to Alville, the wheat land is divided into strips, varying from one-half to four miles in width, by deep canyons which are used for grazing purposes. At the bottoms of these canyons are found numerous patches of deep, fertile soil, which are noted for the production of fruit. That fruit may be successfully grown in what is termed a "barren country" may appear strange to the reader. Still, it remains an indisputable fact. Within certain localities these canyons produce an abundance of peaches, apricots, apples, pears, etc., supplying the demands of the local market. On the level land between these canyons lie the wheat producing sections. Very prosperous are the ranchers in the vicinity of Alville. During the last five or six years crops have yielded far beyond the expectations of the residents of this section.

It may be said, in conclusion, that Gilliam county is in the center of the great wheat belt between the Cascade and Blue Mountains, Wasco and Sherman counties being west, and Morrow and Umatilla counties on the east. These five counties produce about 10,000,000 bushels of wheat annually, aside from other grains, fruits and vegetables as well as a large number of horses, cattle, sheep and hogs. The atmosphere is pure and bracing with plenty of bright sunshine and no malaria. The healthfulness of Gilliam county is unexcelled. In fact the report of the state health statistician is to the effect that this political division of Oregon, with Condon as a center, is decidedly the most healthful place in the entire country.

It should not be overlooked by the reader that a full description of the soil, climate, topography, geology and aggregate resources of Gilliam county has been given in the descriptive portions devoted to Wasco county, of which Gilliam county was once a part. In that descriptive chapter will be found an amplification of much that is herein written, but which appropriately applies to Gilliam.

POLITICAL.

With the organization of Gilliam county the organic act provided that the governor of Oregon should name its primal county officials. Accordingly the chief executive of the commonwealth, on the advice of certain prominent and influential citizens of the new political division, selected the following:

J. W. Smith, county judge; A. H. Weatherford, W. W. Steiwer, county commissioners; J. A. Blakeley, sheriff; H. C. Condon, treasurer; T. J. Cartwright, assessor; H. Hendricks, school superintendent; J. P. Lucas, county clerk. This list is from the official record, although The Dalles Times-Mountaineer of March 28th stated that Charles Hilton was the county judge. In December, of that year, County Commissioner Weatherford resigned and Josephus Martin was appointed to the position. Subsequently Mr. Martin resigned and William P. West was, February 11, 1886, appointed by the county court.

The first election within the limits of Gilliam county, following its organization, was held June 7, 1886, when a complete set of county officials was named and the new political division registered its political predilections as follows:

For Governor—T. R. Cornelius, Rep., 476; Sylvester Pennoyer, Dem., 533; J. E. Houston, 27; ——— Williams, 1.

For Member of Congress—Binger Herman, Rep., 565; N. L. Butler, Dem., 459; G. M. Miller, 10.

For Joint Representative, Wasco, Crook and Gilliam county—A. R. Lyle, 356; A. D. McDonald, 454; W. L. Wilcox, 614; W. H. Biggs, 551.

For County Judge—W. W. Steiwer, Rep., 590; James W. Smith, Dem., 401.

For County Commissioners—R. G. Robinson, 476; T. G. Woodland, 541; T. B. Hoover, 518; John Blake, 431.

For Sheriff—T. J. Cartwright, Rep., 438; J. A. Blakeley, Dem., 538; T. J. Robinson, 1.

For County Clerk—Jay P. Lucas, Rep., 616; S. J. Thornton, Dem., 374.

For Treasurer—J. A. Thomas, Rep., 572; H. C. Condon, Dem., 424.

For School Superintendent—H. H. Hendricks, Rep., 620; T. W. Sloan, Dem., 369.

For Assessor—C. S. Perrin, 483; W. J. Mulkey, Dem., 508.

For Surveyor—Luther Ground, Rep., 536; Charles Schutz, Dem., 452.

For Coroner—C. T. Bacon, Rep., 537; T. B. Hall, Dem., 449.

For County Seat location—Fossil, 373; Arlington, 260; Condon, 260; Olex, 92.

It will be recalled by readers of the previous chapters that at the time this election was held Fossil was embraced within the limits of Gilliam county. The tie vote between Arlington and Condon carried the location of the county capital into 1890.

The results of the election of June 4, 1888, resulted as follows:

For Member of Congress—John M. Gearin, Dem., 504; Binger Herman, Rep., 791; G. M. Miller, 10.

For Joint State Senator—W. H. Biggs, Dem., 565; Charles Hilton, Rep., 721.

For Representative—M. V. Harrison, Dem., 446; J. A. Thomas, Rep., 796.

For Sheriff—W. J. Mulkey, Dem., 587; E. W. Sanderson, Rep., 661.

For County Clerk—W. L. Wilcox, Dem., 433; J. P. Lucas, 819.

For County Commissioners—Morgan Ward, Dem., 508; W. R. Baker, Dem., 561; T. G. Woodland, Rep., 748; W. J. Mariner, Rep., 690.

For School Superintendent—J. A. McMorris, Dem., 565; W. W. Kennedy, Rep., 678.

For Assessor—W. E. Thornton, Dem., 496; A. B. Ottman, Rep., 752.

For Surveyor—L. W. Darling, 5; L. Ground, 781.

For Treasurer—J. H. Woods, Dem., 487; George W. Couser, Rep., 766.

For Coroner—Dr. L. Palmer, Dem., 505; R. R. Hankins, Rep., 730.

For County Seat location—Arlington, 482; Condon, 407; Fossil, 350.

The vote of Gilliam county at the presidential election of 1888 was as follows: Cleveland electors, Dem., 440; Harrison electors, Rep., 601; other parties, 14.

Election of June 2, 1890:

EDUCATIONAL.

In 1872, when O. D. Doane was superintendent of the schools of Wasco, ten years prior to the organization of Gilliam county, that portion of the territory which is now Gilliam county was one school district No. 24. During the incumbency of Superintendent Doane this mammoth district was divided into three.

School district No. 5 comprised the southwest quarter and west half of the southeast quarter of section 13, and that portion of section 14 owned by Josephus Martin; also sections 23, 24, 25 and 36, in township 1, south range 21, E. W. M., and sections 19, 29, 30, 31, 32 and 33, in township 1, south range 22, E. W. M., and section 1, in township 2, south range 21, E. W. M., and sections 1 to 12 inclusive, in township 2, south range 22, E. W. M. It was established February 23, 1874, No. 32, of Wasco county.

There was a district, No. 24, of Wasco county, located in the vicinity of Lone Rock, but there are no records showing boundaries or affording any other information.

The first school in what is now Gilliam county was near the Conrad Shott ranch, on Rock creek, about three miles east of what is now Olex. Mrs. Emma Alderman was the first teacher. This was in 1875. Prior to this period there had been a number of private teachers, but this was the first public school.

District No. 1, of Gilliam county, was District No. 53 of Wasco county. It was established in November, 1881, by O. D. Doane, at that period school superintendent of Wasco county. The change to District No. 1, of Gilliam county was made in May, 1885. It was described as follows: The fractional part of township 3, north range 21, E. W. M., lying south of the Columbia river, and township 2, north range 22, E. W. M., and township 2, north range 21, E. W. M.

The first school house erected in the village of Condon was in December, 1885. The enterprising people of the neighborhood donated all the material and labor. It was a one-room building and Miss Mollie Carter, afterward Mrs. John Portwood, was the first teacher. Following is an excerpt of the county superintendent of public instruction, H. H. Hendricks, for 1888:

	Male.	Female.	Total.

The above are the earliest school records that can be found at the present day.

Condon's second school house was erected in 1891. It was a two-room building, but only one teacher was employed the first year. In November of the same year Mr. Charles Fix announced in the Condon Globe that he would open a private school, both day and evening, commencing November 16, 1891, in Condon. In the public school at Condon, for the terms of 1892, a second teacher was employed.

The school apportionment of Gilliam county for the year 1893, was $4,513.30. From the Condon Globe of July 21, 1893, we learn that Miss Susie Dunn opened a private school in that town, Monday, July 17th, with an attendance of 14 scholars. Miss Dunn proved an excellent teacher and became quite popular with both pupils and patrons.

The initial school in Arlington was held in a small shack, which subsequently became part of a dwelling. This was in 1882, and Mrs. Haskins was the first teacher. In 1883 this primitive educational institution was replaced by a one-room school house. In 1885 two rooms were added to this building. At present the public schools of Arlington are excellent and will compare favorably with any in the state. Three teachers are employed and nine grades are taught.

The report of Superintendent of Schools Daggett for 1897 is as follows:

"Number of pupils, male, 690; female, 633; total, 1,323. Number of teachers, six males and twenty females. Average salary per month, males $42; females, $25. The school tax levy was 5½ mills. The total receipts for the year were $8,677.44; disbursements, $8,446.29.

In April, 1902, a school election was held in Condon for the purpose of voting upon a proposition to issue school district bonds for the erection of a new school house. Votes to the number of 47 were cast; 46 for and one against the proposition. In February, 1903, this building was completed at a cost of $7,000. It is 45x53 feet in size, and contains four main rooms, aside from the principal's and teacher's room, cloak rooms, etc. Four teachers were employed and the attendance at first was about 200 pupils.

In July, 1902, there were 1,188 children of school age in Gilliam county; 589 boys and 599 girls. Forty-two teachers were employed of which 14 were males and 28 females. There were 36 organized districts of which 34 made reports to the county superintendent. There were 33 school houses in the county, three of which were built during the year, 1902. The total amount of money received was $22,397.73, and the total disbursements were $18,955.76.

Report of County Superintendent W. R. Neal for 1903:

GILLIAM COUNTY

F. H. ALLEN is one of Oregon's earliest pioneers. He has traveled and wrought all over the west and northwest and has constantly been on the frontier. He has displayed those qualities that make the true pioneer and is today one of the substantial citizens of Gilliam county. He resides five miles east from Condon and gives his attention to farming and stock raising. Mr. Allen's birth occurred in Michigan in 1852. His father, C. K. Allen, was born in Canada in 1810 and participated in the Mexican War, crossing the plains with ox teams in 1860. He died in Phoenix, Oregon in 1882. He had married Mrs. Wealthy Spencer, who was born in Condon on March 23, 1814, and died March 12, 1901. Our subject came with his parents from Michigan, when only a year old, to Beloit, Wisconsin, where they made their home for six years. Then they moved to Missouri and in 1860 crossed the plains with ox teams. The parties that went by the Landers' cut-off were attacked by Indians, who stole a good portion of their stock. What was left was divided among them all and they made their way slowly to Goose Lake. Owing to the steep grades to climb there the train was divided and all the stock taken to pull up a part of it. While engaged in this, the Indians took the part that was left, plundered four wagons but no lives were lost. For four days they labored on without provisions, then fell in with some soldiers where they received provisions and ammunition. Settlement was made at Phoenix, Oregon, and the next spring, the father went to Virginia City, Nevada and labored in the silver mines. Later our subject and his mother joined him but owing to her ill health they removed to Phoenix, where our subject remained until 1880. Then he worked on the O. R. & N. Railroad for two years and returned home, owing to his father's sickness, and there remained until his death. Then we find Mr. Allen in Portland and in 1884 he settled in Lost valley. He operated a blacksmith shop there for eighteen months and finally settled on the place that he now occupies. Here he continued blacksmithing for twelve years, also did general farming and stock raising. He now has a section of land, some stock and is one of the prosperous men of the county.

In 1888 Mr. Allen married Miss Johanna Reed, who was born in Germany in 1852 and died June 26, 1890. In 1892 Mr. Allen contracted a second marriage, Mrs. Minnie Reed, a sister of his first wife, then becoming his wife. She was born in Germany on December 15, 1871, and died in June, 1902. Mr. Allen has six children, Charlie, Welthie, Hattie, Spencer, Frank and Elmer.

Our subject is a good strong Republican and is an enterprising citizen, a kind neighbor and a man who enjoys the esteem and respect of his fellow citizens.

S. A. D. HURT who is one of the enterprising farmers of Gilliam county, now resides some six miles south from Clem. He is a native of Oregon, being born in Linn county on June 23, 1868. His father, Isa Hurt, was born in Indiana and came as an early pioneer to this city and is now deceased. He married Sarah Miller who is still living. When quite young our subject was taken with the balance of the family to Linn county and there he was reared and received his education. At the age of twenty, he came west of the mountains, seeking an opportunity to make a fortune for himself. He soon engaged in sheep raising in Umatilla county and spent two years there. Then he took his sheep to Whitman county, Washington, where he remained two years. After that he came to what is now Gilliam county and took a homestead and his wife took a timber culture claim. They own now, all told, three fourths of a section, have some stock and are doing well.

In 1886, Mr. Hurt, married Miss Olive J. Keizur. To this marriage two children have been born, Irmma Bell and Georgie.

Mr. Hurt is a member of the A. O. U. W. and is a good active Republican. He has two brothers, J. F. and E. M. Mr. Hurt has always shown himself to be a broad minded public spirited man, a good neighbor and a patriotic citizen. The result is that he stands well in the community, has many friends and is to be classed as one of the substantial citizens.

ROBERT L. MORRIS is one of the substantial farmers of Gilliam county and resides at Mayville. He was born in Lafayette, Oregon, on June 16, 1869. Clayburn Morris, his father, was born in St. Joseph, Missouri, and crossed the plains with ox teams in 1852, making settlement near LaFayette, in the Willamette Valley. He was among the very first to settle there and was a prominent pioneer and leading citizen. In the fifties he removed to Tygh Valley and was one of the first settlers in that region. He worked upon the now well known Shearer's bridge. He erected the first stone structure in Tygh Valley and followed merchandising, trading with the Indians. He also raised stock until the winter of 1861-2, the year of heavy snow and cold, which caused him the total loss of his horses and cattle. He returned to the Willamette valley in 1863 and was there waylaid and murdered by a highwayman. He had participated in the Rogue river Indian war and was a fearless and skillful Indian fighter. He had married Miss Malinda Walters, a native of Missouri, who crossed the plains with him. She was a relative of W. J. Bryan, the noted orator. In 1873, she married Captain F. Withers and in 1881 they removed to eastern Oregon and settled one mile east from where Mayville now stands. There Captain Withers died in 1889. Mrs. Withers survived him three years. She was a member of the Christian church, a noble woman, and beloved by all who knew her. She leaves two children, our subject and Mrs. F. E. Smith, of Fossil, Oregon. Our subject was only a boy when he landed in Gilliam county and here he gained his education and grew up. His first employment was as a cowboy and he rode the range all over this country and in Colorado, Wyoming and Montana. Finally he returned to this section and secured his present estate of four hundred and eighty acres. Since then he has devoted himself to general farming and has met with good success.

In 1902, Mr. Morris married Miss Lainey Herndon, a native of the Willamette valley and who came to central Oregon when a child. Her father, Clark Herndon, was a pioneer of Oregon. Mr. Morris is a member of the I. O. O. F., and is a progressive and industrious man. He always takes a lively interest in educational matters and politics and is a man of good standing. He has won a good success and has done the pioneer's work in a land where his father was one of the very first settlers and left a splendid record.

WILLIAM SMITH, residing some seven miles southeast of Condon, was born in England, on December 6, 1831. His parents, William and Susannah (Andrew) Smith, were natives of Cheshire, England and the father wrought in the cotton mills. This son was educated in his native place and as soon as of the proper age went to work in the cotton mills where he continued until 1849. In that year, he came to Gloucester City, New Jersey, and continued in the same business for two years when he went to Lancaster, Pennsylvania and wrought in the mills. In 1861 he moved to Tuscola county, Michigan and bought one hundred and sixty acres of land. He had never become naturalized and did not believe in war but was forced into the army. When it became known, however, that he was an alien, he was honorably discharged. From Tuscola county, he moved to Bay county, Michigan and there lived until 1887 when he came west and settled at his present location. He took a homestead which he still owns and has given his attention to stock raising and farming since coming here. He has a bunch of cattle, some horses and a good farm.

On July 3, 1860, Mr. Smith married Miss Adaline M. Smith, who was born in Genesee county, New York, on November 7, 1827. Her father, Jonathan Smith, was born in New York state and kept a hotel in East Aurora, New York, for twenty years. He married Rhoda Harmon, a native of Springfield, Connecticut. Later the father moved to Michigan and farmed there for twenty odd years. To Mr. and Mrs. Smith the following named children have been born: Lizzie, the wife of E. A. May of Condon; Mrs. Ida A. Goodwin of Condon, deceased; Mrs. Sadie Downer, wife of H. F. Downer of Condon; Sheldon, deceased; W. W., with his parents.

In politics, Mr. Smith is a good strong Republican. All through his life, he has been very zealous in promoting educational matters and in religious work. He is a member of the reorganized church of Jesus Christ of Latter Day Saints. In 1900, he was ordained a teacher in that denomination and one year later was ordained a priest and in 1901 he was chosen president of the Condon branch. He has labored faithfully and well in this capacity and is always on the alert to promote the interests of his denomination.

ANDREW J. SHELTON is at the present time holding the responsible position of assessor for Gilliam county. In 1902, his name appeared on the Democratic ticket for this office and he was promptly elected by the people. His service has been conscientious and faithful and has given entire satisfaction to the property owners of the county. He resides at Condon and is considered one of the leading men of the county.

Andrew J. Shelton was born in Linn county, Oregon, on December 31, 1857. His father, William Shelton, was a native of Missouri and in the exciting days of 1849, crossed the plains with ox teams to the mines of California, where he sought a fortune in the golden sands. A year later he returned to Missouri and in 1851 fitted out another outfit and crossed the plains with ox teams to Linn county, Oregon. There he took a donation claim and lived until the time of his death. He was a leading citizen of the county and did very much for its development and advancement. He married in Missouri and his wife accompanied him across the plains in 1851. The common schools of Linn county furnished the educational training of our subject during his younger days and then he completed a course at the university in Salem. After that he farmed for a year and then gave his attention to merchandising at Jordan, Oregon. It was 1893 when Mr. Shelton came to Gilliam county and settled on a farm in the vicinity of Mayville. Later, we find him in charge of the Grand hotel at Arlington, being in partnership with Mr. Monroe. Here he continued until his election to the assessor's office in 1902 and since that time he has devoted his attention to the duties of that office.

In 1876, Mr. Shelton married Miss Mary E. Bryant, a native of Linn county. Her father, Hon. John Bryant, was a pioneer of that county and served several terms in the state legislature. He was a very prominent and influential citizen. He married Miss Lucinda Belvew, a pioneer of Oregon. To Mr. and Mrs. Shelton, three children have been born, A. Pearl, M. Iva and William Bryant.

Mr. Shelton is a member of the I. O. O. F., of the K. P. and of the W. W. He is a public minded man, very alert for the interests of his county and well informed on the issues and questions of the day. He owns various property in the county and is considered a substantial and good man.

EZRA A. MAY, one of the prominent citizens of Condon, was born in Brookfield, Wisconsin, on December 17, 1842, the son of Eli and Elizabeth (Cheney) May, natives of New York city. The father was a sailor on the lakes, starting when he was sixteen years of age. He was a sailor on the first sailing vessel on Lake Superior. He enlisted three times during the Rebellion and served until the war closed. Our subject received his education in his native county and when fifteen years of age, began sailing on Lake Superior where he continued for five seasons. In August, 1862, he enlisted in the Twenty-eighth Michigan Infantry and served until November, 1863, when he received a very severe wound in his leg at the battle of Camel's Station, Tennessee. The wound proved so serious that the limb was amputated below the knee. Later, he farmed in Michigan and during that time, cleared up a quarter section of timberland. In 1885, he came west and finally sought out a location in Gilliam county, taking a half section of land which he still owns. After getting the farm in good shape, he rented it and moved to Condon where he has a beautiful residence.

In Detroit, Michigan, in 1864, Mr. May married Miss Sarah Truesdell. She was born in Michigan and died there in 1880. Her father was G. Truesdell, a real estate man in Michigan. On May 11, 1881, Mr. May married Miss Lizzie Smith, who was born at Lancaster, Pennsylvania, June 16, 1861. Her father, William Smith, was born in England, in 1832, and is now a farmer in Gilliam county. To our subject and his first wife the following named children were born: Ezra Bertrand, Lizzie Winters, Emma Parker, Ida Tuttle, deceased, Florence Read, W. W., Fred G., Ralph, Harry, Gertrude, Rufus, deceased.

In politics, Mr. May is a Republican and has been twice city recorder in Condon. He is a member of the Church of Christ and has always taken a keen interest in religious works and has always been very generous and liberal in these things as well as a public minded man. At the present time he has assisted materially in the construction of a place of worship in Condon and his efforts are highly appreciated. Mr. May always takes an active part in conducting meetings and he is a leading citizen. At the time of the erection of the court house, Mr. May gave his influence and struggled hard for Condon and much credit is due him for the fact that the court house was finally located here.

J. M. CARNINE resides about two miles east from Condon and there does gardening. He is one of the substantial men of the county and is also one of those who, in the dark days of fratricidal strife in this country, gave his services to retrieve the stars and stripes from insult.

J. M. Carnine was born in Jefferson county, Indiana, in 1837. His parents, Allen and Lydia (McCarty) Carnine, were both born in Jefferson county, Indiana, the former in 1810 and the latter in 1820. The father's father came from Holland and settled in Indiana. When nine years of age, our subject came with the balance of the family to Iowa, where he received his education and labored betimes upon his father's farm. At the time of the gold excitement in California the father wished to go thence but was dissuaded by the pleadings of our subject. The parental roof sheltered J. M. until he was twenty-two years of age then he went to Missouri, in 1860 and engaged in the nursery business. He had a fine large business when the war broke out and continued the same for some time thereafter but the rebels threatened his execution and he was repeatedly warned to get out. One night they hanged three of his neighbors and threatened to hang him so he unceremoniously went to his old home in Indiana. The rebels destroyed the entire nursery. In September, 1861, our subject enlisted in the Thirty-seventh Indiana and served three years in the army of the Cumberland. He was in the battles of Stone River, Chickamauga, Chattanooga, Atlanta, Kenesaw and many others. Mr. Carnine knows from sad experience what the awful carnage of war is as well as the rigorous service of the true soldier. He fought faithfully and well and served his country as a patriotic son should do and when the strife was over was honorably discharged. He went back to Van Buren county, Iowa and worked at his trade of plastering, which he had learned in younger years. Next we see him in Milton, Iowa, where he farmed for some time then removed to Missouri and bought a large farm and orchard. He had a beautiful place and continued there for eight years after which he went to Kansas and took a soldier's homestead. He acquired a fine property there, four hundred and eighty acres of land and one hundred and thirty head of cattle and much else. All this was the result of his careful management, his industry and his trade. Thence he journeyed to Cowlitz county, Washington, in 1889 and engaged in gardening and fruit raising until 1901. Owing to the ill health of his daughter, Mr. Carnine removed thence to Gilliam county, in 1901, and it is pleasant to relate that Miss Carnine has fully recovered her health in this salubrious climate.

In Van Buren county, Iowa, in 1865, Mr. Carnine married Miss Sara C. Clarke. She was born in that county, on August 7, 1846 and her father was Samuel Clarke now deceased. To this union, five children have been born: Ellsworth, a ticket agent on the Santa Fe road; Ulyssus, who has a homestead on Rock creek; Albert, who has a homestead near his brother, and Lydia, who also owns a homestead on Rock Creek.

Mr. Carnine is a member of the G. A. R. and a strong Republican. Since he was fifteen years of age, he has been a member of the Methodist church and has always taken an active part in church work. He has often been class leader and Sunday school superintendent and is deeply interested in these things. His brother, Robert A. Carnine, is presiding elder of the Methodist church of Denver, Colorado.

RALPH FROMAN, who resides seven miles west from Condon, was born in Linn county, Oregon, on January 2, 1859. Since that time, he has spent his entire life in the Webfoot State and is a representative citizen of this great commonwealth. His industry, his stability and his success have made him one of the leading men and now one of the wealthy residents of this part of the state. His father, I. R. Froman, was born in Illinois and crossed the plains in the early fifties, settling on a donation claim in Linn county, Oregon. He fought in all the early Indian struggles in this territory and was a true and typical pioneer. His labors brought him wealth and he is still living. He married Eliza Henderson of Danville, Illinois, who accompanied him across the plains and has been a faithful helpmeet in all his labors here. Our subject was educated in Albany and in 1882, came to The Dalles. For some time he wrought for wages and then selected a homestead where he now resides. This was in 1881. He added to that a timber culture claim and preemption and set about the task of making a fine home and in this he has succeeded admirably. To the original government claims, he has added more land by purchase until his estate numbers over eleven hundred acres. He raises considerable stock in addition to general farming, and has so ordered his business affairs that the best of success attends his labors. The farm is laid out with taste and wisdom, the improvements are all good and substantial and everything indicates a man of ability and stamina.

In 1882, Mr. Froman married Miss Harriett Davis, the daughter of Caleb and Ann Marie (Crisman) Davis, natives of Missouri and pioneers to Oregon. It was in 1849 that they threaded the plains with ox teams and settled in Linn county on a donation claim. There they became wealthy and prominent. Mrs. Froman was born in Linn county, Oregon. To her and her husband, two children have been born, B. Earl and Carl E.

Mr. Froman is a member of the K. P. and P. of H. He always takes an interest in politics and has served one term as commissioner of Gilliam county. Starting in this country with no means whatever, he has risen to be one of the leading citizens and wealthy men, which speaks much for his labors and wisdom. He has shown himself to be a man governed by principle and integrity and stands well in the community.

WILLIAM KEYS is a prominent and leading citizen of Gilliam county and is now dwelling near Mayville. He is leading a retired life, having secured by industry and careful management a goodly fortune for his use during the golden years of his life. He is respected by all and looked up to as a wise and influential man in his community.

William Keys was born in Tyrone county, Ireland, on March 17, 1830, the son of William and Bettie (Grimes) Keys, both natives of Tyrone county. They were prominent and well to do people there. Our subject was well educated in Ireland and then turned his attention to farming. In 1865, he put into execution a plan he had long cherished of coming to America, and when he landed in New York that year, he began his career in the new world. Two years later he came on west to Portland, Oregon, journeying via the isthmus. He went to work for wages at once and since that time has made every dollar he now possesses by dint of hard labor and care in managing the funds he earned. After working for wages for a time, he went to farming in Douglas county, near Roseburg, where he remained until 1874, when he came east of the mountains. He selected some good government claims and then purchased other land from time to time, until he now possesses about two thousand acres. He has given his close at-ention to business continuously since coming in to this country and has made a splendid success of his work. There were only about twelve settlers in this section when he came here and he has witnessed the growth and increase of the country to its present prosperous condition, and during these years of growth, Mr. Keys has done his part well in the progress of the state and county.

In 1854, Mr. Keys married Miss Jane McCullough, a native of Ireland. Her father, John McCullough, was a native of the Emerald Isle and died when Mrs. Keys was a young girl. Mr. and Mrs. Keys have a nice family of children, who are named as follows: John J., Eliza A., William G., Mary J., and Margaret A. The first and last named are deceased. Margaret A. was a graduate of the Wasco Independent Academy when eighteen and won the degree of Bachelor of Science at that time.

When Mr. Keys arrived in the territory now embraced in the county of Gilliam, there were few white people here, but many Indians. The nearest neighbor was seven miles distant. During those days of trial and hardships, many became discouraged and moved away. While they did considerable labor, still to such as our subject who stayed, is due the main credit of opening and developing this county.

WILLIAM WEHRLI, who resides about six and one-half miles northwest from Mayville, was born in Cook county, Illinois, on January 1, 1857. He is now one of the wealthy and prominent men of Gilliam county and has a first class farm of eight hundred and forty acres where he is living. It is handled skillfully and is improved with all buildings and equipment that are needed on a first class stock and wheat farm. Mr. Wehrli has shown himself not only a substantial man, a good citizen, but a skillful and successful business operator and his fine holdings are proof ample of this fact.

William Wehrli comes from German ancestry, his father, Peter Wehrli, being a native of that empire. He came to Illinois when a young man, worked there as a carpenter, then bought a farm, being one of the pioneers of that now great state. In 1867, he removed to Holt county, Missouri, and there became a large and leading farmer. He married Miss Mary Vogle, a native of Germany, and they are now retired. Our subject was educated in the common schools of Illinois and Missouri and when nineteen, it being 1876, he started in life for himself. We soon find him in Nevada, where he engaged to ride the range. In the fall of the same year, he assisted to trail a band of cattle to the Sacramento valley, in California. There he hired out on a farm and later rented a farm for himself. In 1883, he sold out in California and journeyed to the north. He searched the country until he came to his present location, where he secured government claims. To the original homestead, he added by purchase until he has eight hundred and forty acres of valuable land, and much other property.

In 1881, Mr. Wehrli married Miss Anna Keegan, who was born in Nevada county, California. Her parents, Robert and Annie (McAdams) Keegan, were born in Dublin and county Cavan, Ireland, respectively, and came to California in 1849. There were then but a few cabins where the great city of San Francisco now stands. To Mr. and Mrs. Wehrli, the following named children have been born, Mary M., Alice B., Robert P., William W., John M., Rosana, and Ellen I. Mr. Wehrli started in life without means and owing to his industry and careful business ways, he has become one of the wealthy citizens of this county. He is established in the esteem and confidence of the people and he and his wife are worthy members of society. He has an interesting family and is to be classed with the leading people of Gilliam county.

W. G. FLETT, a farmer and stockman, eight miles south from Olex, was born in Washington county, Oregon, on September 25, 1842. His father, David Flett, was born in Manitoba, in 1818, and was employed by the Hudson's Bay Company. Under their direction, in 1841, being induced by the promises of Sir George Simpson, one of the formers of the company, he came with an expedition of emigrants to settle on the Pacific coast. The company consisted of eighty-two persons which left Selkirk settlement, Manitoba, on May 20, 1841. They traveled up the Saskatchewan to its head, crossed the Rockies at either Yellowhead or Arrowhead passes, thence they came through the Kootenai country to Fort Colville and from there, continued their journey through the Spokane country to Fort Wallula in time to see the fort burned by Cayuse Indians. They journeyed thence to Vancouver, some of the party going down the Columbia river and the balance fetching the horses. When they reached the Cascades, they were met by Sir George Simpson saying that he could not comply with his agreement to furnish a certain number of cows, sheep and farming implements and a year's provision but promised to furnish some things if they settled north of the Columbia river. They went to Puget sound and spent the winter of 1841-42 at Fort Nesqually. In the spring, a portion of them, including Mr. Flett, moved to Tualitan plains where he died in 1843. Mr. Flett had married Miss Letitia Cook, who was born in the Selkirk Settlement, Manitoba, in 1820. Her father, William H. Cook, was born in England and came to the Selkirk settlement in 1810 and conducted a mercantile establishment there for the Hudson's Bay Company until 1846. He was chief factor of that post. Mr. and Mrs. Flett were married in 1840 and she died in 1857, at Newburg, Yamhill county. Our subject's father died when this lad was but three years old. The widowed mother then moved to Wapato lake where she married J. B. Rogers, in the spring of 1846. Then they moved to where Newburg is now located and bought a farm and there our subject grew up and was educated. In 1857 the mother died and our subject was made the ward of his uncle, John Flett, who apprenticed him to John W. Cullins to learn the harnessmaker's trade in Portland. Owing to the failure of the firm he was released and accompanied his uncle to Fort Nesqually where he worked for the Hudson's Bay Company under chief factor Huggins for a year. Then we see him in the Willamette valley working at the saddler's trade for wages until 1861, after which he came east of the Cascades and rode the range for Senator Ankeny and later purchased Indian ponies, running a pack train to Canyon City and in March, 1863, the Indians stole the entire train at Shaniko. He purchased more horses and packed for another season to Boise, then returned to the Willamette valley and engaged in the manufacture of saddles. In April, 1870, he took a preemption near where he now resides. Later he took other claims and bought more land until he is now farming nearly three sections. He has been farming and stock raising, handling cattle, until recently. Now he devotes his time to raising hogs and general farming. He has a couple of hundred head and expects to increase the number soon. Mr. Flett is well known all through the country and highly esteemed, both as a pioneer and a substantial man.

In 1872, Mr. Flett married Miss Lydia Doughty, who was born in Yamhill county, Oregon, on December 23, 1853. Her father, William Doughty, was born in Knoxville, Tennessee, in 1810. He came west in the employ of the American Fur Company in 1837 and four years later journeyed on to the Willamette valley where he died in 1871. He had married Miss Mary Doughty, who was born in 1815. To Mr. and Mrs. Flett the following children have been born, Mrs. Dona Clark, Mrs. Stella Clark, Rube, John, William, Fannie, Maude, Elda, Frank, Florence, and Arthur McKinley, all living. Mr. Flett has one half sister, Anna Rogers. In politics, he is a strong Republican, having held these principles all his life. He is narrowed to no particular denomination but supports them all liberally. He also labors zealously for the advancement of educational interests and is a highly esteemed citizen. Mr. Flett has done considerable work for the government officers in locating Indians on land and has won their confidence and esteem. He is a genuine westerner, generous, hospitable and brave.

It is of interest to know that when the Red River expedition was at the Cascade fort, their captain, James Sinclair, was killed by the Indians. The fort was besieged by savages and the first shot fired killed Captain Sinclair. Grant and Sheridan were there at that time.

S. B. BARKER has won distinction in several lines of enterprise. Without doubt, Mr. Barker is one of the real builders of Gilliam county, is to be numbered with the earliest pioneers and is today one of its most substantial and respected citizens. He was born in Athens, Maine, on October 8, 1863. Charles F. Barker, his father, was born in Conville, Maine, on May 1, 1829. He was a prominent farmer near Athens and also a lumber dealer. He married Hannah Bradbury, who was born in Athens, on October 4, 1837. They are both living there now. Our subject completed his educational training in the Somerset academy at Athens and remained at home until October 18, 1886, when he put into execution a plan he had long cherished, that of seeing the west. Oregon attracted him and to Oregon he came. From the many fertile places in the state, he selected what is now Gilliam county and began herding sheep for wages. He gathered five hundred dollars together and bought sheep with it and continued herding and increasing his flock by investing his wages as fast as he earned them. Soon he was enabled to go into business for himself and he has steadily followed the same until the present time. He now has twelve thousand head of these valuable animals and about nine thousand acres of land. All these princely holdings have been gained by him since coming to this county. It demonstrates the fact that Mr. Barker is one of the most skillful, enterprising and sagacious business men in this part of the state. In 1892, he started a small mercantile establishment in Condon. It was an unpretentious start in a little wooden building but as the years went by he increased his business until finally, in 1903, he built a magnificent brick structure well fitted for the mercantile business and stocked it with as fine a collection of goods as can be found in this part of the state. He has a fine line of general merchandise, has gained a patronage that is very gratifying and is one of the leading merchants of central Oregon. He personally supervises his business as well as his stock interests and the same wisdom that gave him success in the former has made him exceedingly prosperous in this. He is the oldest merchant in Condon. While he has been gaining this magnificent fortune in the business world, Mr. Barker has not forgotten his obligations to his fellow men and to his country. He has won the respect and the confidence of everybody who knows him, by his upright bearing and by his manliness and by his unswerving integrity. He has always been first and foremost in every enterprise to build up the country and to advance the interests of civilization.

On July 23, 1895, Mr. Barker married Miss Anna L. Clarke, who was born at Charleston, Vermont, on October 4, 1871. She came to Oregon about the same time as her husband, with her parents and located at Lone Rock. She taught school in this county and in the graded school for several years and is a cultivated, refined and well educated lady. Her father, B. D. Clarke, was born in Chelsea, Vermont, on July 24, and brought his family to Gilliam county in 1887 and died on January 1, 1897. He had married Miss Laura Kendall, who was born in Georgeville, Quebec, in September, 1850, and died January 10, 1897. To Mr. and Mrs. Barker the following named children have been born: Carroll, on June 20, 1896; Verna, on March 11, 1898; Kenneth, on November 20, 1903.

Mr. Barker is a member of the Masonic fraternity and also of the K. P. He is a staunch and well informed Republican and takes a lively interest in the campaigns. For six years he was treasurer of this county. Mrs. Barker is a member of the Congregational church. She and her husband are among the leading people of this part of the state and have always exerted an influence for good and for progress, while their lives have been such that they enjoy an unsullied reputation and are the center of a large circle of admiring friends.

SAMUEL MCGILVRAY resides some six and one-half miles northwest from Mayville, Oregon, where he owns a good home and a half section of choice wheat land. He has been a resident here for more than twenty years and is entitled to be classed as one of the pioneers of the county of Gilliam. He is an enterprising farmer and also devoted some time to handling stock. In addition to these enterprises, Mr. McGilvray has been for six years road master of Gilliam county. He has shown marked wisdom and skill in this important position and has so operated the office as to win the approval of all his constituents. In his labors, he shows industry and enterprise and his efforts have done much to assist in the opening of this county and its advancement.

Samuel McGilvray was born in New York, on April 2, 1855. Angus McGilvray was his father, and he was born in Scotland. Believing the opportunities of the new world were best, he came hither with his family and made settlement in New York. In 1862, he removed to Ontario, where he did farming until his death. He became a wealthy and prominent man. He married Miss Jessie Robertson, also a native of Scotland, who accompanied her husband on his journeys until her death in 1873. Our subject was educated in New York and Ontario and at the early age of fifteen started in life for himself. His first work on his own resources was in Michigan, whither he had gone, and for two years he wrought there. Then he journeyed on west to Nebraska and worked for a year. In 1876, Mr. McGilvray made his way to the Sacramento valley, California, and there worked for wages. Later he came to Washington, but soon returned to California. It was 1882 that he came to his present location and took a homestead, and purchased the other quarter and he has bestowed his labors here since that time. Mr. McGilvray has six brothers and sisters: Cornelius, Catherine, Flora, Maggie, Mary and Daniel.

In 1881 occurred the marriage of Mr. McGilvray and Miss Helen Anderson, who was born in California, the daughter of William and Drucella (Sweeney) Anderson, natives of Missouri. Mr. Anderson came to California in 1852, became prominent and wealthy there and in 1883 removed to Gilliam county, where he remained until his death. Mrs. Anderson came to California with her parents in 1849. Besides Mrs. McGilvray, Mr. and Mrs. Anderson had the following named children, Eliza, Emma, Hugh, Ella, Fannie, John and Nettie. To Mr. and Mrs. McGilvray, eight children have been born, named as follows: Nettie, Jessie, deceased, Edna, Clarence, Orville, deceased, Mary, Edgar and Ruth. Mr. McGilvray is a member of the I. O. O. F.

CHARLES L. LILLIE started in life without capital but owing to his wise industry is now one of the wealthiest farmer and stockmen in the county of Gilliam. This is a record of which he may justly be proud and it is with pleasure we are enabled to recount some of the salient points in his career, since the proper history of this county demands it and since it will be a stimulus to those who are entering on life's battle without means, but with a willingness to take hold and work. During his successful career, Mr. Lillie has also been careful to so conduct himself as to win the confidence and esteem of all with whom he came in contact and he stands exceptionally well in this community today.

Charles L. Lillie was born in St. Lawrence county, New York, on August 3, 1849, and his father, William Lillie, was born in the same place. The Lillie family is one of the early ones to settle in the colonies and they came from the stanch Welsh stock and did very much to open up various sections. The father married Hannah Edwards, who came from Scotch ancestry and died when our subject was small. When Charles was seven, the family came on to Iowa and in 1864, the father and son crossed the plains with ox and mule teams to the mines in Idaho. There they both worked for three years, and then a move was made to the Sacramento valley, California, where they settled on a farm and there the father remained until his death. Charles L. had received his education in Iowa and in the other places where they had lived, gaining his training from the primitive schools then in vogue. He was with his father until 1882, when he came to Oregon and began the search for a suitable place to make a home. He finally selected the country about Mayville and secured a homestead and a timber culture claim. He has bought land since until he has now nine hundred and sixty acres, all choice land, and productive of bounteous harvest.

In 1882, Mr. Lillie married Mrs. Josephine Russel, a native of Missouri. Her father, Judge John Llewellyn, was a prominent man in that state, being circuit judge for many years. He was a native of Kentucky and married Miss Jane E. Trabue, whose mother was a cousin of Henry Clay. The Trabues were a very prominent family of Kentucky. Judge Llewellyn was a large planter and a good man. Four children have been born to Mr. and Mrs. Lillie: Charles L., John W., Lonnie C., and Antonia T., the last two being twins. Mr. Lillie has two brothers, Joel, a veteran of the Civil War and now a retired farmer in Sioux City, Iowa, and George, also a veteran of the Rebellion. He, also, has four sisters, all residing in California: Mrs. Lamira Reid, at St. Lucas; Mrs. Mary A. King, also of St. Lucas; Mrs. Eliza Buhrman, of Chico; and Mrs. Elma Thompson, of Venado. Mrs. Lillie had two brothers and seven sisters, all of whom are dead, except one brother and two sisters, namely: Samuel E., of Mayville, Oregon; Mrs. A. J. Johnson, of Bodie, California, and Mrs. Robert Graham, of Mayville, Oregon. Mr. and Mrs. Lillie are good people, enterprising citizens and fine neighbors. They are popular and have many friends.

RODERICK F. MUNROE is well known as the host of the Hotel Grand in Arlington, a popular resort and well patronized by the traveling public. The house is first class in every respect and under the skillful management of Mr. Munroe is made an excellent place for the entertainment of the public.

Roderick F. Monroe was born in Aberdeen, on January 4, 1855. His father, John Munroe, was born in Scotland and was a well-to-do farmer there. He had sold his property expecting to migrate to the United States but died before that journey occurred. He married Ann Glennie, a native of Scotland, who remained there until 1855. In his native place, our subject was well educated and worked on a farm until May 3, 1870 when he embarked at Glasgow for Ontario. He settled near Colburn and there began to work for wages. In May, 1871, he came to New York and wrought on a farm and in digging iron ore for seven years. In 1878, he completed the journey to the Willamette valley, having determined to try his fortune in the west. He wrought for wages on a farm and also for the Western Union Telegraph Company for three years then he came to this section which was then embraced in Wasco county, it being 1881, and engaged in sheep herding. For three years, he was occupied in that business and then he purchased a band of sheep for himself. For twelve years after that, wool growing was the industry which Mr. Munroe followed with good success. At that time, he sold his property, sheep and all, and went to Wyoming. Seven months later he returned to Condon and in 1899, in company with A. J. Shelton, purchased the Hotel Grand at Arlington. For a year they operated it together then Mr. Munroe bought Mr. Shelton's interest and since that time has operated the hotel himself. It is a first class house, complete in all its arrangements and is a splendid place for entertainment.

In April, 1899, Mr. Munroe married Mrs. Luella McCurry, who was born in Missouri, in 1859.

Mr. Munroe is a member of the blue lodge and the Royal Arch chapter of the Masons and also belongs to the I. O. O. F. He is a good strong Republican and a member of the Presbyterian church. He is an enterprising citizen, well esteemed, and always ready to assist in everything that tends to build up the country.

THOMAS G. WOODLAND is one of the wealthy pioneers of Gilliam county. He resides six miles southeast of Olex and was born in Wooster, Wayne county, Ohio, on November 12, 1847. His parents, Thomas and Martha (Woodward) Woodland, were born in Chattam, county of Kent, England, on May 10, 1802, and in London, England, on March 27, 1807 respectively. The former died in 1872 and the latter on November 4, 1884. Thomas G. received his education in the Wooster schools and at the early age of fifteen, he enlisted in Company D, Eighty-sixth Ohio Volunteer Infantry. He served under Burnside, assisted to capture Morgan and was at the surrender of Cumberland Gap September 9, 1863. He did a great deal of Guerrilla warfare and his honorable discharge was received at Camp Cleveland, Ohio, February 10, 1864. He immediately came west, landing in Portland August 18, 1864. He engaged in farming in Yamhill county until November, 1872 when he journeyed on to Rock Creek and farmed and raised stock and his farm of one thousand acres has been the scene of his labors since. Our subject's two brothers, W. H. and Charles E., enlisted at the beginning of the Civil War and served until its close. They were with Grant and saw very hard service. Charles E. died after his discharge, from the effects of the hardship of the war. Mr. Woodland has two sisters, Mrs. Rose W. Leidy in Wayne county, Ohio and Mrs. Emma W. Hartzel, at Barberton, Ohio.

On February 16, 1876, Mr. Woodland married Miss Sarah E. Butler, who was born in Lane county, Oregon on April 7, 1860. She came with her parents to Rock creek in 1870 and died on November 25, 1898. Her father, J. H. Butler, was born in Missouri in 1830 crossed the plains to California, shortly after the discovery of gold. Two years were spent mining and then he came to Oregon and remained until his death, on January 27, 1881. He married Rachel Miller, who was born in Iowa and crossed the plains with her parents with ox teams in 1847. She is now living on Rock Creek, having married P. T. Cunningham. Mr. Woodland and his wife have the following named children: Mattie M., born on Rock creek, May 14, 1880 and now the wife of L. W. Ward, a farmer in Gilliam county; Elda May, born January 14, 1884.

Mr. Woodland is a member of the G. A. R.

and is a strong Republican. He has held the office of county commissioner for six years and is one of the leading men of the county. Mr. Woodland is a member of the Missionary Baptist church. His parental ancestors have been Baptists as far back as they have any history. His father devoted a large portion of his life to Sunday school and church work.

ROBERT B. SPENCER has achieved a success in Gilliam county in which he may well take pride. He resides twelve miles southeast of Olex and gives his attention to farming and stock raising. He was born in Vermilion county, Illinois, on April 12, 1850. His father, Sheldon Spencer, was born in Brattleboro, Vermont, and died August 14, 1877. He married Sarah Boyd, who was born in Vermilion county, Illinois, on October 14, 1829. She is still living at Springfield, Oregon, well preserved for a woman of her age, and has nobly done the work of a pioneer for half a century or more. In 1851 our subject's parents brought him across the plains and they settled on a donation claim on the north bank of the McKenzie river some six miles northeast of Eugene, and there remained until December, 1866. The family then returned to Illinois and stayed there one year. After that they again came to Oregon, and this time bought a farm one mile north from Springfield, Lane county, which is the home of our subject's mother at this time. There Robert B. was reared and educated, remaining until 1884 when he came east of the mountains and selected a homestead where he resides at the present time, made cash entry on a section of railroad land and began the work of opening up a farm and raising cattle. He has added since to his estate until he has about sixteen hundred acres all told, eleven hundred acres of which are in a high state of cultivation and producing crops annually. The balance is utilized for pasture. He has a small band of horses, fifty head of cattle and everything in the line of improvement and equipage needed on the estate. Arriving here with very little means, Mr. Spencer has labored so wisely and well that he has been blessed with the prosperity we have mentioned. This indicates a man of ability and stamina.

At Springfield, Lane county, Oregon, on March 14, 1875, Mr. Spencer married Miss Mary Landes, who was born in Iowa on January 11, 1849. In 1854 she crossed the plains with her parents, Abraham and A. (Levell) Landes. The father was born in Virginia and was a veteran of the Black Hawk war and a pioneer to Oregon.

Mr. Spencer is a member of the I. O. O. F.

and very popular in fraternal relations. In politics, he is a Republican and makes himself active in all the campaigns. Mr. Spencer is a leading man in this part of Gilliam county and has done a good share in bringing the county to its present state of prosperity and wealth.

HON. CLEMENS A. DANNEMAN was one of the earliest pioneers of Gilliam county and is today one of its worthiest and most prominent citizens. He was born in Germany, on October 13, 1835, the son of Jacob and Agnes (Wassenberg) Danneman, natives of Germany. The former was born in 1787 and the latter in 1795. The father died in 1850, being a well to do farmer. Our subject was well educated in his native country and when nineteen years of age migrated to the United States. He had but five dollars in cash when he landed in New York and went to work for wages so low that he barely made his board. Three months later we find him in Indiana where he worked for seven dollars per month for three years. In Germany he had been apprenticed to learn the mercantile business and had to pay fifty dollars per year for the privilege. After leaving the farm in Indiana he spent four years as bookkeeper in a mercantile establishment for which he received sixteen dollars per month. In 1861 Mr. Danneman enlisted in the First Indiana Cavalry as private and was soon promoted to first lieutenant. He was in the scouting and bushwhacking service for some time and fought in the battle of Pilot Knob, then at Fredericksburg, after which he was sent to Jacksonport, Arkansas. Next we find him at Helena, in the same state, where he had had some very hard fighting. During a scouting expedition two regiments of cavalry met the rear guard of General Price, on his retreat, and a severe fight ensued. Our subject received a canister shot wound in the knee of his right leg. He was then in command of a battery attached to the First Indiana Cavalry. For nine months after this he was confined in the hospital, before he could rejoin his command. After this his command was transferred to White river, then to Little Rock, finally at Pine Bluffs, Arkansas, he was honorably discharged. Immediately following that, he went to his home in Spencer county, Indiana, and was promptly elected sheriff of the county, serving in that capacity for four years. After that, he was engaged in various lines of business for six years, and finally in 1879 came west to Oregon. In the same year he settled in Gilliam county, taking a homestead and timber culture about thirteen miles north from where Condon now stands. He devoted himself to farming and stock-raising and has continued uninterruptedly in this occupation since that time. In it all he has made a splendid success and is now one of the wealthy men in this part of the state. He owns one thousand acres of as fertile land as is found and his timber culture claim is the best in the county. He has one of the best modern residences of the county and his entire estate is improved in a splendid manner. Mr. Danneman has five thousand acres of land in the mountains besides this estate, which he uses for summer range. He has about two hundred and fifty head of cattle besides other stock and property. Mr. Danneman has one brother, Bernard, still living in Germany, and one sister, Bernardina Boecker, in Alsace.

In 1878, Mr. Danneman married Miss Ella Bashan, a native of Kentucky, and to them three children have been born, Cary A., Bessie G., and Mary C.

Mr. Danneman is a staunch Republican, having cast his first vote for John C. Fremont. He was recently elected to the state legislature of Oregon on the Republican ticket and served his district in a most creditable manner. In this, Mr. Danneman demonstrated the fact that he was capable in the halls of legislature as in the business world and earned many encomiums.

He is affiliated with the I. O. O. F. It is of great interest to know that when Mr. Danneman first came to this county he had no means at all. He passed the hardships of pioneer life without capital and has so conducted himself that he has not only gained a large holding of wealth but has also won the esteem and confidence of all who know him, and has the pleasure of reviewing a life well spent.

WILLIAM W. HEAD has labored in Gilliam county for over a quarter of a century during which time he has demonstrated beyond peradventure that he is a man of industry and enterprise, sagacity and sound principle. At the present time he resides ten miles west from Olex where he has eight hundred acres of land, a portion of which is a meadow. His improvements upon the place are of the best and his home is one of the finest residences in Gilliam county. He has about two hundred head of Shorthorn cattle, forty horses, besides other property. He is one of the wealthy stockmen and farmers of the county as well as one of the leading citizens.

William W. Head was born in Kentucky, March 19, 1854, his parents being John M. and Martha (Luckett) Head, natives of Franklin county. The father was a veteran of the Civil war. Our subject received a good education in the public schools of the Blue Grass State, remaining there with his father until 1878, then he came direct to Oregon and to what is now Gilliam county. Upon arriving here, he discovered that he had no capital and consequently began to work for wages. Shortly thereafter he took a homestead and then a preemption and a timber culture claim and continued working out until he had means enough to start him in general farming. He commenced in a very small way and gradually increased his operations. As the seasons rolled by, he gained each year additional land until he had two thousand acres of fine wheat land besides some grazing land. This was made to produce bounteous harvests annually until 1902, when he sold his entire estate purchasing the farm where he now resides. Mr. Head is expecting to give his attention largely to breeding fine stock and in this enterprise he has shown himself a skillful man. Mr. Head has the following named brothers and sisters: R. G., James, Benjamin, Mrs. Mattie Hamilton, Mrs. Susan Foster, and Mrs. Marriett Matthews.

In political matters our subject is a Democrat, and while he has achieved marked success in his labors here he has also taken a keen interest in political matters, in educational affairs, and whatever is for the good of the community. His standing is of the best and he has won hosts of friends.

As yet Mr. Head has never taken to himself a wife, although he is a popular man.

SAMUEL A. THOMAS. In pioneer days three brothers of the Thomas family came to the United States, which was then a young country. One of them settled in Canada later, and one settled in New York. The other one, Andrew Thomas, settled in Indiana. He was a sturdy pioneer, came from the strong Welsh stock, and did much to open up the territory of Indiana. His son, James S. Thomas, is the father of the gentleman whose name appears at the head of this article. James S. Thomas was born in Washington county, Indiana and was reared on his father's homestead and received his education in his native state. He married and settled in Indiana, and our subject is his son. He had married Miss Mary A. McClanahan, who was born in Clark county, Indiana, her parents also being pioneers of that state. Samuel McClanahan, her father, was a prominent man in public affairs and one of the leaders of his section. In Salem, Indiana, Samuel A. received a good education and when that was completed, he learned telegraphy. Some years were spent in this calling and then we find him, in 1888, in South Dakota, where he learned the printer's business. Next he was installed editor of the Big Stone County Journal, at Ortonville, Minnesota, which he conducted creditably until 1900. Mr. Thomas had always been desirous of coming to the west and in that year, he put into action these desires. Portland was the objective point of these journeys and there Mr. Thomas wrought at the printers' art for two years. Then he discerned the opening in Arlington for a good, live paper and here decided to start a journal. In due time the Appeal was launched, Mr. Thomas being proprietor and editor of the sheet. It is a bright and taking paper, well gotten up, full of local news and deals with the issues of the day in an intelligent manner. While it has been in existence but slightly over two years, still Mr. Thomas has secured a generous support and his subscription list is large and extensive for a country journal. It is the official paper of the city. In political matters, Mr. Thomas is an out and out Republican believing that the principles of that party are for the best interests of all.

In 1892, Mr. Thomas took unto himself a wife, the lady being Miss Maud Purdy, who was born in Iowa and educated in Ipswich, South Dakota. Her parents, Charles B. and Mary (McConnell) Purdy, were born in Ontario and Indiana, respectively, and now dwell in Portland, Oregon. Five children have come to bless the home of our subject, Charles P., S. Arvid, Iva V., Mardie G., and William L. Mr. Thomas is a member of the A. F. & A. M. He is a young man, has gained his present prosperous business entirely by his own efforts, having started in life without capital, and has won the esteem and approval of all who know him. Mr. Thomas was delegate from the seventh congressional district in Minnesota to the convention that nominated McKinley in 1900, and is always deeply interested in politics.

EUGENE W. DAGGETT is one of the leading business men of Gilliam county. At present he is a member of an important mercantile firm in Blalock and also holds the position of agent for the Arlington Warehouse Company in Blalock. He is considered one of the substantial and successful business men and has made a clean and good record in his operations here. Before becoming interested in business, Mr. Daggett was wholly occupied in educational work and was one of the prominent ones of his profession of this part of the state. After completing the full high school course in Armada, Michigan, he at once began teaching, and in 1891, he came to Chicago. He kept drifting west until 1892 found him in Blalock, where he soon was installed as teacher of the town schools. Next he was in Grant, this state, and for a short time there was assistant postmaster and interested in merchandising. He sold out his interest there in 1894 and repaired to Arlington where he was chosen principal of the city schools. He at once graded them in proper manner and added three terms of high school work. By his skillful and thorough work, Mr. Daggett raised the Arlington schools to a high position in the state and laid a foundation for future work which is worthy a master organizer. While serving as principal of this school, he was chosen superintendent of the schools of the county, his name appearing on the Republican ticket. For two years he held the office to his credit and to the good of the schools of the county. In March, 1899, he again entered that office, being appointed to fill the vacancy made by the resignation of W. W. Kennedy. In the meantime, Mr. Daggett had resigned from the Arlington schools and accepted a position as bookkeeper for J. W. Smith. He remained with Mr. Smith and his successor until 1902 when he became bookkeeper for the Arlington Warehouse Company and served them in Arlington until November, 1902, when he went to Blalock and accepted the agency of their plant there. Then he took up merchandising as stated and has conducted a successful business since.

Eugene W. Daggett was born in Algona, Iowa, on May 17, 1870. Samuel Daggett was his father, and he was born in Armada, Michigan. In 1867, he brought his family to Iowa, and in 1875, he removed them back to Michigan. He is now a wealthy and prominent citizen in his native state. He married Miss Sarah A. Mills, who was born in Charmount, New York, of Scotch ancestry and died when Eugene W. was four years old. Her father, Robert Mills, was born in New Hampshire and kept working west on the frontier all his life until he landed in Oregon, where his death occurred.

In 1896, Mr. Daggett married Miss Kittie M. Reed, who was born near Arlington and received her education in the Arlington schools. They have one child, Myra A. Mr. Daggett is a member of the K. P., and he and his wife are prominent people in Blalock.

HENRY D. RANDALL, who resides at Olex, has one of the best places in Gilliam county. His residence is an imposing structure of modern architectural design, is beautifully surrounded by handsome shade trees, while his estate, consisting of eight hundred acres, is well laid out and improved. About five hundred acres are under cultivation and the balance is used for pasture.

Henry D. Randall was born in Ohio, on December 26, 1848. His father, Abraham Randall, was born in New York city, in 1814 and died in Cove, Oregon, in 1899. He had settled there in 1863. He married Miss Lucinda Oliphant, a native of Ohio, who died in Iowa, in 1860. Our subject left Ohio with his parents when a year old and journeyed to Benton county, Indiana, and thence in a short time to Marshall county. Seven years later he moved to Iowa and in 1863, the father and children came across the plains, the mother having died. Upon arriving at Boise, our subject engaged in government work while the balance of the family came on to the Grande Ronde valley and located. After being in the government employ for a couple of months, Henry D. engaged with C. Jacobs and Company, general merchants, in Boise. In 1864, he went to Corvallis and there attended school until he was fitted for school teaching. The next two years were spent in the educator's work; then he went to California and was in the employ of G. W. Crook on a stock ranch until 1870. Returning then to Corvallis, he taught school for a year longer and then went to King's valley and in 1872, he went to Whitman county and took up a homestead. In 1874 he came to his present location and purchased eight hundred acres of land. This was used as headquarters for a fine stock ranch until the winter of 1879-80 swept away ten thousand dollars' worth of cattle and sheep. Then Mr. Randall turned his attention to farming, principally, and in this he has been occupied since. He is one of the progressive and enterprising men of the section, has labored with wisdom and has shown himself a genuine good man. When Mr. Randall landed in Boise he had neither money nor education. To earn the money to secure an education in a frontier country is fully understood by him but he accomplished it splendidly and in a short time was doing the fine work of the educator as well. Everything that he now owns has been cleared by hard labor and good management and he has reason to take pride in his achievements. During these years his example has stimulated many others to meritorious effort.

On February 22, 1872, Mr. Randall married Miss Ordella Chambers, who was born in Benton county, Oregon, on June 3, 1855. She was educated in her native country. Her father, Roland Chambers, was born in Ohio and crossed the plains to Benton county, Oregon, in 1845.

Mr. Randall has two brothers, John and William, farming in Union county, this state and three sisters, Mrs. Margaret Vernon, Mrs. Sarah Fulson and Mrs. Mary Thompson. The former lives near Sprague, Washington and the latter two are deceased. To our subject and his wife eleven children have been born, named as follows, Mrs. Effie Martin, John, Claude, Edgar, Mabel, Hattie, Nott, Della, Frank, Mildred and Grace.

Mr. Randall affiliates with the A. F. & A. M. and always has been a strong Republican. He takes an active interest in educational matters and the affairs of the community in general and is one of the leading and influential men of the county.

THOMAS DEAN has the satisfaction of knowing that he has made a splendid success in financial matters during his career, for he started in life without capital, and is now one of the well to do farmers of Gilliam county. All his property has been gathered by his own labors and a review of his life shows him to have wrought with display of industry and wisdom, which have brought their due reward.

Thomas Dean was born in Sheridan county, Missouri, on April 17, 1871, the son of Hazel and Phœbe A. (Best) Dean, natives of Indiana and Missouri respectively. The father went to Missouri in early days, later removed to Arkansas and in 1884 journeyed on to eastern Oregon. He settled near Pendleton, and two years later came west to his present location. He owns a fine body of land, about one thousand acres, in Gilliam county, and that is his home today. He is one of the wealthy and leading men of the county. Our subject was with the balance of the family until of age, having completed his education in Oregon, which he started in the east. When he had reached manhood's estate, he took a homestead and then bought another quarter where he now lives, some eight miles west from Douglas. This farm of one-half section is now devoted to raising grain and is one of the valuable ones of the county. It is well improved and supplied with all conveniences and equipment that are needed and Mr. Dean is to be commended in his labors to build up the country.

The marriage of Thomas Dean and Miss Anna League occurred in 1894 and two children have been born to them, Effie and Hazel. Mrs. Dean was born in Missouri and came to Oregon with her parents and the balance of the family. Thomas J. League was born in Ohio, then came to Indiana when a young man and at the time of the breaking out of the Civil war, he enlisted and fought through it to the end. Then he moved west to Missouri and twelve years since came on to Oregon. He is now dwelling on a farm in Washington. He married Miss Olive Stratton, a native of Ohio. She went to Iowa with her parents and thence to Missouri when a girl. Mr. and Mrs. Dean are prominent people in this community and have won the esteem and respect of all, and are to be classed as part of the noble workers who have made Gilliam county one of the prosperous sections of the great state of Oregon.

MARION E. WEATHERFORD, one of the younger men who have supplied brain and brawn to make Gilliam county a prosperous and leading section of Oregon, is located near Olex, on Shuttler Flat, where he owns and farms two sections of land. He has a splendid place. He is a man of ability and excellent standing and has won hosts of friends.

Marion E. Weatherford was born in Morrow county, Oregon, and so has the advantage of being well acquainted with these sections all his life, as Morrow county is much the same section as Gilliam. The date of his advent into life was March 2, 1872. His parents are mentioned specifically in another portion of this work. The public schools of his native state furnished the educational training of our subject and he finished in the business department of the state institution at Monmouth. He entered that institution in 1890, and graduated in the class of 1892. Immediately upon graduation he turned his attention to farming and has steadily pursued that course since that time. Mr. Weatherford is one always interested in political matters and in other things that build up the country and is public minded and enterprising.

In November, 1893, occurred the marriage of Miss Minnie C. Snell to Marion E. Weatherford, and to this happy household two children have been born, Frank M. and Horatio A. Mrs. Weatherford was born in Nevada and her father, B. T. Shell, brought his family hither in early days, being one of the pioneers of Gilliam county. He served at one time as commissioner of Gilliam county and was a prominent citizen. Mr. Weatherford is a member of the A. O. U. W. and is a popular and influential man in society and in fraternal circles.

J. A. CRUM, deceased. In speaking of those who have made Gilliam county the prosperous section that she is today, it is quite proper to mention the gentleman whose name appears at the head of this article. His labors have been very productive of good development in this part of the country, and he was one of the early settlers in the territory now embraced in Gilliam county. He had been a pioneer to various sections of the west and had seen very much hard service for years. A brief account of his life will certainly be interesting and instructive.

J. A. Crum was born in Schaefferstown, Pennsylvania, on February 14, 1846. His father, George Crum, was born in Schaefferstown, Pennsylvania in 1818. He followed school teaching and later was a manufacturer of harness. He died in 1875. Our subject received his early education in his native town and then attended school in Philadelphia. When fourteen years of age, he began working in a flour mill and remained until eighteen years of age and became a skillful miller. He came to Illinois at that time and remained in that state until 1861 when he went with a train under the command of Captain Sawyer, who was opening up a route to Montana. They were corralled by the Indians for fourteen days at one time. The Indians agreed to let them go if they would deliver up Captain Sawyer. This they refused to do and stood the siege for fourteen days when they finally purchased off the Indians by giving them sugar and other provisions. Mr. Crum operated the first mill at Virginia City, Montana, which was the first in the territory. He continued milling and mining there for six or seven years and was there when the vigilants were in command of the country. About 1867 or 1868 Mr. Crum came on to Walla Walla and after spending one year there went to the mines, then returned to Summerville, Oregon where he operated a mill for his wife's brother, J. H. Rinehart, for five years. Next we see Mr. Crum in the vicinity of Aurora, Clackamas county, Oregon, where he did farming until 1883. In that year he removed to Gilliam county, settling near Olex and remained until his death which occurred on October 8, 1898. Being one of the old pioneers, he was well known throughout the country and was also highly esteemed. He built and operated a mill at Olex which was the first mill in Gilliam county. There had been but one crop of wheat raised here when Mr. Crum erected it and his mill came in splendid time to assist the pioneers.

In Union county, Oregon, on July 7, 1871, Mr. Crum married Sarah E. Rinehart, who was born near Oskaloosa, Iowa, on March 6, 1853. Her father, Lewis Rinehart, was born in Tennessee, on September 5, 1801 and was also a pioneer, keeping ahead of the railroad and his death occurred at Summerville, in 1882. He had married Elizabeth Ellis, who was born in Tennessee, on February 19, 1805. She died at Olex, on January 30, 1903, lacking but twenty days of being ninety-five years of age. Mrs. Crum crossed the plains with her parents in 1854 and settled in Lane county, ten miles south from Eugene. She received her early education in the common schools of that section and remained until seventeen years of age, when the family went to Summerville. She completed her education in the Lagrande schools and was then married. Since her husband's death, she has continued to conduct the farm and does fruit raising and gardening and also handles considerable hay. She is the youngest of thirteen children, part of whom are mentioned as follows: John, deceased, G. W., J. H., F. M., H. H., L. B., W. E., and J. N. To Mr. and Mrs. Crum the following named children have been born: Mrs. Carrie Wilkins, at Clem; George L., living near Ajax; Willard, Eugene and Franklin, deceased. The death of all these occurred in September, from typhoid fever. The other children are Jessie W., Ora A., and McKinley. These three are living with their mother. Mr. and Mrs. Crum were active members of the Methodist church and were always laboring for the extending of the church, for better educational facilities and for general advancement.

CLAYTON SHANE, who is a substantial farmer of Gilliam county, resides about twelve miles southeast from Arlington, on Eightmile creek. He owns four hundred and eighty acres of good land and devotes himself almost exclusively to raising grain. He has some stock and often turns off a few head, but grain is his staple. He is an industrious representative of the agricultural population and has wrought out a good success in his labors here.

Clayton Shane was born in Michigan, on March 5, 1850, the son of William and Esther (Fry) Shane, natives of New York. The father was a pioneer to Michigan and farmed there until his death. The mother came to Michigan with her parents and is now living on the old homestead of her husband. Our subject was well educated in Michigan and Indiana, and then wrought in a store in Michigan for five years. In 1878, he made up his mind to try the west, selecting California as the objective point. For eight years he farmed there with reasonable success, and then came north. It was 1886 when Mr. Shane landed in Oregon and after due search he selected a homestead where he now lives. Since then he has added a half section by purchase and has made it a choice wheat farm. He has added improvements in good shape and has handled the business with display of ability. Inasmuch as Mr. Shane started in life without means and has now a good property it speaks well of his industry and his wisdom in managing his business.

In 1892, Mr. Shane married Miss Jennie Montague, who was born in Kansas and came to Oregon with her parents. To this union five children have been born: Earl, Raymond, George, Alvin, Milton.

WILLIAM SMITH, who is postmaster at Croy, is one of the wealthiest residents of Gilliam county, and is a man of no ordinary ability. An account of his career will be both interesting and beneficial and with pleasure we append the same.

William Smith was born in the parish of New Abby, Stewartry of Kirkcudbright, Scotland, on November 19, 1854. His father, Joseph Smith, died in July, 1855. He married Jane Beaffie in 1825. Our subject was born in the same county as the historical Paul Jones. He received his education in the public schools and after leaving his books, worked in a railroad office for four years, then was bookkeeper in a brewing and malt establishment in Whiteharen, Cumberland, England for eight years. On January 19, 1883, he left Glasgow for Portland, Oregon, coming via San Francisco. In the spring of that year, we find him about ten miles up from Grant in Sherman county at work for forty dollars per month, handling sheep. In June of the same year he commenced business by purchasing a small band of sheep. He located at the mouth of Hay creek in June, 1891, on the John Day river in Gilliam county. He now has a residence in Arlington for school privileges. He had learned the sheep business most thoroughly and from the time he started for himself until the present he has had perfect success. He is now the prosperous possessor of six thousand acres of land and over eight thousand sheep. The improvements upon his domain are among the best in the county and his residence is one of the best in this part of Oregon. It is evident that Mr. Smith is a very wise and capable man. He is also possessed of that rare ability of tenacity and thoroughness which always accompanies genuine prosperity. In his career he is head of the line in every particular. He did not work a few months here, dabble in something else and then go to a third enterprise but having secured a position, he remained with it continuously until he had capital enough to enter business. In everything he has embarked upon his business care and ability have pushed it with the best of wisdom and energy.

Concentrating his whole attention to it, it has brought him the success he now enjoys.

At The Dalles, Oregon, on December 3, 1889, Mr. Smith married Miss Katherine E. Granville, Justice Lang officiating. Mrs. Smith was born in Freestone, Sonoma county, California, on February 2, 1870. Her parents, Richard and Katherine (Connor) Granville, moved to Glenwood, Klickitat county, Washington, when she was fifteen years old, and her education was received there in the public schools. Her father was born in England, came to the United States when young, fought for the stars and stripes in the Civil War and was an early pioneer to California. He died when only twenty-nine years of age. Her mother was born in Ireland and came to the United States with her parents when seventeen years of age. Her marriage occurred in 1860. After Mrs. Smith's father died, his widow married August Berg, a native of Germany, the wedding occurring in 1874. He was in the United States navy during the Civil War and was a pioneer to Klickitat county, Washington. Mrs. Smith has the following named brothers and sisters: Thomas, born in California on October 29, 1864; Richard, born in California, on March 5, 1866; Mary, born in California, on April 6, 1868. She had one half sister, Ellen Berg, who was born in California, on July 8, 1876, and died on November 15, 1896. Mr. Smith's sisters and brothers are Janet, Jane, Elizabeth, Agnes and James all living in Scotland. To Mr. and Mrs. Smith the following named children have been born: Mabel Beattie, on September 23, 1890; Myrtle Eva, on May 5, 1893; Hazel Edith, on January 3, 1895, who died at Arlington, Oregon, on September 5, 1900; and William Granville, on October 3, 1900.

Mr. Smith is a member of the Royal Arch degree of masonry of Heppner Chapter 26, and was exalted on May 23, 1903.

In politics, Mr. Smith is a strong and well posted Republican. He and his wife are members of the Presbyterian church. They are leading and influential people in the county and have done a fine work here in upbuilding and bringing out its resources and have won for themselves the esteem and friendship of all the people.

JOHN W. MATTHEWS is one of the industrious and substantial farmers of Gilliam county and resides about seven miles west from Douglas on Eightmile creek. He was born in Clay county, Missouri, on February 10, 1861. Thomas D. Matthews, his father, came to central Oregon in 1882, then settled at Pendleton, being one of the early settlers there. He devoted himself to farming there a while, then went to Baker City, where he is interested in mining. He also owns a quarter section of land near where our subject lives. The mother of John W., Margaret J. (McAdams) Matthews, was born in Missouri and died in this state in 1893. Her parents were natives of North Carolina. In Clay county, Missouri, our subject received his education and then came to Oregon with the balance of the family, which consisted of his father, mother, four brothers, and three sisters. After coming here he wrought on the O. R. & N. railroad for many years, and in fact, until six years since. Then he settled on the farm where he now lives and has one-half section of good wheat land. He devotes himself to farming and has his place well improved.

In 1898, Mr. Matthews married Mrs. Nancy M. Harshman, born February 10, 1869, the daughter of Hazel Dean, a well to do farmer of this county. She was born in Chariton county, Missouri, and came to Oregon in 1881, with her parents.

To Mr. and Mrs. Matthews, one child has been born, Ada. By her former marriage Mrs. Matthews has three children, Harvey, Oliver, and Floyd. It is interesting to note that the property now possessed by Mr. Matthews has all been earned by his own labors, as he started in life without means. He has a comfortable home and he and his wife are among the substantial people of the county.

A. H. RUEDY, M. D. The people of Gilliam county and of the adjoining country need no introduction to Dr. Ruedy, nor does the medical profession at large, as he is of high standing among his colleagues and is known by his skill in various portions of the United States. Arlington is greatly to be congratulated that she has secured as a permanent resident this highly educated and skillful physician and surgeon. He is a deep student, a thorough gentleman, and a leading and enterprising citizen. No compilation of this character would be complete without an account of his life and it is with pleasure that we are able to append the same.

A. H. Ruedy was born in the world famous republic of Switzerland, the date being November 1, 1866. M. Ruedy was his father and he, too, was a native of that country. When young he came to America, crossed the plains and mined in California in the early fifties, then returned east, and again went to the Golden State, that time via Cape Horn. Later, we see him a captain of craft on Lake Erie. He is now retired in Los Angeles, California. He married Miss Elizabeth Vogeli, who is descended from one of the best families of Switzerland. Her father, John Vogeli, was a prominent man in the republic, being senator and judge. A. H. received his early education in Switzerland and there became master of the German and French languages. Then he studied in a prominent Ohio university, when he came to this country, and later graduated from Drake University, Des Moines, Iowa. This was in 1888, when he took his degree from that institution, and he immediately entered upon some post-graduate work in Los Angeles. After this, he went to Chicago and spent some time in research there. Next he matriculated at the Oregon University, at Eugene, and there he graduated in the class of 1897, winning the gold medal. Before entering this university, the doctor had spent some time in Berlin, studying preparatory to the medical course. Upon his reception of his degree of Doctor of Medicine, he received an appointment to the Good Samaritan hospital in Portland and there he remained until coming to Arlington in 1897. Aside from two trips abroad since that time, he has spent his time here in the practice of his profession. But Dr. Ruedy was not content simply to master the journals, he wished to have personal association with the leading medical minds of the world and so he went to Europe and spent a time in Paris. After that, he returned to his work here and gained a fine practice. Then he saw an opportunity to associate with one of the great minds of the world and went to Europe again. This time he studied in Paris, Switzerland, Berlin, Vienna, and in other places. Last summer he spent a time in Vienna with the noted Dr. Hofrath Von Moseitig, who is associated with the Allgemeines Krankenhaus of Vienna. Dr. Von Moseitig is the discoverer and originator of the new process of surgery in bone work, which is the skillful application of a prepared bone substance which results in the restoration to healthy bone the diseased member. Dr. Ruedy performed an operation where this valuable method could be used and he applied it with the most happy results. So far as known, this is the first time the work has been done in the United States, and the doctor was pressed to give a detailed account of the same for the benefit of other physicians. This account appeared in the Medical Sentinel and was highly commended and placed Dr. Ruedy as a real leader in this important line, it being demonstrated that he was a surgeon of the first ability. Dr. Ruedy was surgeon and physician for the O. R. & N. railroad at Arlington. The doctor has found time to turn from his arduous and deep studies to the participation in public matters and in politics and he displays a keen relish for the political campaign. This has greatly endeared him to the people and they have twice selected him for the important position of county commissioner. He is a Republican and can give a good reason for the hope he holds in political matters.

FRED ADLARD is a thrifty and industrious farmer, residing at Ajax. He has one of the best places here and his orchard and garden are pointed to by all as the finest in the Ajax country. His place is well improved and everything about indicates a man who understands his business.

Fred Adlard was born in Lincolnshire, England, on January 29, 1836. His father, Tom Adlard, was born in the same place as our subject and he married Mary Kime, a native of England. When nine years of age, Fred was in a rope factory to turn the wheels for the spinners. When he was twelve, he was errand boy in the factory, continuing in that business for three years at the end of which time he did a man's work. Then his mother apprenticed him to learn the bricklayer's trade for a period of five years. Two years after that his boss failed and he was set at liberty. He spent six months working on the Grimsby dock and with the money earned came to the United States, landing at Castle Garden, on March 17, 1854. Not being able to secure work in the city, he went on to Albany, then to Schenectady and finally to Utica and Rome, searching in vain for employment. In the latter place he met a preacher who furnished him a pass to Canada where he failed in getting work, and a railroad official gave him a pass to Detroit; thence he walked to Niles and spent a month cutting cord wood and finally walked on to Chicago. In this place he had failed to secure work and finally he went on from Chicago and did harvest work. Then he did railroad work, after which we find him in Milan, Missouri. Then he was at St. Katherine's, Missouri, and did teaming, and was employed on a farm in that state until 1865, when he came to Benton county, Oregon. In that place he farmed until 1888, in which year he journeyed on to his present location and took the same as a homestead. He has a splendid orchard, good improvements and a fine farm.

In Benton county, Oregon, on May 27, 1875, Mr. Adlard married Miss Katie Willbanks, who was born in Mississippi on January 16, 1859. Her father, William Willbanks, was born August 20, 1834, in North Carolina and was an early pioneer to Oregon. Mr. and Mrs. Adlard have the following named children: William, Mary, Walter, Stella, Lulu, Minnie, Fred, Ethel, Alice, Charlie, Edith, and Helen.

OSCAR MALEY AND EDGAR C. MALEY, although young men, have attained a success that would be gratifying even to those who have labored for many years. They give their attention to farming and stock raising and reside twelve miles northwest of Alville. The former was born in Linn County, Oregon, in 1874, the latter in the same place in 1878, and they are the sons of Samuel and Elizabeth (Smith) Maley. The mother's first husband was William Farrar, and to that marriage three children were born, Robert H., Agnes and William K. Our subjects lived on their grandparents' donation claim in Linn County until 1886, receiving there their earlier education in the public schools. In the year last mentioned they came with their parents to their present location where the father took a homestead. Two years later, 1888, he died and in partnership our subjects operated the farm. They have bought sixteen hundred acres more and handle the whole estate. They have over three hundred head of cattle with horses sufficient to care for them and to operate the farm. They are among the wealthy and most thrifty farmers of the county and have displayed an industry and success which are commendable.

On August 6, 1901, Oscar Maley married Miss Elizabeth Shannon, who was born in Malheur county, Oregon, on March 2, 1883. Her father, F. M. Shannon, is specifically mentioned in another portion of this work. On July 6, 1902, one child was born to Mr. and Mrs. Oscar Maley, Margaret Liddy.

Our subjects are members of the Grange Society and in politics are well posted socialists. Their father, Samuel Maley, was born in Warren county, Illinois, in 1838. His ancestors were Scotch and Irish, and they came to America prior to the Revolution. His father, W. B. Maley, the grandfather of our subjects, was a physician and a finely educated man. He was born in Pennsylvania in 1809 and came to Illinois in early day. In 1845 he crossed the plains to Oregon and the next year settled in Linn county, taking a donation claim where he lived until his death in 1852. There were few schools in the country then, but as our subjects' grandfather was well educated and his wife a first class school teacher they educated their children well. In those days the Indians were troublesome and on one occasional they camped in great numbers about the residence of Mr. Maley and made the nights and days hideous with their horrible yells until Mr. Maley consented to give them a steer as a peace offering. The grandfather of our subjects was a member of the territorial legislature in Oregon in 1850 and was a very prominent and influential man. In 1864 Samuel Maley enlisted in Company F, First Oregon Infantry, to serve for three years. At the expiration of eighteen months he was honorably discharged and returned to his home. In 1871 he married Miss Elizabeth Smith who was born in Glasgow, Scotland, in 1837, and now lives in Gilliam county.

In politics Samuel Maley was a strong Republican and like his father, was very influential and prominent. His death in 1888 was deeply mourned by all, as everyone knew that a good man was taken from their midst.

GEORGE HANSEN. A residence of twenty-six years in Gilliam county entitles the subject of this article to representation as one of its pioneers. At present he is living a retired life, having accumulated a nice fortune through his enterprising efforts here. His residence is some eight miles west from Condon and in that locality he owns a half section of choice wheat land. He rents the same and gives his attention to the general oversight of this and his other properties.

George Hansen was born in Denmark, August 4, 1839, being the day. His parents, Jacob and Annie C. Hansen, were also natives of Denmark. The mother died when this son was nine years of age. The father was a miller, owning a nice plant. After receiving a good education in his own country, our subject determined to try the sea and accordingly when seventeen years of age shipped as a sailor before the mast, and for twenty-two years thereafter he led a seafaring life. He has visited every port of any size in the world, has circumnavigated the globe three times, is well acquainted with the ways and customs of every continent and has been a most extensive traveler. Mr. Hansen is a man of energy and ability and during his travels stored his mind with a great fund of information. During these years of life as a sailor he learned to speak five different languages. Finally, Mr. Hansen began to develop a longing for the land once more and at Puget Sound, in 1878, he ended his seafaring career. One season after that he spent in fishing on the Columbia in the vicinity of Astoria, and in 1878 he had made his way into the territory now embraced by Gilliam county. He at once engaged in herding sheep and followed that occupation for some little time. In 1880, Mr. Han took a homestead and a timber culture, where he now resides, the land being then unsurveyed, and from that time until the present, he has given his attention steadily to farming. His estate is well improved and skillfully cultivated and is a generous producer of harvests. During the years of his residence he has seen the country grow from a wild prairie to its present well developed to bring about this gratifying end. He has the esteem of all who know him and is considered one of the substantial and enterprising men of the county.

GEORGE L. CRUM, who resides about three miles east of Ajax, is one of the substantial farmers of Gilliam county and has the distinction of having lived here for about twenty-five years. He was born in the Willamette valley, on September 7, 1875. His father, J. A. Crum, was born in Pennsylvania in 1846 and was an early pioneer of the west, coming to Walla Walla in 1864. His death occurred in 1898. He had married Sarah Rinehart, who was born in Iowa. She crossed the plains in 1852 and is now living at Olex, Oregon. Our subject attended school first in the Willamette valley and came with his parents to Gilliam county in 1881. He well remembers that when first they come here, there were no fences, very few settlers and the country was a wild place. He assisted his father to open up a farm and labored with him until 1894, then being nineteen years of age, he went to Corvallis and attended the agriculture college for three years. Returning to Gilliam county after that he again took up farming, taking a homestead. He relinquished this property and removed to Arlington where he bought the Crown hotel. For three years he successfully operated that, then rented it and again took a homestead where he now resides, some three miles east of Ajax. He settled here in 1903 and since that time has made good improvements on the property.

In 1898 Mr. Crum married Miss Gracie Sanders, who was born in Goldendale, Washington. Her father, Joseph Sanders, was born in Tennessee, and is now living in Arlington. Two children are the fruit of this marriage, Bryon and Leonard.

Mr. Crum is a member of the M. W. A., and is a Republican.

In politics he is well informed and active, and is a very enterprising man. When Mr. Crum's father died three of his brothers died at the same time. That broke up the family and farming business very much. Mr. Crum is to be rated as one of the early pioneers and one who has assisted materially in the upbuilding of the country. He is of good standing and has won many friends and deserves credit for the good labors he has done.

O. P. LOW, M. D., is well known in Arlington and in the surrounding country as a physician of high standing and excellent ability. He is a gentleman with a high sense of honor, is a patriotic and enterprising citizen and one of the leaders in this county. In addition to handling a good practice of medicine Dr. Low fills his own prescriptions and is a thorough business man.

O. P. Low was born in Wood county, West Virginia, on March 10, 1862. Nathan B. Low, his father, was a native also of West Virginia and followed stone cutting. His ancestors were early settlers in the colonies and in West Virginia. He married Miss Mary Lent, who was born in Ohio. She came with her parents to West Virginia when a child and was well educated and for some time taught school. In 1889 Mr. Low came with his family to Portland, where his widow is now residing. Our subject gained his early education in his native state, and he knows well what it is to work hard all day long at the stone cutting trade and pore over the printed page in the evening. Thus he gained his first knowledge and a good share of later training. After he came west in 1886 he studied one year at Green's University in Kansas. Then he came on to Oregon and in 1893 entered the Willamette University. Here he pursued his medical studies until his graduation in 1896, being in a class of twenty-two. He received his diploma with honors and had conferred on him the degree of doctor of medicine. Immediately subsequent to that Dr. Low opened an office in McCoy, Oregon, and for three years did a good business there. Then he spent two years in Independence, Oregon, and finally, in 1901, he located in Arlington. From the days when the doctor laid aside the stone cutter's hammer to pursue and study the volumes of science until the present he has always practiced the policy of studying some every day. The result is he is a well informed man, and is fully abreast of the advancing art of medicine, being a skillful and successful practitioner.

In 1896 Dr. Low married Miss Grace Tucker, a native of Wisconsin. Her father was a veteran in the Civil War and died in the service. Dr. Low is city recorder and is always interested in public matters. He is a member of the K. P.

and the W. W. Dr. Low is a strictly professional man and devotes his time and energy to the prosecution of his profession with the result that he is at the head of a large and ever increasing patronage.

W. T. ADLARD is one of the younger farmers of Gilliam county, who is making a success here in his chosen calling. He resides about three miles east from Alville and has a good place. He was born in Benton county, Oregon, on April 19, 1876. His father, Fred Adlard, was born in England in 1839, and came to the United States when quite a young man. He was one of the earlier pioneers of Oregon and a well respected and substantial man. He married Katie Willbanks, who was born in Mississippi in 1859, and is still living. The country schools supplied the educational training of our subject and he remained there on the farm with his father until twelve years of age when he removed to Gilliam county. He continued with his father in opening up a farm in this county, until six years since, when he started for himself. Since then he has done splendidly and has shown himself to be an industrious and enterprising young man.

On November 20, 1898, Mr. Adlard married Miss Myrtle Stevenson, who was born in Indiana on February 10, 1876. Her father, James G. Stevenson, was born in October, 1846. He married Miss Eliza Dormer, who was born in Ohio in 1848. They are now living in Gilliam county. Mr. Adlard has the following named brothers and sisters: Walter, Fred, Charles, Mollie, Stella, Minnie, Lula, Ethel, Alice, Edith and Helen. Mr. and Mrs. Adlard have two children, Lillian and Florence.

In political matters our subject is a Democrat and in everything that is for the building up of the country he takes a keen interest. He and his wife are respected people and have many friends.

CHARLES E. RICKARD, who resides about six miles north of Alville, has shown himself to be one of the most enterprising and successful young farmers of the section. He was born in Indiana in 1876, the son of Arsemas Rickard, also a native of that state. He gained his education during the first fourteen years of his life in his native place and then started west. Although of such young years, he was possessed of enterprise and grit and soon made his way to the Willamette valley where he labored for ten years. Then he came to his present location and took a homestead. At that time he was possessed of a span of cayuses, which was practically all he owned. He rented a section of land near by and has labored so faithfully since that now he has fifty fine hogs, twenty-four horses, eleven cattle and good improvements upon his place. All this has been gained by his own labors in the last few years and he is on the royal road to wealth. In the meantime Mr. Rickard has so conducted himself that he has won the esteem and friendship of all who know him and his standing in the community is of the best. In June, 1897, Mr. Rickard married Miss Cully Steele, who was born in the Willamette valley in 1876. Her father, Robert Steele, was one of the earliest pioneers of the place and is now deceased. Two children are the fruit of this marriage, Forest and Goldie. Mr. Rickard is a member of the Grange lodge and is also insured in the New York Mutual for five thousand dollars. He has shown splendid wisdom not only in the conduct of his business that he has at the present time, but also in providing for his loved ones in case he should pass the way of all earth before he has secured a proper competence.

In political matters he manifests a keen interest and is an energetic and enterprising citizen.

Mr. and Mrs. Rickard are fine young people and have made hosts of friends in this section. Gilliam county is to be congratulated in securing as permanent residents such enterprising and energetic people. It is such as they who make the country wealthy and prosperous.

ROBERT H. ROBINSON, who holds the position of postmaster in Arlington, Oregon, is one of the well known men throughout the county, and is a prominent business man. He was born in Pierce county, Washington, on December 22, 1869, thus being a native of the Occident. R. G. Robinson, his father, was born in Pennsylvania, and came from an old and influential colonial family. Some members of the family were in all the colonial wars and fought for independence. He crossed the plains to California in the early forties and there engaged in mining for a time. After that he came to the Willamette valley and in 1872 settled at Lone Rock in the territory now embraced in Gilliam county. He took up the stock business and is now one of the leading stock men in the county. He married Miss Lucy A. Neal, who was born the Willamette valley. Her people were among the very earliest settlers in the territory of Oregon. Robert H. was well educated in this county and the Portland business colleges. In 1891 he started for himself and soon established a general merchandise store at Lone Rock. Later he sold out that property and opened a store in Arlington. He has continued that business until 1900, when he was appointed postmaster of the town and is the present incumbent. Mr. Robinson is a man of excellent attainments and is one of the younger and enterprising business operators in this county. He has shown zeal in all things for the upbuilding of the county and for general progress and he is to be commended for his efforts in these lines. His brothers and sisters are Calvin D., Frank H., Mrs. Nettie A. Robinson, Mrs. Alcy J. Pullen, Willis N. and Una G.

In 1895 Mr. Robinson married Miss Sadie E. Dyer, who was born in the Willamette valley. She came to this section when a child and was reared and educated here. Her father is William F. Dyer, a rancher and stockman near Mayville. Mr. Robinson is a member of the K. P., the A. F. & A. M., and also of the Chapter, the Commandery and the Mystic Shrine. His labors have resulted in the acquirement of a goodly competence for him and while active in business lines, he has not forgotten to so conduct himself as to win the confidence of the people and the respect of all.

JOSEPHUS MARTIN, who resides about two miles up Rock Creek from Olex, is one of the earliest settlers in the territory now embraced in Gilliam county. He has been one of the leaders here in stock raising for years and is well known all over this part of the state. His life is intimately connected with the history of Gilliam county and also he has been a pioneer to various other sections.

Josephus Martin was born in Butler county, Ohio, on November 16, 1829, the son of Roger and Mary Martin. The former was born in Scotland and came with his parents to Kentucky when small, whence they removed later to Ohio. The latter was born in Ireland and came to Ohio when a young girl. She died when our subject was nine years old. In his native place Josephus was educated and when sixteen began to learn the carpenter trade. This occupied him until 1852, when he took the trip to California via the isthmus. Until 1863 he was a resident of the Golden State and then came to Oregon, spent the winter of 1864-5 in Corvallis and in the spring in company with Conrad Schott he went to the Idaho mines. For two seasons he did well in the vicinity of Idaho City, being in partnership with Johnson and Smith. Then he formed a partnership with Conrad Schott and John Shellady, and before the year of 1866 had passed away located on Rock Creek, in what is now Gilliam county, and began raising stock. In 1868 he and his partner, John Shellady, were each married, the date being February 8, 1868. Before marriage Mr. Martin's wife was Miss Alice Johnson. She was born in Missouri in 1850, the daughter of Charles and Kesiah (Trapp) Johnson, natives of Kentucky and Missouri respectively. During early times the Indians were very savage and on two occasions Mr. Martin was compelled to take his family and flee to a place of safety. Once when the Snakes were coming through a runner hurried ahead and warned the settlers. The Indians intended to massacre all whites, but the soldiers came on the scene and the savages took to the timber. On Rock Creek near where Mr. Martin is now living was their old camping ground and he saw much of them. In those days the only settlers were Daniel Leonard, who kept the bridge on the John Day crossing, James Fôrce, on Rock Creek, Charley Pensim, better known as French Charley, Nicholas Stagg, a stockman, who was known as the man who lived in the stone house, and Mr. Adams. They all had to go to The Dalles for their mail, and all supplies came that way. Mr. Martin continued in the stock business with wisdom and industry and soon became a well-to-do man. He increased his holdings from time to time until the home estate is now fifteen hundred acres. Eight hundred acres of this fine body of land are cropped to wheat this year and bring a fine return. Mr. Martin is retired from the activities of his business and the estate and stock are managed by his son, Charles. The children born to Mr. and Mrs. Martin are Mrs. Dora B. Wade, Charles, Gertrude and Ray.

D. CANTWELL is a carpenter and farmer residing about three miles northwest from Mayville. He was born in Oregon in 1855, the son of Mose and Mary (Fitzworth) Cantwell, natives of Alabama and Arkansas respectively. The former was born in 1824 and the latter in 1825. The father died in 1889 and the mother in 1902. He was a veteran of the Civil War. When our subject was five years of age the family removed from Arkansas to Texas and seventeen years later returned to the home state. In these two places this son was educated in the common schools, and in 1875 came from the Mississippi valley to Oregon. Settlement was made in Umatilla county and shortly thereafter our subject moved to the Willamette valley. There he learned the engineering trade with the Oregon Iron and Steel Company and continued with them for five years. After this he bought an interest in a saw mill which he operated for a year. Then he sold his part in that property and came to Lost valley in Gilliam county where he erected a saw mill. He continued the operation of that until 1893 when he sold the property. For the past ten years he has been engaged in various occupations and is now doing contracting and building.

In 1879 Mr. Cantwell married Miss Martha (Pioneer) Southworth. She was born on the Pioneer reservation in 1852 while her parents were crossing the plains. Her father, James B. Southworth, was one of the early settlers in southern Oregon. To Mr. and Mrs. Cantwell one child has been born, Robert M., on February 15, 1887.

Mr. Cantwell is a member of the I. O. O. F. and a man who takes a keen interest in political matters and whatever is for the building up of the country.

MANLY F. KEIZUR is a native son of Oregon and has made this state his dwelling place all his life. He is now residing about six miles north from Condon, where he owns a choice farm of two hundred and forty acres, which is devoted to general crops. He also gives attention to raising stock, and is a prosperous and well-to-do farmer. He is a man of industry and enterprise and in addition to handling the industries mentioned has also bought and sold land and is one of the substantial men of Gilliam county.

Manly F. Keizur was born in Lane county on November 30, 1857, the son of Thomas C. and Sarah I. (Ramsey) Keizur, natives of Missouri. The son crossed the plains with his father when ten years of age. The family settled on a donation claim near Salem, the postoffice being now known as Keizur, in honor of the father. Later they came to Gilliam county, it being 1878, and made settlement on Rock Creek. In 1893 the father of our subject removed to Bohemian Mines in Lane county, Oregon, and there is operating a boarding house. The mother of our subject crossed the plains with her parents when small and was reared in Salem, where her father did blacksmithing. He was one of the first settlers in Oregon. Manly F. was educated in his native place and in 1878 came east of the mountains having some ox teams and some horses. He engaged in the sheep industry and in due time became a well-to-do man. His path was not without hardships and adversity, for in the heavy winters he lost heavily and had to undergo much arduous toil in gaining his way in those early days. He made the start with practically no capital and all his holdings now represent his labor and skill. In 1891 Mr. Keizur took a homestead where he is now located and since that time has continued steadily here. He has his place well improved and he is a progressive and thrifty man.

In 1886 Mr. Keizur married Miss Ida Chance, a native of Iowa, Monroe county being her birthplace, and April 16, 1868 the date. She received her education in Iowa and in her fifteenth year came to Oregon. Her father, John Chance, was born in Illinois and removed to Iowa when a child. He became a wealthy and substantial farmer there. He married Miss Lettie Finley, a native of Tennessee. When she was six weeks old her parents started by wagon to Iowa and while on the journey her mother died. The father completed the journey and became one of the pioneers of the Hawkeye State. Mr. and Mrs. Keizur have a very interesting family of children who have displayed a precocity that is gratifying. Lottie L., the eldest, is a graduate of the grades and is a young lady of ability. The others are Clarence O., Birdie D., Roy E. and Lola M.

C. M. SMITH is one of the wealthy stockmen of central Oregon. He resides six miles south of Condon where he owns an estate of over two thousand acres. The same is supplied with all improvements needed in the stock business and for general farming. His farming, however, is subservient to his stock interests. At the present time he owns about one hundred head of cattle and handles about four thousand sheep. The success he has achieved in breeding stock indicates him to be a successful man in the business and his herds and flocks are among the best to be found. Mr. Smith is a native Oregonian, having been born in Linn county on August 23, 1862. His father, Josiah Smith, was born in Illinois, came as one of the earliest settlers to Oregon and was a veteran of the Cayuse War. He died on June 15, 1891. The mother, who is still living, is Nancy Ann (Maxwell) Smith, a native of Ohio. In his native place our subject received his educational training and there remained until nineteen years of age. In that year he came to Lake county, Oregon, and for two years was connected with the stock business there. Then he returned to the Willamette valley and spent six months. After that we find him in Umatilla county and for seven years he was numbered among the leading citizens there. After that he came to Gilliam county and settled on a homestead and later he bought one thousand nine hundred and twenty acres more. Since settling here he has always been known as an enterprising man, keenly alive to the interests of the county and identified with every movement for its upbuilding and development. He is a Republican in politics, always displays a lively interest in campaign matters and is a well informed and leading citizen. Mr. Smith has the following named brothers and sisters: Frank M., Edward B., George, Josiah B., A. M., L. B. and Mrs. Alice May. The brothers are all in Linn county except the last two mentioned. As yet Mr. Smith has never seen fit to enter upon the joys of matrimonial relations, although he is a very popular young man.

HENRY W. HARTMAN resides about five miles northeast from Condon, where he owns a homestead and is handling besides that a half section of wheat land. He is an enterprising and rustling Oregon farmer and has done a good work in improvement and upbuilding in this county. His birth occurred in Kerr county, Texas, on October 29, 1868. His father, A. Hartman, is mentioned elsewhere in this work. In 1873 our subject went to California with his parents, and in Wheatland of the Golden State, he received his education. In 1883 he accompanied his parents to the vicinity of Ritzville, Washington, but he did not remain there long. Later they all went to Weston, Oregon, and a year after that he came to this county. He and his father engaged in the stock business and this relation continued until 1899 when Mr. Hartman started alone, taking the homestead where he now resides. He has given his attention to farming largely since that time. His labors have been properly rewarded, for he has good improvements and is doing well.

The marriage of Mr. Hartman occurred in California in April, 1892. Miss Mary J. Gillson then became his bride. She was born in Pennsylvania and came to California when a young girl, accompanying her parents. Her father is James G. Gillson, a native of the Keystone State, and married Miss Hannah Watson. Three children have come to bless the household of Mr. and Mrs. Hartman. Arthur H., Elsie and Amon G. Mr. Hartman is a member of the I. O. O. F. and is a man of good standing in the community.

FRANCIS MARION SHANNON is to be classed as one of the early pioneers of the country now embraced in Gilliam county and since his advent here has been known as one of the stirring and representative settlers. He was born in Kentucky on October 18, 1861. His father, W. L. Shannon, was born in Kentucky on November 7, 1822, and is still living in Wilson county, Kansas. He married Mary E. Hill, who was born on June 6, 1825, in the Blue Grass State and died June 22, 1890. Our subject was educated in the common schools of Kentucky and there grew up to young manhood, during which time, he labored with his father, who was a coal dealer. On September 5, 1879, he went to Kansas and worked for wages for about three years. In 1882, about June 17, he started across the plains with mule teams, heading for Oregon. He had been married three days previously and his young wife accompanied him. The trip occupied six months and they finally located in what is now Malheur county. For one year they toiled there and then decided to cast their lot in the Fossil country. For eighteen months he wrought in a saw mill there and then came to his present location, which is about one mile south from Condon. He took a homestead and timber culture, bought railroad and other land until he now owns seven hundred and sixty acres, which has been improved in a splendid manner. He divides his attention between stock raising and farming and has gained wealth since coming here. His success is due to his careful and enterprising ways and he is to be commended upon the fact that coming without capital he has won a good competence in this country. The place is supplied with all the improvements needed, including a fine large residence, one of the choicest ones of the country.

On June 14, 1882, while in Kansas, Mr. Shannon married Miss Ella Nora Myers, who was born in Kansas on June 17, 1865. Her father was W. S. Myers. Mr. Shannon has the following named brothers and sisters: James, John, Thomas and Mrs. Sarah Clift. To this marriage the following named children have been born: Sarah Elizabeth, on March 12, 1883; William Lee, October 11, 1884; Margaret Gertrude, December 8, 1887; George Henry, February 27, 1890; Lena May, June 17, 1892; Cora Helen, September 13, 1894; Stella Pearly, February 18, 1897 and Walter F., August 11, 1900.

Mr. Shannon is a member of the W. W., a good strong Democrat and a first class citizen and neighbor.

LEWIS COUTURE resides about ten miles west from Condon on a homestead which he has improved in good shape. He was born in Michigan on January 4, 1862. His parents, Lewis and Elizabeth (Nado) Couture, are mentioned more specifically in the biography of our subject's brother, Stephen, which appears in this work. In the place of his birth Lewis was reared and in Monroe county, Michigan, his education was obtained. Early in life he was led by a mechanical talent to associate himself with steam engineers and was quick to pick up the art of running an engine. This stood him in good hand and was his occupation for several years in the country. He also was engaged in this work on the lake steamers. In 1894 he owned and operated the first traction engine in Gilliam county. In 1892 he came to this country, being of an enterprising and energetic spirit, and soon selected the quarter section where he is now making his home. In addition to handling the land he owns, Mr. Couture rents land and this year had four hundred and fifty acres planted to wheat. He is a good farmer and is being prospered in his labors. Thus far in life he has seen fit to adhere to the jolly bachelor's path and content himself with its environments. Mr. Couture's parents were of French extraction and came to Canada in early days. A branch of the family found its way to Michigan and from this comes our subject. Fraternally Mr. Couture is affiliated with the K. P. He stands well in the community and has many friends.

FREMONT WARD, one of the wealthy farmers and stockmen of Gilliam county, resides just one-half mile south from Condon, and was born in Iowa on May 17, 1863. Coming from a thrifty family he has displayed that virtue during his life which wins, and the result is that he has a fine competence at this time. His parents, Nelson and Minerva (Luzenaugh) Ward, were born in Connecticut and Louisiana respectively. The father died in July, 1902. The mother, who was born in 1832, is still living. When our subject was two years of age the family removed from Iowa to Arkansas. There he received his education and remained until he had grown to manhood. In 1884 he decided to come west and finally chose Oregon as the objective point, arriving here in the same year. After due investigation he selected a homestead where he now lives and soon thereafter bought eight hundred and forty acres of land that adjoined him. Since that time he has given his entire attention to the cultivation of this soil and to raising stock, in both of which enterprises he has made a splendid success. His residence is one of the choicest ones of the county and stands about one hundred and sixty rods from Condon. Other improvements of every kind are in evidence and his farm is one of the best in the county. Everything proclaims Mr. Ward a first-class citizen, a good business man, a fine neighbor and a true friend.

In 1884, while still in Arkansas, Mr. Ward married Miss Mary Knox, whose father, Robert Knox, was a well-to-do agriculturist of that section. She was born in Arkansas on October 6, 1868. Soon after their wedding they came west together seeking a home in this country. Mr. Ward has two brothers, Daniel and Oliver, and two sisters, Mrs. Phoebe Taeg and Mrs. Matilda Taeg. One child, Edith, has been born to Mr. and Mrs. Ward.

In fraternal affiliations Mr. Ward is connected with the M. W. A. In politics he is a strong Republican, and he is one of the representative citizens of Gilliam county and is most deeply interested in its welfare and progress, and is deserving of much credit for the good success he has achieved here.

GEORGE W. SCHOTT is practically a product of Gilliam county, since he has spent all his life here with the exception of two years. His birth occurred in Corvallis, Oregon, on December 19, 1866, and two years later, his father, Conrad Schott, brought his family from the valley to the territory now embraced in Gilliam county. He was one of the very first to settle here and he has been a prominent man since those days. He was born in Germany and came to St. Louis, Missouri, when one year old. In 1852 he crossed the plains with ox teams to the mines of California. Thence he came with the prospector's hope to the mines of Idaho and then returned to the valley whither he came to this section in 1868. He settled on Rock Creek and it is to be remembered that in those days there was something to consider besides making a living, although that was a hard thing to do in these out-of-the-way places. Mail was not to be had short of The Dalles and the trading was also done there. The greatest danger was from the savages, who would swoop down on the stock and sometimes lie in wait for bloodshed. Twice Mr. Schott had to take his family and flee from the onslaughts of the Indians, and once he and his neighbors built a fort for protection. He was one of the first settlers here, was one of the largest cattle men in this portion of the state and is still running stock from the old home place on Rock Creek. He also handled much stock in Malheur county. Our subject's mother, Frances (Mobley) Schott, was born in Missouri and crossed the plains with her people in the early fifties. Her marriage occurred at Corvallis, Oregon. Our subject was educated in the district school in his home vicinity and then completed his education in The Dalles. From the time that he could sit in the saddle, however, he was apprenticed to the stock business both from his own choice and from the desire to assist his father in the business. He has all the experiences known to the cowboy, has passed all the phases of frontier life from fighting the Indians to making home made furniture for the claim shack, and he is well versed in the country east of the mountains in Oregon. As soon as he was of age he began to work for himself, although continuing the stock business for his father and others. Gradually he came to have a band of cattle for himself and the result is that today he is one of the wealthy men of Gilliam county. He possessed land where he now lives, two miles north from Alville, for some time since, but only removed his family thither in 1902. He is fitting it as his permanent home. The place consists of six hundred and eighty acres of choice land. He has in addition land in other places.

In 1901 Mr. Scott married Miss Marie Velter, the daughter of John and Christina (Young) Velter, natives of Germany, where also she was born. She came to Portland with her parents when a small girl. After some time spent in the primary schools she entered Monmouth college and graduated with the class of 1897, gaining good class honors. She is also highly educated in the German and is one of the leading ladies of culture in the county. Before her marriage Mrs. Schott spent some time in teaching. To Mr. and Mrs. Schott two children have been born, Lenore and Grace. Mr. Schott is a member of the A. F. & A. M. He is a leading man and is counted one of the prominent citizens of the county.

J. A. McMORRIS stands at the head of a fine planing mill business in Condon. He has a well equipped plant and does a large business in all kinds of wood manufacturing for building purposes. He was born in Cumberland county, Illinois, on July 16, 1861, the son of E. J. and Martha E. (Makenzie) McMorris. The father was born in Henry county, Ohio, on April 2, 1839, and followed carpentering. The mother was born in Indiana on May 30, 1842. They are now both living in Washington. In 1871 the family came to California and in 1879 to Washington. Our subject's great-grandfather, David McMorris, was a veteran of the Revolution and fought under General George Washington. General James B. McPherson was first cousin to our subject's father. J. A. was with his parents on the frontier and the result was that he had very little opportunity to gain an education. When he reached the age of twenty-two years he was without education. Then he began studying and soon was granted a permit to teach school. He taught and studied continuously for fifteen years at the end of which time he held a first grade state certificate and had made a record as an educator second to none in the realm covered by such a diploma. He has been on the county board of examiners for six years and has held various other offices. He was superintendent of a large flume in Dayton, Washington, and has turned his attention to many occupations. In June, 1904, he was elected to the office of county surveyor on the Democratic ticket by a majority of four. Gilliam county was one hundred and eighty-six Republican, which showed his popularity. In 1903 Mr. McMorris built a planing mill in Condon and has been successfully operating it since. He has a good plant, well equipped and a fine patronage. He owns a good residence and is one of the leading citizens of the county.

On September 12, 1894, Mr. McMorris married Miss Laura E. Schilling, who was born in Huron county, Michigan, on October 9, 1872. She was a pupil of her husband and entered his school when wrestling with fractions. In about five terms she took the county examination for teachers and passed a general average of eighty-five. After that she taught for three years. Her father, Godfrey Schilling, was born in Michigan on August 6, 1843, and was one of the early pioneers of Condon. Her mother, Louisa (Hess) Schilling, was born in New York on June 25, 1852. Mr. McMorris has the following named brothers and sisters: D. W., T. H., William M., Loea L., Charles A., and Mrs. Laura A. Miller. The children born to Mr. and Mrs. McMorris are named as follows: Laura Edith, Mabel Juanita, Gladys Vivian, John Donald, Schilling McMorris.

Mr. McMorris and his family are members of the Church of Christ and have always been prominent in church work. It has always been the aim of Mr. McMorris to build up and advance church work and educational matters whenever opportunity presents and he has been very faithful and zealous in these lines. He and his wife are valuable members of society in Condon and are highly respected people.

MARY BOWERMAN, M. D., is well known in Condon and vicinity as a successful physician and surgeon. She has not been long in the practice, yet long enough to demonstrate to an appreciative and discriminating public that she is possessed of ability and especially well trained in her chosen profession. She was born in Iowa, and her parents are named in the biography of Hon. Jay Bowerman, her brother. In 1893 she came with the family to Salem, Oregon, and there completed her literary education in the Willamette University. After this she entered the medical department of that institution, graduating therefrom with honors in 1903. She immediately took up the practice of medicine in Condon and from the start was favored with a very fine patronage. She has now an extensive practice which is constantly increasing and is handled in a most becoming manner. Dr. Bowerman has won the high regard and esteem of everybody and her friends are as widely numbered as is the circle of her acquaintances.

J. K. FITZWATER has spent a life, which, if written in detail, would fill a volume and make exceedingly interesting reading. He has been constantly on the frontier and a great deal of the time in the roughest portion of the west, being exposed to all dangers incident to such a life, and especially to savages, whom he has fought many times. He was born in Jackson county, Missouri, on February 8, 1845. His father, John Fitzwater, was born in St. Louis county, Missouri, and his ancestors were among the earliest pioneers of that country. He died in 1856. He had married Miss Mary Johnson, who was also a native of Missouri, and who died when our subject was an infant. When J. K. was a small boy he went with his father to Nebraska City, Nebraska, where he received his education. In those early days the plains were filled with buffaloes and it was rare sport to get such large game. When twelve young Fitzwater was obliged to make his own living and from that time to the present he has maintained himself and made his own fortune. In 1859 he was engaged in freighting from Kansas City to Mexico and also from Nebraska City and Fort Leavenworth to other points on the frontier. He had many wild and trying experiences in these journeys and had many hand to hand fights with the vicious savages. On one occasion they stole all the stock of the train. This was on Pole Creek. Mr. Fitzwater traveled all over the west, having been in Texas, Mexico, Colorado, Wyoming, Montana, Idaho, Utah, California, Washington and Oregon, besides many other states and territories. After freighting for many years he settled to sheep raising in Wyoming, having also had some experience in mining. It was in 1880 when Mr. Fitzwater came to Oregon, and after cruising about for some time selected a location south from where Condon now stands. He handled his sheep there until about eighteen years since when he came to his present location, which is twenty miles west from Condon. He gave close attention to business, and has, therefore, been prospered in his labors. He now has two thousand acres of valuable land, a large band of sheep and considerable other stock and property. All this magnificent holding is the result of his labor and skill and Mr. Fitzwater has just reason to be proud of his success. All his life he has been on the frontier and has done nobly the arduous labors of the pioneer.

In 1877 Mr. Fitzwater married Miss Fannie Cornett, who was born in Jackson county, Missouri. Ed Cornett, her father, was a prominent man and crossed the plains in 1852. He made a great deal of money in the mines of California. To Mr. and Mrs. Fitzwater nine children have been born, Blanche, Grace, Bessie, Pearl, Beulah, Myrille, Robert, Hazel and Ruth.

JOHN C. SWEET resides at Arlington and is the earliest pioneer in the territory embraced in Gilliam county, now living. He was born in Bristol, Vermont, on February 12, 1836, his parents being Edward C. and Sylvia (Crane) Sweet, also natives of Vermont. Our subject spent twenty-one years in his native state, then came west, working for wages in Iowa and Minnesota for five years. In 1862 he crossed the plains with horse team and at the John Day river he met Leonard and Underwood, who were operating a ferry. They were the only men on the river. Our subject hired to them and worked for three years, then in June, 1865, he journeyed up the river to the mouth of Hay creek and took a homestead where William Smith now lives. This was the first homestead patented in the territory now embraced in Gilliam county. Mr. Sweet entered into partnership with David Gorman and began stock raising. They operated in a very modest way and as the years went by increased their herds until they owned four hundred cattle and a large number of horses. A deep snow and severe winter swept away three-fourths of these herds and then Mr. Sweet sold his part of the cattle to his partner. Mr. Gorman moved away and our subject began farming. He raised three crops, then sold his ranch to Layton Brothers, still retaining his horses. For three years he was occupied with the Layton Brothers, then he took charge of the Graham Brothers' saloon, at Arlington, while they were in Canada on a visit. In September, 1887, Mr. Sweet opened a saloon for himself, which he operated five years. Then he rented the bar of the Hotel Grand and conducted it until 1897, in which year he was taken sick. Owing to this illness he was obliged to relinquish his lease, and later removed to the Star saloon, where he has conducted business since. His place is known as an orderly house and he is one of the best known pioneers in Gilliam county.

On October 23, 1892, Mr. Sweet married Mrs. Rebecca French, nee Rice, who was born in Missouri in 1843. Mr. Sweet has one sister, Harriett C., wife of S. F. Everett. These two are the only survivors of a family of twelve children. In fraternal matters, Mr. Sweet is a member of the Foresters, and in politics he is a strong Democrat. During the years of this pioneer life Mr. Sweet has endured the hardships and deprivations that come in such a path, has assisted in developing the country, and is entitled to the credit history must give to those who opened this now prosperous country.

FRED T. GEORGE has had a varied experience in Oregon and has made a good record all along the line. He is now the proprietor of the only exclusive dry goods store in Arlington, and is doing a good business. He is a keen and reliable business man and has demonstrated his ability to make a success in his present capacity as he did in other lines in this state.

Fred T. George was born in Knox county, Ohio, on September 19, 1875. Thomas O. George was his father, and he, too, was born in the Buckeye State. His ancestors came to Ohio when it was a territory and his father, James George, the grandfather of our subject, settled where Columbus now stands. The family was a prominent English one and were early immigrants to the colonies. The mother of our subject's father kept a hotel in colonial times and often sheltered General Washington, and at times various ones of his officers and soldiers. Our subject's mother was Dora Hardesty, a native of Ohio. Fred T. was educated in his native state and there remained until thirteen when he came west, making the journey clear to Oregon. As soon as he landed here he sought a position as a cowboy and for eleven years practically lived in the saddle. He rode the entire range adjacent to this centre, and was well acquainted with all the leading men and stock operators of the regions. Unlike many of those who take up this life, Mr. George neither contracted bad habits nor did he spend his money recklessly. He was economical and carefully husbanded the hard earned wages and occasionally an opportunity presented itself to buy a small band of stock and ship it, and he did so, until he was well known as a stock shipper. He continued this with his cowboy life until 1898, when he went into partnership with another man and they opened a store in Arlington. It was a long jump to go from the camp life and the saddle to the proprietorship of a store without having had any experience in this business, but Mr. George did in this as he has done since and before, he began the study of the business and the methods and soon was master of the situation. In due time he bought the interest of his partner and he is now sole owner of the establishment which is a first-class dry good store favored with a fine patronage. Mr. George is well known and highly esteemed and wins many friends.

In 1900, Mr. George married Miss Estella F. Wood. Her father, John H. Wood, is a merchant in Arlington. He was born in Jackson county, Missouri, came to Portland in 1875 and in very early days came on to eastern Oregon. He did contracting in the Heppner country and is now a prosperous merchant here. Mr. and Mrs. George are popular young people and have won a good position in society, being surrounded with many warm friends.

HENRY S. MOORE resides some twelve miles southeast of Olex and devotes his attention to farming and stock-raising. He was born in Wabash county, Illinois, on May 4, 1838, the son of James and Margaret (Cummings) Moore. The former was born in Kentucky on March 16, 1808, and died November 16, 1897, in Wasco county, Oregon, aged eighty-nine years and eight months. The latter was born in Tennessee, in 1805, and died in 1872. They crossed the plains in 1853 and were pioneers to Oregon. Our subject moved to Illinois, on March 22, 1853, being then fifteen years of age, and with his parents and six brothers and sisters, made a trip across the plains with ox teams. They arrived in the Willamette valley on October 29, 1853, and there engaged in stock raising and farming. Their trip across the plains was about the same as other such journeys, except that they ran out of provisions and were forced to slaughter some of their stock, which was very poor. For two weeks they subsisted on this fare, then met a party on the Cascades who supplied them with flour. At the breaking out of the Rogue River war, in 1855, our subject and his father enlisted in Laben Bouy's Company and served nine months, or until the close of the war, being honorably discharged on July 3, 1856. Returning to the farm, our subject remained there until 1879, when he came to Rock creek and took a preemption, timber culture, and later a homestead. He still retains this property and has been engaged in stock raising and farming for twenty-five years. He has done his share to build up the country, to establish good government and to make it one of the good counties of the great state of Oregon. He has succeeded well in his labors and has also accumulated a fine property.

On December 25, 1862, in Lane county, Oregon, Mr. Moore married Miss Hannah Jane Miller, who was born in Indiana, on September 1, 1844. Her father, George Miller, was a pioneer to Oregon, having crossed the plains with his wife and children in 1847. He was born in September, 1804. His wife was Elizabeth Hyatt, who was born in 1807. Mrs. Miller was three years of age when this journey was taken and she remembers many of the incidents, especially that The Dalles was then only a trading post. Settlement was made near Albany, Oregon, and then they removed to Lane county, where she received her education, and in which place she was married. The wedding occurred in the little log cabin built by her brothers when they first came to the country. When our subject was first in Eugene it consisted of but two houses. Mr. Moore has the following named brothers and sisters: John, deceased; Henry, George, William, Mary J. Tilton, deceased, Lucinda, Hanna, Elizabeth Ann Park, and Hester C. Bryant.

In political matters Mr. Moore is a good, strong Prohibitionist. He joined the Church of Christ when he was eighteen years of age, and from that time until the present he has always labored for the spreading of the gospel and the upbuilding of the church. He is a good man, has many friends and has shown ability and enterprise since coming here.

GEORGE W. MOORE is one of the pioneers of Oregon and has seen a great deal of frontier life, having been in different sections of the northwest in various occupations. He was born in Illinois on January 5, 1842, and his parents are specifically mentioned in the biography of his brother, Henry Moore. He was eleven years of age when the family started across the plains to the Willamette valley in which place he completed his education, that was begun in Illinois. In 1862, in company with his brother, Henry, he took pack horses and a saddle horse between them and started for the Cariboo mines in British Columbia. He went as far as Antler creek and did considerable prospecting but met with no very brilliant success. Food stuff was a dollar a pound and meals two dollars and fifty cents each. Finally they sold their horses and packed their blankets and provisions back a distance of three hundred miles, then to the end of the journey, one hundred miles farther. On December 19, 1864, our subject enlisted in Company H, First Oregon Infantry, and served most of the time in Grant county. On January 19, 1866, he was honorably discharged and returned to the Willamette valley where he made his home for eleven years. Then he moved to Umatilla county and took up logging and sawmilling for six years. After that he came to Rock creek and engaged in stock raising and farming. In 1887, Mr. Moore journeyed to Ohio, and the next year came back to Rock creek. Then he went to Missouri, and again returned to Rock creek. After that, he moved to Grant county, and two years later took a homestead on Hay creek in Gilliam county. Later he sold that and has made his home where he now resides, since.

On January 14, 1872, Mr. Moore married Amanda Jane Howard, who was born in Missouri, in 1856.

In politics, our subject is a strong Republican, and he is a member of the Church of God.

WILLIAM P. WEST has the distinction of being one of the first men to settle in central Oregon, and there are, perhaps, not more than one or two now living in Gilliam county who came here as early as he. He is following farming and stock raising on a nice ranch some nine miles west from Olex. In 1863, over forty years since, Mr. West located a homestead on the place where he now lives and there took a timber culture claim. To this he has added by purchase until he owns eleven hundred and twenty acres of land. He also has a nice holding of cattle, horses and hogs.

William P. West was born on the little island of Bonholm, Denmark, on February 24, 1842. His father, Nelson Pederson, was born in the same place and married a maiden, who is also a native of that island. After receiving his early education in the place of his birth, our subject continued there until eighteen years of age. In the year 1859 he came to New York, and thence by rail to St. Louis, where he took a trip to Ft. Leavenworth. With twelve others, he there purchased a mule outfit and started for Pike's Peak, but en route they changed their mind and went to California. Mr. West worked at mining in Sierra county, California, until 1861, when he went to the South Fork of the Clearwater, in Idaho, and there he mined for two years. In 1863 he came to the place where he now lives and, as stated before, made location. From that time until the present he has been known as one of the progressive, substantial and capable men of Gilliam county, and has earned well the success he is enjoying at the present time. For many years he lived in this country where there were scarcely any comforts of civilization and withstood the attacks of the savages and the hardships that fall to the lot of the pioneer, weathering them with a spirit and fortitude that bespeaks the manner of man he is. He is well known all over the country, and as far as he is known is highly respected.

On April 30, 1876, on Rock creek, Mr. West married Miss Mary L. Mulkey, who was born in Josephine county, Oregon, on March 6, 1860. Her parents, Thomas and Hester (Arnquist) Mulkey, were born in Illinois on April 6, 1825, and in Missouri, on September 20, 1825, respectively. The latter died on September 1, 1888, the former on August 27, 1892. Mr. Mulkey was one of the oldest pioneers in southern Oregon, well known all over that section. He participated in the Rogue River war, and was a leading and prominent man. His father, Philip Mulkey, was born in Illinois, on October 27, 1802, crossing the plains in 1852 and settling in Lane county near where Eugene now stands. His death occurred in 1890. For sixty-five years he was a preacher of the gospel in the Christian denomination. With his son he assisted to drive the first stake in the town of Eugene, Oregon, and also transported the first goods from Portland to Eugene. To Mr. and Mrs. West the following named children have been born: John N. West, on May 1, 1878, and now he has two children, Wilbur and Alvis; Mrs. Nettie C. Cables, November 19, 1879, who has one child, Percy; Mrs. May Davis, on September 11, 1881, who has one child, Linn; Alice, on January 25, 1883, who died July 14, 1889; Clarence T., on August 1, 1884; Nellie B., on November 11, 1885; Miles A., on December 11, 1887; William L., on January 16, 1890; Ruby F., on November 14, 1892; Custer, on May 5, 1894; Alma, on August 29, 1895; Dewy, on February 20, 1898; Mary, on April 23, 1900; and Gladis, on July 17, 1902.

Mr. West is a Democrat and takes a keen interest in political matters. He is a member of the Lutheran church. He and his wife are excellent people and have hosts of friends all through the country. Mr. West has done his share in building up the country and is certainly entitled to the fine competence which his labor and skill wrought out in this section.

JOHN ALEXANDER RICHMOND has not been so long in Gilliam county as some of the older pioneers, still the enterprise he has manifested together with the interest taken in the welfare of the county and its building up, entitle him to a representation in any work that would mention the leading citizens here. He resides about eleven miles west from Condon on one of the choicest estates to be found in the county. It consists of three hundred and twenty acres of the most fertile land and is improved in becoming taste and with skill. Mr. Richmond is planning much further improvement for his ranch and under his skill this especially fertile spot will be made one of the best in the state. He is a man of enterprise and industry and labors assiduously in his chosen calling.

John A. Richmond was born in Ontario, Canada, on March 29, 1867, the son of Daniel and Flora (McArthur) Richmond. The father was born in the same locality as this son and was one of the wealthy agriculturists of his county. He possessed one of the best farms in the province. The mother was born in Scotland and came from a strong Scotch family. She came from the old country to Ontario when a girl and her people were among the most prominent in their locality. John A. was well trained by a wise and skillful father and his education was carefully looked after in his native place, Ontario, having schools which are the envy of every place where the English language is taught and being surpassed by none. When the days with school books were passed Mr. Richmond took up farming and wrought in his native place until 1900 when he decided to try the west. Accordingly he sought out the country which presented the most attractions, it being Oregon, and he first settled in Umatilla county. He purchased a ranch there and continued until 1902 when he came to his present place, he having previously looked over the country. He bought the farm where he now lives and to the cultivation and improvement of this since he has given his time and attention. Mr. Richmond takes great pride in doing everything right and bringing out the best from all his labors. This is one secret of his success. Mr. Richmond has one brother and three sisters, Mrs. Rebecca McDougall, in this county; Mrs. Jane A. Tompkins, in Ontario; Daniel, in Pendleton, Oregon, and Mrs. Libbie Fletcher, in Marion county, Oregon.

In 1898 Mr. Richmond took to himself a wife, the lady being Jessie McDonald, a native of Ontario, but descended from stanch Scotch people. Her immediate parents, Neil and Mary (McDonald) McDonald, were both born amid the rugged hills of Scotia and came to Ontario when young. In 1886 they came to Umatilla county, Oregon, and there they are prominent and wealthy people now. Mrs. Richmond has five brothers and sisters, all in Umatilla county, Oregon; Flora, Alexander, Duncan, Mrs. Katie Hurd and Daniel. Two children have been born to Mr. and Mrs. Richmond, John A. and Neil. Mr. Richmond has a fine property, knows well how to manage it, and is able to take advantage of the resources of this favored county. The result is he fast becoming one of the wealthy and leading men of the county.

HON. JAY BOWERMAN is a young man whose professional career has already placed him as a leading attorney of Gilliam and Wheeler counties. He is at the head of a large law practice and has shown himself a man of marked ability in this line. Winneshiek county, Iowa, is his native place and August 15, 1876, the date of his birth. His parents, Daniel and Lydia (Hoag) Bowerman, were born in Somerset county, Maine, and Vermont respectively. The former on September 22, 1835, and the latter on November 12, 1845. They now reside in Salem, Oregon. The public schools of Iowa furnished the earlier educational training of our subject and then he came on to Salem, Oregon, in 1893 with his people. There he attended the Williamette University, then entered the law department of the same institution, graduating in June, 1896. He passed the supreme court examination in October of that year, but was unable to get his diploma of admission to the bar until August, 1897, because he had not reached his majority until that time. He immediately entered upon the practice of law in Salem and vicinity and later associated himself with John McCourt until 1899. On March of that year he transferred his residence from the Williamette valley to Gilliam county and soon formed a partnership with H. H. Hendricks, with offices at Condon and Fossil. Since that time they have labored together and have gained a very large and lucrative practice. They handle the largest cases in these two counties and are among the leading legal representatives in this part of the state. Mr. Bowerman is a close student, possessed of a keen perception, and is a fine forensic orator, the result being that he has forged ahead in his profession with strong indication that he will be among the leading lawyers of the northwest.

On October 7, 1903, Mr. Bowerman married Miss Lizzie Hoover, a native of Wheeler county, Oregon, and the daughter of T. B. Hoover, one of the pioneer merchants of Fossil and now deceased.

Politically Mr. Bowerman is a Republican and very active. He has attended two state conventions and in June, 1904, was chosen from this district to the state senate.

In fraternal circles he is associated with the K. P., the Elks and the A. F. & A. M. Mr. Bowerman is a man of unswerving integrity and has won the esteem of all who know him, while also he has demonstrated his ability in his profession.

J. W. EBBERT. Some four miles northeast from Condon, one comes to the home of J. W. Ebbert, who settled here on the raw prairie sixteen years since. The country was new then and the settlers were scattering. Since that time, he has continued here and has wrought well in improving and building up his place, which in its measure has augmented the wealth of the county. Mr. Ebbert is a man past the proverbial three score years and ten, but is hale and hearty and has the vigor of many in middle life. His birth occurred in the vicinity of Uniontown, Pennsylvania, on August 21, 1832. James Ebbert was his father, and he was born in Uniontown. His father, the grandfather of our immediate subject, came from Germany and settled in Uniontown when it was small, being the first merchant in the town. Our subject's mother, Liza Devicman was born in Maryland, near the Potomac, and was of Irish ancestry. The first eighteen years of young Ebbert's life were spent in Pennsylvania and there he received his education. Then, owing to his mother's ill health, the family decided to come west. They took the trip to Iowa in wagon and in that territory they remained until April 14, 1852, which day marks the time of their starting for the great Pacific slope. With ox teams they made the journey, four months being the time occupied, and many exciting and pleasurable things occurred. Hostile Indians were seen hovering around much of the time and although the keenest watch was kept, still several times the stock was stampeded, but it was recovered again. They saw much game and had wild meat a great deal of the time. In due time they arrived in the vicinity of Eugene and there they settled to farming. That was the family home for all until seventeen years since, when our subject went to the Palouse country in Washington and farmed for a year. Then he came to the place where his home now is and selected the spot, taking it as a homestead. He succeeded in getting a cabin built and the wood for the winter hauled, and so commenced his life in Gilliam county. He took a timber culture in addition to the homestead and since then Mr. Ebbert has labored steadily in the cultivation of the farms. He also handles stock and has a splendid place supplied with an abundance of water.

In 1859, Mr. Ebbert married Miss Unicy Crabtree, who was born in Missouri, on March 20, 1840. Mrs. Ebbert's father, Zimri Crabtree, was born in Kentucky, pioneered to Missouri and later to Oregon. Eight children have been born to Mr. and Mrs. Ebbert: James E., Z. A., Mason, Roy, W. I., Mrs. Margaret Powers, Mrs. Eliza Winsonreed, and Lily May.

JESSE A. SIMMONS was born in the Willamette valley. His parents are William and Tryphena (Havisd) Simmons, and they are more fully mentioned in the biography of Byron Simmons, which appears elsewhere in this work. Our subject's education and youthful training were received in the Willamette valley and there he remained until 1899, when, in company with his brother, whom we have mentioned, he came across the mountains to seek a place in the fertile plains here spread abroad for the use of the worthy farmers. He selected a homestead twenty miles west from Condon, near his brother's place, and here he has devoted himself to farming and raising stock since the day of his settlement. He is an industrious and exemplary young man and has displayed the true grit that wins in the battle of life. Since coming here he has done well and is now one of the substantial men of the community.

As yet, however, Mr. Simmons has not seen fit to take a life partner and is enjoying still the quiet pleasures of the celibatarian while he is carving out his fortune from a fertile Oregon farm. He took it in the wild and has placed the improvements on it which are needed and is fast transforming it to be one of the valuable places of the vicinity.

Mr. Simmons has the following named brothers and sisters: Byron, who is mentioned elsewhere in this work, Murat, Napoleon, Bije, Eugene, Guy, Oscar, Hortense, Jophme and Jennie. Mr. Simmons is an active participant in the good labor of building up the county and always manifests a lively interest in political matters and educational affairs. He is progressive and well informed and is an enterprising man.

BYRON SIMMONS is a native son of Oregon. His birth occurred in the vicinity of Salem on September 10, 1872. His father, William Simmons, was born in Fort Wayne, Indiana, and crossed the plains with ox teams as early as 1845. In 1850, the next year after the memorable discovery of gold in California, Mr. Simmons went thither and did mining. Later he returned to the Willamette valley and settled on a donation claim near Salem where he remained until his death. He took the claim in the early fifties. He participated in the various Indian wars, including the Cayuse war, and was a staunch Indian fighter. He married Miss Tryphene Havisd, who was born in Pike county, Illinois. She came across the plains with her father and the balance of the family, except her mother, who had died previously. The journey was made in 1853, and when they reached the last crossing of the Snake river the father died leaving a family of ten children. Mrs. Simmons was then a girl of fourteen and she had a trying time in caring for her younger brothers and sisters. However, they reached the Willamette valley in due time and there she grew to womanhood and in 1855 was married to Mr. Simmons. Our subject was educated in the Willamette valley and there grew to manhood. He learned the art of farming and also was skilled in breeding stock. In 1899 he came to this side of the mountains and sought out the place where he now lives, which lies about twenty miles west from Condon. He took a homestead and since then has given his attention to farming and raising stock.

In 1898 Mr. Simmons married Miss Jane Brown, who was born in Lee county, Virginia, in October, 1880. Her parents are Richard and Sarah (Love) Brown, natives of North Carolina and Virginia respectively. They came to the Willamette valley in 1890 and made settlement on a farm where they remained until the death of the father in 1896. To Mr. and Mrs. Simmons three children have been born, Sarah, Clyde and Valentine.

SHERMAN JONES is one of the industrious tillers of the soil in Gilliam county and is also one of the enterprising citizens who is ever alert to bring his county to the front in proper ways. He was born in Henderson county, North Carolina, on December 26, 1867, the son of James and Caroline J. (Ward) Jones, natives of North and South Carolina, respectively. The father followed farming and participated in the Civil War. In 1882, he went to Texas, taking his family, and ten years later he removed thence to the Willamette valley and made settlement on a farm in Yamhill county. His ancestors were from Welsh ancestry and settled in North Carolina among the very first colonists. The mother was born of a prominent and old family and is still living in the Willamette valley. Our subject accompanied his parents in their various journeys and received his education from the schools in the places where he lived. He remained in the Willamette valley until 1897, when he came east of the mountains and sought out a homestead for himself. This place is about eighteen miles west from Condon, where Mr. Jones makes his home at the present time. He gives his attention to farming and stock raising and is doing well. His brother, Burns Jones, is with him and they have been associated together much of their life. He was born in Henderson county, North Carolina, on February 22, 1868. In 1885, he married Miss Annie Miller, a native of Nebraska. To them have been born four children, James and Joey, twins, Martha, and Bryan. Besides the brother mentioned, our subject has four other brothers, Webb, Butler, Alfred, and Hood, all living in the Willamette valley.

HON. W. L. WILCOX, of the firm of Stephenson & Wilcox, is a leading business man of Gilliam county. His firm is one of the representative business houses of the county, they are engaged in general merchandising, in which line they do a thriving trade.

W. L. Wilcox was born in Washington county, Oregon, on January 16, 1857, the son of C. D. and S. E. (Manning) Wilcox. The father was born in New York, in 1829, crossed the plains to Oregon in 1849, and, with his wife, is living in Klickitat county, Washington. They have been faithful pioneers and are worthy people. Our subject was educated in Portland and later took a course in a business college in The Dalles. He was employed by his uncle in the stock business east of the mountains for some time and in 1886, started in stock raising for himself. He also did a good business in shipping horses to the east and was one of the leading men in these industries in the county. In 1888 Mr. Wilcox was nominated by the Democratic party for the state legislature from this district and won the day by a handsome majority. He made a commendable record in the house and when his term was out there, it being 1890, he was chosen for sheriff of Gilliam county. For twelve years he held that office, which demonstrates both his great popularity as well as his faithfulness in the discharge of duties of trust. He was an efficient officer in every point and has shown an unswerving integrity and uprightness that commend him to all lovers of good. On August 1, 1902, Mr. Wilcox bought a share of the business conducted then by his partner, Mr. Stephenson, and together since that date they have handled the business, which is increasing all the time and is in a very prosperous condition. The firm is reliable and substantial and dispenses goods to all parts of the country adjacent to Condon.

On June 20, 1886, Mr. Wilcox married Miss Minnie A. Caven, a native of Kansas. Her father was J. J. Caven. Four children have been born to Mr. and Mrs. Wilcox: William, Alvin, Florence and Minnie.

JOHN SPENCER is a substantial farmer and stockman of Gilliam county and resides about eighteen miles west from Condon. He is a native of Toronto, Canada, and the date of his birth is November 27, 1848. His father was John Spencer, a native of Lancastershire, England, and his birth occurred on January 11, 1806. When a boy he was apprenticed to a farmer, but after toiling at that labor until he was eighteen, he severed his relations there and entered the British army. For twenty-five years, four months, and three days he was a faithful soldier, being stationed in various portions of the globe and acquiring a very extended experience. Then came his honorable discharge and he settled to farming in Canada in the forties. He had married while in the military service, Harriet Adams becoming his bride. She was born in Yorkshire, England. The death of the elder Spencer occurred in Canada, on August 6, 1885. Our subject was educated at Chatham, Ontario, receiving a splendid training. Then he took up farming and continued at it uninterruptedly until 1876, when he laid it aside for railroading. After a time in that line of enterprise, he joined the police force in Grand Rapids, Michigan, and served six years and nine months. Then he did farming again, this time, in Michigan. Thence he came west, and in 1898, he settled where he is now residing. He has a good farm and his sons have a half section besides, there also. Mr. Spencer is handling the entire estate and is one of the successful farmers here.

In 1871 occurred the marriage of Mr. Spencer and Mrs. Nina Dumford, who was born in Toronto, Canada, on October 12, 1845. Her parents were Charles and Mary A. (Hobbs) Elford. The mother was born in London, England. The father was born in Wiltshire, England, on May 3, 1806. He was a highly educated and prominent man. To Mr. Spencer and his wife five children have been born: William H., a chef at the Warwick hotel in Grand Rapids, Michigan; Walter E., a farmer in Oregon; Mrs. Mary Randall, Charles E., and George T. By her former marriage Mrs. Spencer has one son, Harry D., a coach inspector on the Grand Trunk railroad. Mr. Spencer inherited very little property from his father, and so what he now possesses is what he has acquired by his own labor and skillful management. He received as a more valuable legacy, however, an unsullied family name, which he has kept clean and bright since, being a man of unswerving integrity and uprightness. He has a high sense of his stewardship in this pilgrim way and a fine sense of honor. Mr. and Mrs. Spencer are highly esteemed people and have many friends.

JOHN ARTHUR RICHMOND, who is one of Gilliam county's prosperous farmers residing about fifteen miles west from Condon, is a native of Ontario, Canada, his birth occurring on November 10, 1853. Richard Richmond was his father, and he, too, was born in Ontario. He was a prominent and wealthy man and stood at the head of important and numerous large enterprises. He had started in life as a millwright and so successful was he that at one time he was the owner of a woolen mill, a flour mill, and oat meal mill, and a saw mill. He also owned a large and valuable farm. He had gone to Ontario with his father-in-law and received grants of land from the government. Later in life, he went to Iowa and there built a flour mill. He remained in that state until his death. He was of English ancestry and married Miss Laura Bowerman, who was born at Picton, Ontario, of German parents. She was an adherent of the Quaker church. Her father was also a mill owner and very wealthy. He sunk a large salt well which cost a great deal of money. Our subject was educated in his native place and after his father's death, went with his mother to Illinois. This was in 1859. In 1862, he returned to Ontario and there remained until 1885. In that year, Mr. Richmond decided to come west and accordingly we find him in Oregon soon. Pendleton was his first stopping place and there he wrought until 1888. That was the year when he took up his residence in Gilliam county, taking a homestead. He went to work with a will to make a good home, and as he was without capital, he was forced to labor hard and carefully to attain the end he had wished for. He soon was in a position to purchase other land and he now owns two sections of good land. He has devoted himself to farming and stock raising since the day of his settling here and in it all, while he has met with much adversity and many obstacles to overcome, he has achieved a splendid success.

He has a large number of cattle and horses. His place is a fine one and the improvements show a wisdom and thrift such as are required to build up a country.

In 1875, Mr. Richmond married Miss Mary J. Tompkins, who was born in Ontario. Her parents were Henry and Eliza J. (Stinson) Tompkins, natives of Ontario and Ireland, respectively. The father was very wealthy and prominent in Ontario. Six children have been born to this household, May, Mabel, Henrietta, Henry, Annie Laura, and Henry deceased. Mr. and Mrs. Richmond stand well in this community and are industrious and good people. Through their personal efforts they have acquired their wealth and their labors have stimulated others to worthy effort.

WILLIAM M. CORNETT is a venerable and highly esteemed citizen of Condon, where he is dwelling in retirement from the more active enterprises of life, after a long career of arduous labor and well spent years. He is a pillar in the Christian church, of which he is a steward, and during his life he has always shown forth those graces of the Christian religion in walk and precept, while also, he has labored wisely and well for the advancement of education in every way. He is worthy of the generous bestowal of confidence which is accorded him and his friends are numbered from every quarter.

William M. Cornett was born in Boone county, Missouri, on October 29, 1821, the son of John B. and Mary (Davis) Cornett. The former was born in Lee county, Virginia, in 1797 and was a veteran of the War of 1812. He fought with Jackson in the battle of New Orleans, and his death occurred on January 7, 1840. The mother was born in Warren county, Kentucky, and is now deceased. In the common schools of Missouri, our subject received his education and there grew to manhood. In 1853, he was selected captain of a train of forty wagons across the plains. The trip occupied five months and was made without accident or misfortune. He settled in Polk county, Oregon, and there farmed until 1880. Then he came to this county, Condon was not then in existence, and took a homestead near where Condon is now located. Afterward he bought forty acres and to the cultivation of these two hundred acres he gave his careful attention until 1901. In that year he sold his property and removed to Condon to enjoy the competence which his industry has provided.

On March 19, 1854, Mr. Cornett married Miss Nancy J. McCarty; the wedding occurring in Polk county. Mrs. Cornett was born in Jackson county, Missouri, on January 22, 1832. With her parents she crossed the plains in 1847. Their stock was stampeded once and broke things terribly, and while crossing the Snake, they were nearly drowned. But they reached their destination finally and she has done a noble part in the pioneer work of assisting to open up a great state. Her parents John and Rosanna (Wilburn) McCarty, were natives of Kentucky. The former was born in 1798 and died on March 24, 1891, while the latter was born on March 11, 1806, and died October 10, 1868. Mr. and Mrs. Cornett have the following named children, John O., Alexander W., Edward R., Eugene B., Frank D., Mrs. Emory P. Knox, Fred C., and Mrs. Annie Barker.

Mr. and Mrs. Cornett have passed the fiftieth milestone of their married life and during these long years they have shown forth a testimony for the faith that sustains them now and have done untold good. They have many warm friends and it is pleasant to see the old proverb exemplified in them, "The hoary head is a crown of glory if found in the way of righteousness."

MARY A. (FOSTER) YOUNG is a native of the great state of Oregon and has spent most of her life within its precincts. She is a daughter who brings credit to her native land and is one of the leading ladies of our county. Oregon City was her native heath and there she was reared and educated. Her father, Phillip Foster, was a native of Maine and came from a prominent family of that state. For years he was a leading merchant in his native place and finally decided to follow the Star of Empire to the west and accordingly as early as 1843 he embarked on a vessel and doubled Cape Horn, arriving in due time in Oregon. He selected a donation claim thirteen miles from the falls in the Willamette river, where Oregon City is now located and at once took up the pioneer's life. He continued in this place, giving attention to managing his estate, until his death, which occurred in 1884. He held various offices of public trust and was a man of prominence and influence in the Willamette valley. He had married Miss Mary C. Pettygrove, a native of Calais, Maine, and she accompanied him in his journeys. She came from an old and prominent family in Maine and was a faithful helpmeet to her husband all of his days. It required no small amount of courage and stamina to leave the old home and try one's fortune in the wilds of the great west. Oregon at that time was but a dim unknown country on the map and the savages were the masters. Still, these worthy pioneers braved the dangers, endured the hardships, and did a noble work in this western country.

Our subject remained at home during her early life and received a good education in the schools of the day. Then came her marriage to Thomas Young, who had crossed the plains in an early day and was one of the worthy pioneers of this state. In 1883, she came east of the mountains with her husband and they went to work with a will to make a fortune and a home for themselves. In this they succeeded well. Stock raising occupied them and owing to the skill and wisdom with which they prosecuted it, they were rewarded with handsome returns in a short time. They first lived in Heppner and later removed to Ferry Canyon. After the death of her husband, Mrs. Young managed a large ranch for a time and made a splendid success of it. She is a woman of ability and many graces and has won hosts of friends in this country.

JOHN R. WELLS is well known in Gilliam county. The fact that he has held the block in all the important auctions in the county for some time, makes him better acquainted than the ordinary individual. He resides about a mile northeast from Condon, where he owns two hundred acres of valuable land and also handles two and one-half sections of land to crops in addition. He raises considerable stock and is a thrifty and well fixed man.

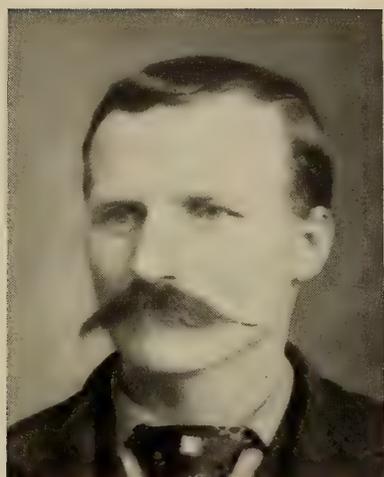

John R. Wells was born in Whiteside county, Illinois, on February 16, 1871. His father, John R. Wells, was born in Kentucky, and when twenty-five years old removed to Illinois. There he followed harness making. When the Civil war broke out he enlisted in a company at Sterling, Illinois, and led a band all through the struggle, serving his country well. He became a wealthy man before his death, which occurred in March, 1883. He married Miss Anna H. Reynolds, a native of Ft. Wayne, Indiana, the wedding occurring in Illinois. She came to Oregon in 1886, with her family, making settlement in the Willamette valley, where she lived until 1900, when she came to this part of the country. She took a homestead and has given her attention to supervising the improvements on it and to teaching, which occupation she has followed for twenty-two years. She is a highly educated lady and has made a good record as a teacher. She was superintendent of the Home of the Friendless in Springfield, Illinois, for a number of years. Our subject received his education in Sterling, Illinois, and in 1886 came to the Willamette valley with his mother. After he arrived at manhood's estate he commenced farming and stock raising, and that has been his business principally since that time. Mr. Wells also learned the art of butter making and was an expert at the business. In his younger years he was a foot racer and won many prizes. In 1897 he came to this vicinity and took a homestead, and since then he has continued here.

Mr. Wells married Miss Susie Stevenson, born June 29, 1882, in Indiana, and the daughter of James G. and Eliza Stevenson, natives of Indiana, and Cincinnati, Ohio, respectively. By a former marriage Mr. Wells has two children, Bessie M. and Almond V. Mrs. Wells is a highly educated lady and has taught school for several years. Mr. and Mrs. Wells have the confidence of the people, and he has labored with display of enterprise and industry here which have been rewarded with a good possession of property. He and his wife are valued members of society and have won many friends.

FRANK B. STEVENS, who was born in Illinois, on December 6, 1855, is now one of the leading citizens of Gilliam county, and resides about fifteen miles southeast from Condon. He has a magnificent estate of over two thousand acres and a fine herd of one hundred and fifty graded Shorthorns. The place is well improved and supplied with everything to handle a good farm and a first-class stock ranch. Mr. Stevens has shown an enterprise and skill in his labors that are justly rewarded by the prosperity he enjoys. Osias C. Stevens, the father of our subject, was born in New Hampshire, in 1809. He was a carpenter and architect and in 1835 went to New York, whence he journeyed later to Illinois, which was the family home until 1860. Then he went to Colorado county, Texas, until 1865, when he moved to Marshall, Texas, and a year later came via the isthmus to The Dalles, Oregon, arriving there on March 18, 1867. For four years he remained in that place then moved to Lone Rock, and six years later returned to The Dalles, which was his home until his death on September 1, 1894. He was a devoted man and a great worker in the church from the time he was fourteen years old until his death. For forty successive years he read the Bible from Genesis to Revelation, each year. This made him a remarkably well posted man, and being of a missionary spirit he did very much in spreading the gospel and building up the churches. On May 2, 1849, he married Miss Harriett N. Gould, who was born in Zanesville, Ohio, on October 30, 1831. She is living with our subject and is a remarkably well preserved lady for her age. Frank B. was educated largely after coming to The Dalles, Oregon, owing to the fact that there was not much chance for schooling in the south on account of the war. On May 14, 1870, he began to work for wages, continuing for six years. Then he and his brother, Charles B., took cattle on shares and continued steadily on in that business until they owned four hundred head. On May 27, 1896, they dissolved partnership and our subject retained the place where he now lives, and also some of the stock. Since then he has given especial attention to handling his herds and his estate and the result is that he is one of the wealthy men of Gilliam county.

On November 17, 1892, Mr. Stevens married Miss Lillian Rohrer, who was born in Mt. Vernon, Illinois, on March 28, 1861. Mrs. Lillian R. Stevens taught five years in the public schools of Illinois and in November, 1887, came west to Oregon and in this state she has taken a leading part in public school work. She assisted materially to grade the schools of Grant and Gilliam counties and has served ten years on the teachers' examining board of Gilliam county. She also enjoys the distinction of being the only woman ever placed in nomination on the Republican ticket for school superintendent of this county. She holds a life diploma from the state of Oregon and has been a leading educator. Mrs. Stevens owns a half section of land in this county which she leases. She also owns much suburban property in Portland, including some three acre tracts, and twenty-five lots. Politically she is a strong Republican and has always been enthusiastic in the campaigns. She belongs to the Eastern Star order, and is a prominent and highly esteemed lady. Her father, John Rohrer, was born in Shawneetown, Illinois, on October 22, 1817. He was an extensive stock raiser and land owner and died on December 5, 1885, in Jefferson county, Illinois, on the home farm, where all his children were born and reared. He had married on May 2, 1848, Margaret Warren, also a native of Shawneetown, Illinois, the date of her birth being October 27, 1825, and she died on October 30, 1894. Mr. Stevens has two brothers, Charles B., and Alonzo C., stockmen in this county. To Mr. and Mrs. Stevens was born on December 10, 1894, John Caswell, who died the same day. He was buried in the family lot in Sunset cemetery, The Dalles, Oregon.

Mr. Stevens is a member of the W. W., the Maccabees and the A. F. & A. M., belonging both to the Blue Lodge and the Royal Arch degree of the latter order. He is also a member of the Eastern Star. In politics, Mr. Stevens is a strong Republican and active. When he first came here, there were but four families in this region and the nearest postoffice was John Day Bridge, sixty miles away. Their trading had to be done at The Dalles, which was one hundred miles distant. Those pioneer days saw much hardship and much arduous labor, but our subject was equal to the occasion and is to be classed as one of the builders of the country.

Mr. Stevens is one of the best posted men in the historical events of the country to be found within the precincts of this county. His memory of dates is especially accurate and he has taken a great interest in these affairs and has perfected himself in it to a marked degree.

PEMBERTON F. CASON is a pioneer of many sections and has done the work of the frontiersman in a worthy manner. The result is that today he is reaping the rewards of his labors and is in possession of much property. He owns a choice ranch of over five hundred acres of fertile grain land about ten miles west from Condon, besides much stock. He has his place well improved and is an enterprising and thrifty farmer.

Pemberton F. Cason was born in Morgan county, Missouri, on February 16, 1843. Seth Cason was his father and he came as a pioneer to Missouri. His father, the grandfather of our subject, had fought under General Jackson in the War of 1812. His grandfather, the great-grandfather of our subject, was a patriot under General Washington in the Revolution. He married Miss Sarah Woods, who was born near Wheeling, Virginia. She went to Missouri with her husband, who died soon after arriving there. She remained a widow for some years and then married Mr. John Hook, a native Kentuckian. In 1864 the family came across the plains and settlement was made in Marion county, Oregon. There the parents remained until their death. After he had seen the family well settled, our subject started out for himself. His education had been obtained in Missouri, but owing to the short and poor schools on the frontier in Missouri, he had little chance to perfect himself. This lack, however, he has well made up for in careful observation and study in later years. As stated, he assisted the family to get settled and then he went to the Idaho mines. A year later he came to Linn county, Oregon, and after that he journeyed south to Arizona. There he wrought as a government freighter for five years. After this we find him in California. When Mr.

Cason crossed the plains he came through the territory now embraced in Gilliam county and he never could quite forget the fertile prairies and magnificent opportunities here offered the industrious man. Consequently he gave way to the impression and made his way back to this place in 1881. He settled first in a good location two miles south from his present home. Then he selected his present place and since that time has given his attention to the work here. He has now everything convenient and has prospered well. In early days Mr. Cason had much experience in fighting Indians, and it was necessary in those days each man should always be on the lookout for the treacherous savage. The nearest supply point was The Dalles, nearly two hundred miles distant. But he weathered the storms, braved the dangers and is now favored with a competence for his earthly days.

In 1873, Mr. Cason married Miss Martha Thompson, a native of Oregon. She died in 1874. Her parents were Joseph and Elizabeth (Donohue) Thompson, early pioneers to Oregon, and prominent and cultured people.

THOMAS DILLON is to be classed as one of the leading men in Gilliam county, since he has shown his ability in managing the resources of the land in such a way as to win for himself a fine fortune, since, also, it is evident to all, he is one of the men of wisdom and integrity. And since, too, he has been a liberal donator to all good causes and has labored for the upbuilding of the county in every way. He is a man of vast experience in the west and has travelled over a large portion of the Pacific slope. He came when the country was new and knows by experience what it is to be a frontiersman in one of the wildest regions of the west.

Thomas Dillon was born in Ireland and comes from a good Irish family, being a scion in which have been exemplified the noble characteristics of his race. He is possessed of the native generosity and kind heartedness of his people and with true loyalty has shown himself an American worthy of the Stars and Stripes. His parents were Peter and Margaret (Hays), Dillon, natives of Ireland and immigrants to the United States in the early forties. Our subject was imbued with the spirit of adventure and was with the family when they came to this county. Settlement was made in Kentucky, where he remained until 1856, when he took the western fever, which was only to be cured by an extended trip hither, which has now grown into a permanent residence. He landed in California.

and was soon in the midst of the humming mining camps. He followed that exciting life for some time and then, upon the discovery of gold on the Fraser river, went thither. For some time he labored in those diggings and was successful in a measure. Finally tiring of the hardships of mining, Mr. Dillon determined to settle down in life and began the search for a suitable place. He finally lighted on the country embraced in Gilliam county now. This was in 1878, and he at once decided he had found the place he was searching for, and settled down. He went to work for wages and soon had sufficient money to purchase a band of sheep and some land. He had been occupied as a sheep herder and persisted in that trying occupation until he had gained the money mentioned, when he started in to raise stock for himself. He made a success of his first venture and soon had purchased more land. He continued that policy until he secured fourteen hundred and forty acres of valuable land, which is his home estate at this time. It is situated about eight miles northwest from Condon, and is a place of value. He has accumulated a good fortune and while doing it has, also, won the respect of the people, being a man of strict honesty and integrity, always kindly disposed to his fellow beings and ready to give a helping hand. The success he has gained stamps Mr. Dillon as one of the best financiers of this county and it is an achievement in which one may take a laudable pride. He is public minded and labors for the advancement of the community and the upbuilding of the country.

W. L. BARKER, who is at the head of a large implement and hardware business in Condon, is one of the early settlers in Gilliam county and has done a lion's share in the development of its resources and in augmenting its wealth. He is a man of stamina and keen business ability and if one good quality shows more than another, it is his tenacity and determination to hold to a line of enterprise until he makes it a splendid success. This is the true spirit that wins the laurels in life and it is well exemplified in our subject.

W. L. Barker was born in Athens, Maine, on January 8, 1858, the son of Charles F. and Sila (Libby) Barker, both natives of Maine. The mother died there on February 15, 1858, but the father is still living in his native state. Our subject was well educated in his home place and in the great centennial year he started west with the determination to do for himself and win the smiles of the goddess of fortune. After a short time in Iowa, Mr. Barker was filled with the idea of seeing Oregon and soon he was in the central part of the state. In 1877 he landed in what is Gilliam county, now, and at once took up the stock business. The next year, 1878, the Indians were on the warpath in many sections and all the settlers, with the exception of four besides Mr. Barker, went to The Dalles. These five brave men watched with care for weeks and looked after the stock left behind. For three weeks they slept on their picket ropes, but the time passed without the appearance of the savages and they saved the stock. For fifteen years Mr. Barker continued in raising stock and all the time was winning good success. Then he turned his attention to farming and for a decade followed that with good prosperity. During his time he handled three thousand acres. It required forty head of horses to plow the land and other things in proportion. However, Mr. Barker was able to manage the establishment with such wisdom that he had good returns. He usually fed his grain to stock, and especially hogs. On one occasion, he drove two hundred and forty hogs to Arlington without the loss of an animal, a record which is seldom equaled. In April, 1903, Mr. Barker decided to embark in the mercantile business and accordingly opened his present business. He carries a stock from fifteen to twenty thousand dollars worth and has the best the market affords for the uses of this county. He is well and favorably known all over the county and the surrounding country and the result is that he has a large and ever increasing trade.

In 1881, Mr. Barker married Miss Anna Cornett, who was born in the Willamette valley, the daughter of William and Mary J. (McCarty) Cornett, who are mentioned specifically in another portion of this work. Seven children have come to bless the household, and they are named as follows: Emma J., Cora, Frank, Mabel, Florence, Josie and Beulah. Mr. Barker has two brothers, S. B. and Lewis, who are engaged in the stock business in Wyoming, and two, Austin and Charles, who are farming in Maine. Fraternally, he is affiliated with the W. W., the A. O. U. W., the circle, and the Degree of Honor. Mr. Barker is spoken of everywhere as a good man, a patriotic citizen and a kind and loving father and husband. He has certainly made the best of provision for his loved ones, for he carries twelve thousand dollars of life insurance in various lines. Six thousand of this is in the New York Equitable. In financial matters, Mr. Barker has won the best of success and his good example has also stimulated many others to better effort. He is one of the leading men of the county, is always interested in what is for the welfare of all, is broad minded and a genuine westerner, of the generous, genial and open hearted kind, who wins and holds your friendship, simply because of his worth and excellent qualities.

HUGH C. STRICKLAND devotes himself to farming and raising stock. He resides about five miles northwest from Condon, and there owns an estate of fourteen hundred acres. It is a valuable property and has been made much more so by the wisdom and thrift of the owner. Eight hundred acres were cropped to wheat this year and the bounteous harvest demonstrated the skill of Mr. Strickland. He is known as one of the leading citizens of Gilliam county and has done very much to build up the county and bring it to its present prosperous condition. He is a stimulus to good labors, as he is always striving for the best. He takes great pride in raising good stock, in tilling the soil in the best manner, in improving in the best way and in fact, he is a man with an ideal of the perfect and constantly strives for the attainment of his ideal. This has stimulator others to good action and Mr. Strickland is to be greatly commended for his efforts in these lines.

Hugh C. Strickland was born in Portland, Oregon, on January 2, 1856, being thus both a native of the Web-foot State and one of its earliest pioneers. William Strickland, a native of Virginia, was his father and he was a true frontiersman. He removed from his native state to North Carolina when a young man and thence he journeyed to the territory of Iowa in the early thirties. After nineteen years of life there, he came on across the plains in the memorable forty-nine. He was accompanied by Charles Denton and wintered the first winter on Fifteenmile creek, now in Wasco county. The snow fell to a great depth that year and they lost all their stock. In 1852, Mr. Strickland determined to try the Willamette valley and accordingly went to where Portland now stands and took a donation claim. A portion of that great city now stands on this ground. Finding it a terribly hard task to clear the heavily wooded land and being obliged to raise food for his family he abandoned the claim and went to Clackamas county and took land. That was his home until 1872, when he sold and came back east of the mountains, settling in Wasco county. He purchased land and lived on it until called away by death in 1879. He was aged seventy-six at that time and was a highly respected man. He had undergone all the hardships known to the pioneer and was a good man, a bold Indian fighter, and a true blue frontiersman. He had married Miss Elizabeth Willis, a native of Des Moines county, Iowa, and she crossed the plains with her husband and participated in his life until his death. Her first child was born while they were crossing the plains. She died in 1889, aged sixty-three. Our subject was educated in the Willamette valley and in 1873 came to Wasco county and remained one winter with his father at Barlow gate. The next year he came where he now lives and took a homestead, and since that time he has continued here. This makes Mr. Strickland one of the earliest pioneers of this county and one of the oldest settlers.

In 1889, Mr. Strickland married Miss Jessie M. Becker, the wedding occurring in Aberdeen, South Dakota. Mrs. Strickland's parents are Joseph and Lucy Becker, natives of Toronto, Canada. She also was born in Toronto, Canada, and came thence with her parents when a small girl to Dakota. Two children are the fruit of this union, Hazel M. and Genevieve. Mr. Strickland is a member of the I. O. O. F. He started in life without capital and is now the possessor of much property, all accumulated by his own labors and skill. He and his wife have a lovely home, supplied with spring water and all conveniences, and they are leading people in the county and have a great many friends.

JOSEPH F. WOOD, M. D. Condon is to be congratulated in having in her midst an up-to-date and skillful physician who has won prized laurels in various specialties of his profession. Dr. Wood's office is as well equipped as could be found in this part of the state. He has everything needful and known to the practice, including static and X-ray electrical machines. He is a man of enterprise and energy and keeps fully abreast with the advancing science of medicine thus bringing to his humblest patient the best that the world produces in the art of curing. Dr. Wood is very popular and rightly so and during the years of his stay in Gilliam county, has won the confidence of all who know him, besides a very fine practice.

Joseph F. Wood was born in Monmouthshire, Wales, on March 21, 1876. His father, William Wood, was born in the same country on July 21, 1852, and emigrated to the United States in 1880. He settled in Ohio and followed his trade, that of machinist, for one year then came to Grant's Pass, Oregon, where he resided for nine years. After that, he moved to Portland and continued in the prosecution of his business until his death in October, 1898, which resulted from the explosion of the boiler on a torpedo boat in the Columbia river. He had married Harriett Bazley, who was born in England in 1853 and is now living in Condon. Our subject was well educated, receiving a diploma in due time from the Portland high school. Immediately subsequent to that, he entered the medical department of the University of Oregon, and in 1900 graduated therefrom with honors. For one year he was consulting physician and surgeon of the Portland hospital and then served as ship's physician one trip to China and Japan. Upon his return in December, 1901, Dr. Wood located in Condon. He immediately received practice which has constantly grown until he is now a busy man. The doctor is very careful to keep himself thoroughly conversant with medical lore and is a great student. He is an original thinker, quick to act, and the result is, he is becoming one of the most successful physicians of the state.

On February 15, 1904, Dr. Wood married Miss Mary C. Maddock, who was born in Gilliam county, the daughter of John Maddock, one of this county's earliest pioneers. In fraternal affiliations, we find the doctor associated with the Royal Arch Chapter of Masons, the K. P., the W. W. and A. O. U. W. He is a genial and popular man taking a keen interest in all matters for the welfare of the town and county and gives of his time, greatly to assist any enterprise that is for the good of all.

CHARLES W. GROSS is one of Gilliam county's representative citizens, and his home is about two miles northwest from Condon. He possesses an estate of three hundred and forty acres of valuable land and has made it a productive and good farm. All improvements needed have been supplied and Mr. Gross is a skilled and successful farmer. He was born in Hawkins county, Ohio, on August 13, 1853, the son of Andrew and Sarah Gross. The mother died when this son was a small child. The father, who was born in Ohio, now dwells in Brownsville, Oregon. When our subject was very small, he accompanied his father to Dallas county, Iowa, where they resided until 1863. Then they crossed the plains with teams to California, and two years later they journeyed on to Linn county, Oregon. The father followed farming and mechanical work. Charles W. was educated in the various places where they resided, and in Brownsville he completed the training in this line. He had very poor privileges to study and secured his education only by virtue of determination and especial study. In 1871, he came with his father to Athena, Oregon, and remained with him until of age. Then he started in life for himself. His only capital was a pair of good strong hands and an unswerving determination to find a place and make a good home. He wrought on the farms around Athena for a time, and in 1886, believing better opportunities awaited him in the west, he came hither and located his present place as a homestead. He has added the balance of the estate by purchase since and made it a choice place. Mr. Gross is widely known in this part of the state and is a man in whom all have confidence. He is worthy of this distinction, owing to uprightness and uncompromising integrity, which characterize him. He has the faculty of making friends and keeping them, too, and his sagacity and excellent judgment give him a prestige in the community that is enviable.

Mr. Gross has three children, William, Bertha and Minnie.

The pathway that Mr. Gross has trodden has been a very rough one at times, but he has always developed the sturdiness and stability requisite to overcome, and the result is that he deserves commendation much more than one who has smooth sailing. He started with hard work and has been an industrious man since and the habits of self-reliance and the resourcefulness developed by trying circumstances have rendered him a broad-minded and deep thinking man. Withal, he has gained a good holding of property and is a leading man in the community.

EDWARD DUNN, one of the leading business men of Condon, is also one of the early pioneers of the country now embraced in Gilliam county. He is owner and operator of the mercantile establishment which has been brought to its present prosperity through his skillful and careful efforts. He has a large well selected stock of groceries, dry goods, clothing, gents' furnishings, boots, shoes, hardware, farming implements and so forth, and the goods from his warehouse and shelves find their way to all parts of the country adjacent to Condon. By fair dealing, by strict business methods and by a desire to please and accommodate the people, he has secured a fine patronage and won many friends besides.

Edward Dunn was born in Monroe county, Michigan, on April 14, 1865. His parents, John and Mary (Cunningham) Dunn, were born in Kings county and Monaghan county, Ireland, respectively. The date of the father's birth was 1825, and he emigrated to the United States in 1836. Settlement was made in Michigan where he did farming until his death in 1885. The mother came to the United States when eighteen years of age, was married on November 6, 1849, in Michigan, and died in 1900.

The common schools of Michigan supplied the educational training of our subject, and when the time of his majority had arrived he had fully decided to try the west and accordingly came on to Oregon. He finally located in Gilliam county, March, 1887, being the date. It was very wild at that time and the settlers were few. Mr. Dunn gave his attention to stock raising and teaching school. He continued in this occupation for about six or eight years, then opened business in Condon. When he first came, Condon consisted of four buildings. Mr. Dunn decided to try the mercantile business but had small capital and consequently was obliged to start in very moderately. He had not long to wait, however, for business soon began to come and from that time until the present it has constantly been increasing until he now has one of the finest stores in the county.

On August 27, 1894, Mr. Dunn married Miss Cordelia Keizur, who was born in Oregon and raised in this county. Her father was one of the earliest pioneers of Oregon, and is still living in the Willamette valley. Four children have come to bless this household, John, Mary, Edward and Agnes.

Mr. Dunn has always been a very progressive and enterprising man, consequently has had much to do with politics and other things in the county. He is allied with the Democratic party and in June, 1902, was elected judge of Gilliam county, a majority of two hundred and fifty showing his popularity.

AMON HARTMAN, who resides about three miles northwest from Condon, is one of the representative men of this county and is also one of the wealthy farmers and stockmen who have won their success here. He is to be commended on the record which he made in fighting for his country in the time of fratricidal strife, and especially so, when we consider the great dangers he had to undergo in getting to a place where he could safely stand under the stars and stripes. An account of his life will be read with interest by all.

Amon Hartman was born in Adams county, Illinois, on March 20, 1849. Henry Hartman, his father, was born in Ohio, and when fourteen came to Illinois where he lived until he crossed the plains in 1852, with his family, by team, settling in Oregon. There he took a donation claim near Albany and for six years gave his attention to farming. During this time he served in the Indian war of 1856. Finally he sold out in Oregon and purchased a band of sheep which he took to California and sold. After that he went to Texas with a pack train, taking his family, and made settlement in the western portion of that great state. He gave his attention to stock raising until the war broke out. Then he wished to join the union army, but the only way to get to union ground was to go through Mexico, which he did, accompanied by our subject. They made their way down through Mexico, found an English schooner chartered by the United States going to New Orleans and embarked and there enlisted in the First Texas Cavalry, Company A, in 1863. The father was killed while serving as a spy, but our subject served on through his time. Following the war, he returned to the old home in Texas. His mother was Eliza (Wells) Hartman, and she was born and reared in Adams county, Illinois. In 1873, Mr. Hartman removed from Texas to Yuba county, California, whence ten years later, he came to what is now Gilliam county. Here he looked over the country and that adjacent for two years and in 1885 took a homestead where he is now located. Since then he has purchased other land, having now about five hundred acres. Mr. Hartman has always lived on the frontier and is a man of stability and endurance.

In 1867, Mr. Hartman married Miss Laura Dunn. She was born in Bossier parish, Louisiana, and removed to Texas with her parents when a girl. They are George and Martha Dunn. The father died when a young man. Mr. and Mrs. Hartman have three children, Henry W., farming near by; John E. and Ernest H. Mr. Hartman is a member of the I. O. O. F., and evinces a lively interest in political matters and educational affairs.

HANS K. WEST is an example of what a man can do in the fertile regions of Gilliam county. He resides about three miles northwest from Condon, where he has a fine farm, and which has been gained, together with all his other property in this section, by his own unaided efforts since coming to this state. He is a man of energy and wise judgment, as is evinced by his various moves in the business world, and by the success that has crowned his efforts.

Hans K. West was born in Waupaca county, Wisconsin, on August 16, 1874. His father, Peter N. West, was born in Denmark and came with his family to Wisconsin in 1874. He settled on a farm, and later brought the family to Dakota. His death occurred in 1886, and his wife, Mary (Davidson) West, died two years later. She was also a native of Denmark. Hans K. was educated in Kingston county, Dakota, mostly, although he secured one year's training since he came to this state. It was 1891 that he came to Oregon and cast his lot in this resourceful region east of the Cascades. With four brothers and one sister, he settled in Sherman county and together they wrought until 1898. In that year, Mr. West came to the place where he now lives and took a homestead, adding a half section by purchase. He started without means and took hold with the determination of making, from the raw land, a good home and a valuable farm, which he has accomplished in first-class shape. His property is now worth much money and he has fitted it up in good shape.

In 1901, Mr. West married Miss Emma F. Moore, a native of Iowa. Her parents are mentioned elsewhere in this work. To this union two children have been born, Merle B., and Gladys Muril. Mr. and Mrs. West are young people of excellent standing in the county and have won the esteem and confidence of all. They are enterprising, well informed and progressive people, and manifest intelligent interest in public affairs and educational matters.

SAMUEL A. PATTISON, editor of the Condon Globe, which voices the interests of Gilliam county with no uncertain sound and is recognized by the exchanges as a "live paper," is one of the leading citizens of this part of Oregon. He is a gentleman of culture and possessed of that geniality which wins friends, while his fearlessness in matters of principle, speaks of the Puritan principles of our Atlantic seaboard.

Samuel A. Pattison was born in Ohio county, West Virginia, on November 17, 1860. His father, Thomas Pattison, was born in the same house as our subject, and the date of the event was 1802. He was a well-to-do and prominent farmer. Owing to his stanch union principles in the time of the Rebellion, he deemed it best to build on another portion of his farm, which lay both in Pennsylvania and West Virginia, accordingly, he then became a citizen of the Keystone State. His father, John Pattison, grandfather of our subject, was born in Pennsylvania, and came to that part of Virginia with the first settlers. He was a minister of the gospel and an adherent of the Presbyterian church. He also held a professorship in one of the leading colleges of the country. His father, the great-grandfather of our subject, was the first of the Pattison family that came to America. He owned the land where St. John, New Brunswick, now stands. He later sold his property there and came to Pennsylvania. The mother of Samuel A. was Jane. (Humphrey)

Pattison. She was born on the farm adjoining the one where our subject was born, and her father, Robert Humphrey, was a wealthy and respected agriculturist of that county. His father, John Humphrey, was among the first settlers of Ohio county, and a famous Indian fighter. He fought in the Revolution along with Lafayette, and was personally acquainted with that gentleman. Samuel A. was educated partly in West Virginia and partly in Pennsylvania, and in 1885 moved west to Nebraska. He soon returned to his native heath, and in 1889 came west again and for a time was a commercial traveler in Nebraska. In the fall of 1889 he came to Wyoming and into Newcastle on the first passenger train coming in there. In 1891, he journeyed on west to Idaho and embarked in the newspaper business. In 1898, he sold his interests in that state and came to Condon, where he bought the Condon Globe, the oldest paper in the county. Since then he has made interesting reading for the people of this county and has shown them he is a loyal champion for the county.

In 1894, Mr. Pattison married Miss Hattie Stone, who was the first white child born in Placerville, Idaho. She was highly educated and for twelve years had been one of the leading educators of the state. Two children have been born to this union, Everett, and Catherine.

Mr. Pattison is a member of the I. O. O. F., and also belongs to the grand lodge.

G. G. PARMAN is one of Gilliam county's leading citizens. He is a heavy real estate owner and divides his time between farming and stock raising. His place lies just northwest from Condon and is a splendid estate. To add to its value, Mr. Parman has provided all the improvements that could be needed in the enterprises he is following. It is one of the tasty and neat appearing places in the county. The home residence is a modern structure, perhaps exceeded by no other dwelling in this county. Mr. Parman is a man who displays great taste and good judgment and the success he has attained in life is not the blunderings happenings of "luck," but the sure outcome of a well defined policy which he has followed with a tenacity and sagacity that could but woo and win the goddess of fortune.

G. G. Parman was born in Gentry county, Missouri, on November 22, 1849. His parents, George and Liddie (Myers) Parman, were natives of Indiana and came to Missouri in early days. They followed farming there until 1857, when the father transferred his residence to the vicinity of Lawrence, Kansas. When that country was raided by Quantrell, the father joined the Ninth Kansas Cavalry and served until his death, which was caused by exposure and trying hardships. Returning home, it was endeavored with all the skill possible to nurse him back to health, but the strain had been too great, and death claimed him, a martyr to his country. The mother died in 1861. Our subject was educated in Kansas and when of age selected a homestead one hundred miles east from Wichita and there made his home until 1882. That year saw him selling his property in the east and preparing for a journey to the west. His ideas were well defined for Oregon, but the especial section was still in doubt. He reached the Web-foot State in due time and for two years looked over the country. Finally, in 1884, he selected this place where he now resides and took steps to secure a home. He at once began farming and raising stock, and to these related occupations he has given his attention since. From time to time Mr. Parman has purchased land and now his estate is very large.

In 1874, Mr. Parman married and his wife died here. In 1893, he married a second time. He has five children, Mrs. Julia Myer, Mrs. Ethlin E. Dennis, Mrs. Hellen Simson, George and Lloyd. For the encouragement of those who start life without means, it is well to remark that Mr. Parman started out, bereft of his parents when young, and embarked on life's uncertain seas, a poor boy. He made a study of the things that brought success and the result is he has won that for which he labored and is one of the leading men today in this county.

JAMES McLELLAN JOHNS, the editor of the Arlington Record, is a leading man in Gilliam county. His paper is a bright and newsy sheet, bearing the marks of ability and devotion to his county and principles while it has won its way into the hearts of the people and has placed its editor in an influential and enviable position. In addition to handling his paper, Mr. Johns gives attention to the practice of law, and is a successful pleader at the bar. He is a man of keen perception and not slow to take advantage of the weight of reason and right and in all his ways so conducts himself that he is highly respected and esteemed.

James McLellan Johns was born in Wayne county, Ohio, on August 9, 1834. His parents were Jacob and Sarah (Adams) Johns. The former was born in Pennsylvania on July 4, 1808, and was descended from Welsh ancestry that came to the colonies with William Penn. He was a strict adherent of the Quaker church. The mother of our subject was a cousin of the noted John Quincy Adams. Her father, James Adams, was a brother of President John Adams, so Mrs. Johns' uncle and cousins were both presidents of the United States. James Adams was a stanch Presbyterian minister. He married Miss Margaret McClellan, an aunt of General George B. McClellan. Thus it is seen that Mr. Johns comes from strong and prominent families on both sides of the house, and he has so kept the family name in his career that untarnished he will hand it to his descendants. James M. was educated in public and private schools in Ohio, and in 1853 he went with his parents to Indiana. The next year we find him in Kansas, where he taught school. Later he journeyed to Jackson county, Missouri, continuing in the work of the educator. There, in 1856, he was married to Miss Elizabeth Darby, a native of Kentucky. Two years later they came to Marion county, Oregon, via the isthmus and there Mr. Johns took up teaching again. After a while he started in the mercantile business at Scio, Linn county. Later he went to Marion, Oregon, and erected a large grain warehouse. This was the first warehouse in the Willamette valley, and Mr. Johns assisted to purchase the first ship cargo of wheat that was shipped from Portland to Liverpool, England. While residing in the Willamette valley Mr. Johns educated his children at the Willamette University, and in 1884 he came thence to Gilliam county. He took government land and engaged in farming until 1890. In that year his wife was called away by death and the farm did not appeal any more to Mr. Johns as a home, and accordingly he removed to Arlington and took up the practice of law, which he had been perfecting himself in for some years previous, and also began editing the journal where he is still writing. In politics, Mr. Johns is a stanch Republican and a regular wheel horse in the campaigns. He is well informed in political lore, is abreast of the questions and issues of the day, is a good orator, and wields a ready pen. For two years here he has been postmaster. Fraternally, Mr. Johns is a member of the A. F. & A. M.

In 1893, Mr. Johns contracted a second marriage, Mrs. Margaret Biggs, nee Baldwin, becoming his wife. They were young folks together in Indiana. Mrs. Johns has one son by her former marriage, George Biggs, a leading merchant in Arlington. By his first marriage Mr. Johns has the following named children: Charles A., a leading attorney in Baker City, Oregon; Cato J., a prominent merchant in Sumpter, Oregon; Mrs. Viola McKinney, in this county; Mrs. Dorcas Neal, in Harney county,

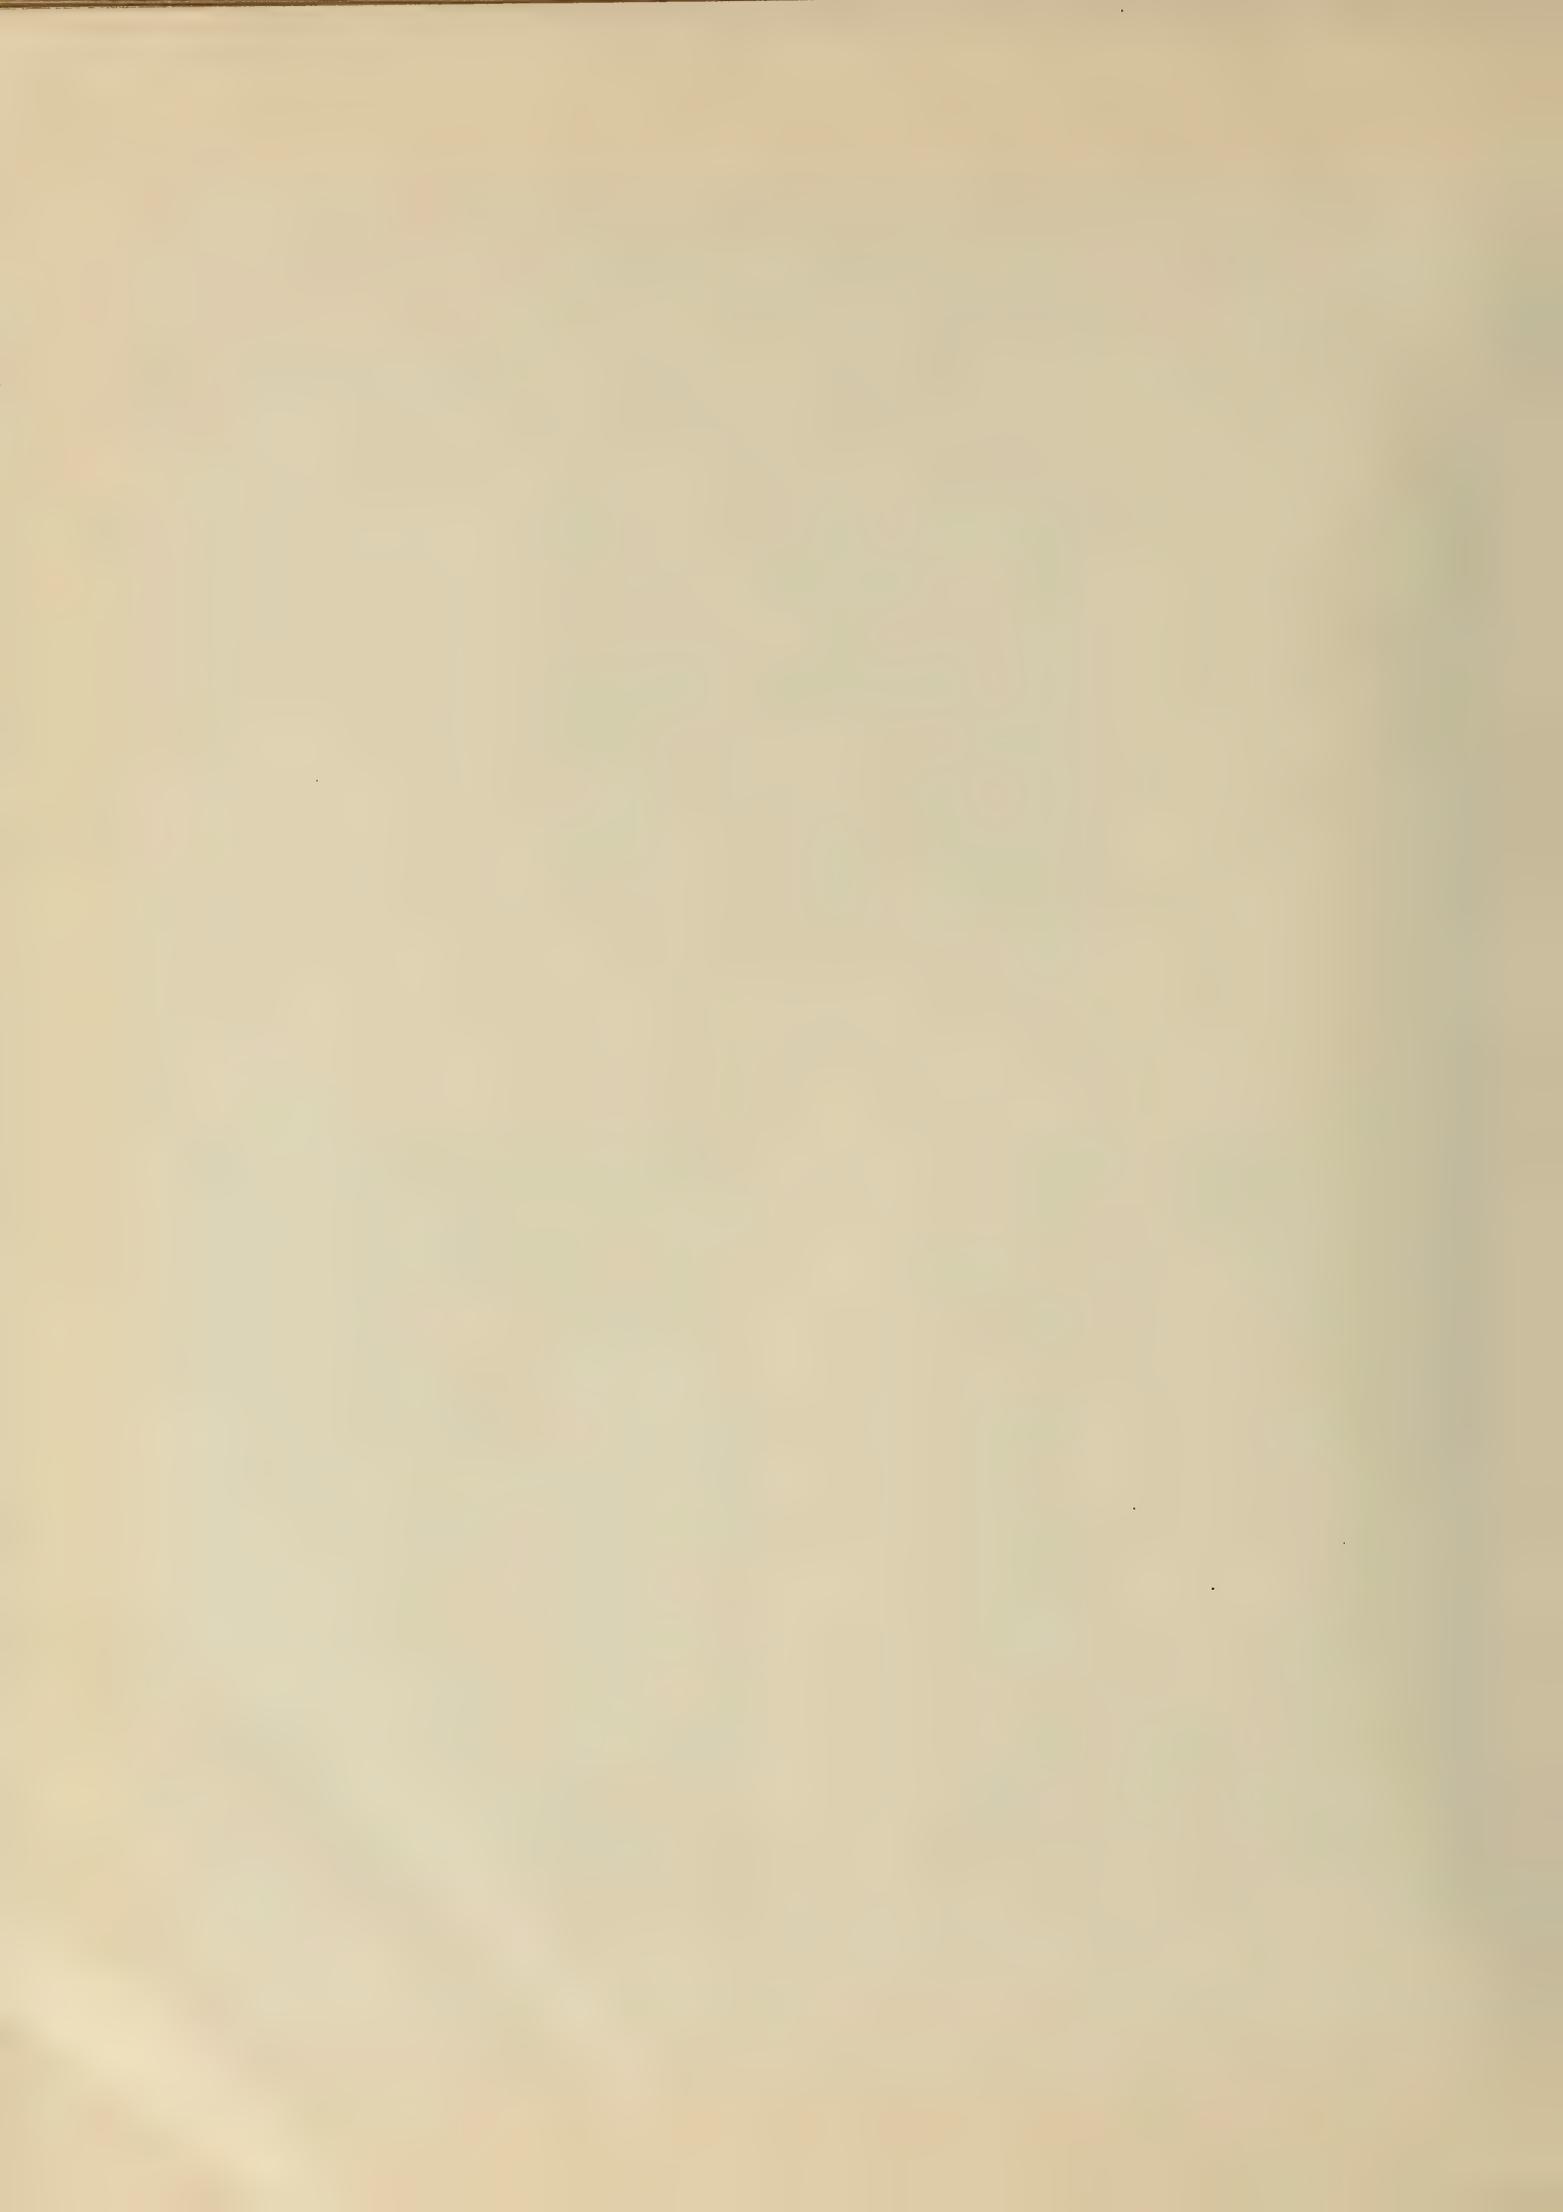

James M. Johns

Abram C. Huff

William R. Baker

Oregon; and Mrs. Ada Ralston, in Portland. Mr. and Mrs. Johns are well respected people, hold a prominent position in society and are valued citizens of our county. They are both members of the Methodist church.

ABRAM C. HUFF, who lives four miles north from Croy, is one of the enterprising stockmen of Gilliam county. He has recently taken a homestead where he now resides and owns, besides, a half section of land, gained by purchase. He was born in Michigan, on June 29, 1838, the son of David D. and Maria (Young) Huff, natives of New York. The first eighteen years of our subject's life were spent in Michigan, where he received his education, and then he came with his parents to Iowa, where he worked for years with his father on the farm. Then he began tilling the soil for himself and continued in Iowa for twenty-two years. After that he journeyed to Minnesota where he remained five years. It was 1877 when he came to Oregon, landing in Douglas county, in which place he remained until 1886. After that he crossed the mountains to Sherman county and farmed there for fifteen years. In 1901 he came to his present location and took a homestead and purchased also the other half section, mentioned above. He owns a half section of good land in Sherman county, besides other property. He has a fine place, well improved, and is arranging his business to take up stock raising almost entirely. He has bands of stock on the range and is doing well in the enterprise.

On March 22, 1860, Mr. Huff married Miss Sarah Ann Maricle. She was born in Pennsylvania, and her father was William Maricle. Five children are the fruit of this union, Abraham Lincoln, Sherman, David W., Charles, and Margaret Ann.

In political matters Mr. Huff is a free thinker and is a deep reader on these lines.

On August 14, 1861, Mr. Huff enlisted in the Ninth Iowa Volunteers and served under Fremont until February 14, 1862, when he was honorably discharged. He is now a member of the G. A. R., and one of the substantial men of the county. He made an honorable record when in the army and is a man worthy of distinction, being one of the pioneers of Oregon, in which he has done much for its advancement and upbuilding.

Mr. Huff is the first one to inaugurate an irrigating enterprise on the John Day river in Gilliam county, and made the start under much difficulty and discouragement, yet he has finally seen his efforts fruitful of success and is now reaping a good and satisfactory reward for his enterprise and progressiveness.

WILLIAM R. BAKER is certainly one of the oldest pioneers of Oregon, and has passed an eventful career in all those experiences incident to early life and the development of a great and remote country. At the present time he is residing about four miles south from Blalock, and while he oversees his interests in stock and land, still he is more retired from active life and is spending the golden years of his pilgrimage in the enjoyment of the competence he possesses, amid many warm friends who prize him for his worth, his work and his virtues.

William R. Baker was born in Meigs county, Tennessee, on December 14, 1837. His parents were John and Elizabeth (Rector) Baker, natives respectively of Virginia and Tennessee. The former died on the old donation claim and the latter lived to be exactly the same age of her departed husband and she, too, passed away. The father came to Tennessee when a young man, accompanying his parents. He served in the Creek Indian war under General Jackson, and remained in Tennessee until 1843, then removed to Missouri, having previously married in the Big-bend State. In the spring of 1846 Mr. Baker, having made extensive preparations for the trip, started out to go by ox teams to the Pacific coast. He had two hundred and forty head of cattle, and the train formed at Independence. He was chosen captain and all went well. On the Platte the buffalos were so thick that men had to be sent ahead to drive them away from the watering places, lest they stampede the train and destroy it. The train was heading for Oregon over the established route and when in the vicinity of Fort Laramie they were met by a man named Applegate. He persuaded them that he could put them to their destination over a new route with much less travel. They accepted his proposition and he attempted to lead them by the Humboldt river, the Rogue river valley and the Umpqua valley to the Willamette valley. They were the first to travel that route and it entailed much hardship and labor in cutting a way through the wooded portions of the mountains. This delayed them and the season was getting late when it dawned on them that they were in a trap. Applegate fled one night and left them to shift as best they could. To add to the horrors, the Indians were terribly hostile and their sneaking tactics brought untold suffering on the poor emigrants. They would hide and shoot arrows from their ambush and this constant harrassing not only wore out the hearts of the travelers but killed their stock and some of their numbers. Then the provisions ran out and all were put on short rations which were shortened as the days went by. Finally almost every edible in the entire train was gone and they depended on the beef of their poor worn animals for subsistence. The animals killed by the flying arrows of the Indians were not eaten for fear of poison. The men were worn out, the deaths had been frequent, wagons had been abandoned, as the necessities demanded on different occasions, and those things, with the terrible harrassing of the savages and the lack of provisions, had well nigh extinguished the little train. To add to the horrors, winter came on and it seemed as if their doom was surely sealed. They would never give up and stolidly turned from each new made grave with determination to continue until death overtook them. The mud got so deep that they were enabled to make no more than three miles per day. Where Roseburg now stands the Indians killed a man named Newton and lest they fall a prey to these awful fiends they nerved themselves to persevere. The mud grew worse, and finally they were about to give up, when on January first, a party of Frenchmen met them having supplies and horses. Word had gone on before of the terrible plight of the train. Abandoning their wagons, they were transported by the horses. Where Corvallis now stands the weary pilgrims saw a cabin, the first one they had seen after leaving the Missouri river. They finally reached Colonel Nesmuth's place, which was near where Dallas now stands, and there the kind hearted colonel welcomed them, housing and feeding the nearly dead pilgrims. Plenty of boiled wheat and good fat beef was like a king's table and they fared sumptuously until the next spring when the elder Baker took a donation claim six miles south from the present Corvallis. There he remained until his death. He was a very prominent man and won the hearts of all who knew him. On one occasion when the settlers were fighting the Indians in 1856, he took all his pork and flour and freely gave the volunteers.

Our subject was only nine years old when this memorable journey occurred but he well remembers it. In the summer of 1847 a little log school house was built, the first in Polk county, and clad in his little buckskin suit the lad began his studies. He grew to manhood on the old donation claim and gained what education he could from the primitive schools. In 1858 he took eighteen hundred cattle to the Umpqua valley and remained there in the stock business until 1865. During that time he had made many drives to the mines and the valleys, but a heavy winter came and he finally landed back in Polk county with five hundred cattle. The next year he drove his stock to the Prineville country and was one of the very first to engage in cattle raising there. In 1869 he sold all his stock and went to the Willamette valley and purchased two thousand sheep, which he brought to what is now Morrow county. Two years later he sold his stock and went back to the Willamette valley where he had a lot of land. In 1882, he came thence to Shuttler flat and bought land and took a preemption. In 1889, he sold his property there and invested in cattle which he drove to the Big Bend country in Washington, settling near where Coulee City is now. The following winter was hard, and out of the four hundred and eighty head he rounded up, the next spring, one steer. In 1891, Mr. Baker came to his present location. He has made a number of good fortunes in his life and, notwithstanding the wheel of fate has turned him down on each occasion, he is still the winner and has a goodly competence for his days.

On June 11, 1863, Mr. Baker married Miss Sarah Hale, who was born in Indiana and crossed the plains in 1852 with her parents. Her father, Michael Hale, lives in Linn county. He married Miss Gemima McKinley, who died while he was crossing the plains. To Mr. and Mrs. Baker the following named children have been born: Mrs. Silva Hulbert, Mrs. Ella Sperry, George W., Edward, Frank, Mrs. Allie Hulbert, and Milton. Mr. and Mrs. Baker are among the most highly esteemed people to be found in this county and he is to be credited with an immense amount of labor in opening up and building up various sections of the west, for which he received the approbation of all, while, also, he is worthy of the generous confidence bestowed because of his integrity and uprightness.

D. M. RINEHART, who is the well known proprietor of the Summit Hotel, the leading hostelry of Condon, is a business man of good standing in this county. He has been connected with the development and growth of the county from the inception and has always shown himself a public spirited and enterprising citizen. He has the distinction of being a native of Oregon, Lane county being the place of his birth. The date of that event was May 9, 1854. His parents were pioneers of this country when it meant something to exist among the wilds of a land practically unknown and beset with savages and much else to threaten and discourage the hardy settlers. The father, G. W. Rinehart, was born in Tennessee and removed to Iowa when it was a territory. In 1851, he crossed the plains with ox teams and finally settled in Lane county where he took a donation claim and became a prominent citizen. He has served as county commissioner and is now one of the highly respected people of this populous county. He married Miss Martha Davis, a native of Tennessee. Her parents had come from that state to Iowa in very early days and there she was married. She accompanied her husband on the eventful and arduous journey across the plains and has been a faithful helpmeet all the days since. She is still living with her husband in Gilliam county, a beloved and esteemed lady.

Our subject was reared in the county of his birth and learned the art of tilling the soil on the old donation claim with his father. He had limited opportunity to secure training as the schools were few and continued but short intervals of the year. He walked three miles to attend and had it not been for studious habits, he would have been deprived of much of the training so useful in after life. He has always been a man of observing and investigating spirit and is well informed. He remained with his parents until of age and then started for himself. He continued in the valley, however, until 1887, when he came thence to his present place. He had little or no capital, but soon managed to start a livery stable, which he operated with good success until he turned his attention to farming. Later he opened a hotel and now he is the proprietor of the Summit House, a pleasant and comfortable resort for travelers. Mr. Rinehart has secured a good patronage and he has accumulated a good property, having besides this hotel business other valuable holdings.

To Mr. Rinehart and his wife three children have been born, Earl, Lloyd, and Marion W., all attending school. Mr. Rinehart is a member of the W. W., and is a leading and representative citizen.

GEORGE W. RINEHART, a leading and substantial citizen of Gilliam county, resides at Condon, where he owns a good residence, besides much other property. He comes from one of the largest families on the coast and has lived here for over a half century. Thus it is shown that he has passed through all those trying days of pioneer existence and dangers, which were so trying to the hearts of even the bravest pioneers and to endure which required a strong body and a brave heart. He has done his part well in all these things and is now well entitled to the rest while he spends the golden days of his life amid the comforts which his labor for the years previous has provided in abundance.

George W. Rinehart was born in Adams county, Illinois, in 1830. In those days even the now populous Illinois was a wild county and the adversity and hardships attendant always on the pioneer were to be borne there, too. His father, Louis Rinehart, was born in Kentucky, of the true frontier stock and was a man of excellent standing and integrity. He crossed the plains with teams to Lane county in 1852 and is one of the history makers of the Willamette valley. He married Miss Elizabeth Ellis, a native of Tennessee, who accompanied her husband in all his journeys and labors. For twenty-two years our subject dwelt in Illinois and then, having received a good education and married, he determined to try the west, believing it held good fortune for him. In due time he finished the arduous journey across the plains with his young wife in 1852 and they selected a donation claim near Eugene, Oregon, which was the family home until 1886. During those days many tales of hardship could be told, which would fill large volumes, but they weathered the hardships and progressed in prosperity slowly. One instance of the condition of things is seen when we hear from Mr. Rinehart of the scarcity of provisions, which compelled them to live one winter on boiled wheat. In 1886, Mr. Rinehart came with his family east of the mountains and selected a half section near where Condon is now located. They settled there and made a nice farm of it, and later removed to town, where they now reside retired. He still owns his property in the valley and the fine farm near town here, besides other property.

In 1851, in Iowa, Mr. Rinehart married Miss Martha Davis, a native of Tennessee, and the daughter of Harman and Martha (Shumate) Davis, both natives of Tennessee and pioneers across the plains in 1852. Mr. Rinehart has twelve brothers and sisters and his family is one of the large and influential ones of the coast. He is a wealthy and highly respected citizen, and with his worthy wife, receives the good will and admiration of all who know them.

FRANK MOORE is to be numbered with the prosperous and leading stockmen and agriculturists of Gilliam county. He resides just northwest from Condon, where he has a half section of good land and which he makes the headquarters for his operations. He is a man of energy and thrift, as is evidenced by his holdings, which have been acquired by his own labors and management since coming to this country. The place is provided with the necessary improvements and his stock is found on the ranges adjacent.

Frank Moore was born in Alameda county, California, on January 22, 1862. His father, A. B. Moore, was born in Georgetown, Ohio, and crossed the plains with his wife in the early forties. They settled in California and there he gave his attention to freighting until after the birth of our subject, when he removed to Utah and settled to farming. Thence he took his family to Gallatin county, Montana, and there remained until 1880. In that year he removed to Iowa, which was his home until 1899, when he came out to Oregon, where this son lives. The mother of our subject, Celia (Young) Moore, accompanied her husband in all these journeys mentioned. Frank was educated principally in Gallatin county, Montana, and there learned the art of stock-raising. His home there was but seventy-five miles distant from the battle field where the brave Custer met his fate. The Moores were living there at the time of the battle. The year of their journey to Montana was 1868. Young Moore, as soon as he grew to manhood, took up stockraising in Montana and there continued at it until 1894. In that year he transferred the base of his operations to Gilliam county and here he has remained since, engaged as stated above. He is one of the thriftiest farmers in the county and he is one of the most skillful stockmen to be found. Mr. Moore is one of nine children, Mrs. Rebecca Hawes, Mrs. Nancy Gellen, deceased, A. J., D. A., Mrs. Cloe Reese, David A., Mrs. Dora Williams, and E. J.

In 1881, Mr. Moore married Miss Bettie Cazier, a native of Utah. Her parents, John and Frances Cazier, were pioneers of Utah. To Mr. and Mrs. Moore, five children have been born: Mrs. Erma West, Mrs. Mabel Baker, Frank A., Bartin W., and Mervin. In politics and educational affairs, Mr. Moore is always interested and he is a man not afraid to voice the principles he believes to be for the good of all. He has so conducted himself that he has won the good will of all and has the name of being one of the most up-to-date and enterprising farmers and citizens of this portion of the county.

W. N. BROWN is one of the wealthiest men of Gilliam county. The mere possession of wealth, however, is not always a letter of recommendation, but when one starts in a new country and by force of character and industry wins his way to the head, it is a mark of signal ability. When, too, this is attained with the good will and the esteem of the people not sacrificed, thrice blessed may such a man esteem himself. Mr. Brown certainly is in this position and he has the distinction of being one of the leading men of this part of Oregon, while also, he never neglects the business interests which his energy has gathered for himself. He is at the head of the Condon flour mills, which have a capacity of eighty barrels per day. They are a fine plant and are made productive of excellent dividends by the business ability of Mr. Brown. In addition to this enterprise, he is one of the leading stockmen of the country and also has one of the largest ranches in this part of the county. Also, Mr. Brown has won distinction as a fruit grower, as he has one of the choice orchards of the county, it being situated on Thirtymile creek. In all these lines of industry, Mr. Brown has always manifested that same sagacity, wise planning, and thorough execution that characterize him as a business man. He certainly has gained success. It will be more patent, as we proceed in recounting his career, that this is the more to be commended.

W. N. Brown was born in Polk county, Oregon, on January 25, 1852. George Brown, his father, was born in Kentucky and went as a pioneer to Missouri. In 1847, he crossed the plains to Oregon, and the next year went down to California to seek gold. He mined a year and then returned to Polk county and in 1850; purchased one of the Applegate farms. That was the family home until his death, which occurred in 1903. He was a man of stamina and courage and his life was spent in such a way that when the time of departure came, he was mourned by all. He had been prominent and gained wealth. He married Miss Martha A. Hinds, in Yamhill county, Oregon, in 1850. She was born in Missouri, crossed the plains in 1847, being in the same train as her husband, and is now dwelling in Polk county. Our subject was educated in Polk county and remained with his father, until January, 1874. Then he desired to try life for himself and accordingly came east of the mountains. He arrived in Condon, or where Condon is now, with a saddle and cayuse, twenty dollars in his pocket and a six shooter in his belt. He immediately secured employment as a cowboy and was known all over the country as "Snipkie Bill," a sobriquet donated by the cowboys. He rode the range and saved his money until he had enough to justify him in starting in for himself. He secured some cattle on shares and went to raising stock, having also bought some. From that time on the prosperity of Mr. Brown was more pronounced and he soon rose to the position of a leading stockman of the country. He has continued in that business since and is handling at the present time a large quantity of stock.

His fruit industry has grown up on the headquarters ranch and he has an excellent orchard. In 1903, Mr. Brown purchased the milling property mentioned and since then he has been handling that.

In 1882, Mr. Brown married Miss Maggie Shorb. She was born in Maryland, and crossed the plains with her parents, J. D. and Elizabeth Shorb, in 1862. They settled in Washington county, Oregon, and there reside at this time. To Mr. and Mrs. Brown, two children have been born: G. G. and Pearl. Mr. Brown is a member of the A. F. & A. M., and is a leading and prominent man.

JOHN J. BROWN, deceased. Although the gentleman, whose name appears above, has ceased to move in our midst, still his labors are everywhere evident to the dweller in Gilliam county and he is to be classed as one of the builders of the county. As a pioneer, he was brave and hardy and never quailed at the hardships of the frontier. He was a loving and wise father and a devoted husband. In the walks of life he so conducted himself that he won the unstinted praise and esteem of his fellows and his wise counsels were of much benefit to assist in the opening and starting of this county and its progress.

John J. Brown was born in Missouri, on March 7, 1848, the son of Silas and Jane A. (Blair) Brown, natives of Missouri and Kentucky, respectively. In 1852, the father brought his family across the plains and settled on a donation claim in Lane county, this state. He was an industrious and progressive man and labored faithfully in his day for the opening of the country and its advancement. Our subject was reared and educated in Lane county and there remained until 1874, when he came east of the mountains to try his fortune in the new country where Indians were about the sole inhabitants. They settled on Rock creek and he and his wife started to make a home in the country where the wild animals roamed at will and the Indians were many and the white neighbors were but few. They erected rude improvements to start with and gathered some cattle about them. As the time wore on, they builded better and the stock increased. The Dalles, one hundred miles distant, was the nearest trading point and they had much to contend with in establishing themselves here and in continuing. Mr. Brown labored on faithfully, meeting with the success that sagacity and thrift deserve, until 1890, when he sickened and later was called hence by death.

In 1870, Mr. Brown married Miss Mary

Sparks, who was born in Wells county, Indiana, on April 16, 1851. Her parents, Abel and Elizabeth (Douglas) Sparks who were born in Kentucky and Pennsylvania, respectively, crossed the plains in 1852. The father died en route and the mother came on to the Willamette valley which was her home until 1870, when she came to this vicinity. To our subject and his wife the following named children have been born: Frank M., Charles A., Herbert G., W. Campbell, Elsie A., and John J. They are all engaged in stock raising and are among the prosperous people of this section. They have considerable land and other property and have carried on the business which the father left to them. Mrs. Brown with her family is to be commended on the success attained since the death of Mr. Brown in the business affairs. She and her children are highly respected people and are among the leading citizens of this part of the county.

JAMES F. COOKE has made a success in Gilliam county in financial matters which manifests him a man of ability and judgment, far above the average. He is one of the heaviest land owners of the county and has devoted himself so assiduously to his business in his stay in this county that he has won success in every part. He is a man of keen foresight, persevering and careful. His standing in the county is of the best and he has done much to expedite and assist the development of the country to its present prosperous condition.

James F. Cooke was born in Eldorado county, California. His father, James D. Cooke, was born in England and made his way to the United States in early life. In 1852, he crossed the plains to California and there spent some time in mining. Then he took a homestead in the vicinity of Dixon, Solano county, the same state and there devoted himself to farming until his death, which occurred in 1886. He had married Miss Mira Dudley. Our subject was reared and educated in California and there remained with his father until 1884, when he journeyed north. He traveled over much country and finally selected a homestead and timber culture near where Condon is now located. He set about the good work of improving the claims and remained until he was satisfied that the country was what he desired then returned to California to visit the folks and to secure the company of his brother. In 1887, with his brother, R. W. Cooke, he came back to Oregon and they settled on the claims and went to raising stock. They soon bought more land and the estate has increased until they now have two thousand two hundred and forty acres, one thousand of which are cropped annually to grain. In addition to handling this mammoth acreage to the cereals, they raise large numbers of horses and mules. Their stock is well bred and they have so conducted their business that they have become wealthy. When the Cooke brothers started in this country, they had no means save a few dollars for the present need of their living. They have gained their magnificent holding and wealth entirely by their own labors and sagacity in the management of their business. They have all the improvements and machinery needed on a first class stock and grain ranch and are thrifty and up to date business men.

JOHN DYSART. Among the men who have won the best of success from fertile Oregon's resources we are constrained to mention the gentleman whose name appears above, and who has labored here with display of great industry and wisdom for nearly twenty years. He is a native son of Scotia's rugged hills, and was well educated and trained in the art of farming. A skillful and wise father taught him the art of breeding stock, and thrift and sagacity in the management of affairs. He was favored with the training given in the public schools of his native land and above all he came from the stanch Scotch family, one point of whose history is, that they are never known to brook defeat. Filled with the native determination and hopefulness of his race, he was led by an adventurous spirit in the eighties to prepare for life in a more extended country favored with greater opportunities for the rising generation. Accordingly he searched the books and finally decided that the United States, rather than any of the colonies, was the place for him to operate, and the year 1888 saw him bidding his loving people good bye and embarking for the untried country. Having been born on May 11, 1866, he was but twenty-two when this important change in his life occurred. His parents, John and Grace (Carmichael) Dysart, were both natives of Scotland and there they remained. After due search in the west, our young immigrant finally determined to locate in the territory now embraced in Wheeler county. He went to work at once and for seven years wrought with industry and close attention to business. Then he had accumulated a band of sheep for himself and he sought another location. He finally came to the place where he now lives, about eight miles northwest from Condon, and there took a homestead, which was but a nucleus of his estate. He continued to purchase land as the time wore on until he has secured two thousand acres of the best soil near him. He is occupied in farming this land and in handling his stock, of which he still has large bands. He has achieved a splendid success in his labors and is one of the leading men of this part of the state. His place is well improved and the whole premises proclaim a proprietor of wisdom and thrift. At the close of 1902, our subject's father was called to the world beyond. He was aged seventy-two, was still vigorous and hearty, and at the precise moment was engaged in cutting a tree down. While in this work he was suddenly taken. In 1898 Mr. Dysart made a visit to his native land and then deemed the time had come for him to take to himself the chosen companion of his life, and accordingly he married Miss Mary Clark, a Scotch lassie, who was born and reared in the land of the Scotts. She has proved a true helpmeet to Mr. Dysart and together they share the home and competence he had so industriously acquired. Her parents were David and Ann (Adam) Clark, both natives of Scotland. To our subject and his wife, two children have been born, Charlie and Grace.

WILLIAM CAMPBELL is possessed of the native thrift of his race and shows it in the excellent success he has attained in Gilliam county. Born of sturdy Scotch people, reared amid the surroundings of a Canadian home, he gathered not only a fine education from books and the excellent Ontario schools, but also a knowledge of men and things that has enabled him to take advantage of the good opportunities of this favored region. He is a skilled farmer and stockman and is one of the representative and leading men of the county.

William Campbell was born in Bonnie Auld Scotland, on August 17, 1853. His father, Peter Campbell, was also born in the same land and came from one of the prominent families of the Lowlands. His father, the grandfather of William, was a leader of a clan. In 1864, Peter Campbell came to Ontario, and after selecting a good farm, which he purchased, he entered the employ of the Canadian Land Company, a large concern, with which he remained until he retired from business. He is now ninety-one years of age and is dwelling on the estate he purchased when he came to Canada. He married Miss Isabella Heburn, a native Scotch lady and descended from a prominent and wealthy family. Our subject remained in the Canadian home, whither he had come with the family when eleven years of age, gaining his education and laboring on his father's farm until of age. Then he handled the farm for his father until 1883, when he made his way west. He had heard various rumors of the great state of Oregon, and also, he had made a study of the country and had determined to land in Umatilla county. He continued there for three years and then the favorable region where he now dwells appealed to him and he became enticed thither. He purchased land and engaged in stock raising. To this he has added farming and now he owns eight hundred acres of choice land, has it well improved, and also has a band of stock. He owns one hundred fine cattle besides other stock, and he has been favored with the best of success, owing to his skill and untiring care in his business.

In 1879, while in Ontario, Mr. Campbell married Miss Maggie R. Anderson, a native of Scotland, born May 1, 1856. She came to Canada with her parents when small. Mr. and Mrs. Campbell have become the parents of four children, Jessie I., Lily, George S., and Sybill.

Mrs. Campbell's parents were Alexander and Lillie (Walker) Anderson, natives of Scotland. The former died in 1869, aged sixty-two, and the latter died in 1904, aged eighty-four. Mrs. Campbell has the following named brothers and sisters: Thomas, residing in Ontario; Mrs. Mary Fallie, residing in Ontario; Mrs. Agnes Wood, in Michigan; Annie, at the old home in Ontario; Mrs. Jemina Roberts, also in Ontario; William, in Manitoba; and Mrs. Jessie Niles, in Ontario. Mr. Campbell has the following named brothers and sisters: Robert, residing in Ontario, Canada; Mrs. Ann McGregor, deceased; Mrs. Isabella Brady, deceased; Peter, deceased; Mrs. Jane Christie, of Toronto, Canada; Mrs. Mary Hilliar, of Toronto, Canada; John, at the old home in Ontario; James, deceased; Mrs. Lizzie Barr, in Iowa; and Jessie, at the old home.

STEPHEN B. COUTURE is a true representative of the prosperous Oregon farmer and stockman. He dwells ten miles west from Condon and has a place which his labor has carved out and which is valuable and productive. He is a man of enterprise and intelligence and keeps himself abreast of the times, while in his business labors he has always shown a diligence and thrift coupled with true principles that have won both the reward of a good competence and the esteem of his fellows.

Stephen B. Couture was born in Monroe county, Michigan, on June 6, 1866, the son of Louis and Elizabeth (Nado) Couture, both natives of Michigan and prominent and well to do people there. Stephen B. received his education in his native place and there he was reared by a wise father. When of proper age, he started out in life for himself, and in 1887 he made his way west. He deemed that this country presented better opportunities for him than the east, and also he desired to gratify an adventurous spirit that led him to new things and other achievements than the continuation of home life. He first wrought here for wages and then took a homestead where he is now located. He at once began the good work of improvement and in due time he was in shape to purchase other land. He has done so from time to time until his estate is now between seven and eight hundred acres. To the handling of this and raising stock, Mr. Couture devotes his time and he is successful in a good degree.

In 1896 occurred the marriage of Mr. Couture and Miss Clara Lamberson, who was born in the Willamette valley. Her father, Samuel Lamberson, was a native of Tuscarawas county, Ohio, and crossed the plains with ox teams in 1845. He made settlement in the Willamette valley, and when gold was discovered in California he went thither with a pack train and mined for one year. Then he returned to the Willamette valley and there lived until 1876, in which year he journeyed to the vicinity of Fossil. He handled stock there until 1883, and then settled in Ferry canyon, which was his home until his death. He had married Miss Mary J. Armstrong, a native of Illinois. She crossed the plains with her parents in 1852. Her mother died en route, and her father died at The Dalles soon after arriving there. Mrs. Couture has nine brothers and sisters named as follows: John A., Timothy S., Abner M., Mrs. Sarah Smith, Mrs. Nora Beardsley, Mrs. Mary E. Palmer, Mrs. Lettie Downing, Mrs. Anna Shorb, and Mrs. Lillie Portwood. John A. is a physician in Lebanon, Oregon, and Timothy is in Arizona. To Mr. and Mrs. Couture three children have been born, Wilbur S., Vellnia, and John Henry. Mr. Couture has seven brothers and sisters, Louis and James, who are prosperous farmers in this vicinity; John, Elwood, Henry, Mrs. Mary Santure, and Mrs. Julia Collins, Elizabeth. Mr. Couture started in life without means and all he now has accumulated is the result of his labor and his wisdom. He and his wife are among the highly respected and esteemed people of this section.

WILLIAM TWILLEY has had an adventurous and busy career. He was born in Florida, in 1869, and now lives on the farm three miles east from Ajax. His father was William Twilley. He died when our subject was very small, and the mother married again. When twelve, William left his native place and came west to Kansas. After herding sheep for a while he began the life of a cowboy and became exceptionally expert in breaking horses. After following that business there for four years, he went to Arizona and thence a year later to Walla Walla. In this latter place he hired to a farmer to work through the harvest and was sent one morning to hitch the horses to the header. Having always lived in a country where no small grain was raised, he had never seen the machinery for its harvesting and the result was that he hitched the horses to the header backwards, which caused no small merriment among the wheat farmers. After that harvest, Mr. Twilley went to Lewiston and again rode on the range around that point, Mt. Idaho and the Snake river. Next we see him around Pendleton in the same business. He also bought and sold horses and took contracts for breaking them and gained the name of being the most skillful and expert horseman in this part of the country. Large shippers from the east employed him in breaking the horses and he handled hundreds of them. Later he sold this business and went to North Yakima. A short time thereafter he journeyed to the Willamette valley and farmed there for three years. Next we see him in Alaska, and six months later he went back to the Willamette valley. Shortly after that he moved to Shaniko and opened a butcher shop, feed yard and dairy. His was the second tent to be pitched in that town. He handled large freighting outfits to various parts of the country, then sold out and came to Ferry canyon, where he leased four hundred and forty acres of land. The last year he threshed eleven thousand bushels of wheat, feeding portions of it to his hogs, and hauled the rest sixty miles to market. He has recently taken a homestead where he dwells at the present time. Mr. Twilley now owns twenty head of horses, nine head of cattle and some hogs. Last year his hogs brought him over eight hundred dollars.

On May 30, 1894, Mr. Twilley married Miss Virtue Chandler, who was born in Minnesota, on June 10, 1878. Her father, John Chandler, was born in Maine, in 1840, and is now living in Pendleton, Oregon. To our subject and his wife five children have been born, Ola, Ora and Stella, deceased, Gracie and Archie. Mr. Twilley carries a policy in the New York Mutual for five thousand dollars. He is a thorough business man and a good citizen, takes an active part in politics, being a Republican, and is one of the substantial men in this county.

MYRON O. CLARKE, a leading citizen and pioneer of Gilliam county, is also one of the most enterprising business men of Condon. He is at the head of a large hardware and furniture establishment, which is doing a mammoth business and which has been built up by the skill and ability of Mr. Clarke. He is justly entitled to be classed with the builders of this county and an epitome of his life will be found interesting to all.

Myron O. Clarke was born in Derby, Vermont, on September 5, 1859. His father, Barney D. Clarke, was also born in Vermont and was a skilled cabinet maker and prominent citizen. He was in the employ of the government during the Civil War and also held many offices of trust at the hands of his fellow citizens in his native place, where he remained until his death. He married Miss Laura Kendall, who came from a prominent family. She was related to the Redfields, Proctors, and Colbys and her father, Peleg R. Kendall, was a very prominent attorney in Rutland, Vermont.

Our subject was educated in the district schools of his native place and in 1876 went to California. Although young in life, still he possessed that self reliance which is requisite to meet and overcome the obstacles in the path to success. He wrought on a ranch near Salinas, then spent a year on Union island and in 1878, came thence to Lone Rock, Gilliam county, where he took a ranch and engaged in horse raising. At that time Mr. Clarke had no means and started in the pioneer's life with bare hands and a determined spirit to win success. He prospered from the start, owing to his sagacity and careful management, and he was always interested in politics and in the welfare of the community. In 1894, he was elected assessor in his county and for eight years he held the office to the satisfaction of all concerned. In 1901, Mr. Clarke, in company with H. N. Frazer, opened a hardware and furniture store in Condon. They started in on a small scale but soon enlarged and by their kindly ways and business methods secured a fine patronage. In July, 1903, Mr. Frazer sold his interest and in the following January, Mr. Clarke purchased it himself. Since that time he has continued in the business with marked success. His trade is constantly increasing and he is supplying to the demand a full line of all kinds of goods handled in his establishment. Mr. Clarke is a leading business man of this part of the state and he has many friends.

In 1884, Mr. Clarke married Miss Sadie Balding. She was born in Iowa and came to this country with her parents in 1876. They settled in Lost Valley and although Mrs. Clarke had to ride five or six miles to and from school, still she secured a fine education and is a cultured lady. Mrs. Clarke's father is Fredrick Balding, a pioneer of Gilliam county. To our subject and his wife, the following named children have been born: Lilla M., who took a course in a Portland business college and is now keeping books for her father; Florence R., who has finished the Condon schools; Herbert and Katie, school children. Mr. Clarke is a member of the K. P. and the W. W. He is a man of stability and enterprise and has also shown an integrity and probity that distinguish him as a leading citizen.

F. H. DOUGLASS is a representative citizen of Gilliam county. He landed here without capital and is now one of the wealthiest men of the county. His holding has been made by honest labor and a proper handling of the resources found here. He is a man of ability and stamina and has done a noble work in assisting to build up and advance the interests of the county and is a man in whom all have confidence.

F. H. Douglass was born in Nova Scotia, in 1860. His father, John Douglass, was born in the same place as this son and married Mary Young, a native of Nova Scotia. For twenty-one years, Mr. Douglass remained with his parents, receiving in that time a good education and a splendid training from his father. Then he migrated to Minnesota determined to try his fortune in that land. For one year he wrought on a farm and then spent one year in a store working for the railroad company. After that, he came to his present location, landing here in October, 1883. He took a homestead and while holding that, worked for wages for five years. Then he began farming and since that he has bought two sections of land. He rents two sections in addition to this, farming it all, two thousand seven hundred and twenty acres of land. This mammoth estate is producing annually, very large and gratifying returns, owing to the skillful management of Mr. Douglass. He has shown himself a man of ability in handling such large enterprises and his farm is one of the largest in the county. When we consider the fact that Mr. Douglass worked for wages for five years after coming here, in order to get a start, and that he has now a holding among the very choicest in this wealthy county, we are enabled to see in some respects how well he has wrought. He is a man who concentrates his efforts and plans in doing well what he does at all. This is one of the secrets of his success. Added to this, he is a man of thrift and takes great care of every detail of his business. Since commencing farming on this place, he has remained here steadily handling the estate until the present time.

Mr. Douglass has two brothers, George, in Nova Scotia, and William, in Seattle. He always takes a keen interest in politics and is allied with the Republican party. He believes in general and educational advancement thoroughly and has devoted his efforts to these worthy ends in no uncertain manner. He is entitled to the respect and confidence of his people which he receives generously and he holds an influential and leading place in the community.

On January 10, 1905, Mr. Douglass married Sophia J. Cook, of Harborville, Kings county, Nova Scotia. This popular couple will make their home on the estates Mr. Douglass has acquired and they have the good will and esteem of all.

JOHN HARRISON has shown what a man can do in Gilliam county when he takes hold with a determination to win the smiles of dame fortune. This favored region is one of the best in the west for those who are willing to display industry and thrift and the magnificent resources that have for years lain ready for the hand of man are but beginning to open their treasures to the enterprising ones. Mr. Harrison is a man of decided worth and stability and his labors here for the last twenty odd years have shown a wisdom and continuity that could but produce the gratifying results now in hand. He owns over twelve hundred acres of choice grazing and grain land, all well improved, has a good residence in Condon, besides others through the country, has a large number of sheep, together with other stock, and is, withal, one of the most prosperous men of the county. All this has been gained by the wise efforts which he has made in the years gone by.

John Harrison was born in Lincolnshire, England, on September 27, 1852, and there he was reared and well educated. His father, James B. Harrison, was born in the same place as this son and was a prominent agriculturist and stockman there. He married Miss Mary Hesnip, also a native of the same locality. Thirty years were spent by our subject in the old country, then he was led by an enterprising and adventurous spirit to come to the west, choosing the United States as the objective point of his journey. Just why he was led to Gilliam county, we are not told, but in due time he was in the territory that is now embraced in this county. He was quick to discover the opportunities offered to the industrious here and he availed himself of them. Condon was not in existence then, few settlers were found on the broad prairies and when he settled on Thirtymile creek and embarked in the sheep business, he was fifty miles from the nearest supply point. Mr. Harrison had no capital when he started and the adversity and hardships he met with would have discouraged a less resolute man than he. But he was not made of material that faints at adversity, he could journey with her and then gain success, and he did, as is abundantly evidenced by his holdings at this time. In due time the country settled up and Mr. Harrison was always a leader in the improvements that have come and that are soon to be in this rich section.

To our subject and his wife the following named children have been born: Mrs. Ethel Weise, Mrs. Maud May, Mrs. Julia Thompson, Mrs. Nellie Martin, Mrs. Sicily Palmer, John W., Charlie, Fred and Francis.

S. S. GRIDER was born in Knox county, Indiana, on August 11, 1854, the son of James and Martha (Bowman) Grider. The father was born in the same place as this son, and his father, the grandfather of our subject, was one of the earliest settlers in the territory now embraced in Indiana. The mother was born in Davies county, Indiana. The family came across the plains to California in 1874 and settled in Butte county. Our subject received his education in his native state and learned the carpenter trade when young. In 1874 he accompanied his parents across the plains and for a time wrought in the Golden State. In 1881, he came thence to the present site of Condon and took a homestead nearby. He erected improvements and also built the first house in Condon. Since then, Mr. Grider has divided his attention between farming and stock raising on his estate near by, and contracting and building in the town and the surrounding country. He has prospered exceedingly well and is possessed of much property. His estate is about five hundred acres and he has gained all his property by the arduous labor he has done.

The marriage of Mr. Grider and Miss Sarah McCarty occurred in 1885 and they have been blessed by the advent of two children, Walter V., and Maud L. Mrs. Grider was born in Douglas county, Oregon, the daughter of W. R. and E. A. (Lovelady) McCarty, natives of Missouri. They crossed the plains with ox teams in 1847 and settled in the Willamette valley. Later they removed to Douglas county. Mr. and Mrs. Grider are well respected people, have a goodly competence, an interesting family, and have well earned the pleasant position they now occupy.

PASSING EVENTS—1859 TO 1905.

Wheeler county lies in central Oregon, its west line being very nearly the centre of the state, from east to west, while its southern line is about one-third of the distance from the northern boundary of Oregon to the north line of California. What white man first looked upon the face of the country now embraced in this political division, we have no means of ascertaining. Doubtless some restless and energetic trapper would have that honor, but who he was, whither he went, and whence he came, are questions probably never to be settled by this generation. This we do know, however, that the general history of eastern and central Oregon, as to early days, is much the same for each county, in that the discovery of gold in various portions of the northwest led men from every quarter to engage in mining. These incoming treasure-seekers traversed various portions of Oregon on their journeys to the "diggings" and there is no doubt that very early in Oregon history some of these pilgrimages led through the country now embraced in Wheeler county. When the cry came that in the Boise basin, on the Salmon and about Orofino, placer gold was discovered, large numbers of men came not only from the east to these different points, but every settlement on the Pacific coast sent its quota of prospectors and gold seekers. The large stream that came from California found its way through the Klamath country, generally, while the major portion of that from the Willamette valley and other points in this northwest country followed the old emigrant road back towards the gold camps. However, as early as the later fifties we find record of parties making their way up the John Day river and so across the country. These were occasional, only, and no definite record is left of their routes until after General Harney took charge of the Department of Oregon, with headquarters at Vancouver, arriving there in October, 1858. Being a man of sound judgment and knowing well the advantages to be derived from opening the country by feasible roads, he dispatched in the following April, Captain D. H. Wallen, with a party to ascertain if it were feasible to establish a road up the John Day valley and thence to the Malheur valley and so to the Snake. Captain Wallen pushed his explorations as far as the Harney valley, and, doubtless, his way led through the central portion of what is now Wheeler county. He met with no Indians, it being shown later that they had avoided him, and after his journey had progressed well into the interior, they fell upon the friendly Indians and whites on the Warm Springs reservation. Beyond getting away with some stock, it is not stated that they did further damage. General Harney was called on for protection and he sent rifles and ammunition. A company of friendly Indians was organized and equipped by the agent and under the command of Dr. Thomas L. Fitch, they pursued the marauders with the result that some horses were recovered, a few women and children were captured and several of the thieving Indians were killed.

In the spring of 1860, General Harney sent out another expedition to continue the explorations made the year before by Captain Wallen. This was in charge of Major E. Stein, and one accompanying it was commanded by Captain A. J. Smith. They were resisted by the Indians and called for reinforcements, which enabled them to force the Redskins out of the way and proceed with the explorations. Stein reached as far as the mountains now called by his name. These are the records of the first established roads, or trails, more correctly speaking, for all transportation was by pack animals then, passing through our territory now under consideration. In 1861 an expedition passed through central Oregon in search of the famous "Blue Bucket" diggings, which they failed to locate. Becoming discouraged, some returned and others were instrumental in locating good ground in other parts of the state. Part of the company started down the John Day to return to Portland, but some, at least, of them were murdered by the Indians. In 1862 came the discovery of gold in what is now Grant county, on Canyon creek and others adjacent. This brought more men from all quarters and many who were on their way to the Idaho diggings remained to work in these new found placers. Then parties began to utilize the blazed out routes of Wallen and Stein to make their way from The Dalles to Canyon City, or "Upper town" as then called, the new camp on Canyon creek. Immediately the business of supplying the rapidly enlarging camp with provisions sprang up, and the most feasible route was from Canyon creek over the country to The Dalles. The first party to make the journey from Canyon creek to The Dalles with a packing outfit for supplies, so far as known, was a company made up of two or three from each party of Californians who had come to the new camp. They reached The Dalles in safety and coming back made some improvements on the trail, straightening it, and so forth. The enterprising people of The Dalles, in order to draw the trade to themselves, being the natural supply point for this region, sent out parties to select the best route for the trail and improve it so that travel would be facilitated. At a later date the company known as The Dalles Military Wagon Road Company, secured a grant of land and made some improvements on this route. The citizens of The Dalles and the packers had made the road in fairly good shape, and freight teams began in a measure to replace the pack trains. However, the company improved it some. This route entered the territory now embraced in Wheeler county near where Burnt Ranch post-office now stands and followed the John Day river to Bridge creek, thence up Bridge creek to where Mitchell now stands, thence up the east branch of Bridge creek to the north branch of Badger creek, thence down Badger creek to where Caleb now stands and thence east along Mountain creek until it reached the border of what is now Grant county, about three miles west from the John Day river. As a full history of this company appears in another portion of this volume, we need not enlarge upon it here, but would say, that while every one at all acquainted with the deal understands the fraud practiced upon the people and the government, still, perhaps, we can say justly that they did some good in aiding, at least in a measure, the travel of those early days. We do not say that they did, but, perhaps they did. But now, the citizens of Wheeler county have to bear the chagrin of knowing that this octopus owns 49,932 acres of valuable land within the precincts of Wheeler county, the price of supposed efforts put forth to build a road, which the enterprising people of The Dalles and the hardy prospectors and miners in reality constructed.

But to return to the narrative, the road was the highway for great quantities of freight, both on pack animals and in wagons, for all the early years while the placer diggings yielded rich returns to the miners. What a highway it was, in those early days, that wound its way through our county! From the time the bell mare with her tinkling music led the train up the hills from The Dalles until they halted, dusty and worn, either in "Lower Town" or "Upper Town," on Canyon creek, the wary packer was ever alert to ward off dangers both seen and unseen. And these dangers were of the most severe kind. Vicious savages were constantly harassing, seeking plunder and scalps, more despicable "road agents," as they were termed, dogged the steps of the traveller, and at opportune moments for his nefarious work, did not hesitate to murder, if his demands were not promptly met. Night and day, every moment, called for the most painstaking care and attention on the part of the parties who wended their way over this route. Snake Indians, Bannock Indians, Paiute Indians, renegade Indians, Umatilla Indians, and others, artful, vicious, cunning, and cruel to the native instinct of the savage; white men, with black hearts, plotters against the lives and property of their fellows; wild beasts; rattlesnakes, and even the sneaking coyote, all combined to levy tribute on these hardy and brave men who threaded this frontier road, and could we collect the incidents that have occurred on its length, surely the volume would thrill all readers,—but the tales, most of them, will never be recorded on the written page. Many a happy heart left the fireside at home, buoyant with the hope that he would find the fortune that would minister to the needs of his loved ones, only to read in the fiendish eyes of a cruel savage the doom of his life, or wounded, to crawl away in some hidden nook to calmly wait the death watch, alone and unattended. But death, itself, would not deter such men as found their way into central Oregon in those days. A writer of the Oregonian in 1886 says:

For several miles south of upper Currant creek, and west of a small stream called the Muddy, which comes from the south and strikes Currant creek at right angles, is a large scope of country of peculiar formation. The appearance of the locality can be best understood by the name "Potato Hills," given to it by the first travelers along the route. These small grassy knolls were clustered thickly over the expanse, interspersed with scrubby pines and clusters of Service-berry, wild plum and greasewood bushes. These potato hills increase in size, elevation and ruggedness to the east, a distance of nearly five miles, till the little stream of the Muddy is reached, when the hills give place to bluffs of shelving and scale rocks.

In this locality the Snake Indians made their principal attacks upon trains and travelers in 1862, though the whole distance from this point to Canyon City was subject to their attacks. Down this creek filed a pack train belonging to a man named Nelson, who was on his return from The Dalles, with a load of goods. Along the creek were numerous clusters of wild currant bushes, from which the creek received its name, affording excellent shelter for the skulking Indians. The packers were gaily or otherwise urging their mules along the gravelly path, and had possibly forgotten that the locality was a dangerous one.

The train was strung out down the narrow trail, the bell mare and rider far in the lead. An abrupt, though low, ledge of rocks was a few rods to the left of the trail, the creek with its skirting of currant bushes close to the right; the packers were busy "fixing" the packs, and the riding animals were loose on the trail. Suddenly the rider of the bell mare shouted "Indians!" to those behind, and, clapping spurs to his horse, clattered off down the trail at a keen run. Out from the currant bushes, down from the ledge of rocks poured the Indians. Some tried to catch the mules, others opened fire on the packers with bows and arrows and guns, and the only thing left for the packers was to quickly mount their riding animals and hurry back up the trail. The Indians were altogether too numerous to be contended with by two men, who were only armed with revolvers. Fifty well armed Indians were too many to attack. The music of the fleeing bell, far in the front, could be heard no more, and the only thing left for the two rear riders was to watch from an elevation while the Indianns chased their spoil. The men all escaped unhurt, but the mules and cargoes were lost.

Late in the fall of 1862, a party of five miners was camped on what has since been named Murderer's creek. They had chosen as a camping spot, a sheltered nook under a shelving rock. As they were near the road, and no signs of Indians had been seen, they deemed themselves safe. One evening they retired as usual, and spent some time conversing before going to sleep. Suddenly the crack of four rifles rang out on the quiet evening air and simultaneously a shower of arrows sped in upon them from the neighboring rocks. One man was killed outright and the other four were seriously wounded. Two of them struggled to the creek and down it for half a mile, when one, who could go no further, being mortally wounded with a rifle bullet, sank down. Later he crawled to a clump of bushes and there died. His companion painfully made his way to Officers ranch and expired the next day in great agony. The following summer a party of emigrants, of whom G. I. Hazeltine was a member, camped near the spot where the first man died, and a couple of girls found a gold watch. Upon search the skeleton of a man was found, supposed to be the unfortunate miner.

The remaining two members of the party escaped from their retreat through the bushes and rocks and in a clump of friendly bushes halted to stanch the blood from the wounds of the younger man, who had been hit in the side by a rifle bullet. He also had two less serious wounds from arrows. The other one of the two was an elderly man, and he was slightly wounded with an arrow. After dressing their wounds as best they could, they painfully and slowly made their way over the rough country east towards Canyon creek. They purposely avoided the road fearing the redskins lurking there. Finally the younger man gave out and he persuaded his companion to push on and leave him. The elder man did so, but the wound which appeared slight, was from a poisoned arrow and although he arrived at the Canyon creek camp, he eventually died. The younger man rested and then struggled on, bathing his wounds at every opportunity and finally reached the camp. He received all the attention that could be given, but, although his wounds healed, he never regained his wonted vigor.

These are but samples of incidents that were constantly occurring on this road from Canyon City to The Dalles and how many terrible battles occurred in the country now embraced in Wheeler county, we cannot tell, but, could the accounts of

As the knowledge of the camp at Canyon creek and adjacent places became better known, men flocked there in large numbers and the road through Wheeler county became a regular highway, there constantly being packers, freighters, and prospectors going to and fro. Mail came in by way of The Dalles, by private parties, and as early as 1864, we have record of an express being established on the road. The men who inaugurated this enterprise were Messrs. Edgar and Jones and they transported express to and from Canyon City and The Dalles. How extensive was their business we are not told. In the same year, however, there was established the first real stage line from The Dalles to Canyon City. This important enterprise was opened by the well known pioneer of Wheeler county, H. H. Wheeler, who now resides at Mitchell. He had come up to The Dalles from California and seeing the need of a stage line on this road from The Dalles to Canyon City, prepared an outfit and in May, 1864, started with a fourhorse team, a lever coach and eleven passengers from The Dalles to Canyon City. This was the initial trip and Mr. Wheeler handled this stage until 1868, making three trips each week. He had eight changes of horses, and each coach was supplied with four horses. Mr. Wheeler drove the first stage in person and had a full load of eleven passengers, and also had as many on the return trip. He handled the Wells Fargo Express Co.'s business and also had a contract to carry the United States mail. The first mail carried, however, was not until the spring of 1865, and this was the first contract over this route. Mr. Wheeler received twelve thousand dollars from the government for transporting the mail each year, and his fare for passengers was forty dollars each way. This was a moderate charge considering the length of the road, and the dangers encountered. Mr. Wheeler was not a man to be deterred from an enterprise undertaken and he managed it well for four years.

On the seventh day of September, 1866, Mr. Wheeler was in person driving the stage and was about three miles east from where the town of Mitchell now stands, when he was suddenly attacked by a band of fifteen or twenty murderous Snake Indians. H. C. Paige, the Wells Fargo messenger, was the only other person on the coach. At the first onslaught, the Indians fired a volley and Mr. Wheeler was hit in the mouth, the bullet going through both cheeks and knocking out some of his teeth and a portion of his jaw. The road was too rough to drive the stage away from them in a race, and the only thing left to do was to mount the leaders, which had never been ridden, and scurry away as fast as possible, leaving the stage and its cargo for spoil to the savages. Immediately, upon the first approach of the savages, Paige opened fire on them with a thirty-eight caliber Colt's revolver, his only weapon, and so pluckily did he keep up his fight that the savages were beaten off sufficiently to allow the leaders to be detached and thus he and Mr. Wheeler escaped. The cargo contained ten thousand dollars in greenbacks, three hundred dollars in coin, diamond rings, besides other valuables. The Indians cut open the mail sacks, took what they liked, but overlooked the greenbacks, or did not know their value, for they were found later, took the leather of the stage top, and all parts they desired and left. Mr. Wheeler and his companion made their way to the road house of C. W. Myers and Frank Hewot, the latter being known as "Alkali Frank," which was two miles farther east. Later they returned and gathered up what was to be found of the valuables and the United States mail. Mr. Wheeler went back to The Dalles to receive treatment for his wound. He lost heavily during his time on the stage, by thieving and marauding from the Indians. Eighty-nine horses in all were stolen besides much other property. But one of the strange things is that though Mr. Wheeler went over the road perhaps more than any one man, and although murders were common on every hand, still he escaped with the wound mentioned, and lives to recount the stirring incidents of those days.

In 1887, Secretary of State McBride presented to the state of Oregon a long tin box, which is still kept in the state archives. It contains a thirty-eight Colt's revolver, large and heavy, a bowie knife, made from a butcher knife, two pairs of bullet moulds, two ramrods, and a belt. This is the accoutrement possessed by Paige at the time of the terrible struggle mentioned above. The revolver is the instrument he used so tellingly against the Redskins and this small arsenal is highly prized as a relic of those days when Indians were on the warpath and the real westy spirit pervaded the now quiet and prosperous state of Oregon.

The first real settlers in the territory now embraced in Wheeler county, so far as we have any record, were brought in by the inducements offered to supply needed refreshments and food for the freighters and prospectors who traveled the dangerous road above mentioned. The persons who so settled were C. A. Myers, and Frank Hewot, who was known as "Alkali Frank." They located on Bridge creek, some five miles east from where Mitchell now stands in 1863. They established themselves in as good quarters as they could construct in those primitive days, enclosed and broke up land, sowed crops, raised stock, and also kept a stage station. Myers was born in Germany in 1819, came to California during the gold excitement in 1849 and later went with the wave of migration that rolled northward into the regions of Oregon as we have mentioned above and in 1863 he located on Bridge creek. So far as is known, Mr. Myers was the first permanent settler in what is now Wheeler county, and, also, was the first one to locate permanently between the Des Chutes and Canyon creek. On the place selected, he erected a substantial house, proof against the marauding Indians, which was a place of refuge for many a weary and hard beset traveller. Mr. Myers was a typical frontiersman, and, not only did he establish himself in the country, but he set to with a will and soon had opened up a producing farm. He planted the first garden, raised the first grain, set out the first orchard and through thrift and enterprise he built a splendid home, and accumulated a competency. He remained in this section until Monday, February 3, 1903, when he was called to the realities of the world beyond. In 1864 George Jones settled in Spanish gulch, about two and one-half miles from the site of Antone postoffice, and engaged in farming and stock raising. He also did mining and was one of the men who assisted to open up the country. In 1865, E. B. Allen settled near where Caleb postoffice now is located and gave his attention to stockraising. S. G. Coleman came to the same locality in the same year and also engaged in raising stock. In the same year, J. N. Clark settled at the mouth of Bridge creek and began to establish himself by opening a farm and raising some stock. Clark labored along as the pioneer is forced to do, against many odds, until 1866 and then occurred what is well told by the Grant County News of August 6, 1885:

Over in Wasco, (now Wheeler), county, on the main John Day river and near the mouth of Bridge creek, is a ranch and postoffice called Burnt Ranch and it came to be thus named from the following circumstance:

In 1866 James Clark was occupying the position of a pioneer settler there and had a very comfortable home. Along in the early fall his wife departed to the Willamette valley to visit her people. One bright September morning, Jim and his brother-in-law, George Masterson, forded the John Day river and were cutting up a lot of driftwood on the opposite bars. Suddenly they discovered a band of Indians rushing down the hill from the Ochoco country. The men had left their rifles in the house and they thought there was a possible show to reach them ahead of the Indians. They unhitched the horses and climbing on bareback, raced for the house. But when they saw the Indians were going to get there first, they swerved to the left and struck up Bridge creek, with the enemy in hot pursuit.

It took but a few miles of hard riding to use up Masterson's work horse and he told Clark to keep on and save himself. Masterson then jumped from his horse and struck into the brush. He jumped into the creek and, swimming down stream a little distance, found a deep hole, overhung with thick brush, where he "camped." The Indians chased Clark a few miles farther and then returned to finish Masterson. But he confined himself to his covered haunt, and after hunting all around him, the Indians gave up and returned to the house, where they took everything they considered of value. Clark kept on to the nearest ranch, eight miles distant, where he found a number of packers, with whom he returned to the scene of action. They yelled for Masterson, and, at last taking chances on their being friends, he came out of his hole of hiding almost chilled to death.

The party then went on to the house which was found smouldering in ashes and the Indians gone. The raiders had cut open featherbeds, taking the ticking and scattering the feathers abroad, and also doing other acts of destruction. What was a happy home a few hours before was now a scene of desolation, but Providence had ordered the safety of the occupants. Another house was constructed, but ever since that time the place had been called Burnt Ranch, and that is the name of the postoffice there to this day.

As early as 1865 the government established a military camp at a point just southeast from where Caleb postoffice now stands, upon the old military road. This camp was named in honor of Lieutenant Watson, a bright officer who was killed in an Indian fight in Crook county. Camp Watson had quarters for two companies of infantry and two companies of cavalry. It was in use from the time of establishment until 1869, when it was discontinued and the property sold. This protection was of much benefit to the struggling settlers who had to cope with a merciless and savage foe, who sought not only their lives, but also drove off their stock, burned their houses and stole their goods upon every opportunity. The presence of the soldiers put something of a check on these depredations on the scattering farmers and stockmen and upon the pilgrims on the road. Settlers began to come in from different points and in 1866 Jerome Parsons settled on the John Day near where Twickenham now stands and engaged in stock raising. J. K. Rowe settled on the John Day below where Twickenham now is and took up stock raising. Cal McCracken settled on Rock creek where Antone postoffice now is and engaged in stock raising. Joseph Huntley and Andrew Clarno settled on Pine creek, and they, too, engaged in stock raising. In 1867 Mr. McNeil located where Caleb now stands and began to raise stock. In 1867 three men located in this territory and began stock raising. Robert Sedman located near where Twickenham is now. Al Sutton settled on what is now known as Sutton ranch, twelve miles from Mitchell, on Bridge creek. And Jake Smith settled on the John Day near Twickenham, or what is now Twickenham. H. C. Hal came in in 1868 and deciding this was a good stock raising country began operations about three miles east from where Mitchell is located. Mr. Marshall came in the same year and settled about two miles west of Mr. Hal's place. J. P. Brown also came in 1868 and made settlement about ten miles southeast from where Richmond is now located. He, too, began stock raising operations. Mr. Brown brought his family, and, so far as we have record, this was one of the very first, if not the first family to move in. His place was located on Gird's creek. Others who came in 1868 and engaged in stock raising are: J. K. Rowe, on Rowe creek, twenty miles southeast from where Fossil now stands; Wick Cusick, on Bridge creek, nine miles below Mitchell; Wm. Saltman, on Burnt Ranch, where the present postoffice of Burnt Ranch is now located. In 1869 Mr. Moore, afterward state senator from Crook county, this state, came to his location about ten miles southeast from Richmond and raised stock. In the same year the following persons came in and made settlement and engaged in raising stock: Louis Manning, on Butte creek, six miles above Fossil; Jerome Parsons, on John Day, near Twickenham; Samuel Snooks in about the same locality; William Bigham settled where Fossil now stands; Horace Parker settled two miles west of Bigham's place; Al Straw, on Butte creek six miles above Bigham's place; J. W. Chambers, two miles northwest from Bigham's place; and Ralph Fisk, in the Haystack country along the John Day. In 1870 others came and among them we mention Jeff Moore, son of Senator Moore, on Gird's creek; Henry Helm and Wm. Gilliam on the flat below Richmond, in the Shoofly country; Lafayette Scoggin, on the present site of Fossil; P. E. and George McQuinn, on Butte creek east from Fossil four miles; E. O. Fling, in Caleb basin; T. B. Hoover, on Hoover creek, three miles east from Fossil; Joe and Rodney Tompkins, in the Haystack country; Charles Masiker, in the Haystack country; David Hamilton, about three miles south from Fossil. The last named gentleman engaged in farming and sheepraising, but all the others who came in this year were occupied in raising stock alone. In 1872 other stockmen found their way to the inviting fields of Wheeler county, and among this number we mention O. Fleming, on Service prairie, fifteen miles east from Fossil; James and Doc Hughes, in the Haystack country; Joseph Frizzell, on Alder creek, eighteen miles east from Fossil; and J. W. Gilman, twenty miles east from Fossil, who was the founder of the Gilman French Stock Company. In 1874 W. P. Putnam purchased an interest with O. Fleming on Service prairie; Carl and George Wagner came into the Haystack country in the early seventies and, also J. H. Putnam came about that time, who was with the Gilman French Company for thirteen years. During the centennial year when the world was turning its eyes to the progress of arts, sciences, and all civilization as manifested in the exhibition at Philadelphia, the stockman and the pioneer came for location in what is now Wheeler county and among those who found that they sought for are Levi Record and Joe Laughauki, who came from distant Florida and began the stock industry in the Haystack country. Cal McConnel and Edward Saunderson settled three miles east from Fossil this year and went to raising sheep. In 1878, Ferd Hunt located in the Haystack country.

It will be seen by the foregoing that the territory now embraced in Wheeler county was well sprinkled with settlers when the year 1878 arrived, the year of the terrible Paiute and Bannock Indian war. More or less this struggle affected the entire country of Oregon east of the Cascades, as well as southern Washington and southern Idaho. The actual battles occurred outside of Wheeler county, but marauding bands of the savages scurried in various directions and committed much depredation over a wide territory. The Bannocks under the command of Chief Buffalo Horn started in the spring of 1878 with several hundred braves and all their women and children from the vicinity of the Fort Hall reservation in southern Idaho. Their course lay west and they crossed into Oregon in about the latitude of Silver City. Thence they moved west and north, being constantly increased by the addition of the Paiutes and different bands of renegade Indians and also by various companies from tribes further north. They followed the customary tactics of their race, pillaging and murdering as they went, driving off stock, burning settlers cabins and improvements. The Paiutes were commanded by Egan. At midnight on June 21st, soldiers under the command of Colonel Bernard left Camp Harney to attack these Indians and the next morning the battle was on. The Indians were far more numerous than the soldiers, but much damage was done them, Egan was wounded, Buffalo Horn was killed, and the savages set out for the north. Silver creek was the scene of this battle and though it was not an overwhelming victory, still the killing of Buffalo Horn left the command to Egan, who was wounded, and this so materially weakened the expedition that when General Wheaton met them in Umatilla county, they were broken entirely and retreated south again. It was the intention of Buffalo Horn to gather all the tribes of the northwest, turn out the whites or murder them, and then, if pushed too hard by the soldiers, retreat into British Columbia. His scheme was a bold and bright one, but he was not a man who could carry it out, and then, too, fate decreed that his career should cease. Egan was a fierce man, but no general to execute so great a plan. As stated, the Indians were defeated by the soldiers in Umatilla county and General Howard followed them south and captured the remnants of them near the California line. He severely punished the participants in this great raid, and those captured were brought to the Yakima reservation and put under charge of the military force there. Thus, one of the best planned uprisings of the northwest was put down quickly, and, considering their intent, with a comparatively small loss of life. Many poor settlers lost all their property, a good many were killed, and it put a check to immigration for some time. All this, as to the general route of the Indians and the vigorous battles, occurred outside of the territory now embraced in Wheeler county, but its effect was felt here as it was all over eastern Oregon. Settlers lost stock, many were led to flee, and things in general were demoralized for a time. Then, too, Wheeler suffered with the balance of the country from the check of immigration that this war caused. However, in the end it was a good thing, for it gathered the marauders all up in one band and they received the punishment they deserved. Egan was killed as was Buffalo Horn, the Indians were severely chastised, and the country had rest from their thieving and murdering expeditions. Soon it became known that there was no fear of another Indian outbreak and the immigration that had so seriously been checked, began again to pour in, and the settlers were left unmolested to carry forward their work of improvement and subduing the wild country. Thus, while it cost much valuable property, and many lives, as well, the country paid no more dearly than it would have done had such restless and murderous bands been left to carry on their individual work for a longer period. Speaking of this campaign, General Howard says

The Paiutes and Bannocks drew men and help from the Umatillas, and many warriors from other tribes, but we beat them in every battle, and kept on that persistent course which meant never to stop until the work was done. I am sure that neither of these tribes ever wanted any more war after that rattling campaign, which never stopped for canyon, mountain, river or forest until the enemy was fully overcome. There are many men who live in eastern Oregon, Washington, and Idaho who remember this hard war of 1878, which has gone into history as the Paiute and Bannock war.

Thus in brief is the story of the last great Indian war that raged in eastern Oregon. The general reinvigorating of business and immigration after the real status of the Indian trouble was properly known was felt in Wheeler county as elsewhere through eastern Oregon, and settlers came in more rapidly to find homes in the favored country, which has always been reckoned, as now, one of the best stock regions in the west. However, this very fact of Wheeler's excellencies for stock raising made the settlements sparse as the interests of the stockman are best conserved when he has elbow room. Sturdy men were opening up farms, and some mining was done, but no such find in Wheeler county as Canyon creek has ever been opened and so mining, while exceedingly profitable sometimes to single individuals, was not carried on extensively. The country was found to be productive of those fruits, grains and vegetables needed for the use of man and the fertile sections of the county were opened up from time to time as the years went by, but stock raising was then, has continued to be, and is now, the chief industry of Wheeler county. The first settlers discovered that fruit would thrive well and one, Alex Fisher, as early as 1865 began to produce a few varieties. For years he was the most extensive fruit raiser in the country and supplied the settlers for miles in every direction. Others profited by his example and orchards are to be found in all parts of the county at this time.

The first postoffice established in the county was at the Sutton ranch in 1867, Al Sutton being the postmaster.

In another portion of this work the various apportionments of the country of Central Oregon into the counties now existing has been thoroughly gone into, and, therefore, it is not necessary to repeat here. However, Wheeler county has been embraced in several, at different times, and she passed through the various stages and changes of organization that is usual to frontier territory. But, as the county exists today, it was made up of portions of Gilliam, Crook, and Grant counties. Fossil country came from Gilliam; the Mitchell section was taken from Crook; and Grant county was called upon to give up the Haystack and Spanish Gulch countries. Owing to the remoteness of these sections from their respective county seats, very early in the history of the country, murmurings were heard because of the long and expensive journeys to do business in the county seat. As the country settled more thickly, this dissatisfaction grew and was very generally distributed among the people. Some began to talk of a new county and various plans and methods were proposed many years before they assumed definite shape. That great sifter and distinguisher of American people, the free discussion of topics by the people, slowly but steadily was accomplishing its work. It, indeed, was very slow, owing, perhaps, to the fact that the population was largely stockmen, and the settlement not thick. Finally the desire began to assume definite form but not till December 31, 1892, do we hear it voiced in the papers. Then the Antelope Herald states that "We understand that a petition is being circulated in the Mitchell country, praying for the organization of a new county out of a part of Crook and a portion of Grant, thus entitling either Mitchell or Waldron to a county seat." So the matter was launched. In January, 1895, an effort was made to create the county of Sutton from parts of Grant and Crook counties, with Mitchell as the county seat. The boundaries of this proposed county were:

"Beginning at the northwest corner of township 13, S., range 20, E., W. M., thence south on the township line to the southwest corner of township 14, S., range 20, E.; thence east on the township line between townships fourteen and fifteen south to the southeast corner of section 33, township 14, S., range 26, E.; thence north to the north boundary of Grant county; thence east on said boundary line to the northwest corner of Grant county; thence south on the west boundary line of Grant county to the centre of the John Day river; thence down the middle of said river to where the same crosses the line running east and west through the center of township 8, S., range 19, E.; thence west on said last named line to the summit of the mountains separating the waters of the John Day and Des Chutes rivers; thence along said summit southeastward to the place of beginning."

The taxable property within the boundaries of this proposed county, at the time the move was made to establish it, was $432,431.00.

The matter was properly brought to the legislature of 1895 and Mitchell put up a strong fight with others to assist, but the proposition was destined to fall through, and so ended the second definite attempt to get a new county established, embracing, at least, a portion of what is now Wheeler county. This backset quieted the matter for a time, but though it slumbered, it did not die. The instigators of the movement took courage after due deliberation and as the people were determined, new plans were formed and the matter again was put forth. In December, 1898, the Condon Globe announced that an effort was being made to organize a new county from portions of Crook, Grant, and perhaps a piece of Gilliam. The people of the territory embraced claimed that they were remote from the county seat towns of Crook and Grant and were obliged to undergo many hardships, much inconvenience, and great expense in order to reach their county seats, especially in the winter season. This movement took definite shape in presenting to the legislature in January, 1899, the following petition:

To the Honorable Legislative Assembly of the state of Oregon: We, your petitioners, residents and taxpayers within the limits of Crook and Grant counties, in the state of Oregon, and within those portions of the said counties within the boundaries hereinafter named, respectively petition that a new county be created out of the territory bounded as follows:

Beginning at the northwest corner of township 13 south, range 20 east of Willamette meridian; thence south on range line between ranges 19 and 20 east, to the southwest corner of township 14 south, range 20 east; thence east on the township line between township 14 and 15 south, to the center of township 14 south, range 26 east; thence north through the center of 14, 13, 12, 11, 10, 9, 8 and 7 south, range 26 east, to the Grant county line; thence west on north boundary line of Grant county to the John Day river; thence along the middle of the channel of the said John Day river to the northern line of township 9 south, range 20 east; thence west on said last named line to the Des Chutes meridian, on the summit of the divide separating the water shed of the John Day and Des Chutes rivers; thence along the summit of said divide to the place of beginning."

It was to be expected that opposition would be aroused and when the enemies of the measure learned that R. N. Donnelly, Grant county's representative, had introduced on January 11, 1899, house bill, number 153, which was the original draft as stated above, then definite action commenced. This emanated largely from Gilliam county, where the most intense opposition was put forth. Wheeler was destined not to be born without a struggle, and one, too, that showed much intense action and considerable acrimony. This was not confined alone to the territory concerned, but spread abroad through surrounding country, but spread abroad through terness was expressed. So soon, we stated, as the bill was introduced, then a mass meeting was hurriedly called in southern Gilliam county. The date of it was Friday evening, January 13, 1899. It was decided to circulate a remonstrance and a committee was appointed to get the signatures of the people opposed to the bill. Gilliam county was loath to give up any portion of her territory to the new county. Those who took an active part in securing the signatures to this petition were William Hartman, Bud Rinehart, John Gross, Arthur Foster, George Caven, Louis Couture, Frank Maddock, R. A. McCully, and A. J. Shelton. These gentlemen canvassed the county thoroughly, circulating through that portion to be cut off as well as in the other portions of the county. After three days they returned with 646 names attached to the petition, all names of voters. Of these it was alleged that 45 were secured right in Fossil and in the territory just south of it, while 150 were secured in the territory proposed to be cut off from Gilliam county. This remonstrance was hurriedly sent to the legislature. Perhaps the general feeling in Gilliam county was best shown by the Lone Rock correspondent, whose article appeared in the Condon Globe of January 19, 1899. We append it.

Everyone about here is kicking like a mule downhill against the proposition to cut off a slice of Gilliam county for the purpose of benefitting a little two by four locality and for their accommodation to thus spoil our own county (Gilliam). We don't want any of it and are willing to let good enough alone, and all hands signed the remonstrance against it.

Whether this petition, or whether the continued opposition and pressure brought to bear in other lines, was the cause or not, nevertheless when the contested bill came up in the house, January 26, 1899, it was defeated. Eight members of the house were absent, leaving only fifty-two to vote. Of these thirty favored the bill, but as it required a majority of the sixty to carry a measure, the bill was defeated. The entire opposition came from Gilliam county and Gilliam was jubilant over the turn affairs had taken. The matter was not yet to be downed, though, and the friends of the measure brought the bill up for reconsideration again with the result that on Monday evening, January 30, it easily passed the house. All eyes were then turned to the senate and every effort that the people from Gilliam county could put forth was brought out and the fight waxed hot, and also, to some considerable extent, bitter. Finally the day came on for the vote to be taken, Thursday, February 16, and the bill was passed. But, in the senate, it had been amended, and the house was to pass on that yet. This final act was done and the bill became a law, the governor attaching his signature.

Commenting on this under date of February 23, the Condon Globe said:

To the residents of Gilliam county, and of the portions of Grant and Crook which are included in the new county, the measure has aroused the most intense interest of any which was before the late legislature for consideration. The contest has been waged fiercely by both sides, and, at times, was rather acrimonious, both in this section of the country and at Salem. But a compromise having been effected the bill was allowed to pass and it is believed will give pretty general satisfaction to the people of Gilliam county and perhaps to the people of the new county.

The compromise, as embodied in an amendment to the bill as it finally passed the senate, fixes the boundary line between Gilliam and Wheeler counties on the section line one mile south of the first standard parallel south, which is just one mile south of the town of Mayville, the line running straight from east to west without a jog.

The Fossil Journal commenting on this new bill said:

Donnelly's bill creating Wheeler county passed the senate on the sixteenth, with the northern line of the county an average distance of two miles south of the line established in the bill as it passed the house. This brings the line one mile on this side of Mayville. It is a compromise line. The Mayville delegation told the senate committee that they were absolutely opposed to the new county taking an inch of Gilliam county territory, but if it had to be divided, then they wanted the northern line set southward an average distance of four miles from the original line. The committee split the difference, and placed the line two miles south. This gives us twenty-five miles of Gilliam county instead of twenty-seven as first asked for.

Wheeler county is about fifty-four miles long and over thirty wide, and is somewhat larger than Gilliam.

The Prineville Review of February 25 remarks concerning the new county: "The people of that section have wanted a new county for years. They have got their desire but it is a bitter dose for some to take."

It was in honor of the well known pioneer, H. H. Wheeler that the new county was named, and so well were all pleased with this, that it aroused no opposition at all.

The Enabling Act creating Wheeler county is given below in full.

Be it enacted by the Legislative Assembly of the State of Oregon:

Sec. 1. That all that portion of the state of Oregon embraced within the following boundary lines be and the same is hereby created and organized into a separate county by the name of Wheeler, to-wit:

Beginning at the northwest corner of township 13 south, of range 20 east, Willamette Meridian, and running thence south on range line, between ranges 19 and 20 east, three miles by government survey; thence east on the section lines to the east boundary of range 22 east; thence south on said east boundary line three miles to southeast corner of township 13 south of range 22 east; thence east on the south boundary of township 13 south to the east boundary of range 23 east; thence south on said east boundary of range 23 east to the south boundary of township 14 south; thence east on said south boundary to the east boundary of range 25 east; thence north on said range line between ranges 25 and 26 east to the north boundary of Grant county; thence west on the north boundary of Grant county to the east boundary of range 24 east; thence north on said east boundary to a point which is one mile south of the first standard parallel south; thence west along the section line one mile south of said first standard parallel south to the center of the main channel of the John Day river; thence up the center of the main channel of the said John Day river to the most southerly point on said river where the center of said river is crossed by the west boundary of range 20 east; thence south on said west boundary of range 20 east to the place of beginning.

Sec. 2. The territory embraced within the said boundary line shall compose a county for all civil and military purposes, and shall be subject to the same laws and restrictions and be entitled to elect the same officers as other counties of this state; provided, that it shall be the duty of the governor, as soon as it shall be convenient after this act shall have become a law, to appoint for Wheeler county, and from its citizens, the several county officers allowed by law to other counties in this state, which said officers after duly qualifying according to law, shall be entitled to hold their respective offices until their successors are duly elected at the general election of 1900 and have duly qualified according to law.

Sec. 3. The temporary county seat of Wheeler county shall be located at Fossil in said county until a permanent location shall be adopted. At the next general election the question shall be submitted to the legal voters of said county, and the place, if any, which shall receive a majority of all the votes cast at said election shall be the permanent county seat of said county. But if no place shall receive a majority of all the votes cast, the question shall again be submitted to the legal voters of said county at the next general election, between the two points having the highest number of votes at said election, and the place receiving the highest number of votes at such last election shall be the permanent county seat of said county.

Sec. 4. Said county of Wheeler shall, for representative purposes, be annexed to the 28th representative district, and for senatorial purposes said county shall be annexed to the 21st senatorial district.

Sec. 5. The county clerks of Crook, Grant, and Gilliam counties, respectively, shall within thirty days after this act shall have gone into operation, make out and deliver to the county clerk of Wheeler county a transcript of all taxes assessed upon all persons and property within said Wheeler county and which were previously included within the limits of Crook, Grant and Gilliam counties, respectively, and all taxes which shall remain unpaid the day this act shall become a law shall be paid to the proper officer of Wheeler county. The said clerks of said counties, Crook, Grant, and Gilliam, respectively, shall also make out and deliver to the clerk of Wheeler county, within the time above limited, a transcript of all cases pending in the circuit and county courts of their respective counties between parties residing in Wheeler county, and transfer all original papers in said cases to be tried in Wheeler county.

Sec. 6. The county court of Wheeler county shall be held at the county seat on the first Monday in January and the first Monday in every alternate month thereafter, of each year.

Sec. 7. The said county of Wheeler is hereby attached to the seventh judicial district for judicial purposes, and the terms of the circuit court for said county shall be held at the county seat of said county on the fourth Monday in January, and the first Monday in September of each year.

Sec. 8. Until otherwise provided by law, the county judge of Wheeler county shall receive an annual salary of four hundred dollars, the county clerk of said county shall receive an annual salary of twelve hundred dollars; the sheriff shall receive an annual salary of sixteen hundred dollars; and the treasurer shall receive an annual salary of two hundred and fifty dollars. The county clerk of Wheeler county shall appoint the stock inspector and fix his salary.

Sec. 9. The law relating to trespass of sheep and other animals shall be the same throughout Wheeler county as now maintains in Crook and Gilliam counties.

Sec. 10. The county judge of Wheeler county shall let by contract to the lowest responsible and efficient bidder the work of transcribing all records of Crook, Grant, and Gilliam counties, respectively, affecting real estate situated in Wheeler county, and, when completed they shall be examined and certified to by the clerk.

of Wheeler county, and shall thereafter be recognized and acknowledged as the official records of Wheeler county; provided the clerk of Wheeler county shall be allowed to bid on such work.

Sec. 11. It shall be the duty of the superintendent of schools of Crook, Grant, and Gilliam counties, respectively, within sixty days after the appointment of a superintendent of schools of Wheeler county, to make out and forward to said superintendent of schools of Wheeler county a true and correct transcript or abstract of the annual reports of the clerks of the various school districts embraced within Wheeler county; and the said county school superintendents of Crook, Grant and Gilliam counties, respectively, shall also at the time of making the appointments of the school fund for the year 1899 apportion to the various school districts within Wheeler county their pro rata proportion of said school fund, the same as if said county had not been created and organized.

Sec. 12. The treasurer of Wheeler county shall, within one year after its organization by the appointment of its officers as hereinbefore provided, assume and pay to the counties of Crook, Grant and Gilliam, respectively, a pro rata proportion of the remaining indebtedness, if any, of Crook, Grant, and Gilliam counties, respectively, after deducting therefrom the amount of money that has been collected in taxes from the property of the territory taken from said counties, respectively, by this Act, and included in the county of Wheeler, and expended in said counties of Crook, Grant, and Gilliam, respectively, for public buildings.

Sec. 13. The county judge of Gilliam county and the county judge of Grant county and G. O. Butler of Wheeler county are hereby appointed a board of commissioners to determine the value of such property in Grant and Gilliam counties, and the amount of indebtedness, if any, to be assumed by said Wheeler county and paid to the counties of Grant and Gilliam, respectively. Said board shall meet at the county seat of Grant county on the tenth day of May, 1899, or within ten days thereafter, and, after taking and subscribing an oath faithfully to discharge their duties, shall proceed with said work, and when it is completed, file reports of their conclusions in duplicate with the clerks of Grant, Gilliam, and Wheeler counties.

Sec. 14. The county judge and the county clerk of Crook county and Engene Looney of Wheeler county are hereby appointed a board of commissioners to determine the amount of indebtedness, if any, in the manner hereinbefore provided, to be assumed by said Wheeler county and paid to Crook county. Said board shall meet at the county seat of Crook county on the tenth day of May, 1899, or within ten days thereafter, and, after taking and subscribing to an oath faithfully to discharge their duties, shall proceed with said work, and when it is completed file report of their conclusion in duplicate with the clerks of Crook and Wheeler counties. In case of a vacancy occurring in either of said boards, the same may be filled by the appointment of the governor of the state of Oregon.

Sec. 15. Within thirty days after the filing of either of such reports in Wheeler county, either county may appeal from the decision of either of said boards to the circuit court of Gilliam county, by serving notice of the appeal upon the clerk of the other county interested. Upon perfecting the issues in said circuit court either county may demand a change of venue to any other county in the seventh judicial district of the state of Oregon, which may be agreed upon by said counties; or, in the event of a disagreement, to any county which may be designated by the judge of said district. The trial may be by jury, and the judgment rendered may be enforced as other judgments against counties. If the county appealing fails to receive a more favorable judgment than the finding of the board appealed from, by at least five hundred dollars, it shall pay the costs of appeal. If no appeal be taken by either party within the thirty days above provided, the findings of said board shall be conclusive. The members of said board shall receive three dollars per day for each day actually employed, and mileage. The expenses incurred by the above mentioned boards shall be borne equally by the counties interested.

Sec. 16. Inasmuch as the early formation of Wheeler county is much desired, this act shall take effect and be in force from and after its approval by the governor and the appointment of the proper officers herein provided.

Approved February 17, 1899.

In pursuance of the above, the boards met and Wheeler was found indebted as follows: To Grant county, $27,911.76; to Gilliam county, $5,985.74; and to Crook county, $24.92. The total resources estimated for the county at starting were $16,392.25, thus leaving an indebtedness of over twenty thousand dollars. At this time it was estimated that her population was two thousand five hundred, and her taxable property one million dollars. The square miles in Wheeler county are 1656, and there are estimated to be forty-six townships within her boundaries.

The first grand jury to serve in Wheeler county was made up of the following named persons: David Hamilton, Clark Herndon, G. J. Caaven, Ed F. Horn, A. M. Andrews, William Waters, and D. H. Smith. The first panel of petit jurors was composed of David Hamilton, W. S. Thompson, E. M. Clymer, Clark Herndon, G. J. Caven, Jerome Bridges, Ed F. Horn, Samuel B. Davis, James Mansfield, Thos. L. Woodward, James I. Jones, James E. Keyes, Jacob L. Barnhouse, J. W. Waterman, W. B. Cowne, J. H. Rucher, E. M. Andrus, Benj.

Tremonger, Geo. McKay, Wm. Waters, Wm. H. Gates, Warren Carsner, Archie Hunt, Jos. Trizzell, and D. H. Smith.

On June 4, 1900, was held the election that decided the county seat question. Spray, Twickenham and Fossil were the aspirants. Earnest effort was put forth to establish a sentiment for Twickenham, but the balance of power was too strong against it, and the result of the contest was as follows: Fossil, 436; Spray, 82, and Twickenham, 267. By precincts it ran as follows: Fossil precinct, Fossil, 234; Spray, 5; Twickenham, 16; Mitchell, Fossil 35, Spray 7, and Twickenham 97; Waldron, Fossil 64, Spray 8, and Twickenham 9; Spray, Fossil 8, Spray 41, Twickenham 11; Rock Creek, Fossil 12, Spray 2, Twickenham 34; Mountain, Fossil 0, Spray 1, Twickenham 28; Waterman Fossil 10, Spray 2, Twickenham 11; Winlock, Fossil 19, Spray 13, Twickenham 4; Lost Valley, Fossil 21, Spray 0, Twickenham 3; Ward, Fossil 7, Spray 2, Twickenham 4; Clarno, Fossil 21, Spray 0, Twickenham 5; Twickenham, Fossil 3, Spray 0, Twickenham 28; Bridge Creek, Fossil 2, Spray 0, Twickenham 17. With the settlement of the location of the county seat, the people of the new county, though not altogether satisfied, in a magnanimous manner laid aside all sectional differences, and together labored for the advancement and welfare of the new political division. A strong fight had been made to get the coveted prize at Twickenham, but it was not to be and in a commendable spirit of kindness the Wheeler County News, Twickenham's paper, edited by E. M. Shutt, which had so loyally championed the cause for Twickenham, said, under issue of June 7: "Twickenham has fought and lost. So did Napoleon at Waterloo some time ago. But, while Napoleon soon died over it, the people of Twickenham still live, and, up to the time of going to press, were enjoying the best of health.

"Fossil won the county seat by a majority of 86 over all votes cast, which permanently decides the question. If it proves too have been an honest vote, and an honest count, let us be Americans enough to quietly abide by the will of the majority, banish all bitter feelings against those who differed from us in the general welfare of the county."

In 1900 the population of Wheeler county was 2,443. In that same year a water spout occurred on June 30, which did considerable damage, the worst destruction occurring on Cherry creek. J. M. Connelly lost his entire crop, estimated at seven thousand dollars. Others lost heavily, and especially so as stacking was just done and in an hour's time the unfortunate farmers saw a year's labor swept away.

In 1894 the John Day river was higher at four o'clock, p. m., March 30, than it had ever been known previous to that time. Much damage was done to property along the valleys. At Burnt Ranch the water backed up into the orchards and ran through the fields, tearing away fences and washing out gardens. Vast quantities of drift were in the stream, as logs, immense trees, haystacks, lumber, water wheels, bridge timbers, posts and rails, besides much else.

In January, 1901, bids were let for the construction of a court house for Wheeler county, and A. F. Peterson was awarded the contract, his bid being $9,025.00, the lowest one according to plans and specifications.

In 1902, James S. Stewart stated in the Oregonian as follows:

The wisdom of the formation of Wheeler county is already notably apparent. In the two and one-half years of her existence she has cut her thirty-five thousand dollar debt, inherited from the three counties from which she was carved, to twenty-six thousand, aside from the ordinary running expenses, thirteen thousand dollars for a nice new court house and three thousand dollars for records and furniture, with a tax levy not increased from what had been paid before, and in fact less than the levy on the surrounding counties.

Sentiment against a railroad entering into Wheeler county was held by stockmen, they feeling that the range would be reduced, and their increase materially decreased. This has been giving way to a general feeling of progression, as the farmer needs the railroad to market his produce and then social and educational facilities will be greatly augmented. Gradually the sentiment has turned to favor this ingress of real civilization, but not yet has the iron horse invaded the boundaries of the county. July 2, 1905, the first train made its way to Condon over the line from Arlington, and doubtless in a short time the same line will be advanced to tap the resources of Wheeler county.

In the first days of June, 1904, John Day, the noted pioneer, breathed his last in the city hospital at Lewiston, Idaho. He left his native heath, Westchester county, New York, in 1852, pioneered to California, dug gold all through the early camps, assisted to develop and build up all through the northwest, and was widely known. The John Day river that flows through Wheeler county was named in his honor, and a town in Grant county bears his name.

Some one has said: "Wheeler county—the synonym for the greatest stock country in the world." This may be rating it high, but, certain it is, the conditions to raise stock successfully and with fine financial returns exist well in Wheeler county. Being thus favored so especially, it seems doubly sad that the baser passions of men, blessed with this magnificent country, should so dominate them that they must seek revenge in that dastardly method fit only for the savage. We refer to the outrages of killing stock on the range. What a sight, to see the fair ranges of Wheeler county, stinking with the carcasses of fine animals slain in mere revenge, perhaps of a fancied wrong! But such is the case and this blotch we are forced to chronicle, would we be faithful in writing the history. The Wheeler County News of May 27, 1904 says: "Poison was deposited on the range eight miles east from town, a short distance from the Canyon City road and the result of this cowardly act is that twelve head of range cattle belonging to Sigfrit Bros. died last week. The motive for this deed is unknown.

"Following the poisoning episode came the news to town early Monday morning that about three a. m. five men attacked a band of yearling sheep in the corral on the place belonging to Butler Bros. of Richmond. One hundred and six sheep were killed and a greater number were so wounded as to either die or have to be killed. These sheep were being grazed on leased land, and no motive can be found why this should occur. It was thought, possibly, it might be the breaking out of another war between the sheepmen and cattlemen, and that the latter were responsible for the deed."

The same paper on September 23, 1904, states that five men, about eleven p. m. Friday previous to the issue, attacked a band of sheep belonging to Thomas Fitzgerald, camped at the side near the head of Westbranch. Thirty-eight were killed outright and twelve more died later. Two bullets passed through the herder's tent, and he quit the scene at once. Every law abiding person of the county was stirred at this fresh outbreak, and while there are grievances between the cattlemen and the sheepmen, and many of the law abiding citizens are on one side and many are on the other side, still, the consensus of opinion of all good men of sober judgment was that the matters above referred to were outrages of the worst kind and reflected great discredit on the fair name of Wheeler county, and cast a cloud on all citizens as though the place was filled with people not law abiding. But, such is not the case. The people of Wheeler county are law-abiding, and some day they will ascertain the perpetrators of such uncalled for deeds and mete out through the courts just punishment. As stated, though men may differ in opinion, still the law is open and all sober citizens of sound mind, are invariably in favor of having all troubles settled without resort to such untoward acts, such under-handed policy. So thoroughly were the county officials stirred that on June 23, 1904, a reward of one thousand dollars was offered for the arrest and conviction of any person implicated in the outrage. Governor Chamberlain was earnestly requested to augment the reward by the offer of another thousand dollars from the state.

The citizens of Fossil invited the pioneers of eastern Oregon to assist in the celebration of the Fourth of July, 1899, and seventy-five of these worthy people assembled and were placed in the van of the procession. At the conclusion of the ceremonies the pioneers proceeded to form an association, called H. H. Hendricks to the chair and appointed J. D. McFarland secretary. The president made a brief address, stating the object of the meeting and upon motion the "Wheeler County Pioneer Association" was organized. A constitution was adopted and articles four we will reproduce in full. "The object of this association shall be to gather statistical and historical matter, both personal and general, pertaining to the early settlement and development of eastern Oregon and especially of Wheeler county, and to cultivate sociability with each other, and to more fully fraternize with the stranger who is coming among us for the purpose of farther developing the resources of eastern Oregon." H. H. Wheeler was elected president, R. G. Robinson vice president, W. W. Steiwer treasurer, and J. D. McFarland secretary and historian. Thomas Watson, D. H. Hamilton, and P. E. McQuinn were elected directors for one year. J. D. McFarland should be especially mentioned as active for the consummation of this excellent work.

On Saturday evening, December 9, 1899, Mrs. Edith Tozier Weatherred, grand secretary of the N. D. O., instituted a cabin of native daughters in Fossil. Much enthusiasm was manifested by the ladies and County Judge, W. W. Kennedy, and the well known Indian war veteran, D. H. Smith, made appropriate addresses. The Cabin was named the Mary Jane Hoover, in honor of the first white lady settler in this part of the country. The following named ladies were selected to fill the various offices of the order: Mrs. W. S. Thompson, past pres.; Mrs. Jennie Cary, pres.; Mrs. Geo. Knox, first vice pres.; Mrs. G. O. Butler, second vice pres.; Mrs. W. W. Steiwer, third vice pres.; Miss Bessie Thompson, secretary; Mrs. Fred Ball, financial secretary; Mrs. J. T. Anthony, treasurer; Miss Ora Jones, marshal; Mesdames Jas. Stewart, J. B. VanHouten, L. C. Kelsey, trustees; Miss Lainey Herndon, inside sentinel; and Miss Laura Keys, outside sentinel.

The second annual meeting of the Wheeler County Pioneer Association was held in Kelsey's grove, at Fossil, July 3, 1900. A most interesting and entertaining session was had, the new officers were elected, and more than one thousand people participated in the good time.

The annual meeting of the pioneers in 1901 was held at Richmond and it was a most enjoyable affair. A large train of wagons, buggies, hacks, and so forth started from Fossil and vicinity Monday morning and night found them all camped on Sarvis creek near the mouth. The next forenoon they went on to Richmond where they were royally received, extensive preparations having been made. From start to finish the meeting was an enthusiastic one, many excellent things being arranged for the entertainment of all. New officers were elected and the meeting broke up and one and all were convinced that a most enjoyable time, as well as instructive had been had.

The 1902 meeting of this important organization was held at Mitchell, and it seems that each meeting is the best. Surely this occasion was one long to be remembered and cherished by all, for eloquence, recital, music, reminiscence, excellent refreshments, and all things combined to refresh the physical man and revivify his mind and heart. The officers were made an executive board, the association was to be incorporated, and a permanent meeting place was to be selected by the executive board. Upon investigation, the board decided to select forty acres at the juncture of the two branches of Sarvis creek. It is an admirable location, equal distant from all points, reached by excellent road, provided with daily mail, telephone, plenty of fresh spring water, abundance of shade, and all that could be desired in an ideal camping and outing place. The Wheeler association is the only one of the kind to own a permanent meeting place, so far as is known.

The new grounds were occupied the first time on June 3, 1903, by the association and the event was one that outdid all previous attempts at entertainment by the pioneers.

In 1904 the meeting was held on the permanent grounds and officers were elected.

The last meeting of this association we are able to chronicle, was opened Tuesday afternoon, June 27, and the addresses, the music, the recitations, the personal talks, the items of interest, and the general entertainment was all that could be desired, a most enjoyable time was had by all, and much valuable history is being disseminated through the medium of these meetings. How much refreshment and enjoyment is given to the various attendants from all parts of the country, will never be known, but it is known that many have spent some of the most enjoyable days in these meetings and are hearty in their enthusiasm regarding these important methods of keeping alive that interest so pleasant in the pioneer days and persons.

CHAPTER II

CITIES AND TOWNS.

FOSSIL.

One time a stranger going through this western country met one of those characters, the best American citizens produced to date, a genuine pioneer, and in conversation about the country asked the name of the valley where the pioneer resided. The latter replied that it was called Cedar Canyon. The pilgrim responded that that seemed strange as he could see no reason for naming the place thus. The pioneer replied,

"We named the place Cedar Canyon because there are no cedars here." Let every one keep in mind the statement of the pioneer when he considers the county seat of Wheeler county. The name of the town is Fossil, but the pilgrim will be much surprised if he attempts to find a fossil among the live inhabitants of this favored Oregon town.

It is well known to all leading scientists that the region where this beautiful town is located is rich in remains of ancient animals imbedded

On Hoover creek, about three miles north from the town of Fossil, Hon. T. B. Hoover located many years ago. He was one of those stirring and worthy pioneers, of which class there are many names in this western country, and on February 28, 1876, he succeeded in getting a postoffice established at his ranch, with himself as postmaster. It was on the route from Heppner to Antelope and at that time Marion Brown was mail carrier. The Hoover home was a log cabin, you never saw a pioneer seek anything better than that for his first home, and just north on the hillside, Mr. Hoover had seen so many petrified remains of different animals that he deemed it well to name the new postoffice Fossil. It is not strange that he did so, for he was in one of the most intensely interesting sections of fossil remains in the world, and which has contributed much knowledge to the searching scientist. In later years when the town of Fossil was incorporated many wished to have the name changed, but it was not to be, and, perhaps, it is quite well, for it is a case of letting the striking characteristics of the country name rather than the people. And who is it that does not know that the sedimentary formation invariably results in producing the most fertile regions on the face of the globe! The teeming life, of such a various and interesting kind, which once found its home in these sections, is mute forever now, save the dumb language of form, and what more fitting thing could be than that a live, pushing, progressive town should rise o'er these places of former activity and contribute by its name a memory board to this school room of the modern scientist as he pores over the lessons handed down from the countless ages that have swept over the scene? The name speaks of the past,—and what a past is here spread before the eye,—and, as well, by its very antithesis points no less definitely to the stirring energy of a happy, prosperous people who dwell in living activity, above the very wave, which in opposition to its sweep of death to the ancient life, brought the fertility and productiveness to this present people. So much for the name, it is a good one, and let no fear creep into the heart that this generous remembrance of the past will in any way militate against the character of the people who are making Wheeler county one of the bright spots of the west.

To Mr. Hoover in early days, as it has to many since then, the sequestered spot at the juncture of Butte and Cottonwood creeks appealed as an ideal town site. Here he established a store, in company with Mr. Watson, in 1881, and the postoffice was transferred to the store. Thus the name of the office was bestowed upon the embryonic town. Thompson Brothers had conducted a small general merchandise establishment about two miles west from this new site since 1879, and in 1882, they removed to the vicinity of Mr. Hoover's store. In the same year, Messrs. George H. and W. S. Thompson platted a townsite in the southwest one-fourth of section thirty-three, township six south, range twenty-one east Willamette Meridian, the day being May 13. This was the beginning of our present Fossil. About the first record we have of this town is from the papers of The Dalles, which mention it as having two stores, a livery stable, a blacksmith shop, a public hall, and a hotel. In 1884, A. B. Lamb opened a drug store, which has continued to the present time. In 1885 the Times-Mountaineer spoke as follows of Fossil: "Fossil is a town of about two hundred inhabitants, situated about sixty miles south of Alkali (now Arlington), in the valley of Butte creek. This little place is rapidly growing in importance and has doubled its population in the last six months." In 1888, the Fossil Journal speaks of marked improvement as to building, the new church was going up, the school house was being added to, and old buildings were being remodeled.

The Fossil Journal was established in the town in October, 1886, and two years later it gives a review of the business houses from which we gather the following: W. W. Steiwer & Company and Hoover & Watson were the two leading general stores. Patrick Potterton was handling a fine furniture store; Barney Gaffney had a harness and saddle store; A. B. Lamb a drug store; L. M. Rhodes a hair dressing parlor and notion store; G. B. Tedlowe conducted a saloon; Sam Danaldson and Lyman Morgan each were proprietors of livery stables; there were a hotel and a restaurant; J. H. Bowen handled a meat market; Mr. Duncan had a blacksmith shop; N. C. Engberg was a jeweler; and among professional men were H. H. Hendricks, an attorney; H. S. Goddard, physician; W. W. Kennedy, civil engineer, and Prof. S. Goodnight in charge of the town schools.

Monday preceding December 26, 1890, a mass meeting was held in Fossil and all preliminary work done for the incorporation of the town. The bill passed the legislature of 1890-1 and the town of Fossil was incorporated. The Journal complained a little about the name, but found comfort in the words "The rose, by any other name, would smell as sweet."

In 1892 occurred the first fire of any size that Fossil suffered. Monday afternoon, about two o'clock, August 1, William Cunningham discovered flames arising outside the livery stable occupied by Charles Branson, and immediately gave the alarm. A strong breeze was blowing from the northwest and the flames quickly spread. A large number of strangers were in town and outsiders seeing the flames rode rapidly in and a quickly organized effort was put forth to quench the devourer. For a time it seemed that the town would be entirely destroyed, but all hands fought faithfully, and the entire town was alert. Mayor Hoover mounted a fast horse and searched out points where the cinders were igniting and directed their extinguishment. Many buildings caught fire, but were saved by this prompt action, and even a haystack, which was ignited several times, was saved by the alertness of a bucket brigade standing right on the spot. So quickly did the fire spread that all in its direct path was ignited, and all efforts were then directed to save further spread on either side and around. By four o'clock in the afternoon the danger was over, and it was ascertained that the loss would be about three thousand five hundred dollars without any insurance. All losers at once rebuilt better than before and in a short time the effects of the fire were obliterated.

In 1900 a stage was opened into Shaniko from Fossil, which shortened the time to Portland twelve hours, and was highly appreciated by the people.

The total buildings erected at Fossil in 1901 aggregated a worth of $31,200.00. This showed the enterprise and push of the people and was partially due to the county seat having been founded there.

The Fossil Water Company was organized in August, 1889, and T. B. Hoover, A. B. Lamb, P. Potterton, W. W. Steiwer and S. G. Hawson were incorporators. This was the beginning of the question of water supply for Fossil. In 1900 the town decided to install a gravity system of waterworks, getting the supply from a splendid spring about two and one-half miles southeast from the town. The water is of the purest, and after the twelve thousand dollar issue of bonds was voted, the work began, and Fossil now has a reservoir of one hundred and fifty thousand gallon capacity, supplied with a pure spring that runs seventy-six gallons per minute, with a pressure of about one hundred and forty feet. This gives the town a system that would be the pride of any city. In fact, it is hard to find anywhere a town provided so well with an abundance of pure water. There is sufficient quantity so that residents of the town not only have plenty for family use, but can use it for irrigating gardens and lawns, and Fossil has great reason to be proud of this excellent improvement. The bonds were issued for ten years drawing five per cent. The system cost fifteen thousand dollars, and is money as well spent as could possibly be. The reservoir is situated on a hill near by and the water is piped to all parts of the town.

In the fall of 1900 a fire department was organized in Fossil with a membership of thirty-four. They have a full equipment of fire fighting apparatus, including a hose cart, hooks, ladders, and so forth. The company has made a good record, and have extinguished every fire to which they have been called with damage only to the building. This shows a promptness and ability that cannot easily be surpassed. Although the original membership was thirty-four, it has now decreased by changes and removals until but ten active members are in the department. They are George M. Ray, foreman; J. L. Yantis, assistant foreman; O. Parker, secretary; L. C. Kelsay, treasurer; and Frank Prindle, B. Gaffney, Claude Millet, Tom Young, J. B. McWillis, and O. Kelsay.

Fossil of to-day is a happy, well located town, the county seat of Wheeler county. The elevation of the town is two thousand five hundred feet, and Black Butte, a neighboring summit, is three thousand four hundred feet above sea level. The beautiful valleys of Cottonwood and Butte creeks, at the juncture of which lies the town, are as pleasant and attractive as can be found in the country. The plat of the town is one mile east and west and three-fourths of a mile north and south. The plateau rises to the north, where great grain fields are located. To the south stand the mountains, the western extremity of the Blue mountains. Thus Fossil is well sheltered from all storms and winds. The surrounding country is supplied with plenty of fuel and building material, and is peopled with farmers and stock raisers, who make Fossil their trading center. The railroad is now at Condon, twenty miles to the northeast, and so the long drives to connect with the railroad to the west are obviated. As to the location, Fossil is like a gem in a comely setting, and the natural thrift and taste of the residents have so added by beautiful shade trees and other good works an attractiveness to the "art" of nature until no one fails to remark of the beauty and charmingness of this engaging and pleasant home center.

The population is now about eight hundred people, and every branch of business needed in the country is well represented by wide awake and accommodating men, who have push and energy. The town supports a fine water system, an electric plant for lighting, one bank, eight stores and shops, two hotels, two livery stables, two blacksmith shops, one harness and saddler's shop, one millinery store, two saloons, a jewelry store, drug store, furniture store, tailor shop, meat market, flouring mill, two dentists, two doctors, two lawyers, a sawmill, and a live, weekly newspaper, the Journal. The Wheeler County Telephone Company, with long distance connections, has headquarters at Fossil. Seven stages extend to all parts of the country, while daily mail comes from Condon. The principal shipments are lumber, grain, livestock, wool and fruit. The county high school is located at Fossil, and in 1883 the Methodists organized a church, and erected a building. Two years later the Baptists erected a church, and the Catholics, also. Services had been held some years previous to the erection of the first church building.

A history of Fossil would be incomplete without a mention of the Caledonian Club, which was organized December 26, 1900, for the purpose of bringing the Scotch people in closer touch, socially, and to perpetuate many of the interesting and familiar things of this people. The club now has a membership of one hundred, and although their headquarters are in Fossil, their annual meetings are held at different points, and this year at the Lewis & Clark exposition in Portland. They always provide the best entertainment to be had, bringing talent from Portland and other outside cities. Scotch sports are made prominent on their programs and the result is the people are becoming very familiar with many of these excellent things. The present officers are William Rettie, chief; John Dysart, first chieftain; J. D. McFarland, 2nd chieftain and secretary; John Stewart, 3d chieftain and treasurer; George Stewart, standard bearer; and James S. Moore, piper. Mr. Moore was piper in the Forty-second regiment, the noted Black Watch, during the campaign in India and Egypt. This regiment was one of the best in the entire British army and caught the fiercest fighting in these campaigns.

Fossil is well supplied with fraternal orders, and among them we mention Fossil Lodge, No. 89, A. F. & A. M.; Arcadia Chapter, No. 84, O. E. S.; Fossil Lodge, No. 110, I. O. O. F.; Sioux Encampment, No. 41, I. O. O. F.; Hoover Lodge, No. 78, K. of P.; Fossil Camp, No. 43, W. O. W.; Willow Circle, No. 9, W. O. W.; Blue Mountain Lodge, No. 68, Rebekahs; and Lorine Lodge, No. 56, Order of Washington. All have regular meetings and a goodly membership.

Following we append a table showing the various officers of Fossil since its incorporation:

1891—Mayor, T. B. Hoover; council, W. W. Steiwer, B. Kelsay, P. Potterton, C. W. Halsey; recorder, C. W.

Hall,* Jas. Stewart; treasurer, J. H. Putnam; marshal, F. M. Judd,* L. T. Morgan.

1892—All the same as in 1891.

MITCHELL.

Mitchell is the second largest town in Wheeler county and is located on Bridge creek in the southeast corner of township eleven south, range twenty-one east, and in the northeast corner of the township south. It is situated partially on the old Sargent homestead, Mr. Sargent first erecting a house there in 1867. The natural advantages, summed up in three points, are direct roads, plenty of water, and a good stock country surrounding. The hills and eminences surrounding the town lay no claim to artistic beauty, in fact, to some, they present a repulsive appearance. Polk Butler climbed to the top of one and replied to a question as to how he liked the country "This is hell with the fire put out." The fire has been out for a long time, for all things point to the place being in ages past a sea bottom. Cemented gravel, hundreds of feet thick, broken here and there as the later convulsions of nature thrust up the basalt, with uneven and rugged bluffs, all combined make a spectacle seldom met with and not especially marked with beauty and graceful lines of attractiveness. But nature seldom does a thing like that without in some way compensating, so, in her mysterious way, she has carefully placed, here and there, some of her most precious metal in this region, while the country around is most excellently fitted for stock raising. The old stage line from The Dalles to Canyon City passed this point and as a station was needed that was the impetus that started the building of a stage station. Mitchell no boom town, but has steadily grown since the days of '67, when Mr. Sargent first came and established himself as a pioneer in this region. The principal business portion of the town is in the close valley of the creek, while the residences and school building are upon a bluff one hundred feet above. For years it was but a frontier trading post, but in the last decade it has grown to a thriving Oregon town and does an immense business compared with its population.

Perhaps the first settler on the present townsite was William Chranston. The first store was established by R. E. Edmondson in 1875, it being a small enterprise. Two years later this gentleman succeeded in getting a postoffice located, with himself as postmaster. The outside world was called to notice this springing town in 1881, through a correspondent in the Times, who stated that Mitchell then had two stores, a blacksmith shop, one hotel, and was taking steps to secure a grist mill, the citizens having subscribed one thousand dollars towards that enterprise. Flour was then ten dollars per barrel, but meat was plenty as good fat venison could be had for going after it, from one to four miles.

About four o'clock, Friday morning, September 2, 1881, Mr. Richards was awakened by the smell of smoke and had barely time to arouse his wife and a young girl sleeping in the house, before the place was enveloped in flames. This was a wing to his store, and rushing thither, he succeeded in dragging out a case of goods, a mattress, some blankets, and he was then shut out by the onward rush of the flames. The entire structure, with its contents, was a total loss. Mr. Richards had been laboring for years to get these accumulations and had just gotten well started in Mitchell. His loss was estimated at $7,500.00, besides cash, notes and accounts amounting to $3,800.00 more, while his insurance was only $4,800.00. Mr. Richards pluckily went ahead and started up in business again. Mr. I. C. Richards' was the second store in Mitchell.

The firm of Campbell & Magee opened business in Mitchell in 1882.

In 1884 Mitchell experienced her first catastrophe from water. A wave from six to nine feet high rushed over the bluff above Mitchell, filled the street in front of Howard & Thompson's store with boulders weighing from a ton down to small cobble stones, deposited mud on the floor of Chamberlain & Todd's saloon a foot deep, carried away Fred Sargent's house, cut a deep gulch through the livery barn, carried three wagons away, and damaged property all along down the creek.

On March 8, 1885, Mr. Sargent, I. N., platted the townsite of Mitchell, it being located on the southwest one-fourth of section thirty-six, township eleven south, range twenty-one east, Willamette meridian.

In the spring of 1893, the Antelope Herald, April 14, spoke as follows of Mitchell:

The town now contains about fifty inhabitants. In addition to the residence houses occupied by Mr. Osborn, Max Putz, J. T. Chamberlain, Geo. Collins, Frank Allen, James H. Oakes, A. J. Shrum, John Allen, Andy Howard, Al Campbell, R. E. Misner, W. H. Sasser, T. Gage, and S. A. Chipman, besides three vacant residences, the town is made up of the following business establishments: Oakes & Wilson, general merchants (these gentlemen are just completing a fine thirty by seventy store building), W. H. Sasser's large cash general merchandise store, Max Putz's flouring mill, J. T. Chamberlain's blacksmith shop, George Collins' carpenter and cabinet shop, Dr. Houck's office, the large Central hotel and feed stable owned and conducted by O. S. Boardman, Al Campbell's blacksmith shop, Miss Stella Boardman's millinery and dressmaking establishment, W. H. Sasser's hotel and livery stable, R. E. Misner's saloon, Dr. Hunlock's office and drug store, S. A. Chipman's boot and shoe shop, and the calaboose.

Owing to the fact that Mitchell was in the center of a country peopled with miners and stockmen, it was also the center of such lawless characters as often times flock to such countries taking advantage of the well known generosity and geniality of these men who prospect and ride the range. Thus, as the town had no corporate authority and could only depend on the county officials, many miles away, these reckless characters often disturbed the peace of law abiding citizens, and, in fact, many crimes were committed. Thus it seemed best, as early as 1893, that Mitchell should be incorporated, which was done, and the quietus placed by good substantial officers of the peace had a very excellent effect on the condition of the country. Go the west over and it is well known that the real stockmen and miners are not unruly or insubordinate men. On the contrary they are the most strict enforcers of humanity's laws, as is evidenced by various vigilance committees, which have rescued more than one section from a reign of terror from criminals, which law was powerless to accomplish. It is a fact, though, that the very occupations of riding the range and mining partake of such a closeness with nature that there is an unboundedness imbibed which a lawbreaker mistakes for lawlessness. But it is not. At heart, though, it is often found that these men are usually summary, they are nearer justice than many places where dilatory and weak tactics predominate. Weakness is mistaken by some for wisdom, while a vigorous enforcement of law is supposed to be tyranny. Nothing could be more out of the way in either case. It is, in fact, the only way to insure safety to law abiding citizens, that the law should be vigorously enforced, and having a sense of justice, often frontier committees have been obliged to take the law in their own hands, we mean real humanitarianism, the unwritten law of instinctive justice which the Creator has implanted in each breast, and enforce it vigorously. But, as there is a mistaken idea that the freedom of action, that by force of their very surroundings they are bound to take up, of miners and prospectors and stockmen, is bordering onto lawlessness and is such, it follows that the baser class of people seek these places, to mix with the ones who are there for real advancement. Also they come as the hand of the law has not yet reached to these points. These things combined to bring considerable disturbance in the early days of Mitchell, but the incorporation was a good thing and it was soon found by those who would disregard the law of the land and trample on others to their own liking, that the time of such actions had passed, and all good people were glad.

On Wednesday afternoon, March 25, 1896, Mitchell experienced another destructive fire. It first broke out in the rooms of W. T. Palmer in the lower story of the large new hall in lower town. Two hours and twenty minutes from that time nine buildings were in ashes, including the saloon buildings of R. E. Misener and Al Campbell, two residences of R. E. Misener, also his new hall building, Al Campbell's residence and blacksmith shop, Sam Bennan's residence, besides some others. There was no wind at the time and shingles rose to a great height and floated four miles up creek. It seemed for a time as if the entire town would go, but by heroic efforts it was saved. It was a serious blow to Mitchell, but with true grit, they at once began to rebuild.

On the fourth of August, 1899, a fire started in Mitchell, accredited by some to children playing with matches, and by others to an incendiary, which consumed sixteen thousand dollars worth of property. It was thought at the time that half of the town was consumed. The loss was also estimated one-fourth more than we have put it above. Among the places consumed were one store, one hotel, one livery stable, one saloon, and in all ten buildings. This again was a hard blow, but Mitchell was not to be wiped off the map, and with the characteristic grit of its residents, again the new buildings arose.

In 1901 the charter of Mitchell, as to its boundaries was amended so as to be as follows: "Commencing at the southeast corner of the northeast quarter of section one, township twelve south, range twenty-one east, thence north one and one-fourth miles, thence west one mile, thence south one and one-fourth miles, thence east one mile to the place of beginning."

On July 22, 1901, the people of Mitchell voted a bond issue for waterworks. The system is now being installed, gaining the supply from a spring about one-half mile above the town. The fall is four hundred feet to the mile, thus a pressure is insured sufficient to protect property in case of fire.

Late Monday afternoon, July 11, 1904, a heavy storm arose in the Mitchell country. It was accompanied by a marked electrical display and when it broke rain fell heavily. It seems that the cloud burst on the head of Bridge Creek first, then passed over to Keyes Creek. This fact lessened the terrible destruction materially, for the Bridge Creek wave struck the town first and was partly run down before the other joined it from Keyes Creek. The juncture of the two creeks is a short distance above town. At six thirty p. m. a distant roar was distinctly heard and the inhabitants, bearing in mind the terrible catastrophe that befell Heppner the year before, began to escape to the sides of the canyon, and were accelerated in this move by the roar growing louder rapidly. In an incredibly short time a wall of yellow water, thirty feet high, swept round the rocky point at the flour mill and cleaned the ground ahead of it, tearing buildings to pieces, smashing them, throwing some into the air to drop into the torrent, and working destruction generally. Everything in its path was taken, and only that some of the town was high enough to be out of its reach or every building would have been demolished. As it was twenty-eight buildings were taken with all their contents. But two lives were lost, owing to the fact that the people were warned, and, too, that they had but to make a few steps to get to the higher ground. Mrs. Agnes Bethune, a lady aged eighty, was swept away with her hotel building. It is not known whether she was apprised of the danger or not. Martin Smith, the father of Mrs. M. E. Parrish, was the other victim of the waters. He was aged ninety, and had just retired for the night. Mrs. Parrish had succeeded in getting her aged mother out of harm's way, with the children, and returned to get her father. Her son, George, shouted for her to quit the house immediately, and she barely escaped with her life. The building was danced along on the crest of the wave for four hundred yards like a chip, then dashed into kindling wood.

The sight on the hills was one never to be forgotten. Men, women, children, many babies, had hurriedly scurried to these places of safety and were gathered in groups to console each other and before their eyes their homes and property were taken away instantly. Scantily clad, drenched to the skin in the downpour of rain, shivering, the very heavens blazing with blinding lightning, thunder crashing, the scene was overpowering and too graphic for description. Some were terrorized at the destruction before them, some were nearly overcome with present conditions of personal suffering, others were given to joy that they had escaped with their lives, but all were silent, in a great measure. As soon as the flood began to subside, the houses that were left were opened and the poor unfortunates were given shelter and succor. To those not acquainted with the awful power of a mass of water, the destruction seemed miraculous. Strange things happened. Fragile things sometimes escaped, doubtless being borne up on the water. The heaviest machinery was twisted as one would twist a willow twig, cogs were stripped from the wheels and they were polished as by an emery wheel.

When the sun rose next day Mitchell presented an awful sight, but, while men were ruined financially, happy homes were gone never to return, and a large portion of the town was in a lamentable condition, still, through it all, there was a strain of thankfulness that so few had perished.

A rider well mounted dashed down the valley ahead of the flood warning people and the result was that none perished below Mitchell, so far as known.

When the first account appeared in the daily papers it was stated that Mitchell did not need outside help, but later things were discovered to be in such an appalling condition, many being left penniless and without a change of clothing, and the debris in the town menacing the health and lives of the people unless speedily removed, that a committee of citizens after a deliberation published in the dailies that help would be acceptable to the destitute and to assist in removing the debris which was threatening the people. Generous minded people responded readily and soon Mitchell began to show a different aspect and with her characteristic energy began again to rebuild.

On Sunday night, September 25, 1904, Mitchell was visited by a second flood. The water struck about eight o'clock in the evening, flowing down Nelson street and coming from a gulch south of town. It was not nearly so deep as the flood two months previous, but as the night was very dark, and the people not yet fully recovered from their fright of a few weeks previous, the excitement ran high. The channel of the creek had been well cleaned by the larger flood so this ran away more rapidly. The total damage was about one thousand dollars.

Burned out, washed out, beset at times with desperadoes, meeting many misfortunes, Mitchell has had a fight for existence, but she has won the day nicely, her people are not soured because of their misfortunes, but are enterprising, and it is said the town does more business for its size than any other town in the entire state. Every business needed is well represented by intelligent and up-to-date men and the outlook at this time is excellent. Mitchell has fine schools, well supplied with apparatus and a good library, a substantial town hall, and is planning other valuable improvements. The inhabitants number something over two hundred.

The men who have charge of the postoffice in Mitchell in the order of their service are R. E. Edmondson, I. N. Sargent, Miss Davis, J. H. Oakes, A. C. Palmer, A. D. Looney and J. E. Adamson, who is the present incumbent of the office.

The names of the men who have held the town offices of Mitchell since its incorporation follow:

1903—Mayor, A. J. Shrum; council, R. E. Misener, W. H. Sasser, E. E. Allen; recorder, M. Putz; treasurer, F. Wilson; marshal, A. C. McEachren.

1894—Mayor, R. E. Misener; council, W. H. Sasser,

S. F. Allen; recorder, E. R. Hunlock; treasurer, F. Wilson; marshal, J. F. Mager.

1895—Mayor, R. E. Misener; council, S. I. Lester, G. E. Houck, Geo. Strong; recorder, Jesse Allen; treasurer, J. H. Oakes; marshal, J. F. Mager.

1897—Mayor, R. E. Misener; council, S. F. Allen, W. H. Sasser, Geo. Houck; recorder, E. M. Andrus; treasurer, S. Brennen; marshal, W. H. Puett.

1898—Mayor, J. L. Keaton; council, J. H. Oakes, J. T. Keaton, A. D. Looney; recorder, H. J. Palmer; treasurer, Fred N. Wallace; marshal, W. H. Puett.

1899—Mayor, F. A. Van Ordstrand; council, W. H. Sasser, R. E. Misener, J. I. Jones; recorder, A. Frazier; treasurer, I. A. Johnson; marshal, W. S. Carroll.

1900—Mayor, J. W. Donnelly; council, A. R. Campbell, J. L. Hollingshead, Edwin Peterson; recorder, A. S. Simons; treasurer, J. G. Fontaine; marshal, W. H. Puett.

1901—Mayor, J. W. Donnelly; council, H. A. Waterman, Eugene Looney, J. L. Hollingshead, W. H. Sasser, D. Osborne, I. P. Holman; recorder, M. Putz; treasurer, J. G. Fontaine; marshal, E. J. Davis.

1902—Mayor, J. W. Donnelly; council, H. A. Waterman, John Flock, Eugene Looney, W. H. Sasser, J. L. Hollingshead, James Payne; recorder, M. Putz; treasurer, J. G. Fontaine; marshal, Geo. P. Riley (resigned and replaced by John Hice.)

1903—Mayor, J. L. Hollingshead; council, Wm. Folston, James Payne, J. P. Province, A. S. Holmes, H. A. Waterman, John Flock; recorder, M. Putz; treasurer, J. G. Fontaine; marshal, John Hice.

1904—Mayor, J. L. Hollingshead; council, H. A. Waterman, Eugene Looney, A. S. Holmes, J. P. Province, Wm. Folston, James Payne; recorder, M. Putz; treasurer, J. G. Fontaine; marshal, C. H. Nelson.

1905—Mayor, R. H. Jenkins; council, J. P. Province, W. F. Brown, H. W. Wheeler, J. M. Mansfield, H. A. Waterman; treasurer, J. G. Fontaine; marshal, David Osborn.

Twickenham is one of the many small stage towns of Wheeler county. It is situated just west from the geographical center of the county, in the fertile valley of the John Day river. At present it has one store, a hotel and a postoffice. In former years this town had considerable prominence inasmuch as it was a close second for the county seat at the time of choosing that.

The townsite of Twickenham was platted by J. H. Parsons, May 14, 1896, it being located on the southeast fourth of the northwest fourth of section thirty-five, township nine south, range twenty-one east Willamette meridian.

try was known as the Big Bottom. In 1862 Mr. Biffel settled on the ranch now owned by J. A. Chapman. He died soon thereafter, and, so far as is known, he was the first white settler. The next settler was J. S. Deadman, who took in 1868 the ranch now owned by A. S. McAllister. In the same year Isaac Holmes laid claim to the large level tract on the north bank of the river. He soon abandoned it and in 1869 J. H. Parsons came down from Umatilla county and squatted on the same. J. K. Rowe took at the same time the ranch now owned by the Gilman French Company. Some ten years later the government surveyed the country and these settlers secured title to their lands.

The neighborhood of Spray was settled in the sixties by W. A. Fisher, Or and Jim Hughes, Enos O'Flying, Ralph Fisk, William Gates and others. The town lies in the east central part of Wheeler county, being located on the John Day river and was platted March 5, 1900, by Mary E. Spray, and is located on the southwest fourth of section thirty-six, township eight south, range twenty-four east Willamette meridian. The ferry was established in 1896 and the real town began to grow in 1899. At the present time Spray is a handsome and busy village with good schools, the general lines of business well represented, a gravity water system and other improvements. The plan is to construct a steel bridge across the John Day at this point, and this will greatly encourage travel through this section. John F. Spray has been a moving spirit in the establishment and advancement of this place and is one of the heavy property owners of the town and surrounding country. The climate is delightful, possessing those qualities of health giving which will in time to come as it is better known draw many thither for its benefits. Productions of fruits and general crops are heavy as the land is fertile. The outlook for Spray is certainly bright and encouraging.

Richmond is situated very nearly in the geographical center of Wheeler county. It is the business center of the Shoofly country and is one of the new places of the county. One store is there at present, a hotel, a livery barn, a few residences, a good public school, and the people are alive to the excellencies of the situation. Richmond has a good surrounding country and shows signs of prosperity that bespeak a good future.

Waterman is one of Wheeler county's bright villages, being the business center of the country immediately south of Richmond. Mr. George McKay originally laid out the townsite and now owns a hotel there. The village has a good water system and is a pleasant place to live.

Eighteen miles northwest from Mitchell is Burnt Ranch postoffice, Mrs. Fairly being postmistress. This was formerly called Grade. The story of how the place was named is found in the earlier portion of Wheeler county history.

Caleb has a population of twenty-six and is situated about fifty-one miles south from Fossil on Badger Creek. It has a hotel, livery, blacksmith shop and a general merchandise store.

Well toward the southeast corner of the county is Barite, a country postoffice. Reuben Fields is postmaster and also conducts a saw mill. A semi-weekly stage with mail runs from this point to Antone.

Antone is the name of a postoffice on Rock Creek some sixty miles southeast from Fossil. E. L. Knox is postmaster and has a general store. The office is supplied with telephone connections.

The only postoffice of Wheeler county not already mentioned is Lost Valley in the northeast portion of the county.

DESCRIPTIVE.

Wheeler county contains over one million acres of land, largely rolling. Her resources are varied and manifold, and her output of live stock, especially, is enormous, considering the limited population, which, at this writing, is not to exceed thirty-five hundred, by the most careful estimates. The inhabitants are generally well to do, thrifty and progressive. The population is fairly evenly distributed. The entire surface of the county is rolling, and much of it is rugged, even being mountainous. It is said that Wheeler county is as rugged and uneven in surface as any county in Oregon. The northern part from Fossil north is spoken of as a plateau, while south of Fossil the westmost spur of the main Blue mountains traverses the county from east to west. South of that is the valley of the John Day river, also running from east to west. Then comes the rugged, and in places, gently rolling, portion of the county that has a general slope north towards the John Day, except the southeasternmost portion, which has an easterly slope towards the John Day river. The county is bounded on the north by Gilliam and Morrow counties, on the east by Morrow and Grant counties, on the south by Crook county and on the west by Crook and Wasco counties. The John Day river is the dividing line between Wheeler county and Wasco county. On the southern line of the county is another spur of the Blue mountains, which extends beyond the western boundary into Crook county.

The climate in general is mild and pleasant, about one week in the midwinter usually being as frigid weather as zero. The altitude of Fossil is two thousand five hundred feet, and the snow fall is light, stock running at large all winter. However, it is usual to provide feed for them for a few weeks in the coldest weather. Frosts are quite common at Fossil. Mitchell is one thousand feet lower in altitude than Fossil and frosts are not common. The climate is milder than the northern part of the county and all vegetables and fruits do well there. Grain is raised in all portions of the county, even on the highest altitudes, which James S. Stewart says is saying much for the climate when we remember that the Blue mountains are on the southern line. Three-fourths of the year the weather is dry and sunshine is almost continual in this favored region. As is usual east of the Cascades, the nights are always cool. Irrigation is being used and various portions of the country, as Spray, and other sections, produce much fine alfalfa. Hardy fruits are raised in all portions of the county. Peaches, apricots and grapes are successfully grown on the river bottoms, along creeks and in sheltered coves. Apples do exceedingly well and many orchards of these trees as well as others are being set out each year. The flouring mill at Mitchell does not get enough wheat to make a continuous run, and the one at Fossil is obliged to draw on Gilliam county for her supply. None of this cereal is exported from the county, and thus it is seen that there is abundant opportunity for the wheat farmer in the county. However, Wheeler will never become a great wheat raising county. The land is better utilized for other purposes, but it will produce much more than now. It is estimated that fully one-half of the land in Wheeler county is still owned by the government, and of this 29,490 acres are open for settlement. Much of the land is covered with timber fit for fuel and also building, while the Camp Watson spur of the Blue mountains in the southern portion of the county has a splendid growth of heavy yellow pine, especially valuable. Like the fruit industry the timber also awaits transportation facilities, which will come surely in due time.

But Wheeler county's great source of wealth is her stock. The entire county is well watered, has abundance of natural bunch grass, plenty of other grasses in the timbered sections, is favored with a climate that allows stock to roam out all winter, needing but little provided feed, and these things insure a stock paradise. At the last estimate the county possessed two hundred thousand sheep, fifteen thousand cattle, eight thousand horses, and hogs enough to more than supply the home demand. At the present writing these numbers could be largely augmented, and instead of the scrubby stock that is usually found in the stock countries at first, Wheeler county stockmen have bred up all animals by the introduction of excellent thoroughbred males, until they have choice animals almost universally. Some large concerns have extensive land holdings in the county, as The Dalles Military Road Company, now the Eastern Oregon Land Company, with 63,290 acres, the Gilman & French Company, with 38,120 acres; the Sophiana ranch with 10,095 acres; the Butte Creek Land, Livestock & Lumber Company, with 8,634 acres. Each farmer has a goodly holding of land and all, in common, utilize the government land for range purposes.

Game abounds on every hand. Wild geese, ducks, grouse, rabbits and other varieties are plentiful. Deer are stalked in all portions of the county, while bear are found in the mountains. Wheeler county presents for the sportsman an attractive country.

Pine Creek Valley extends from nearly the center of Wheeler county northwest to the John Day river. The valley is a black loam, exceedingly rich, easily irrigated, and produces abundant returns in alfalfa and fruit. Perhaps no portion of the county can surpass this as a fruit growing section, and, in fact, it is stated that the fruit is equal to that raised in the famous Hood River Valley. Pears, peaches, apricots, grapes, apples and all the smaller fruits are grown.

Along the John Day and creeks tributary to it is found much level and fertile bottom land which produces equally well with that mentioned above.

The Mountain Creek country is noted for its timothy, large quantities being produced there, the land being irrigated from the creek. Without the irrigation the land produces wheat readily.

The Waterman country which is really in the Mountain creek section, is especially well adapted for wheat, but lack of facilities for transporting to market has kept the culture of this profitable cereal back. In the near future this offers a great source of wealth to the inhabitants.

In the Mitchell country grain and all fruits do well along the streams where land is found level enough for agricultural purposes.

Concerning the mines of Wheeler county, James S. Stewart says in the Oregonian: "Our mines consist of a large and ever increasing number of partially developed quartz claims, many of them of considerable promise, some being owned by the leading capitalists of Oregon, and the well-known Spanish gulch placer mines." One could not mention in detail these various properties, but much attention is being directed to the Spanish gulch country, where both quartz and placer properties are showing well. Some of the latter yield to their owners from three thousand to twelve thousand dollars returns for each year's run. Large deposits of coal have been discovered in the vicinity of Mitchell, but as there is no transportation the find has not been developed.

It is supposed that a great portion of Wheeler county was at one time the bottom of a large body of water, probably fresh. This great sheet of expanse, which we may well call John Day lake, received the water from the various streams which drained the country then, and they may have been, yes, doubtless were of very different location from what they are at present. In what distant age this was is theorized upon, but to number the years that have elapsed since then is no easy task even to the skilled scientist. From all that can be gathered at this time this vast lake country was then of a milder climate than now exists in central Oregon for the leaf beds of Ridge Creek indicate this, as these leaves are like those now found in semi-tropical countries. The various streams carried their silt to the lake, sweeping along also various animals that were unfortunate enough to become entombed or were killed. These animals were embedded in this silt and generally petrified. Then, too, came immense volcanic disturbances, compared with which the destruction of Pompeii and Herculaneum were small affairs. These disturbances shook the country, sometimes raising it and sometimes lowering the elevation, and accompanied these terrific vibrations with untold quantities of ashes, cinders and live lava. These being of such great extent it was impossible for the animals to flee, and so they were caught and buried, in many cases, doubtless, alive, to die when they were blotted out of sunlight as did the unfortunates in the cities named above. Alternate layers of the silt brought by the streams, with the live lava together with the scoriae of the fierce fiery monsters, piled up the covering of these unfortunate animals layer upon layer and in time the bottom of the lake was hoisted in the air and the country began to assume the aspects that now appear. The tremendous bodies of water sought outlet and conformed themselves to the contour of the country as they rushed to the sea. These formed the natural streams which in time cut down through all these successive layers, the sun, frost and erosion aiding in this work. So that now these streams all lie deep down from the general height of the country, some in broad valleys, but many in deep narrow canyons, where the sunshine only makes brief visits. Thus are exposed on the walls of these canyons the petrified remains of various animals. To secure them it is necessary to climb the walls to their location and chisel them from the surrounding rock, which is no easy undertaking. Among the remains found are three-toed horses, no larger than a donkey, rhinoceroses, camels, peccaries, a great assemblage of large animals, hosts of squirrel and rabbitlike creatures, besides others. A general oriental character pervades the entire list found and we are assured that the climate was then milder than now.

In 1890 the University of Princeton sent an exploring expedition into this region and many scientists have explored it besides and much is written concerning it. Surely Wheeler county is not only rich in possibilities at the present, but also is distinguished by the great wealth of lore that speaks like a book of the times that have been.

Owing to the carving the atmospheric action and the erosion of water have done, the John Day like other streams in this section, runs at the bottom of a deep channel. Sometimes this is sloping on the sides, and there is level bottom land a few feet above the stream. In other places the sides are abrupt, rocky and lift their heads two thousand feet above the flow of the river. Many scenes of these canyons are beyond description, but perhaps among them all none is more striking than the John Day canyon traversed somewhat in a stage ride from Fossil to Antelope. On the plateau above the canyon as the traveler approaches toward the river in the bright light of sunrising, it appears as if one was viewing a vast white sea somewhat below you and in this sea were islands. Upon closer arrival the white sea is found to be clouds and the islands are simply black peaks of the canyon's craggy sides lifting their bare heads up through these clouds. The descent begins and soon one is in the midst of the white sea, and then after he has dived through its depths he still descends for three hours. The piercing morning sun drives away the clouds, and every turn of the road brings new and indescribable scenes to the traveller's wondering eyes. How grand, wonderful are these mute witnesses of the past, displaying as they do, ages of untold history, and standing silent, yet eloquent portrayals of the mighty power that wrought in the days when man's footsteps had not yet wandered in the scene? What tales could they tell of the quiet waters of John Day Lake, where abounded the finny tribes in profusion, the semiaquatic animals, and the lithesome creatures that dwelt in the semi-tropical forests? O'er its silvered bos-tossed the turbulent white caps as the waters on the same pleasant moon reflected glory as it does now to us in other bodies of water; there rose in response to the fierce winds, and there, too, in rippling murmurs it told its music on the shores when the breezes toyed with light fondness! How majestic, awe inspiring and overpowering became the moments when all this calm scene was shaken by the convulsive hand of nature's forces and fear filled the hearts and lives of every living creature? With what throes the awful battle was fought when these forces lifted high in the air the peaceful lake dashing its waters to the sea, and piled in its place the stupendous edifices of rock and debris we now behold? All these things could the gigantic columns tell now if they would speak. At their birth the moment was most intense, but the force of nature must have its way and the reconstruction of the scene must progress. Man is to come, these animals must give way to a higher order, and Wheeler county was brought out for habitation. As one descends the canyon's side he is bewildered with the many forms taken by the rocks. Tall slender pinacles, massive buttments, beetling cliffs, giant doorways, mammoth castles, every conceivable form takes place, then gives way to a never ending scene of new sights. Columns could be devoted to the description of this wonderful scene and then half not be told, but this is not the place for an extended and minute word picture. In passing the description of Wheeler county we could but spend a moment in this craggy old treasure house of antiquity and leave the local details for others. Various sections have received names from the settlers as "The Castle," "Church Nave," "The Giants' Walk" and so forth.

POLITICAL.

In accordance with the enabling act creating Wheeler county, wherein the governor of Oregon was empowered to appoint the first officers of this county, on February 24, 1899, Governor Geer appointed the following named persons to fill the offices mentioned in connection with their names:

W. W. Kennedy of Fossil, as county judge; P. L. Keeton of Caleb, as sheriff; G. O. Butler of Waldron, as clerk; Eugene Looney of Mitchell, commissioner; C. N. Wagner of Wagner, commissioner; O. B. Miles of Fossil, school superintendent; I. F. Shon of Waldron, assessor; T. L. Stewart of Fossil, surveyor; Dr. McCorkle of Mitchell, coroner.

At the first general election held after Wheeler became a county the question of the permanent location of the county seat was settled, as given in another chapter. The officers elected and the votes for the respective candidates is given in the following table. The date of this election was June 4, 1900.

For member of congress—Leslie Butler, 26; Malcolm Moody, rep., 479; J. E. Simmons, 42; William Smith, dem., 203.

For district attorney—Frank Menefee, rep., 427; James F. Moore, dem., 343.

For joint senator—V. G. Cozad, demo.-peo., 231; W. W. Steiwer, rep., 530.

For joint representative—George J. Barrett, Grant county, rep., 331; George H. Cattanach, Grant county, rep., 377; T. R. Coon, Wasco county, dem.-peo., 227; W. J. Edwards, Gilliam county, dem.-peo., 257; George Miller, Gilliam county, rep., 369; R. E. Misner, Wheeler county, dem.-peo., 491.

For sheriff—P. L. Keeton, dem., 569; J. P. Province, rep., 212.

For clerk—George Butler, rep., 628.

For county judge—W. W. Hoover, dem., 478; J. W. Waterman, rep., 310.

For treasurer—A. B. Lamb, rep., 611.

For assessor—Ed F. Horn, dem., 150; E. E. Mathews, rep., 281; I. F. Shown, ind.-rep., 336.

For school superintendent—H. F. Mires, rep., 309; Charles Royse, dem., 445.

For commissioners—J. J. Ahalt, dem., 294; Joseph Frizzell, rep., 446; Eugene Looney, dem., 532.

For surveyor—W. W. Kennedy, rep., 426; P. B. Nelson, dem., 336.

For coroner—H. M. Shaw, rep., 619.

In the national election held November 6, 1900, the republican electors received 436, the democratic 243, the prohibition 13, the populist 5 and the socialist 6.

In the election held June 2, 1902, we note the following:

For governor—George E. Chamberlain, dem., 282; William J. Furnish, rep., 437; A. J. Hunsaker, 17; R. R. Ryan, 7.

For member of congress—W. F. Butcher, dem., 284; D. F. Gerdes, 10; F. R. Spaulding, 23; J. N. Williamson, rep., 462.

For joint representatives—C. A. Dannemau, rep., 416; L. J. Gates, 35; R. J. Ginn, rep., 391; N. P. Hansen, 25; C. G. Hansen, dem., 197; C. P. Johnson, rep., 420; H. C. Shaffer, 18; E. G. Stevenson, dem., 202; E. P. Weir, dem., 207.

For county commissioner—R. T. Brown, dem., 376; Joseph Frizzell, rep., 314.

For clerk—George O. Butler, rep., 442; R. E. Misner, dem., 305.

For sheriff—W. T. Johnson, rep., 277; P. L. Keeton, dem., 460.

For treasurer—A. B. Lamb, rep., 456; Charles J. Millet, dem., 270.

For assessor—J. F. Anthony, rep., 277; W. H. Sasser, dem., 462.

For surveyor—W. W. Kennedy, rep., 562.

For coroner—R. H. Jenkins, rep., 556.

The election held June 6, 1904, resulted according to the figures given in the following table:

For member of congress—George R. Cook, 12; J. E. Simmons, dem., 225; H. W. Stone, 34; J. N. Williamson, rep., 494.

For circuit judge—W. L. Bradshaw, dem., 386; J. A. Collier, rep., 390.

For district attorney—Frank Menefee, rep., 454; Dan P. Smyth, dem., 311.

For Joint representative—R. N. Donnelly, rep., 453; W. K. Kirkland, dem., 297; C. C. Kuney, rep., 352; A. S. Porter, 60; C. A. Shurte, 54.

For county judge—E. M. Clymer, rep., 343; W. W. Hoover, dem., 427.

For commissioners—J. L. Barnhouse, rep., 459; John M. Brown, rep., 351; W. H. Gates, dem., 253; James Wilson, dem., 297.

For sheriff—P. L. Keeton, dem., 403; E. E. Mathews, rep., 382.

For clerk—J. O. Butler, rep., 421; H. McGinnis, dem., 356.

For treasurer—A. B. Lamb, rep., 489; George Ray, dem., 281.

For assessor—R. J. Carsner, rep., 371; Raleigh Scott, dem., 407.

For school superintendent—W. W. Kennedy, rep., 588.

For surveyor—H. F. C. Heidtman, rep., 427; A. Helms, Jr., ind.-rep., 283.

For coroner—W. T. Whan, dem., 476.

For the high school, 365; against the high school, 192.

For the local option, 385; against the local option, 229.

For direct primary law, 422; against direct primary law, 65.

In the national election held November 8, 1904, the vote stood as follows:

Republican electors, 462; democratic electors, 162; prohibition, 14; socialist, 22; peoples, 7.

On June 5, 1905, an election was held on the question of local option which stood for it, 202; against it, 277.

EDUCATIONAL.

Owing to the fact that Wheeler county has existed as a separate political division but a short time, the school history of the county as a whole is not very lengthy. The schools of the county are up to the standard of the state, the people have shown a commendable zeal in providing for the rising generation proper educational facilities, and steps have been taken, as will be apparent in what follows, to assist the youth of the county to obtain good educations at home.

The first school in the territory now embraced in this county was located about one-half mile east from where Mitchell now stands. It was established in 1872 and the school was held in the proverbial log house. The second school was established in 1874, at Waldron near where Richmond now stands. The first teacher of this school was Samantha A. Adams, now Mrs. Dan French of The Dalles, a well-known lady in central Oregon.

Fossil's first school was opened in 1882 in a two-story frame structure situated near where the high school is now located. The upper story was utilized for other purposes and the lower floor was the school room and Benton Myers taught the first term. This school house was destroyed by fire in 1884, but another two-story frame building was immediately erected. Fossil was then a portion of Gilliam county and in 1891 we have mentioned that on March first of that year the pupils belonging in district number twenty-one (Fossil) were one hundred and thirty. The number enrolled was ninety-four, and Fossil's school was the largest in Gilliam county. The Fossil public schools always held a foremost place in the county and the year 1891 appeared to be one of still greater progress. A school tax was levied which insured nine months of school with two experienced teachers. Children from outside districts were allowed tuition at reasonable rates and that drew numerous families to the town for the school season. The schools continued to increase in size and the high standard maintained at this time was bettered in every way possible and for ten years next following Fossil was known far and near as a real center for excellent educational facilities. It was found necessary then that better building facilities should be provided and with her characteristic progressiveness Fossil took up the question and provided a substantial six-room brick school house of modern design and provided with all the apparatus and library needed for excellent work.

The question of having the county high school, which the state of Oregon wisely provides for, had been upon the minds of the leading citizens for some time and in 1904 the time was found to be ripe for this enterprise, and, accordingly, the matter was presented to the people for their expression at the election held June 6, 1904. The vote stood 365 for and 192 against, and the county court was empowered to make the selection of the location of the school. This was done, Fossil being chosen. The school house there was ample as to size to allow rooms for the high school. The county furnished the rooms and the principal of the high school became the principal of the Fossil graded school. The school opened September 11, 1904, having three teachers, A. J. Garland, A. M., principal; Mrs. A. J. Garland, M. O., assistant; Miss Sophia E. Townsend, A. B., assistant. In the Fossil school four additional teachers were employed. There was a total enrollment of two hundred and thirty, sixty-four of whom were high school pupils. Eleven grades were carried and in 1905 twelve grades will be taught, thus the high school pupils will be prepared for the freshman class of the state university. The people are taking pride in this excellent school and are planning to supply all equipment as needs come.

The first school in Mitchell proper was located there in 1876. It was held in a little log structure that had been moved into town from one-half mile east. Mitchell has taken pride in her schools as Fossil has and in 1886 a one story frame was constructed to take the place of the log building used before that. The school attendance of Mitchell grew betimes and in 1892 it was found that the new building was too small to accommodate the pupils. Accordingly a large frame building was put up at a cost of two thousand dollars. It is built on modern plans, well lighted and ventilated, with three large rooms and seating capacity for one hundred and twenty-five. The school demands three teachers and is quite up to the grade of the high standard maintained throughout the county.

We herewith submit for reference a detailed report of the county superintendent of Wheeler for the years from 1900, inclusive, to the present time:

BIOGRAPHICAL SKETCHES

WHEELER COUNTY

HON. W. L. CAMPBELL, one of the venerable citizens of Wheeler county, resides about ten miles east from Mitchell. He is a member of that intrepid band which made its way across the plains in the first half of the last century, braving all sorts of dangers and hardships for the purpose of opening the Pacific coast for settlement. He has labored long and well and has the satisfaction of knowing that he materially assisted in bringing about the gratifying prosperity of this entire western region which has resulted from the united labors of such men as Mr. Campbell. At present, he is retired from active labors, having spent a long and eventful career of industry and progressiveness.

W. L. Campbell was born in Petersburg, Virginia, on September 29, 1824, being the son of James Austin and Mary Massey (Vaughn) Campbell. The former was born in Virginia in 1785 and died in New Orleans, in 1830. The latter was born in Goochland county, Virginia, in 1795, and died in 1860. The parents were descended from the most prominent farmers of Virginia who date back to the early colonial days and who were thoroughly American in principle and in life. Our subject was educated in the common schools in Richmond, Virginia, and when seventeen years of age, went thence to Tennessee where he remained until the beginning of the Mexican War. At Nashville, he enlisted in the First Tennessee regiment, commanded by Colonel H. C. Campbell, a relative of his. His captain was Adrian Northcut. This regiment was the first to land in Mexico and our subject participated in the heat of the struggle and did active service in the battle of Monterey and in many other places and finally received his honorable discharge. Then he returned to Tennessee and crossed the plains to California in 1849, utilizing for the journey, ox teams. For thirty-three years, M. Campbell was busily engaged in mining and farming in the Golden State and then in 1882, he came north and selected eight hundred acres of land in what is now Wheeler county. He purchased this and engaged in raising cattle and horses. He actively prosecuted these related occupations until a few years since when the accumulated holdings, acquired by his industry and thrift, enabled him to retire from further active life. He has a splendid standing in the community and has always shown himself a first class business man and a broad minded citizen.

On October 25, 1854, Mr. Campbell married Miss Charlotte Bower. Ten years later, April 15, 1864, Mr. Campbell married Miss Eliza Ellison. The children born to him are named as follows: Mary, deceased; Winslow; A. R. and W. L., twins; Richmond L.; Sally; James; Cora; Lena, and Ida. Mr. Campbell has always been a Democrat and in 1859 his name appeared on that ticket for the legislature in the state of California. He made a good record in the house, and served his constituency well and retired to business life with the consciousness that he had fulfilled the trust that had been committed to him. Mr. Campbell has one sister, Mrs. Virginia A. Bradford, who was born in Richmond, Virginia, on July 17, 1815. She was highly educated in the best institutions of the day and in 1836 married Edward Bradford. He descended from one of the leading families in the south. Mr. Campbell's family, as stated before, was one of the leading and prominent ones of the United States, but the war swept away all their property. However, their ability and energy since brought back to the various members fine holdings.

SAMUEL UNSWORTH, one of the leading stockmen of Wheeler county, is a man of enterprise and good business ability. He resides about two miles east from Burnt ranch, where he owns one thousand acres of choice land and does general farming and stock raising. He handles some cattle and horses and pays attention almost exclusively to sheep, of which profitable animals, he owns about three thousand. He displays the thrift and thoroughness of his race. Samuel Unsworth was born in England, on May 1, 1869. His father, James Unsworth, a native of England, was the senior member of the firm of Unsworth & Sons, of Bolton, Lancashire, England. They were carriers of freight and did a large and lucrative business. His ancestors were a good and prominent family. His wife, Elizabeth Unsworth, was a native of Dublin and came from a good family. Our subject was well trained in Bolton and when he arrived at the proper age took an interest in the firm and wrought there until 1894. Being desirous of seeing the world and believing that opportunities were more plentiful in the colonies than at home, he finally decided to come to Manitoba. For two years he farmed there and then came on to the Pacific coast. After due exploration, he decided upon the territory now embraced in Wheeler county and finally purchased land where he now resides. To this he added until he has a thousand acres. He also purchased sheep and has done wool growing, practically ever since he came here.

In 1892, Mr. Unsworth married Miss Lillie Carrington, who was born in England and descended from a prominent family. The Carringtons were lawyers and magistrates, largely, at Barnsley, England. Mrs. Unsworth's parents are Matthew and Mary A. Carrington. The father was a merchant at Barnsley. To our subject and his wife nine children have been born, named as follows: Martha A., Lilian, James, Samuel, Gertrude, deceased, Agnes, Mary, Florence and Edith.

Mr. Unsworth has come from a very enterprising and thrifty family and he has in no way fallen behind the high standard set for him by a worthy ancestry.

A. HELM, Jr., is editor and proprietor of the Mitchell Sentinel, a bright and newsy paper that has for its business the exploiting of the resources of Wheeler county, Oregon, in general and the carrying of the latest news of the world to a goodly list of people, and good cheer to all. He has made his paper attractive and welcomed warmly by fostering a spirit of betterment and industry. For many years Mr. Helm has dwelt in the territory now occupied by Wheeler county. Long before it was organized as a separate portion, he was here and has been closely identified with every important movement in its history. He is widely known throughout the country and has made a record that bespeaks him a man of stamina, of honor, and of integrity.

A. Helm was born in Missouri, on October 6, 1842, and was educated at the place of his birth. When the war broke out, he enlisted in Battery L, Second Missouri Light Artillery and served until November 11, 1865, when he was mustered out of service. Shortly after his discharge from the army, he was married, and in 1875 came to the Pacific coast. He established Twickenham and Waldron postoffices and resided in the latter for twenty years, then spent six years in Twickenham, after which he came to Mitchell and has been conducting the Sentinel since.

Mr. Helm married Miss Mary Paul in 1865. She was a native of Missouri and to this union five children have been born, whose names are, Charles A., of Ontario; W. E., of Independence; P. C., of Fossil; O. V., of Antelope, all in Oregon. J. H. is deceased.

Mr. Helm is rightly to be classed as one of the builders of Wheeler county, one of the foremost of the pioneers of this country, and one of the leading men here today.

P. E. McQUIN was born on March 17, 1844 in Missouri and the same year was brought across the plains by his parents to the Willamette valley. Since that time has always been on the frontier. He was one of the oldest pioneers, yet one of the youngest emigrants to Oregon, and in Oregon he has lived almost constantly since. He has the distinction of being one of the leading stockmen in Wheeler county and one of its earliest settlers. He also is to be credited with the fact that his entire fortune, which is generous, has been gained by his own efforts since coming to this then wild country. He landed here in 1872, when there were no settlers in this region. He took government land on the creek about three miles up from where Fossil now stands and was a settler in the valley. Being then without means and many miles from the nearest supply point or postoffice, Mr. McQuin found it no small undertaking to make a living much less to get started; but being a man of indomitable will, fine physical endurance and not acquainted with the word surrender, he finally made a start and since then his progress has been very rapid and continued. He now owns seven hundred and twenty acres of choice land and large bands of stock. Mr. McQuin's father, A. H. McQuin, was born in North Carolina, moved to Missouri in early days as a pioneer and in 1844 crossed the plains with ox teams to the Willamette valley, bringing his family with him. He made location at Linton and there remained until his death, having become a very wealthy and prominent man in the valley. He had married Rebecca Enyart, a native of Illinois, who was a faithful helpmeet to him during his labors and journeys. Our subject was educated in the Willamette valley and, as stated before, in 1872 started out to seek his fortune, settling on a fertile claim.

In 1878 he married Miss Catherine Wilhelm, who was born in Iowa and crossed the plains to Oregon with her parents in 1860. Her father, William Wilhelm, was a native of Germany and a pioneer in this state. To our subject and his faithful wife, the following named children have been born, Mrs. Ada T. Monroe, Annie, Margaret, Hattie, Elmer, John, William, Charles, Bertha, Birdie.

Mr. and Mrs. McQuin are valuable members of society in Wheeler county, are respected and esteemed by all, and have done a noble share in the development of this county.

C. T. SCOGGIN. About five miles up Butte creek from Fossil, one comes to the estate of Mr. Scoggin. It consists of four hundred and eighty acres and is fitted up for a first class stock ranch. To the industry of stock raising, Mr. Scoggin devotes his entire attention, raising on the farm such things as are needed to assist him in this business. He has made a good success in his labors here and is rated as one of the leading stockmen of the county.

C. T. Scoggin was born on November 29, 1855, the son of W. G. and Mandy (Grubbs) Scoggin, natives of Missouri. As early as 1845 the father, then a young man, crossed the plains with ox teams to the Willamette valley, being one of the first settlers there. In 1849 he went to the mines of California and later returned to Oregon, taking a donation claim. He gave his attention to general farming and stock raising the balance of his life and became both wealthy and prominent. His wife crossed the plains with her parents in 1846.

Our subject was educated in the primitive schools of his native valley and as early as 1872 came to this vicinity. He handled stock for his father for one year, then went into business for himself. He soon acquired land and has given his undivided attention to handling stock since.

In 1883, Mr. Scoggin married Miss Mary E. Buffington, who was born in Montana. When a child she came with her parents to the Willamette valley, Oregon. Her father, P. C. Buffington, was one of the earliest pioneers to Montana. To Mr. and Mrs. Scoggin six children have been born: Thompie, Clara, Eston, Woodson, Shirley and Mary.

Mr. Scoggin has not labored in vain since coming here, for he has accumulated a snug fortune and secured the esteem of his fellow men and has made himself one of the prominent men of the county. He and his wife have done the work of the pioneer in a noble manner and during all these early days of trials and hardship had much to suffer and undergo. He has always taken an active part in public matters, educational and political, and is a progressive and substantial man.

SAMUEL D. LAUGHLIN, who was born in Yamhill county, Oregon, in 1871. He had in Lincoln county, Missouri, on May 13, 1835, is now residing eight miles northwest of Anatone, in Wheeler county, Oregon. His father, Samuel Laughlin, was born in South Carolina and died married Nancy Doughty, also a native of North Carolina. She died in August, 1849. The family crossed the plains with ox teams to Yamhill county, Oregon, in 1847 and our subject completed his education on the frontier. He was principally occupied in riding for stock and doing general work in opening up a farm and finally, in 1851, he went to the Yreka mines in California. Three months were spent there, then he returned to Yamhill county. The trip was very dangerous, owing to the fact that the Rogue river Indians were then hostile. In January, 1856, our subject enlisted in Company C, under Captain Ankeny and served in the Yakima Indian war. He participated in many battles, in various hard marches and in much scouting. He fought in the battle of Snake river near the mouth of the Palouse and then with his command crossed the Columbia and fought another battle near the mouth of the Yakima river where a good many of the Indians were killed. The next day they did some more skirmishing and killed more Indians. Then they marched down the Columbia and went into camp on the Washington side, some ten miles above The Dalles. Being rather unsuspecting at this time, they were surprised near morning by the Indians swooping down upon them in an effort to stampede the stock. The savages were successful in this and drove off nearly all the horses belonging to the soldiers. Then they made their way on down to The Dalles and to Portland, where they were mustered out of service and our subject returned to Yamhill county and again took up stock raising. He remained there until 1859, when he came to Wasco county and spent two years. Again he returned to Yamhill county and resided there until 1873 in which year he came back to Wasco county and remained twelve years. Then, it being 1885, he moved on down to Crook county where he resided until 1903. In that year he secured his present place and is now numbered with the citizens of Wheeler county. It is evident that Mr. Laughlin is well acquainted with the various portions of the state of Oregon and has done excellent pioneer work all through.

In Washington county, Oregon, in 1858, Mr. Laughlin married Miss Amanda Minter, who was born in Iowa, in 1842, the daughter of Jacob Minter, a native of Tennessee. The family crossed the plains to Oregon in 1852 and the father was a well known pioneer here. To our subject and his wife five children have been born, named as follows: Emmett R., Edgar E., Ellis, Nellie F. and Annie S., deceased. In politics, Mr. Laughlin has always been a Republican and in this realm, as in educational matters, he has always manifested a keen interest and is one of the progressive men of the country. In 1861 Mr. Laughlin started out in November for the Florence mines in Idaho. He did not arrive, however, until March, 1862. He participated in the excitement of the times and is well acquainted with all those early adventurous days.

GEORGE McKAY is one of the leading stock men of central Oregon and resides at Waterman, in Wheeler county. He comes from Scotch ancestry and was born amid the rugged hills of Scotland, on January 14, 1847. His father, Robert McKay, a native of Aberdeenshire, Scotland, was a contractor and builder and died when this son, George, was three years of age. He had married Mary Forbes, also a native of Aberdeen, Scotland. She died in Canada. In 1855, our subject came with his mother to Canada, crossing the ocean in a one hundred ton sailing vessel. The trip consumed six weeks. A few years after arriving in Canada, Mrs. McKay married Alexander Calder. Our subject was reared and educated in Canada, completing his training in the commercial college. Then he went to New York city intending to journey to Brazil but changed his mind and went to California, via the isthmus. After arriving on the Pacific slope he worked eighteen months on a ranch, then went to the Willamette valley. He assisted in clearing the land where east Portland now stands, during his first winter, then went to Marion county and rented land. He farmed for several years and finally, in 1877, the wet weather destroyed his entire crop and he lost nearly all he had made. Then he came to The Dalles and walked to his present location in what is now Wheeler county. Mr. McKay, although having met with terrible reverses, was not discouraged and took hold with vigor and ambition and soon got another start. He now owns nearly five thousand acres of land, winters usually from five to six hundred head of cattle and has much other property. Mr. McKay formerly gave his attention to raising horses with his cattle but he recently sold his brand, there being about five hundred animals in the band. Now he gives his entire attention to handling cattle and has some very fine specimens. He also leases about four hundred acres of land to tenants for grain raising. It is of interest to note, in this connection, that Mr. McKay raised the noted horse, Oregon Beauty, and also Linus, two of the most famous horses on record. He sold Oregon Beauty just before he left the Willamette valley for a very small sum, she being a colt and just weaned. When developed, both of these horses had manes and tails that swept the ground. The man who purchased Oregon Beauty from Mr. McKay, sold her for fifteen hundred dollars, then she was sold for twelve thousand dollars and some time after that her owner refused twenty thousand dollars in cash for her. She came to her death in a fire on Long Island, New York. It is said of Oregon Beauty, that she was the most beautiful horse that we have a record of. Linus is now owned by a large horse breeding establishment in Ohio. In addition to the property mentioned, we wish to note that Mr. McKay has erected a fine large hotel at Waterman, which will doubtless become well patronized as soon as its excellencies become known. There are many attractions which will draw tourists and health seekers and Mr. McKay is preparing in a wise and proper manner to develop the country and furnish everything that is needed.

In January, 1899, Mr. McKay married Miss Leander Smith, a native of Missouri. Eight months after her marriage, he was called to mourn her death.

Politically, Mr. McKay is a Republican and is a man of influence. He has been delegate to the state conventions and in 1903 was a delegate to the stockmen's convention at Portland. He is a member of the National Stockman's Association at Portland and is considered one of the most successful and skillful stockmen of the county.

Mr. McKay has one sister, Mary, the wife of James Howden, a retired farmer in Ontario. When our subject came to this part of the country, it was wild and unsettled and he knows well the labors incident to a pioneer life. He has succeeded not only in making a fortune for himself and also in opening up the country but is to be commended upon his public spirited labors and the generosity that he has exhibited.

JACOB L. BARNHOUSE is one of the representative men of Wheeler county; his business is stock raising, in which he has achieved a splendid success. His ranch, consisting of four thousand acres, is one of the best in this part of the state, is situated ten miles northwest of Antone and is built up in the best of shape for handling stock. He has at the present time some thirty-five hundred head of sheep besides horses and cattle and is considered one of the worthy men of the county. All of this he has gained by his own labors and he is justly entitled to the emoluments he has won. Jacob L. Barnhouse was born in Darke county, Ohio in 1844. His parents, Peter and Sarah (Kester) Barnhouse, were natives of Pennsylvania and Darke county, Ohio, respectively. The father was of German and Irish extraction and his forebears were early settlers of Pennsylvania. His wife came from German ancestry, who settled in Ohio in early days, her father being a wealthy farmer. Our subject received his education in the Ohio and Illinois schools whither he went in 1855. In 1864, he enlisted in Company G, One Hundred and Forty-sixth Illinois Volunteer Infantry and was active in detached service until the close of the war. Being honorably discharged he returned to Illinois and engaged in farming until 1870, when he removed to Missouri. That state was his home for four years, then in 1875, he journeyed to Marion county, Oregon. There he farmed for four years. Finally, in 1879, he came to his present location and took a homestead. To this, he has added by purchase since until he has the large estate that we have mentioned. Mr. Barnhouse has shown commendable energy and sagacity in his affairs in Wheeler county and the fine holding that he now possesses evidences the same.

In Illinois, in September, 1869, Mr. Barnhouse married Martha W. Conger, who was born in Licking county, Ohio. To this union four children have been born: Mrs. Orral Laughlin, on June 26, 1871, who is mentioned elsewhere in this work; William A., on April 8, 1873, deceased; Peter R. and Aaron R., twins, on August 31, 1876, the former a partner with his father and the latter deceased. The parents of Mrs. Barnhouse are Aaron and Mary (McVay) Conger, natives of Pennsylvania. She has the following named brothers and sisters, Elizabeth A., Jacob E., David W., Carey McV., and Elias J., all deceased; Aaron, now living in McLean county, Illinois; Mary E., deceased; and Sarah Pierson, in Kansas. Mr. Barnhouse has one brother and six sisters, Mrs. Sabathna Owen, Mrs. Maria C. Livengood, Mrs. Clara Ingram and Mrs. Sarah Winkleplock, twins, Mrs. Fannie Manson, Mrs. Emma Jordan and John N. Our subject is one of the representative men and has held various offices, among which is that of commissioner of Wheeler county. He has shown himself a man of principle, uprightness and sturdy qualities and both in his private life and public career has so conducted himself that he has won many friends.

JOSEPH FRANCIS HUBNER hails from the land whence come so many of our most substantial and thrifty citizens. His birth occurred in the province of Silesia, Germany, on May 10, 1862, and there he received his educational training, remaining until he was twenty years of age. Then he journeyed to the United States and spent one year in Dakota, but not finding that country to his liking, he journeyed west and came to Portland, Oregon, in the spring of 1884. After a short stay there, he went to The Dalles and worked for wages for one year. During this time, he became acquainted with some stockmen, who urged him to try his luck at stock raising but finding the opportunity for a beginner rather limited in that section of the country, he concluded to travel further inland and came to his present location in 1885 and for seven years gave his attention to herding sheep. After that, he purchased some sheep and a year later, sold the entire band and returned to Europe where he remained about eight months. Not being able to locate successfully, he came to his present location, in 1892, and took up a homestead. At that time, he secured a band of sheep on shares and later sold his interest in that and rented sheep for cash. For five years, he continued in that business then sold out entirely his sheep interests. He took up more land and purchased some until he has now an estate of five hundred acres. After improving his place, he turned his attention to raising cattle and horses. He has over one hundred head of cattle, mostly Durham, about twenty horses and is a prosperous citizen.

During his stay in Germany, he became acquainted with Miss Anna Burke and the acquaintance later ripened into an engagement and one year after he arrived in the United States, she came hither and their marriage was consummated at The Dalles, in 1892. Five children were born to Mr. and Mrs. Hubner: Elsie, Alice, Henry, Adolph, and Frank.

Our subject is a man of good foresight and sound judgment and displays a keen interest in educational matters and all matters for the general advancement of the community. He has good reason to be proud of the success he has attained as he started entirely without capital and has made his property since coming to this section. He is classed among the most thrifty and progressive men of the country.

GEORGE V. OWENS, who resides two miles east of Antone and devotes his attention to mining and stock raising, was born in Stockholm, Sweden, on May 6, 1829. When fifteen years of age, after completing his early educational training, he shipped under the Swedish flag as a sailor. He continued thus until 1847, then was a sailor under the Norwegian flag. After that we find him again on a Swedish vessel for a short time and in 1851 he went aboard a German ship and later shipped on an American vessel. In Liverpool he left this vessel and sailed under the Union Jack for British Guiana. Then he came back to Liverpool and shipped on an American vessel bound for Boston, when he took another trip to Malta. Returning to Boston he sailed to California and left the ship at Frisco in February, 1853. He has practically visited all parts of the globe and is especially well acquainted with the Black and Mediterranean seas. On July 15, 1853, he went to the mines in Josephine county, Oregon, the sailor diggings, and remained until the following spring when he started out for Galice creek on Rogue river. In the fall of the same year he left that section and went to Yreka, California, where he was made a United States citizen. We find him there until the fall of 1860, when he went to Sterling, Oregon, and the next year was working on Applegate creek. After that he mined on Jackass creek, remaining there until the spring of 1862. From there he went to Canyon creek, Oregon, and ten days later went on to Granite creek. After that we find him on the North Fork of the John Day until 1870, when he came to his present location. Since then he has divided his attention between stock raising and mining.

On November 8, 1881, while in Wheeler county, Mr. Owens married Frances P. Fancher, who was born in Iowa. Her father, Joseph Fancher, was a native of Iowa and of French extraction and his father was born in France. The children born to our subject are Victor Frances, on December 15, 1883; Gustave Frederick, on June 24, 1885; Norma Anna, born January 13, 1887; Paul Hoberger, born April 27, 1889; George E., born March 25, 1891 and died September 10, 1892.

Mr. Owens is a member of the A. F. & A. M., Canyon City Lodge No. 34, and also of the Blue Mountain Chapter No. 7. Politically he is a Democrat and in religious persuasion Swedenborgian. He has had an extensive and varied experience, both on sea and land and deserves to be classed as one of the sturdy pioneers of the Pacific coast. As a citizen, he is broad minded, substantial and upright, and his labors have done much for the improvement and upbuilding of Wheeler county.

ROBERT A. GILLIAM comes from one of the prominent families of Oregon and is one of the representative men of the state. He resides now some eighteen miles out from Fossil on Sarvice creek, where he has three-fourth of a section and does general farming and stock raising. His ancestors were sturdy pioneers and their name is handed down in many ways, and one of the adjoining counties to Wheeler was named from them. Mr. Gilliam is widely known and as highly respected as he is well known. He was born in Polk county, Oregon, on July 15, 1853. His father, Robert Gilliam, was born in North Carolina and came to Missouri when a young man. There he married Miss Julia A. Chance, a native of North Carolina, who became a faithful helpmeet to him in his adventurous career. In the spring of 1846 they were part of a train that started across the plains with ox teams for the Mecca of the west, the Willamette valley. While on the way they were attacked by Indians and all their cattle destroyed or captured. This left Mr. Gilliam with his wife and child and a small pony to make the balance of the journey. His wife rode the pony and carried the child and he walked. A party was formed in The Dalles, when news of this was made known, to meet them, and thus they were brought finally to that place. Ultimately Mr. Gilliam went on to Polk county and took a donation claim. There he remained until 1858,

John B. Butler

Elzey M. Stephens

when he went to the vicinity of San Francisco and farmed. After that he was in Tulare county, then in Kern county, and finally he returned in 1886 to Polk county. There he remained until his death. He was a nephew of General Gilliam, who was killed in eastern Oregon while fighting with the Indians. Our subject had the opportunity to attend school but six months, and to supplement this lack of schooling he undertook the task of digging knowledge from the books himself, and in this he has succeeded well. When arrived to manhood he worked for wages until 1884, when he went to eastern Oregon and finally located in the place where he now lives. Part of this land was taken under government act and the balance was secured by purchase. He handles horses and cattle, but mostly the former, and in this business he is making a good success.

In 1884 Mr. Gilliam married Miss Ellen Metcalfe, who is a native of the Willamette valley. Her father, Robert R. Metcalfe, was a pioneer of Oregon. Two children have been born to our subject and his wife, Martha A. and Elsie P. Mr. Gilliam had no capital when he started, but he was possessed of the sterling worth that was found in his ancestors and he has made his way along splendidly, although beset with much adversity and many hardships.

JOHN B. BUTLER is a wealthy stockman of Wheeler county. With his brother he owns a large tract of good land some three miles south from Richmond. They do some farming, but devote their attention almost exclusively to stock raising. They are very prosperous and are leading and representative men.

John B. Butler was born in Johnson county, Tennessee, on August 16, 1854. His father, Hon. Roderick R. Butler, was one of the best representatives of a successful American statesman one finds in many years. He was born in Virginia and left an orphan when very young. Through his own struggles he gained a fair education, then learned the tailor's trade and while still young came on west to Tennessee. While working at his tailoring he studied law, burning much midnight oil, and in due time was admitted to the bar. He began the practice of his profession in Taylorsville, now Mountain City, and soon thereafter was elected to the state legislature. Several times thereafter he was chosen by his constituents for the same office and then was sent to the United States congress. He was a famous figure in the house and a man of well-known ability and integrity. His death occurred when he was serving a term in the state legislature, thus being in the harness up to the last moment. He was a prominent man, wealthy and highly respected.

He had married Miss Emmeline J. Donnelly, who was born in Johnson county, Tennessee, and came from a very prominent and wealthy family. Our subject was educated in Mountain City, Tennessee, early in life, then completed his training in Emory and Henry college, Virginia. He spent his life in the east until 1884, then journeyed west in company with his brother, G. O. Butler. After due search and investigation they came into this portion of Oregon and finally took government land where they reside at the present time. After this they bought various pieces and now, as stated above, own a large estate.

At Waldron, in this county, on December 23, 1886, Mr. Butler married Miss Effie M. Brown who was born in eastern Oregon. Her parents, Jonathan Perry and Sarah A. Brown, arrived at The Dalles on August 15, 1854, and settled near where Dufur now stands, their place being on Fifteenmile creek. That was the home until 1868, when they removed to a place below The Dalles where they remained three years. The next journey was to the Bakeoven country where they resided eighteen months. Mr. Brown died in 1890. His widow, now seventy-one years of age, is as vigorous and hearty as a woman of forty, and a highly respected citizen of Mitchell.

To Mr. and Mrs. Butler four children have been born, Herbert H., deceased, Pansy B., Besie V. and Random M.

Mr. Butler is a member of the A. O. U. W., and he and his wife are very highly respected people.

ELZEY M. STEPHENS is now living on the old historical Burnt Ranch, one of the land marks of central Oregon and so named because in the early days a brave pioneer penetrated thus far and built a cabin which later the Indians destroyed by fire, with all his improvements. Ever after that calamity the place was known as the Burnt ranch. For many years it was used as the stage station and is now one of the taverns of Wheeler county. Mr. Stephens is an enterprising, up-to-date man, resolute and possessed of good business ability. He does general farming and stock raising.

Elzey M. Stephens was born in Clackamas county, Oregon, on September 5, 1869, being the son of Lovet and Milbray (Fisher) Stephens, natives of Missouri and emigrants across the plains in very early day. They settled on a donation claim in the Willamette valley and in 1882 came to Gilliam county and settled near Mayville. There they remained until their death. Our subject received his education in the Willamette valley and was but fourteen years of age when he came with his parents to what is now Gilliam county. He started in the stock business and has made a good success. He operated in various capacities until 1898 when he took charge of the Muddy ranch, where he remained until 1902. In that year he purchased the Burnt ranch, one of the large ranches of the country, and since then has been conducting business for himself.

In 1893 Mr. Stephens married Miss Mary Pentecost, a native of Dakota, who came to Gilliam county with her parents in 1882. Her father, William Pentecost, was one of the earliest settlers in Gilliam county. To our subject and his estimable wife six children have been born, William L., Thomas, Susan L., Ralph, Hazel and Roy.

Mr. Stephens is a man who always takes an interest in the development and growth of the country and in the advancement of everything for the public welfare. He is greatly interested in politics, labors here for good schools and is known as a good and substantial citizen.

MICHAEL MULVAHILL is well known in Wheeler county and on various occasions he is called on to make public orations, being gifted in that line. He is one of the oldest pioneers of the country now embraced in Wheeler county and has wrought here with great industry and display of stability. He is interested in politics and is allied with the Democratic party. In various lines he has shown himself to be possessed of the true pioneer spirit and he may justly be classed as one of the builders of this county and section.

Michael Mulvahill was born in Chicago, on August 15, 1844. His parents, John and Nora (Dillon) Mulvahill, were born in county Kerry, Ireland. The father fought in the Mexican War and his death occurred in 1852. The mother died some later in Chicago. Being left without parents when young, Michael was not favored as other lads with an opportunity to gain an education. But, being aware of the importance of such a training, he applied himself and by painstaking and careful labor has made himself a well informed and well educated man. When he arrived of sufficient age he worked out on the farms in Illinois and later farmed for himself. In 1875 he determined to try the great west, and selected California as the place to start. In due time he reached the Golden State and there remained for three years. It was 1878, when he made his way north and finally located in the territory now occupied by Wheeler county, took government land and engaged in raising stock. That has occupied him since and he is one of the prosperous and well-to-do men of the county.

In 1869 Mr. Mulvahill married Miss Abigail Furgeson, who was born in Illinois. She accompanied her husband on all his journeys and was a faithful and loving wife. In 1900 she was called from the labors of life to the world beyond and left her husband and four children, besides many warm friends to mourn her departure. The children are Nora, Michael, John, and Rubie.

Mr. Mulvahill was very active in the work of forming the new county of Wheeler, and was appointed one of the acting committee in that important work. He has shown a loyalty to country and an interest in the development of his home county that commend him to all true citizens.

ROBERT D. CANNON has every reason to be proud of the success that he is favored with. Starting in life with nothing and at a very tender age, he has won his way, by virtue of real worth and activity in labors, to the front, gaining meanwhile the reward of these virtues in such a degree that he is now one of the men of wealth in the county. His spirit of energy and enterprise has always led him forward and he is a man that brooks no defeat, being assured that there is a way out of every difficulty. His life of success illustrates this proposition and he is a representative of the principle.

Robert D. Cannon was born in Meade county, Kentucky, on July 18, 1860. His father, John P. Cannon, also a native of the Blue Grass State, was a veteran of the Civil War and died soon after its close from effects of his arduous service. He had married Miss Sophia Bringle, who died when our subject was four years old. She, too, was born in Kentucky. When eight, Robert D. came west with an uncle and lived with him in Linn county, this state, until 1876. Then the lad was sixteen and that year he started for himself, dissolving partnership with his uncle, who kept the ranch and stock. Robert D. immediately came to this country and at once started to work to get a foothold. For a time he wrought for wages, but soon he got into business for himself and since that time he has steadily been climbing up the ladder. Mr. Cannon has a choice ranch near Mitchell and also handles lots of stock. Good improvements are in evidence and the place is one of the fine ones of the county. In 1898, Mr. Cannon secured possession of the well known Palmyra-Trosper mining property, which is a valuable one. It is in Miles gulch and is a placer proposition. C. P. Johnson is in partnership with Mr. Cannon, and they are operating two hydraulics on the property. It nets several thousand each year and on one occasion they found a nugget that sold for four hundred and sixty-eight dollars. Mr. Cannon is enterprising and progressive and pushes his business with an ability and wisdom that win success.

In 1890, Mr. Cannon married Miss Cora E. Campbell, whose parents are mentioned elsewhere in this volume. Four children have been born to this union: Anthony O., James A., Eunice and Georgie L.

THOMAS M. PRICE, a stockman and farmer of Wheeler county, resides ten miles southeast of Richmond and was born in Tennessee, in 1856. His parents were also natives of that state. After receiving his education in his native state, he continued there until 1884, farming, and then in September of that year started west. He arrived in western Oregon on October 3, following and settled in the Shoofly country. After remaining there one year, he came to his present location and he and his wife own here one-half section of land. In addition to doing general farming, he has been raising stock and now has about forty head of cattle, some horses, and the place well improved.

In the Shoofly country, on December 25, 1890, Mr. Price married Minnie E. Parish, the daughter of T. M. A. J. Parish. Mr. Parish crossed the plains by ox teams in the early forties, being among the very first emigrants to this country. Here he married Ellenor Beers, who was one of the very first white women to come to Oregon, having made the trip via Cape Horn. To Mr. and Mrs. Price one child, Edwin Maple, has been born. He is now thirteen years of age.

Mr. Price is a member of the A. O. U. W., the K. P. and the I. O. O. F.

In politics, he is a Republican and has always manifested a lively interest in public and educational matters.

EMIL STRAUBE is to be classed as one of the pioneers of western Oregon and is now a thrifty stockman residing five miles east from Waterman. He was born in Grass valley, Nevada county, California, on June 24, 1861. His father, John Straube, was a native of Saxony,

Germany and migrated to the United States when quite young. He followed carpentering and wrought in nearly every state in the union. He came to California in the early fifties and there engaged in mining until 1864, when he moved to Canyon City, Oregon. After that, they took a trip with freighting teams from there to Salem, being accompanied by a Mr. Bonham. Near the Keys ranch on the journey Mr. Bonham was shot by the Indians and the same night the savages burned the buildings on a ranch, which has been known since as the Burnt Ranch. Our subject well remembers this terrible occurrence, being one of the party, though very young. The family made their way to Salem and one year later, the elder Straube moved his family to southern Oregon, where he died in 1884. He had married Christina Star who was born in Germany, migrated to the United States when quite young, and is now living in Central Point, Oregon. The wedding occurred in Pennsylvania. The place of our subject's birth was a little mining town of California and he took all the various journeys mentioned above with his parents and received his education in Salem and southern Oregon. In 1877, he came back to western Oregon and for three years wrought for wages in different locations. Then he and his brother Adolph leased some sheep which they handled for two years. After that, they sold their interest in the sheep and bought horses. They have now about fourteen hundred acres of land, about sixty head of horses and two hundred and fifty cattle. They are very prosperous and are known as industrious and capable men. Mr. Straube's brothers are Charles, Adolph and Fred. The former is a rancher in Washington, Adolph is a partner of our subject and Fred owns a ranch in Oregon.

In 1891, Mr. Straube married Miss Rosa Quirolla, who was born in St. Louis. Her death occurred in 1893, and one child, Frederick, survives her. Mrs. Straube's surviving brother and sisters are Mrs. Teresa McRay, at Riverside, Oregon; Katie and William, in Montana.

Mr. Straube is an active Democrat and a very well posted man. He deserves to be classed with the sturdy pioneers of Oregon and his sterling worth and industry have done a great deal to open up and build up the central part of the state.

BENJAMIN IREMONGER resides some eight miles east from Waterman and follows stock raising. He was born in Lincolnshire, England on January 20, 1865. His father, Charles Iremonger, was also a native of England where he died. Our subject secured his education in his native country and in 1883 took passage to Philadelphia whence he came to The Dalles and from there to Arlington. Then he made his way to the Lost valley district, then in Wasco county, now in Gilliam county and remained until 1884. Then he came to his present location and took a homestead. At that time, he was one hundred and fifty dollars in debt, having borrowed the money for his passage from England. He began herding sheep and continued at that for five and one-half years. He first paid off the indebtedness then began to purchase sheep and after being through with the herding days, entered the industry for himself. He has been prospered and owns over a section of land besides fourteen hundred and fifty sheep. His place is well improved and everything that he now owns has been gained by hard labor and careful management since coming to his country. He is to be commended upon his success and is one of the substantial and thorough men of the county.

In 1900, Mr. Iremonger married Alice Gray, who was born in Lincolnshire, England, on February 22, 1866. Her father, Benjamin Gray, a native of England is living there and a leading citizen of his community. One child has been born to Mr. and Mrs. Iremonger: Charles William, two years of age.

Mr. Iremonger has the following named brothers and sisters: George, Charles W., Mary, Robert, Walter and Nimrod, all in England. George used to own land adjoining our subject, but is now returned to England. Mrs. Iremonger has the following named brothers and sisters: Thomas B., William, Maria, John, Fannie, Bertha, Emma, Walter and Nellie.

Our subject is a member of the I. O. O. F. and the K. P. In politics, he is an active and well informed Republican and takes a lively interest in all political matters and educational affairs and everything that tends to upbuild and improve the country.

JAMES WILSON was born in Columbia, California, on August 2, 1862. He is now residing at the Fopiano ranch which is located about a mile south from Waterman. His parents were James and Rosa Wilson, early immigrants to California. The former died when our subject was a babe, but the latter is now living at Columbia, California. Our subject remained in California until 1886, receiving in the meantime his educational training which included general mechanics.

In 1886 Mr. Wilson left California and journeyed north. After visiting various places he finally came to what is now Wheeler county and engaged on the Fopiano ranch. For one year he was occupied here and then he went back to California. The Golden State was then his home place until 1891, when he returned to the Fopiano ranch.

John Fopiano was an early pioneer, coming to what is now Wheeler county and locating the property well known now as the Fopiano ranch. He died in 1891. Mr. Fopiano had married our subject's sister, Mary. At the time Mr. Wilson took charge of the ranch in the interest of his sister it consisted of about three thousand acres. By Mr. Wilson's judicious and wise management it now consists of over ten thousand acres.

They handle large bands of stock and do considerable general farming. The place is equipped as a first class stock ranch and is being provided with everything that could be utilized in this occupation. Mr. Wilson has an interest in the ranch and is one of the well to do and prosperous men of the county. He has shown himself especially successful in the stock business and is ranked with the leading men in this occupation. Large interests are under his hands continually and his executive ability, splendid practical judgment and reliability especially fit him for this important and responsible position. Mrs. Fopiano resides in Alameda, California.

Mr. Wilson is a member of the I. O. O. F. and the Elks, and enjoys the distinction of being the center of a large circle of admiring friends and having the esteem and confidence of all who are acquainted with him.

LUTHER D. GILLENWATER. Oregon has many prosperous stockmen and that industry has brought many millions of wealth to the Web-foot State. Among the prosperous and wealthy ones, we are constrained to mention the gentleman whose name is at the head of this article. He is located about eleven miles west from Mitchell, where his home ranch is situated. It is one of the choicest and best improved in the county and is conducted in a manner befitting a man of ability and business acumen. All buildings needed and every improvement required in his large business are at hand and Mr. Gillenwater has a comfortable home as well as this fine establishment.

Luther D. Gillenwater was born in Hawkins county, Tennessee, on December 16, 1861, the son of Isaac S. and Sarah (Tarter) Gillenwater, natives of Tennessee. The father was a prominent physician of Rodgersville, and an influential and leading citizen. Our subject's home county was the scene of his early studies and when he was of proper age, he went to work on a farm. Later he was salesman in a store, and finally, he decided to come west. This decision was put into effect in 1889, when Mr. Gillenwater made his way into central Oregon. For five years after arriving here he worked for wages. This gave him the practical side of the stock business and he knows every turn of the work from the ground up. In due time he was in position to purchase a place for himself and accordingly he selected a ranch on Crooked river in Crook county and bought it. There he went into the stock business for himself and followed it successfully until 1901, when he purchased the place where he now lives. He makes this his headquarters, although he still owns the other place. He has a large tract of land here and it is fitted in capital shape for the stock business. Mr. Gillenwater has many head of sheep and is one of the most skillful men in the business about.

In 1888, Mr. Gillenwater married Miss Ida M. Gillenwater, a native of Tennessee, and the daughter of W. P. and Ellen (Sexton) Gillenwater, natives of Tennessee and Illinois, respectively. The father was a prominent lawyer in Hawkins county, of his native state. One child has been born to this union, Harry. Mr. Gillenwater is well posted in the questions of the day, has labored incessantly for the improvement of this section of the country, and is one of the progressive and enterprising men of the county today. He and his wife enjoy the confidence and esteem of their fellows and they are valued members of society.

Mr. Gillenwater has one brother, John F., living in San Francisco. Mrs. Gillenwater has three brothers: John C., in Wheeler county; Edward E., in Crook county, and William H., in Albuquerque, New Mexico.

MIKE FITZGERALD has one of the choicest stock ranches in Wheeler county. It is situated four miles east from Burnt Ranch, and consists of seven hundred acres of fertile soil. It is well laid out, favorably located, and handsomely improved. Everything required on a first class stock ranch is in evidence and the whole property reflects the skill and enterprise of the proprietor.

Mike Fitzgerald was born in Tennessee, on July 3, 1863, the son of William and Mary (Flemming) Fitzgerald, natives of Ireland. The father came to the United States when a small boy and was reared and educated in Tennessee.

He learned the stone mason's trade and became a well-to-do and prominent citizen. The mother came to this country at the age of fourteen and spent most of her life thereafter in Tennessee. Our subject received his education in his native state and as soon as he was of proper age to do for himself went to farming there. In 1885, he determined to try the west and after selecting Oregon as the place for him was soon in the central part of the state. For three years he wrought for wages, and being of an economical disposition, saved his money, which warranted him in purchasing sheep and some land. From that time to the present day, he has engaged in the sheep business and has made a marked success of it. His estate has increased to seven hundred acres and his wealth has also been constantly accruing until now he is rated as one of the most substantial men of this part of the county.

On September 24, 1900, Mr. Fitzgerald took to himself a wife, the lady being Miss Evelyn Maddron, a native of The Dalles, where also the wedding occurred. Mrs. Fitzgerald was highly educated and is a refined and cultured lady. Her parents, William A. and Harriet Evelyn (Penland) Maddron, were born in Tennessee. The father was a participant in the Civil War, being in the Thirteenth Tennessee. After the close of hostilities, he removed to Texas and raised cotton. It was 1885, when he came to The Dalles, where he is still living. Mrs. Maddron died in 1886. Mr. and Mrs. Fitzgerald are well known and highly respected people and have a great many friends. They are leading people and are always on the side of progression in all lines.

GEORGE J. McCOY has not been in Wheeler county so long as some of the pioneers, but he is a pioneer of the state and has wrought with display of faithfulness and industry in various places, being on the frontier most of the time. He was born in Warren county, Illinois, on May 4, 1837. His father, John McCoy, crossed the plains with his wife and three children in 1845, being among the very first to thread those weary ways. They came through all right and he took a donation claim nine miles southwest from where Albany now stands. There he remained until his death, becoming a prominent and wealthy man. He was judge of his county and held other offices. He had married Miss Sarah Junkins, who shared his labors and successes, being a faithful and kind helpmeet. Our subject was educated in Linn county and when he had grown up, he learned the carpenter trade.

He was in the Indian department in civil service and was superintendent of farming and schools. In 1882, with his wife, he established the first Indian boarding school on the Warm Springs reservation. Captain John Smith was the agent then. In 1884, Mr. McCoy left this line of industry and took government land in Wasco county. There he continued in tilling the soil until 1889, when he sold out his property and again entered the civil service until 1891 when he removed to Hay creek, Crook county. There he was in the stock business until his removal to his present location in 1900. He resides about seven miles east from Clarno and is engaged in sheep raising. He has some fine bands and is prospered.

In 1858, Mr. McCoy married Miss Nancy J. Fargay, the daughter of John and Matilda (Milhollen) Fargay. She was born in Illinois and crossed the plains with her parents to Oregon, in 1852. To this union the following named children have been born: James A., George E., Hanan R., Lena F., Laura M., Zella B., Sarah J., Allie L., Ruby E., and John E. The last named one is deceased. Mr. McCoy has taken great pains to educate his children and the older daughters have all taught school.

JOHN F. SPRAY, who resides at Spray, Oregon, which place he was instrumental in establishing, was born in Iowa, in 1859. John C. Spray, his father, born in Indiana in 1820, was a United Brethren minister for over thirty years. His death occurred in 1894. In 1864 the family disposed of their interests in the east and with ox teams made the weary journey from Missouri valley to the Willamette valley. They finally settled in Yamhill county, near Amity, which was the home for seven years. Then they came to Umatilla county, settled near Weston and one year later returned to Lane county, where our subject remained until 1884. Then he came to what is now Wheeler county and located first in Kaiter Basin, after which he moved to the place now owned by Albert Cosner. Fourteen years were spent there and in 1900 Mr. Spray located where he now resides. He was instrumental in establishing the postoffice at Spray, then built the ferry. After that, he laid out the town of Spray, having erected the first building there. He established a store and conducted the same for two years, until other parties were induced to locate there. Mr. Spray has been very liberal and progressive in his labors and has practically built the town to its present proportions, having induced others to locate here, having been instrumental in securing the county road and the location of a fine school house. In addition to this enterprise, he has been engaged in stock raising and has now about seven thousand sheep and twenty-five hundred acres of land. His residence is a choice place in Spray and he has shown himself one of the leading men of Wheeler county.

In 1883 Mr. Spray married Mary E. Breeding, who was born in Lane county, Oregon. Her father, B. C. Breeding, was a pioneer to this state in 1853 and served in the Rogue river war in 1855-56. His death occurred in 1902. The children born to Mr. and Mrs. Spray are Elvin C., Eugene M., John R., Wilbur and Charles. All are in this county.

Mr. Spray is a member of the K. P. and has always supported the principles of the Republican party. He is a very enterprising, energetic man and has the true spirit of building up and improving and has done very much for Wheeler county. He is one of the leading citizens, has an excellent standing and is rightly classed among the prominent men of this section.

FRED ANDREW HALE resides about three miles northwest from Spray and is one of the leading and substantial stockmen of the county. His birth occurred in Maine, on April 13, 1861 and his father, Andree Hale, was also born in the same state. They came from an old American family that has done much toward developing and building up the United States. The first twelve years of our subject's life were spent in his native state and then he journeyed to Illinois which was his home for six years. It was 1879 when he came west to California and wrought at different occupations for two years. Then he came to Wasco county and for twelve years was a resident of that section. After that, he came to Wheeler county and purchased the ranch where he now resides. It consists of two hundred and fifty-five acres, all good land and is one of the very best ranches in the entire country. Mr. Hale has improved the place in a splendid manner and everything about it speaks his thrift, his enterprise and his progressiveness. The residence is a large structure, neatly painted and tastefully arranged, while all the outbuildings and other improvements needed for a first class ranch are now in evidence. Mr. Hale has taken great pains to lay out the farm in a first class shape and make everything of the best. He has not only accomplished this in a first class manner but his labors have also stimulated others in the same line of good work. At the present time he has about one hundred head of cattle and is a prosperous and thrifty man.

On Pine creek, in Wheeler county, on April 5, 1891, Mr. Hale married Mary Harder. Her father, Mark Harder, was a pioneer of Oregon. The children born to this union are Oscar and Irle.

Politically Mr. Hale is a Republican and always takes an active interest in this realm. He keeps himself well posted upon the questions and issues of the day, is a public spirited and generous man and has certainly done a commendable labor in opening up this western country.

HENRY TRENT has spent about twenty years in what is now Wheeler county, devoting himself to general farming and stockraising. His labors have been blessed with good success and he has a fine estate of one section two miles south from Richmond. He is a man of stability and industry and has assiduously continued in his labors here for the time mentioned. He has, also, so conducted himself during this time that he has won the esteem of the people and gained for himself an excellent standing.

Henry Trent was born in Washington county, Virginia, on February 22, 1862, the son of Louis and Isabell (Thomas) Trent, both natives of Virginia. They came from well-to-do and prominent families and the father fought through the Civil War. Our subject was reared and educated in his native place and when the years of budding manhood came, there came also, as often to the American youth, a desire to try his fortunes in the boundless west; and soon he made preparations for the journey. From all he could ascertain, he decided that Oregon was the place to come to and accordingly in 1886 we find him herding sheep in the vicinity of Mitchell. Being of a thrifty and careful disposition it was not long before he had saved money enough to purchase some stock for himself. He also bought some land and soon he was launched as an Oregon stockman, although, necessarily, at that time, on a small scale. But small beginnings make favorable endings, and so in this case, we soon see Mr. Trent in possession of the fine estate he now has and a band of stock. His care and skill have been amply rewarded and he is today one of the representative men of the county.

On October 16, 1890, Mr. Trent decided to take a helpmeet to himself, Miss Rebecca M. Parish becoming his bride then. She was born in the Willamette valley to T. M. A. J. and Elenor (Beers) Parish, early pioneers of Oregon. They have journeyed on the pilgrim way of life since, sharing each other's successes and trials and are now valued members of society and have many friends. They have won good success and are to be classed as the builders of the county and as substantial citizens of today. Mr. Trent is a member of the A. O. U. W., and his wife of the auxiliary.

Some details of Trent's experiences might be interesting and helpful to others who are struggling to get a foothold. In 1889, he concluded to try the sheep business and accordingly rented a band of twelve hundred from Mr. A. J. Parish. Owing to the scarcity of food, the hard winter coming after, he was frozen out and lost all but two hundred. Still having faith in sheep, he had, in order to pursue that business, to go to herding, which he did. To add to the burden, on December 17, 1891, his house and nearly all his goods were destroyed by fire. This was a hard stroke, but applying the motto, "If at first you do not succeed, try, try again," he went on and has made a success. He is now, in addition to handling his farm business, contractor for the United States mail from Richmond to Mitchell, which contract expires in July, 1906. He has held it for seven years.

Mr. Trent has two brothers in Oregon, John of Richmond, and A. C. of Antone; and his mother, five sisters, and two brothers, still reside in Virginia.

Mrs. Trent's mother was the daughter of A. Beers, and she and her brother are believed to be the only surviving members of the party which came to Oregon in 1837, on the ship Lansanne, around Cape Horn.

LLEWELLYN H. HALE is postmaster at Spray, and has been since 1895. He was instrumental in getting this office established and has done very much for the promotion of the interests of this section. Mr. Hale is also school clerk and justice of the peace. He is of first class standing in the community and is a man of reliability and excellent judgment.

Llewellyn Hale was born in Somerset county, Maine, on May 4, 1844, the son of Andrew and Mary (Houghton) Hale, also natives of Somerset county. The father was a man of prominence in his county and came from a very old and influential family. His ancestors first came to this country in the Mayflower, and the family dated back a long time before that. Many of the Hales have been prominent and leading men. They were of English and Scotch ancestry. Our subject received a good education from the schools of his native county and in 1860 journeyed west to Illinois, where he worked for wages. In 1870 we find him in Page county, Iowa, and there he was engaged in the mercantile business at Reedsville, being, also, postmaster for a number of years. In 1882 the western fever again attacked him and he took the sure cure of coming to the Pacific slope. Portland was the scene of his labors for a time and then he sought out another location, lighting on this place in 1884. He took government land and also bought other and engaged in the stock business. He has continued that since and has met with good success in his efforts. The fact that he has been in responsible positions so long, both here and elsewhere, indicates him a man both of ability and integrity and this is fully borne out in his life. Mr. Hale descends from a strong and honorable family and has reason to be proud of his forefathers, whose name, bequeathed unsullied and prominent to him by those gone on, has been kept as it was received and may be handed down thus to those who will come after. Mr. Hale belongs to the I. O. O. F. and is a social and genial man.

JAMES S. HUNT is to be classed among the leading and earliest pioneers of Wheeler county. He resides now sixteen miles northeast from Fossil and follows stock raising. His birth occurred in Grant county, Indiana, on December 8, 1859. His father, David Hunt, was born in Ohio in 1837 and served in the Sixty-third Indiana Volunteers for nine months during the Civil War. After returning home he went on the Wabash and Erie canal, where he operated a canal boat until 1869 and then he went to Missouri, remaining some time when he came to California and thence to Washington. After a year in the Evergreen State, he came to Oregon and died here in 1889. He had married Miss Robb, who was born near Cincinnati, Ohio, on March 8, 1841 and is now living in Wheeler county. Our subject came to central Oregon when twelve years of age and as there were no schools near, he had to content himself with the education he received previous to that time. He was a good rider and soon became very expert with the rope and in a few years was one of the most skillful horsemen and rope throwers in this part of the state. When he was twenty years of age he bought a half interest in his father's business and continued with him until the latter's death. Then he continued in partnership with his mother until 1893, in which year he went into sheep raising for himself. He now has about two thousand head of these animals and nearly a section of land. He is being prospered in his labors and is one of the well-to-do and substantial stockmen of the county.

In 1893 Mr. Hunt married Miss Nettie Robertson, who was born in the vicinity of Appomattox Court House, Virginia, on September 11, 1872. Her father, L. Robertson, was also a native of Virginia. Owing to the fact that he was a cripple he could not get in the army but his brother fought for the confederacy as also did two of his wife's brothers, one of whom was killed at Gettysburg. Mr. Robertson married Miss Day, a native of Virginia, who was a distant relative of General Lee. To Mr. and Mrs. Hunt, two children have been born, Evrett and Lilburn.

Politically, Mr. Hunt is a Republican and in church relationship he belongs to the Christian Baptist denomination. He is a man who enjoys the esteem and confidence of his fellows and has always been known as industrious, progressive and ever ready to assist in the building up of the country.

H. H. HENDRICKS, a leading attorney of Wheeler county residing in Fossil, was born in Polk county, Oregon on February 26, 1861. He has gained good success in his profession and made himself one of the substantial and capable men of this part of the state and to his credit it may be said that he has accomplished it all through his own efforts, being entirely a self-made man. His father, Robert J. Hendricks, was born in Knox county, Illinois, in 1832 and crossed the plains in 1852. After that, he resided in Yamhill county a time, then went to Polk county, thence to Umatilla county, and died in Douglas county in 1880. In Yamhill county in 1854, he married Mary J. Sherwood, who was born in Fulton county, Illinois, in 1838 and crossed the plains with her parents in 1850. She is still living at Cottage Grove, Oregon. In 1868, the family came to what is now Olex, Gilliam county then a wilderness, and year later, settled in Umatilla county. In 1873, they moved to Douglas county and in these various places our subject gained his primary education in the public schools. When fourteen, he left home and learned the printer's trade at Roseburg, Oregon. Two years later, he attended the Wilbur Academy and the next year taught his first term of school. Then following a year of newspaper work, he entered the state university at Eugene and graduated in 1883, receiving the degree of B. S. He practically earned his way through, working during the vacations as compassman for the government survey in Lake county. After graduation he took a position on the Daily States- man at Salem, Oregon, as city editor and business manager. This was to finish paying his college expenses and to gain his support in the study of law. Then he entered the law office of Ford and Kiser at Salem, where he was continuously for eighteen months. Then he removed to Gilliam county continuing his law reading and on the creation of that county in 1885 he was appointed superintendent of the county schools. At the next election he was chosen by the people to fill that office; and in 1887 he was admitted to the bar and began the practice of law at Fossil that same year. For several years he maintained an office at Condon in partnership with H. B. Hendricks and later in partnership with Jay Bowerman. Mr. Hendricks is achieving a splendid success in his profession and shows himself a man of ability and integrity. His library shows skill in selection and is up-to-date.

The brothers of our subject now alive are Glen O., a stockman in Harney county; H. B., an attorney and real estate man at Grant's pass; R. J., Jr., manager of the Salem Daily Statesman; John R., a stockman in Harney county; David A., a newspaper man in Montana.

In 1885, Mr. Hendricks married Miss Gloriunda Giesy, who was born in Marion county, Oregon. She died at Fossil a year after her marriage, leaving an infant son, William Giesy Hendricks, who is now attending the Portland Academy. At Fossil, on November 25, 1887 Mr. Hendricks married Mary M. McKenzie. She was born in Wisconsin and raised near Kansas City, Kansas. The children of this union are: Robert H., sixteen years old; Ford H., fifteen years of age; Carl H., aged thirteen; Winlock H., eleven years old; and Mary E., nine years old.

Mr. Hendricks belongs to the Masonic fraternity, the K. P., the W. W., M. W. A. and the Eastern Star. Politically, he is a Republican, while in religious persuasion he is identified with the Unitarians.

GEORGE W. CHAPMAN, who is a representative stockman of Wheeler county and one of the earliest pioneers of this section, was born in Indiana, on June 28, 1846. At present he resides about one mile east from Richmond, where he owns a good estate, part of which he gained through government right and part by purchase. Having passed through the trying times of pioneer days, he is well fitted to be represented in a work of this character and to be classed as one of the builders of this great country. Many and difficult were the hardships and labors of those days and they never can be fully written, but in accord with the adage, "Honor to whom honor is due," is very fitting that the pioneers and frontiersmen should be classed with the leaders of the race. Our subject's father, Joseph R. Chapman, was a native of Connecticut and reared on a farm. When arrived at young manhood he moved to Ohio, then to Indiana, and later to Iowa, being a pioneer in these places. In 1852, he crossed the plains with ox teams, bringing his family with him, and made location in Polk county, Oregon, there taking a donation claim. Seven years were spent on that and then came the move to what is now Klickitat county, Washington. For a decade he lived in that territory and then he came to the region now embraced in Wheeler county. Here he remained, raising stock and doing general farming until the time of his death. He had married Mrs. Mary Mithcell, nee Johnson, a native of Pennsylvania, who was a faithful helpmeet to him in all his labors and journeys and is now living in Wheeler county.

Our subject made the best of his opportunities to secure an education in the schools in Polk and Klickitat counties and came with his father to this section in 1869. They were among the very first settlers and had to combat with the Indians and wild animals and had the hardship of transporting supplies many, many miles. They weathered those days of hardship, however, and our subject has given his attention steadily to stock raising and general farming and the result is that he has come to be a prosperous and substantial citizen of the county.

In 1878, Mr. Chapman married Miss Mary E. Armsworthy, who was born in Klickitat county, Washington, the daughter of Levi and Ellen (Dunlap) Armsworthy. The former was a native of North Carolina, crossing the plains in the early fifties and settling first near Portland, whence he removed to Klickitat county. The mother started across the plains with her parents, both of whom died en route. She shared the labors and successes of her husband and they now reside in Klickitat county. To our subject and his wife seven children have been born, Archie, Hattie, Guy, Claude, Ray, Elmer, and Mary A., deceased.

Mr. and Mrs. Chapman are good substantial people and for many years have done their share in the development and upbuilding of this county.

WILLIAM SETH MOORE is a stockman residing about six miles east from Fossil, where he owns a quarter section of good land and handles about one hundred or more cattle. He was born in Missouri, on July 16, 1847, the son of Joshua and Elmira (Yale) Moore. The father started to drive across the plains with ox teams in 1852 and died before he reached his destination. The mother, a native of Ohio, was a school teacher before she was married, that event occurring when she was twenty-five years of age. When her husband died, she brought the family across the plains to Oregon City and her death occurred in 1894. Our subject was with the family when they crossed the plains and, in addition to his father dying, his brother also died at The Dalles. From that point they went down the river to the locks and then took steamer to Oregon City, where they remained about a year. There the mother married George Tillotson, a millwright. The next move was to Linn county, and a year later they went on to Polk county, where Mr. Tillotson took a preemption. This was their home for six years and then the family went to Dallas, where our subject remained until he was twenty-two years of age. He then purchased a farm in Cooper Hollow, Polk county. He also made a trip to the Palouse country, Washington. He made a camp on the Touchet and took a trip over to Tucanon and visited his step-brother. Returning to his camp he found that his horses had strayed away and he was not able to find them until the following spring which necessitated his remaining on the Touchet until that spring. His camping ground was what is now Huntsville. The next year he returned to Polk county, then came over to eastern Oregon. A little later he settled in Klickitat county, where he resided four years, and then went to The Dalles. From there he journeyed to the John Day river, settling in a portion of what is now Wheeler county, and remained for one season. Then he came to his present place and took a preemption and a homestead, half of which is his home now. He has given his attention to the improvement and cultivation of it since and to stock raising.

In 1869 Mr. Moore married Miss Sarah E. Wren, a native of Illinois. Her father, Thomas Wren, was a veteran of the Civil war. To this union the following named children have been born, Mrs. Annie E. Horn, Mrs. Lela E. Newman, and Mrs. Sophia I. Meter.

SEDGEWICK STANTON DEMENT, a stockman residing about four miles southeast from Fossil, was born in Ohio, on December 29, 1869, the son of John C. and Maggie (Dillon) Dement, natives of Ohio. The mother died in 1878, and the father is now living in Portland. He is a veteran of the Civil war, having served in the Fourth Ohio Cavalry for three years. During this time, he was taken prisoner and confined eight months. He also participated in Sherman's March to the Sea. Our subject went with his parents to Missouri and there remained until 1882, when he went to Coos county, Oregon. One year later, he came to his present location by team. The balance of the family accompanied him. He took a homestead and since has devoted himself to stock raising. His brother, John William, resides with him, and he has two other brothers, Edgar and Ulysses G., living in Portland. His half sisters are Ella and Myrtle, and his half brothers are James H. and Clyde.

On March 8, 1889, Mr. Dement married Ella J. Ellis, who was born in California, the daughter of Thomas Ellis, a pioneer of that state. They have two children, Daisy M. and Andrew Thomas.

Mr. Dement is a Republican and always manifests interest in the welfare of the community as well as in educational and political matters.

CHARLES McKENZIE is at the head of the Hotel McKenzie in Fossil. The establishment is a first-class house, commodious and well furnished, and handled in a manner that makes it very attractive to guests. Mr. McKenzie is the recipient of a fine patronage, has the ability to conduct things in a wise manner and is rated as one of the substantial and leading business men of Fossil. He was born in Montello, Wisconsin, on August 21, 1857. His father, W. L. McKenzie, was born in Canada and removed from there to Rochester, New York, and then in 1852, to the vicinity of Montello, Wisconsin. At that place he enlisted in the Third Wisconsin Cavalry, as first orderly sergeant, and served for three years and four months in the Civil war. After his discharge, he returned to his home in Wisconsin, and then moved to Kansas, where he still resides. He was a pioneer merchant at Rochester, New York, and also did cabinet making. He conducted an undertaking business and operated the first hearse in what is now the populous city of Rochester. He is a man of influence and excellent standing. He married Elizabeth Dixon, a native of Canada, and the aunt of Rev. Dr. Dixon, of New York. She died in 1900, aged seventy. Our subject came from Wisconsin to Kansas with his parents when nine years of age and there remained until April, 1878, during which time he received his education. In the year last mentioned, we find him on his way to Idaho and there he freighted for some time. After this, he engaged in the livery business until February, 1880, when he came to the vicinity of Fossil. Here he rode the range until the fall of 1884, when he built a livery barn in Fossil, which he conducted until 1891. Then he rented the establishment and engaged in lumbering. In 1892, his barn burned and he rebuilt and sold later. He continued in the lumbering business, owning a sawmill, for about thirteen years and during this time he built the Hotel McKenzie and now is giving his entire time and attention to the operation of this house. It is the only hotel in Fossil and is one that reflects credit on the town.

On December 14, 1885, Mr. McKenzie married Miss Carry Brinkerhoff, who was born in Walla Walla. Her father was one of the pioneers to California, and married Fannie Maxon, who was born near Walla Walla, and whose mother, Mrs. Maxon, was the first white woman in Walla Walla. Four children are the fruit of this union, William, Bessie, Frank and Cuaries. Mr. McKenzie is a member of the Blue Lodge and Chapter of the Masonic order, and also belongs to the M. W. A., and the W. O. W. Politically, he is a Republican. He stands well in the community and is a progressive man in every respect, and assists in all matters of improvement and development.

JULIA A. DOUSMAN was born in New York state in 1825. Her father, Julius Chuyler, was a native of New York city and came from German ancestry. His father was also born in Germany, but fled from that country at the time the Huguenots were persecuted. Our subject came with her parents to Michigan when she was an infant, they being among the first settlers in that country. They had to cut their roads through the wild country and finally settled where Monroe is now and where she was raised. There, in 1843 she married Henry Dousman, a native of France. He came to the United States when quite young. After their marriage, they remained in Michigan two years, then went to Canada, where Mr. Dousman followed his trade of milling. In 1850, they went to California, via the Panama route, and while on the way from Panama to San Francisco the machinery of their ship broke and it was three months before they made the harbor of the Golden Gate. Her husband was very sick, her children were afflicted with the scurvy and both water and provisions became very scarce. Twenty-six of the passengers died from yellow fever, in fact every person who took the fever died except Mr. Dousman. They remained in Sacramento for one year, then went to the mines for one year. In 1853 they located in Astoria, which then consisted of two or three houses, a mill and a store. Mrs. Dousman did cooking for the mill crew for a year while her husband worked in the mill. In 1854 they returned to California, Mrs. Dousman spending one year in Sacramento, while her husband worked in the mines. Then they bought a claim which they were unable to secure, owing to its being on the Spanish land grant. They bought a second claim which resulted the same way, then becoming discouraged they removed to the mountains of Monterey county and remained two years. Later, they journeyed to Sonoma county and bought seven hundred acres of land and there lived for twenty-five years, then they sold out and went to Spokane, spending two years. They sold out their property there and journeyed to the Rogue river valley, and a few weeks later drove on to what is now Wheeler county, locating here in 1882. Mrs. Dousman now owns three hundred and forty acres of land. Her husband died in the spring of 1900. The children born to Mr. and Mrs. Dousman are Mrs. Henrietta Arnold, Mary Ann McCappin, and Mrs. Ellis Sichel. Mrs. Dousman is now enjoying splendid health and is very active for a woman of her age. She is surrounded by her children, her grandchildren, her great-grandchildren and her great-great-grandchildren. She is well known and highly esteemed because of her excellent principles and untiring industry. Her husband was very prominent in many lines, especially in Masonic circles, having become a Mason in 1844, in Muncie, Indiana. He assisted to organize many lodges in the west, among which was one at Astoria. He was one of the first Masons on the coast. Mrs. Dousman has certainly seen a long life of pioneering and in it all has shown a sturdiness and stability that are commendable. It is very pleasant after a life of activity, to see her surrounded by her loved ones, enjoying the fruits of her labors.

ISAAC F. SHOWN follows the related occupations of farming and stock raising in Wheeler county, his estate of four hundred acres being located some six miles west of Richmond, on the Fossil stage road. He was born in Johnson county, Tennessee, on March 10, 1835. His father, Joseph Shown, was also born in that county, the date being February, 1803. He was well-to-do and prominent man and his father, Leonard Shown, the grandfather of our subject, was born in Pennsylvania and fought in the Revolution. The mother of our subject was Mary (Wills) Shown, a native of Johnson county, Tennessee, and descended from promiment and wealthy people. After completing the common school training, our subject studied in the Taylorsville Academy, then worked on a farm until the Civil war broke out, when he was detailed to work in the confederate iron works. He continued in that capacity until he found an opportunity to escape then hurried to the federal lines and enlisted in Company D, Thirteenth Tennessee Cavalry and served until September 5, 1865, fighting for the stars and stripes. During that time he was in fourteen severe engagements and acquitted himself as a brave and faithful soldier. In March, 1866, Mr. Shown was elected sheriff of Johnson county and served six years. Then he served two years as trustee and again was elected sheriff and continued for two years. In 1884 he determined to change his residence and accordingly sold all his property in the east and journeyed to the Pacific coast. He finally selected government land where he now resides and purchased there until he has four hundred acres. He raises general crops and handles stock. In 1896 Mr. Shown was elected assessor of Crook county, Oregon, and served two years; then he was re-elected, but as Wheeler county was cut off about that time, he was appointed assessor of Wheeler county, and upon the expiration of his term was again elected to that position. This makes Mr. Shown a service of nearly twenty years in various county offices, in all of which he has shown an uprightness and efficiency that have commended him to the public.

In 1857, Mr. Shown married Mary I. Ellrod, the daughter of Calaway and Fannie (Jones) Ellrod, natives of North Carolina. The father was a prominent man and was clerk of Johnson county, Tennessee, when he died. Mrs. Shown was born in North Carolina and moved with her parents to Tennessee when a small girl. To Mr. and Mrs. Shown the following named children have been born: Stacy, in 1868; T. Gordon, in 1870; Edward R., in 1872; Nathaniel D., on January 10, 1874; and Hamilton C., on March 4, 1877. They are all well-to-do and respected farmers in Wheeler county. Mr. Shown enjoys a splendid reputation and is of first-class standing in the community. He has merited the approval and confidence of his fellows by his faithfulness and reliability and he is one of the leading men of the county today.

WILLIAM W. KENNEDY is one of the prominent men of Wheeler county and in fact is well known all through his portion of the state. He was born in Huntington, Quebec, on January 13, 1836, and now resides at Fossil, being the superintendent of schools for Wheeler county. James Kennedy, his father, was born in Dumfries, Scotland, and came to Canada while young, where he followed farming. In 1842 he went to Illinois and took government land, thirty miles north of Chicago. In 1852 he journeyed thence across the plains to California. It was the year of the great epidemic of cholera, but so skillful was Mr. Kennedy in treating the cases in his train that there was but one death. In California he engaged in mining and freighting, then built a toll road and for a while preached the gospel. He was a very influential man, taking a prominent part in public affairs and finally died at San Jose, California, in 1885. He had married Helen McDougal, the daughter of John McDougal of Grennoch, Scotland. Mrs. Kennedy came from Grennoch, her native place, to Canada when a girl, having received her education in Scotland. She was married in Canada and crossed the plains with her husband, participating all the scenes of his life and dying a few months after his departure. She was a very kind and noble woman. Her father was a prominent vessel owner on the Atlantic coast. Our subject was educated in the public schools in Illinois, then completed a course at the Gates academy in San Jose, California, after which he took a post graduate course at the state normal. He had come to California with his parents across the plains and after his education was completed took up the work of teaching. He followed it in California until 1877, when he came to Heppner, Oregon, took government land and engaged in stock raising. In 1884 Mr. Kennedy came to Fossil and built the Kennedy hotel, which he operated until 1888. Then he was elected superintendent of schools for the county and has been in that or other county offices ever since. He has been surveyor and judge of this county, and his work for the success of the schools has placed them in a very excellent condition.

In 1870 Mr. Kennedy married Miss Harriett E. Hamilton, who was born in San Jose, California. Her parents, Zeri and Jane H. (Blackford) Hamilton, had crossed the plains to California in 1849. They operated a hotel at Georgetown, Eldorado county, then did farming. The father died in 1871. Mr. Kennedy has the following named brothers and sisters: Walter, who was lost on a vessel on Lake Michigan; Robert D., who followed mining, then was a public lecturer until his death in 1881; John M., a retired farmer at San Jose, California; James G., who died in 1893, was then president of the San Francisco normal school and a prominent educator; Thomas E., who was a very prominent educator and at the time of his death was head inspector for the schools of San Francisco; Mary, Elizabeth, Mrs. Jeanette Malcom, and Mrs. Margaret Wild, deceased. After the death of James G. and Thomas E. the Franklin school of San Francisco was named in honor of them, being now known as the Kennedy school. To Mr. and Mrs. Kennedy four children have been born, Mrs. Margaret J. Brown, in California; Mrs. Helen E. Yantis, Mrs. Birdie Bad and Robert D., all in Fossil. Mr. Kennedy is a prominent Republican and the fact that he has continued in office at the hands of the people for such a long period indicates and stamps him as a man both of ability and unswerving integrity. His standing in the county is of the very best and he is looked up to and respected by everybody.

HON. R. N. DONNELLY is properly called the father of Wheeler county. He is a wealthy and enterprising stockman residing at Richmond and was born in Johnson county, Tennessee, on October 3, 1855. His father, Richard H. Donnelly, was a native of Johnson county, Tennessee, also, and followed farming and merchandising. He was prominent and wealthy and held many offices of public trust in his native state. His father, Richard Donnelly, the grandfather of our subject, was a veteran of the War of 1812. Richard H. Donnelly married Miss Eliza Moore, also a native of Johnson county, Tennessee, and descended from a prominent and representative family. After completing the common schools, our subject finished his studies at the Finley high school of Lenore, North Carolina. Then he turned his attention to the work of the educator and for a number of years was a faithful laborer in that field in the state of Tennessee. It was 1880 when Mr. Donnelly decided to come west, making Oregon the objective point of his journeys. Upon arriving in this portion of the state he began work for wages. Soon thereafter he took government land and has added to it by purchase at various times since until he has a large and excellent estate. He has a beautiful home, good improvements and much property. He handles stock and is much on the range.

In November, 1881, Mr. Donnelly married Miss Jane R. Keys, a native of Johnson county, Tennessee. She had come to Oregon with her parents in 1888. David L. Keys, Mrs. Donnelly's father, was also born in Tennessee and came to Oregon by way of the isthmus and settled in Benton county. He married Susan J. Ward, also a native of the Big Bend State. To Mr. and Mrs. Donnelly, four children have been born, William A., Edgar W., H. Keys and George.

Mr. Donnelly has always taken great interest in the development and progress of the community, being an enterprising man, and in political matters is influential and leading. In 1898 his name appeared on the Republican ticket as candidate for the state legislature and he was promptly elected. This was from the Grant and Harney county district and during that term he introduced the bill organizing Wheeler county and proposed the name, Wheeler, on account of the aged frontiersman of whom mention has been made in another portion of this work. Mr. Donnelly was successful in piloting the bill to passage and Wheeler county was formed. Perhaps to his efforts, more than to any other one man, is due the organization of this now prosperous division. After his term expired Mr. Donnelly gave his attention to stock raising and six years later was elected again to represent his district in the state legislature.

Mr. Donnelly is a member of the I. O. O. F., the K. P., and is popular in fraternal circles. The Donnelly family in Tennessee were prominent union people during the war and had to withstand much opposition, being so near the confederate sympathizers. A. T. Donnelly, an uncle of our subject, was a captain in the union army. Mr. Donnelly has shown in all his long public service a faithfulness to his constituents that has endeared him to the people and bespeaks him a man of sound principles and stability.

THOMAS J. MONROE is certainly one of the earliest pioneers of central Oregon. In addition to that, he has so labored with enterprise and industry since those days, in building up the country and bringing in the ways of civilization, that he is to be classed as one of the builders of Wheeler county, being, also, one of its representative citizens at this day. He now resides about seven miles out from Mitchell on the Fossil stage road and there, with his family, owns a magnificent estate of fourteen hundred acres of choice land. He gives his attention to the oversight of this and to raising stock, which latter industry he has followed here for over thirty years. In his labors Mr. Monroe has manifested great enterprise and his care and thrift have made him a splendid success. Coming and starting here without means, he has won his way steadily on until he is classed as one of the wealthy men of the county and every dollar of it represents his toil and business ability.

Thomas J. Monroe was born in Belmont county, Ohio, on January 6, 1837. His father, William Monroe, was a native of Pennsylvania, and came with his parents, when a lad, to Ohio, which was then a wild country. The ancestors were veterans of the Revolution and were prominent in colonial days, being farmers. He married Miss Ann Mann, a native of Bedford county, Pennsylvania, who came to Ohio with her parents when a girl.

Our subject gained his education in Ohio and in Iowa, and in 1865, accompanied by his parents, two brothers and two sisters, crossed the plains to Lane county, Oregon. In 1869, the family came thence to the vicinity of Mitchell and here the father died on May 11, 1873. After his death, the boys, under the guiding direction of their mother, operated the ranch. Thomas J. was with his parents in all their journeys, and in 1872 took government land here. His attention was turned to farming and stock raising and now he is the possessor of nine hundred and sixty acres, while his children own half as much more. They are prosperous and substantial people.

In 1860 Mr. Monroe married Miss Mary A. Snedeker. She was born in Ohio and came with her husband to the Pacific coast. Her parents, John and Pricilla (Hall) Snedeker, natives of Ohio and Virginia, respectively, came from Dutch stock. Her grandfather served in the War of 1812. To Mr. and Mrs. Monroe four children have been born: Almira, deceased; Daniel B., Sarah P., and Martha E. It is to his credit to note that when Mr. Monroe came here he had no capital, all his property has been gained by his industry and care here. Both Mr. and Mrs. Monroe endured all the deprivations incident to those early days, labored industriously, denying themselves much, and have well earned their competence.

E. W. HOWELL resides about six miles south from Richmond, at the present time, and was born in Jackson county, Oregon, on December 27, 1860. He is the owner and operator of a fine saw mill and shingle mill, where he resides. The former has a daily output capacity of ten thousand feet and the latter is a well equipped and first-class plant. Mr. Howell does a good, large business in lumbering and is known as one of the progressive and substantial business men and citizens of Wheeler county. His father, Maurice Howell, was born in Mt. Vernon, Ohio, and came across the plains in 1852. He was a veteran of the Rogue River war, and died in 1873. He had married Catherine Clayton, who was born in Ohio and crossed the plains with her parents from Iowa, in 1852. She is now living in Ashland, Oregon, in the same vicinity where she first settled. Our subject received his early education from the public schools and then completed the Ashland normal course. He labored industriously in the summers and spent the winters in studying. In this way, he secured a good education through his own efforts, since his father died when he was about ten years of age. In June, 1884, Mr. Howell located permanently in the territory now occupied by Wheeler county and engaged in lumbering. At first he worked for wages until he had the business well learned, then in 1894 he leased a mill in the Winlock neighborhood and operated the same for three years. In 1899, he came to his present location, where he completed the mill which he still operates. He has a good trade in lumber and has assisted very materially in building up the country by his manufacturing. At Eagle creek, in Clackamas county, Oregon, on October 22, 1884, Mr. Howell married Miss Maud M. Bates who was born in Missouri, on November 19, 1866, and reared in Clackamas and Multnomah counties, Oregon. Her father, Edwin Bates, crossed the plains in 1871, and is still living in Clackamas county. Our subject's brother, Frank E. Howell, was a very bright and promising young man and enlisted in Company L, Second Oregon Volunteers to serve in the Philippine Islands. He was actively engaged in the campaign with his command until the regiment was discharged from further service, when he entered into business about sixty miles from Manila. He was later taken sick there and returned home, but never recovered, and his death occurred in Ashland on November 30, 1900. Another brother our subject, Maurice Howell, enlisted in Company M, Second Oregon Volunteers, and served during the entire struggle in the islands. His honorable discharge occurred at San Francisco, but he had contracted disease in the service from which he never recovered, his death afterward occurring on August 17, 1903.

Mr. Howell is a member of the I. O. O. F., the K. P. and the A. O. U. W., while in politics he is a good, strong Republican and takes a keen interest in the campaigns. Mr. Howell is an Oregonian by birth as well as by choice, and believes that his state has one of the greatest futures of any part of the northwest. He has labored assiduously to develop and build up and is rightly classed as one of the pioneers of this country.

SAMUEL S. NELSON, a stockman residing about two miles southwest from Mitchell, and one of the leading men of this part of the county, was born in La Fayette county, Missouri, on January 1, 1862. His father, Rufus K. Nelson, was born in Kentucky, came to Missouri when a young man, on to Nevada in 1874, and finally landed in Lane county, Oregon, shortly after. In 1877 he came to the vicinity of Mitchell and engaged in stock raising. He was killed while driving a band of horses to Nebraska, in 1889. He had married Miss Mary C. Neil, who was born near Paris, Kentucky. She accompanied her husband across the plains. Our subject was educated in Oregon, and here, also, he grew to manhood. When he had arrived to a sufficient age, he entered into the stock business for himself, and since that time has continued in it. He accompanied his father to this section and they were among the very first to settle here. He is well acquainted with the country and has handled stock all over it. Mr. Nelson now has a section and a half of good land, which is a choice stock ranch, and he handles it and his stock business with skill and care. Mr. Nelson has four brothers, Charles, W. F., P. B., and E. W. They all came to this country together and have been much associated in their business since. In the early days, they had to endure much hardship and were accustomed to the rugged life of the frontiersmen, which they met with fortitude. Mail and all supplies had to be brought from a distant point and they had to be on the watch for the depredations of the savages all the time. However, they have weathered all of this and are well-to-do men and representative citizens here at this time. They each have ranches and large bands of stock on the range.

DAVID E. BAXTER is one of the progressive young men of Wheeler county. At the present time he is owner and editor of the Spray Courier, a bright and newsy sheet and the only Republican periodical published in the county. He was born in Salem, Oregon, on November 20, 1877, and has made Oregon his home ever since. His father, William Baxter, was born in Toronto, Canada, on February 22, 1833, and twenty-six years later came via Cape Horn to Oregon and was one of the sturdy pioneers in this great state. When there was but one store in Salem, Mr. Baxter was there, and has since assisted in the growth of the country. He married Margaret Evans, who was born in Michigan, in 1838. Our subject received his education in the country schools of Oregon until 1896, when he began teaching. During the winters after that, he attended the Willamette University and completed the commercial and normal courses. His teaching continued each summer, and in 1901 he came to eastern Oregon. He taught in the Richmond, Waterman and Spray schools, and in August, 1902, he bought the Spray Courier, which he has conducted since. The paper reflects the man and is known as a fearless, bright and reliable paper.

In September, 1902, Mr. Baxter married Miss Della Osborn. She was born in Salem, Oregon, on September 3, 1880, and received her education in the Salem schools in this state. Her father, William H. Osborn, was a merchant in Salem. To our subject and his wife one child has been born, Glendon O., on August 22, 1903. Mr. Baxter has the following named brothers and sisters: George T., William E., Peter A., Mrs. P. L. Frazier, Mrs. Margaret Meadon, and C. Olive. Mr. Baxter is a member of the K. P. and Masonic orders, and in politics is a well informed and staunch Republican, while in religious persuasions, he belongs to the Christian church. Mr. Baxter may well take pride in the fact that he is an Oregonian, and his life has been spent to further improve and benefit the country where he was born and raised, and is held in high esteem at this time.

CARL NICALUS WAGNER, who was born in Camanche, Iowa, on July 1, 1857, is now living five miles northeast of Spray, Wheeler county, where he does stock raising. His father, Detrick Wagner, was born in Germany and became one of the pioneers of Iowa. He was a baker by trade and was killed in a tornado in Camanche, Iowa, in 1859. He had married Margurite Klinat, a native of Germany, who died in 1900. After our subject's father died, Mrs. Wagner married August Lille, who is now living at Mapleton, Iowa. Carl N. received his education in the public schools of Camanche, and on November 15, 1875, left his native state for Portland, Oregon. After a few days in that metropolis he came on to The Dalles. On January 1, 1876, he came on to the Corncob ranch, then owned by Gilman French, Wheeler & Company, and there engaged for wages until the following fall. Then he and his brother, G. R., bought a squatter's right to a quarter section of land in the Haystack country for which they paid one thousand one hundred dollars. Later our subject traded his half of the land for one hundred and sixty head of cattle and five horses and embarked in the stock business. He has followed this occupation since and now has two hundred acres of land and one hundred head of cattle, besides some horses. Mr. Wagner has one brother, George Robert, living at Monument, Oregon, and two sisters, Levianna A. and Katie, living with him, two half brothers, Willie and Albert Lille, and one half sister, Mrs. Emma Harleton.

Politically Mr. Wagner is a republican and served as assessor of Grant county in 1894 and 1895. During the Indian troubles of 1878 he and his brother with three others fortified a house and remained on their land the entire time. However, they had no occasion to use their fortification as the Indians did not trouble them. Mr. Wagner is a well known citizen, having done worthy labors during the pioneer days and is a man of good standing.

JOHN F. ASHER is one of the leading stockmen of Wheeler county, and his estates lie in the vicinity of Twickenham, where he makes his home. He is a man of stamina and has shown good ability in his labors here, being progressive and up-to-date. He was born in Laurel county, Kentucky, on September 15, 1865, the son of Martin and Sarah (Brown) Asher, natives of Kentucky, the father's birthplace being the same as this son's. Martin was a large stockman and drover, driving mules to the south and hogs and cattle to the river markets. His parents, the grandparents of our subject, came from England to North Carolina and later settled in Kentucky. Miss Brown whom he married, was the first cousin of the famous John Brown, who seized the arsenal at Harper's Ferry. Her family was prominent and influential. John F. was well educated in Kentucky and after completing his training, he gave himself to the work of the educator for three years, making a fine record. He was not satisfied without traveling, and as the west presented the greatest attractions to a young progressive man, he came hither, selecting Oregon as the objective point. He sought out the various portions of the state that offered inducements for location and finally decided to cast his lot with Wheeler county, selecting the estate where he now dwells, which consists of seventeen hundred acres of excellent land. It is one of the choicest stock ranches in this county, and is handled in fine shape. Mr. Asher gained title by purchase and has added much improvement since that time and is now handling a fine lot of stock. He handles cattle and sheep almost exclusively.

Mr. Asher has the following named brothers: William G., Fred, G. M. and Tilford, all farmers and stockmen in this county except Fred, who is a farmer in Kentucky. Mr. Asher has done exceedingly well since coming here and has reason to be proud of his achievements. He has many friends, has gained a prominent place in the county, has won a large amount property and is a first class citizen. Mr. Asher has never yet seen fit to barter away the quiet joys of bachelordom for the responsibilities of matrimonial life, although he is popular.

EDWARD W. TAYLOR resides some ten miles out from Mitchell on Taylor creek. He was born in Iowa, on May 16, 1848, the son of Tarlton and Elizabeth Taylor, natives of Iowa. They grew up and were married in that state and in 1852 crossed the plains to Linn county, Oregon; settling upon a donation claim there they became prominent and wealthy citizens. Our subject was but four years of age when this trip was made, consequently remembers but little of it. He received his education in Linn county and there grew to manhood. He there engaged in farming, continuing the same in that section until 1872. In that year he came to central Oregon, being one of the earliest pioneers in this region. He at once selected government land where he now resides and began raising stock and doing general farming. He has continued in this section uninterruptedly since and is now one of the substantial men of the county. Mr. Taylor owns three hundred and twenty acres of land and handles considerable stock. He has seen the country grow up around him and has done his share well in assisting in building up.

On December 3, 1869, Mr. Taylor married Miss Caroline Carroll, whose father, Samuel Carroll, was a pioneer of Oregon. Four children have been born to this union, Margaret F., Eliza A., Ella M., and Caroline A.

Mr. Taylor takes an active interest in politics and other matters and has shown himself an enterprising and good man.

Mr. Taylor has one brother, Isaac N., dwelling in Douglas county, Washington, and one sister, Mrs. Catherine F. Tripp, in Linn county, Oregon. Mrs. Taylor has the following named brothers and sisters: Mrs. Mary Helms, in Prineville, Oregon; Mrs. Nancy Wilson, deceased; Mrs. Sarah E. Marvin, deceased; John W., at Mitchell; Sylvester, Charles, and Samuel S., all in Wheeler county, Oregon; Joseph N., in Baker City, Oregon; and Commodore and Franklin, deceased.

GEORGE TROSPER has achieved the best of success in his financial enterprises in Wheeler county and he certainly has reason to take pride in what he has accomplished here, not only for himself but also in building up the country and stimulating others to worthy enterprise. He resides about a mile and one-half from Antone and is engaged in stock raising, principally. The birth of our subject occurred in Daviess county, Missouri, on August 9, 1862. His parents, William and Palmyra (Bunch) Trosper, were natives of Missouri, and the father died in 1874. It is pleasant to record that the mother is still living having made her home with this son, and during the years of our subject's struggles to gain his present holdings, she has been his counsellor and adviser and it is with pride that Mr. Trosper points to this fact. In 1888, having secured his education from the common schools of the country, our subject came on west, having learned well how to do farm work in the east. When he reached Oregon, he made up his mind that this was the spot for him and he at once went to work for wages. For a year, he continued thus employed and then moved into a little cabin and began handling sheep. Later, he took a homestead where he now resides and continued steadily in the sheep industry and now he has nearly four thousand head of sheep, has about one hundred and fifty cattle and four sections of land, all paid for and clear. When we recognize the fact that Mr. Trosper started here as late as 1888, without any capital whatever, except good strong hands and a willingness to work we can see the excellency of the success that he has won. His industry and tenacity have been apparent to all and during his labors, he has not forgotten to so conduct himself that he has won the esteem and admiration of all who know him. He has two sisters, Mrs. Margaret Glover, and Mrs. Caroline Weatherby, deceased.

In politics he is a Republican and takes an interest that becomes the good citizen in both public and educational affairs.

GRANT W. DAKAN is a thorough frontiersman, having lived all his life in the pioneer regions. He was born in Roseburg, Oregon, on September 5, 1864, and now lives four miles west from Burnt Ranch. His father, Henry Dakan, was born in Ohio, crossed the plains to California, in 1848, and two years later went to Jackson county, Oregon, and did mining. Some time later, he went to Douglas county and settled on a farm. Having done well in the west, mining, and amassing a good fortune, in 1884, he returned to Ohio where he is still living. Here in the west he had married Mary Shaw, a native of Illinois, who crossed the plains with her parents in 1850. She is still living in Ohio. Our subject received a good education in Douglas county, and in 1882, came to Eastern Oregon. Soon after landing here he engaged as a cow-boy and followed that occupation a considerable time. After that he drove stage for a long time and in 1900 he purchased what is known as the Grade ranch, one of the finest stock places in this part of the country. It consists of seven hundred and forty acres and is well stocked and improved. In addition to handling this, Mr. Dakan owns and operates the stage line from Antelope to Mitchell. It is a distance of fifty-five miles and requires eighteen horses for its operation. Mr. Dakan started in this country without any means whatever and now is one of the wealthy citizens of Wheeler county. He has gained his entire holding through his own efforts, has assisted materially in building up the country and has made for himself an excellent reputation among his fellows. As stated before, he has been on the frontier almost all of his life, and is regarded as a keen and forceful man.

HON. ROBERT E. MISENER is well known all through Wheeler county and is at present in business in Mitchell. He has been identified with the growth and development of this county and town for a number of years and has always manifested a liberal spirit and an enterprise in building up that have done much good.

Robert E. Misener was born in Bates county, Missouri, on June 7, 1857, the son of Norman S. and Carrie E. (Wood) Misener, natives of Indiana and Michigan respectively. When a young man the father came to Missouri and there followed wagon making until 1861, when he journeyed via the isthmus to California. He wrought for a time in the Golden State and then returned to Missouri by the same route he had gone out. In 1867 he came again to the coast, this time settling in San Joaquin county, and there worked at his trade for about twenty years. Then he engaged in merchandising and in that business continued until his death which occurred at Stockton in 1902. He was a wealthy man. The mother died in 1901. She came to California with her husband on his second trip, and our subject was a mere lad at that time. He received the major portion of his education in the Golden State and when he arrived to manhood's estate entered into partnership with his father. He operated the ranch and the father conducted the store. In 1885 Mr. Misener came to the vicinity of Mitchell and soon took up the saloon business. For five years he continued this and then sold out and returned to California and there went into the hotel business at Lockford. Six months later he sold that business and returned to Mitchell. He took up his old business again and in 1897 he was chosen to represent his district in the state legislature. The following year he sold his business and purchased a ranch and stock. This was situated on Mountain creek and in 1900 he rented the property and took a trip to Alaska. In 1903 Mr. Misener sold this property and again embarked in the retail liquor business.

In 1884 Mr. Misener married Miss Katie A. Barton, a native of Missouri, who crossed the plains in 1860 with her parents. Her father, James B. Barton, had come to the coast in 1849 and was well acquainted with pioneer days and ways. To Mr. and Mrs. Misener four children have been born, Delbert, R. Norman, Fred L. and Samuel R.

In his legislative career Mr. Misener served his constituents well and showed himself possessed of good ability in this line. He is a public spirited man and has always shown himself interested in every measure for the general welfare.

SAMUEL B. DAVIS. Wheeler county contains many men who have made good success in financial affairs since settling here. Among this number we are constrained to mention the gentleman whose name appears above, because he is a prominent citizen, because he has achieved success, and because he is one of the builders of this county. He resides about one mile east from Twickenham and is well known throughout the country.

Samuel B. Davis was born in Johnson county, Tennessee, on January 20, 1862. William Davis, his father, was born in Montgomery county, Virginia, and moved to Tennessee when a young man. At the breaking out of the Rebellion he enlisted with the Union army and perished fighting for his country. His father, William Davis, the grandfather of our subject, was a wealthy planter in Virginia and owned a great many slaves. He was a veteran of the war of 1812. Members of the Davis family came originally from England to the Colonies making settlement in Virginia. They were prominent and wealthy. Our subject's mother was Matilda (Howard) Davis, and she, too, was born in Johnson county, Tennessee. She was left a widow when young and knew the hardship of raising a family alone. Her father, Samuel Howard, was a veteran of the war of 1812. Although he owned slaves when the Civil War broke out he took sides with the north, and freed them all. Many of them, however, remained with him, such was their appreciation of his kind treatment. Samuel B. was educated in his native state and remained in the east until 1884. Then he journeyed westward, viewing the country in various sections until he came to Oregon. Being pleased with this state, he selected what is now Wheeler county as his abiding place, and began to work for wages. He saved his money, wrought industriously and faithfully and soon was in a position to buy a ranch. To this nest egg he has added betimes until he has now a magnificent estate of fifteen hundred acres that is one of the choice stock ranches of the county. He has supplied it with all the improvements needed, including an orchard and so forth, and he has besides a valuable estate, a very beautiful home. Mr. Davis gives his attention to stock raising entirely, only farming enough to raise forage for his stock. He has between two and three thousand head of sheep, a great many cattle, and horses enough to handle the business.

On December 18, 1899, Mr. Davis married Miss Iris Smithpeter, who was born in the same county as her husband. Her parents, David and Sallie (Young) Smithpeter, are natives of Johnson and Carter counties, Tennessee respectively. The father was a prominent physician and is now retired.

To Mr. and Mrs. Davis one child has been born, Robert W.

Mr. Davis is a charter member of the I. O. O. F. at Mitchell and is a leading and substantial man.

P. C. MARTIN is one of Wheeler county's industrious and substantial citizens and resides about three miles northwest from Spray where he does general farming. His birthplace was St. Joseph county, Indiana, and the date of that event, 1833. His parents, Samuel and Damaris (Rambo) Martin, were born in Kentucky in 1793 and in Indiana in 1796 respectively. The mother died in Iowa in 1853. The father came from his native state to Indiana when he was fourteen years of age and was one of the pioneers of the Hoosier State. He crossed the plains to California in 1854 and there died in 1867. Our subject received his education in the old log school house in Iowa and there grew up to young manhood. In 1854 he accompanied his father across the plains with ox teams to California and settled in Sonoma county, where he engaged in stock raising until 1869. In that year he moved to the Willamette valley and took up farming until 1874. Then he came to eastern Oregon, where he has been engaged in farming and stock raising ever since. He owns one hundred and sixty acres of good soil, has considerable stock and has prospered in his labors.

In 1862 Mr. Martin married Miss Phoebe Davis, who was born in Missouri, the daughter of Levi Davis, also a native of Missouri, who crossed the plains in 1852. The children born to this union are J. H., A. C., John V., Z. J., E. A., Amanda Olivia, Mary Elvi, Ella Viola and M. H.

Politically Mr. Martin is a republican and always evinces a good interest in this realm as well as in educational matters and is known as a man always allied on the side of improvement and development.

ROBERT W. JOHNSON has resided in the territory now embraced in Wheeler county a sufficient length of time to entitle him to a representation as one of the pioneers. As a sturdy frontiersman, capable and enterprising, he has made a good record. He is a public minded and progressive citizen, an upright man, and a fine neighbor. Mr. Johnson descends from a family that have been prominent for years in the east and were among the early settlers of the new world. Possessed of a high sense of integrity and honor, they bequeathed to him an unsullied name, which is a pride to hand to his posterity as untarnished as it was received.

Robert W. Johnson was born in Johnson county, Tennessee, on November 4, 1870. Albert F. Johnson was his father and he was born in the same county. He was sheriff of that county for six years and county clerk for twelve years. During the Civil War he carried mail from Taylorsville, now Mountain City, to Abingdon, Virginia. He is now a very wealthy and prominent man in that section. His ancestors came to Tennessee when it was a wilderness and their name was given to one of the counties. He married Susan E. Shown, who also was born in Johnson county, Tennessee, and is descended from a very prominent and wealthy family. In his native country our subject was educated and there remained until he was nineteen years of age. As budding manhood came into his life he desired to see some of the west and to hunt other fields of operation. Consequently he prepared for the journey and viewed various sections of the United States until finally he landed in Oregon. It was his purpose to start in life without capital and he did so. Consequently when he located in what is now Wheeler county he began working for wages and continued the same until he had saved sufficient money to purchase a band of stock. Later he bought a ranch and as the increased stock through his industry and care brought him wealth, he added more to his estate. He now possesses thirteen hundred and sixty acres of choice land about eight miles north from Mitchell. It is a good place, well improved and everything in connection with it demonstrates Mr. Johnson a man of enterprise, thrift and stability. His labors have brought him wealth and his integrity has given him an excellent standing among his fellows.

Fraternally he is affiliated with the I. O. O. F. and the K. P.

Although popular and surrounded by hosts of friends Mr. Johnson has never seen fit to barter the joys of the celibatarian for the responsibilities of matrimonial life. He is therefore numbered with the jolly bachelors of Wheeler county.

WILLIAM H. GATES is, without doubt, to be numbered among the earliest and most active pioneers of Oregon. He is now a stockman, residing some eight miles northwest of Spray. His birth occurred in Gallia county, Ohio, on December 27, 1836. N. H. Gates, his father, was born in Virginia and crossed the plains to California in 1850. Two years later he came to Oregon and was appointed by the governor as a colonel in the militia. He died on May 20, 1886. He had married Mary Koontz, who was born in Virginia and died in 1868. Our subject accompanied his parents to Iowa in 1841, journeying thence in 1852 across the plains by ox teams to the Pacific coast. The father was in California and our subject with his mother and sisters made the journey to Vancouver, Washington. They spent the winter in Portland then moved to the Cascades on the Washington side, where they remained one year. In 1854 they came on to The Dalles and three years later our subject took up the stock business. Aside from three years in which our subject was occupied as will be mentioned later he has continued uninterruptedly in the stock business since 1857. He remained in the vicinity of The Dalles until 1868 then moved to Trout creek, which was in Wasco and is now in Crook county. He remained nine years there and in 1877 came to his present location where he took a preemption. To this he has added by purchase since until he has now eleven hundred acres of good soil. He handles about three hundred head of cattle and some horses.

At The Dalles in 1864 Mr. Gates married Miss Mary Koontz, who was born in Wapello county, Iowa. Her father, John Koontz, was one of the pioneers of that state. To this union two children have been born, John and George

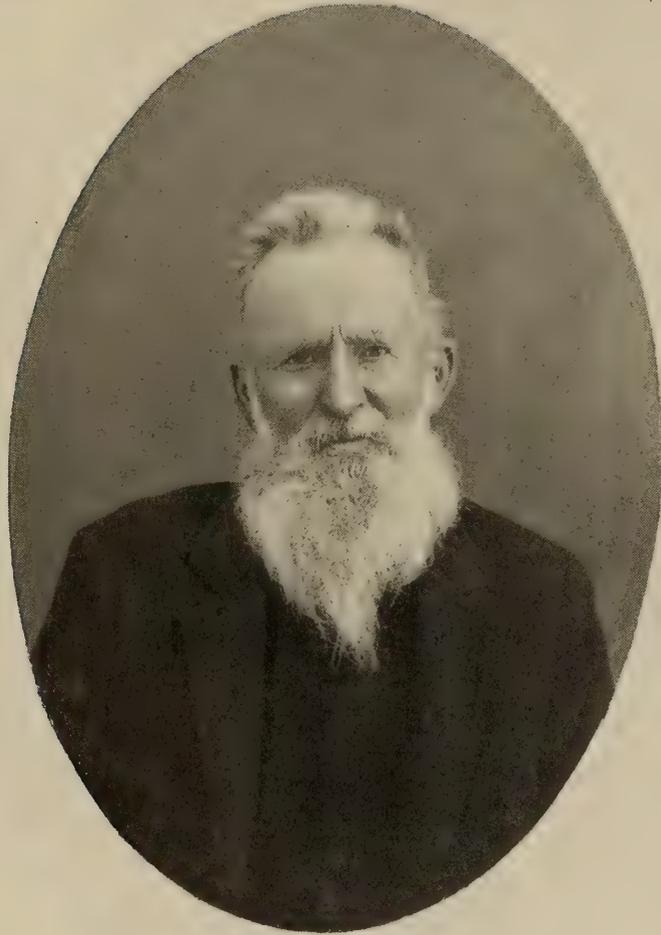

During the Indian wars in 1855-6 our subject participated in the same with the volunteers, doing also much scouting. On one morning he was sent out on a scouting expedition and just as he was unhobbling his horse fifty Indians appeared. He fired upon them and fled to the camp. He was reprimanded by the commanding officer for this firing and as punishment was appointed herder of the stock. While in company with two companions in this business the Indians appeared again and fired upon them, then a battle was launched, which continued for four days, the Indians finally being defeated. During the three years in which Mr. Gates was not occupied in stock raising he was engaged in mining and and packing to the mines of the northwest. He took the first pack train to the noted Orofino in 1861 and also the first train to the Salmon river mines. Then he went to British Columbia and stayed a year. Following that time he removed to Idaho and the next spring contracted for a quartz mill about to be put up in Idaho. Governor A. C. Gibbs told Mr. Gates in discussing this subject that it was the first quartz mill ever put out in Oregon or Idaho. From his succinct account of his career it will be noticed that Mr. Gates has been closely identified with the pioneer life of the northwest and with its development. He has done a lion's share in the good work and has also so conducted himself that he has won the admiration and commendation of his fellows. He stands well in the community and is a good substantial citizen.

HENRY H. WHEELER is better known, not only in Wheeler county but all through eastern Oregon, to the early pioneers as well as of the people of to-day than perhaps any other man of the section. It is a matter of great regret that space forbids a full account of his career, as in itself it would be a magnificent history of this section. Coming here at the beginning of the days of the gold excitement in the eastern part of what was then Oregon territory and remaining here constantly since, having been engaged during this time in some of the leading enterprises in vogue, all this has combined to make Mr. Wheeler prominent, well posted, influential and a leading character. The county of Wheeler is named in his honor. Unanimously the people favored it as he was known as no other man was and was most intimately connected with its development and the industries throughout the county. A review of his life cannot fail to be intensely interesting to the public in general.

Henry H. Wheeler was born in Erie county,

Pennsylvania, on September 7, 1826. He is now living a retired life in Mitchell, Oregon, having gained a goodly fortune to supply all things needful for the golden years of his life. His parents, James and Maggie Wheeler, were natives of Massachusetts and moved to Pennsylvania when young. There the father was engaged in farming and became a wealthy and prominent man. The Keystone State furnished the educational training of our subject and as soon as he had arrived at manhood's estate, he came west to Illinois, where he remained two years. After that he returned home, then again came west, this time to Union, Wisconsin, and remained two years. In 1857 he crossed the plains to Sacramento, California, and in the same year cast his lot at Yreka. After mining sometime he turned his attention to sawmilling and conducted the business for several years. In 1862, he came to The Dalles and went on to the Salmon river mines in Idaho. Afterward he returned to California, then came back to Oregon and put on a stage equipment from The Dalles to Canyon City, a distance of one hundred and eighty miles. Concerning this important item of starting the stage line from The Dalles to Canyon City, Mr. Wheeler says: "On the first of May, 1864, I started from The Dalles with a load of eleven passengers for Canyon City, driving the stage myself. I had eleven passengers on the return trip from Canyon City to The Dalles, and the price for each person was forty dollars. I made three trips each week, and got the first mail contract on that route in the spring of 1865. I conducted this line until 1868, then sold it." This was the first stage through the country and one can well imagine that its operation was continued with the most trying difficulties and hardships, while dangers from the savages beset him on every hand. But Mr. Wheeler was not one to put his hand to the plow and look back. He was a man of fearlessness, carefulness, and stamina and when he started staging from The Dalles to Canyon City, it became an assured institution. He personally drove it from 1864 to 1868, a period in which the Indians were constantly upon the warpath. A detailed account of all the various fights and skirmishes that he had with the savages would make a thrilling volume. On the 7th of September, 1866, he was jogging along with his four horses and concord accompanied by one passenger, the Wells Fargo manager. They had the United States mail, ten thousand dollars in greenbacks, diamond rings, three hundred dollars in coin, and other valuables. Suddenly fifteen or twenty Indians appeared and the first shot struck Mr. Wheeler in the face. Despite the shock from this, he was enabled to hold his own and he and the passenger succeeded in escaping with the leaders. These horses had neither of them been ridden and in the midst of the fight, they mounted them bareback and scurried away. The Indians cut all the top off the stage, ripping open the mail sack, scattering the contents and throwing aside the greenbacks, not knowing their value, cut up the harness and made havoc generally before they departed. Mr. Wheeler and H. C. Page, his companion, made their way to Meyer's ranch and then got back to The Dalles. This is one instance of many similar ones. In all, Mr. Wheeler lost eighty-nine horses besides much other property from the Indians. Time and again his life hung in the balance, but on each occasion providence ordered otherwise and he escaped. He came to be known as no other man through the country was known. Not acquainted with fear, upright and honorable, it seemed that the Indians had a reverence for him or otherwise he would certainly have been killed. There were scarcely any settlements from The Dalles to Canyon City and every opportunity was presented to the savages to have their own way. Finally, in 1868, Mr. Wheeler sold the outfit and engaged with the Holliday stage people. They were then operating a line from Missouri to the Pacific coast. For two years he was with them, then he came to The Dalles and with Wood Gillman, entered the stock business for French Brothers in what is now Wheeler county. They located on the John Day and for eight years operated the ranch. Then Mr. Wheeler bought property six miles northwest from where Mitchell now stands and continued in the operation of that estate until 1904, when he sold out and retired to Mitchell. He has lost several fortunes through the depredations of the savages but has been enabled to so conserve his interests that he is still provided with a fine competence for the remaining years of his life.

In 1873, Mr. Wheeler married Miss Dorcas Monroe and to them one child has been born, Clara Wheeler. Mr. Wheeler has four brothers, Miles, in Pennsylvania; George, deceased; Phineas, a veteran of the Civil war; and William, living in Ohio.

It is very pleasant for us to be able to chronicle the fact that in the very section of the country where Mr. Wheeler had innumerable fights with the Indians, where he endured everything that the frontiersman can endure, he is now enjoying life surrounded by comforts, many friends and by all that wealth can give him. He is an honored and respected citizen and fully deserves the generous bestowal of confidence that is accorded him.

ALBERT G. CARNSNER, who lives three miles north from Spray, in Wheeler county and does a general farming and stock raising, was born in Iowa on April 5, 1849. Jonas Carsner, his father, was born in Missouri, in 1827, and came in 1862 as a pioneer to Oregon. The mother of our subject was Sarah A. (Pardenson) Carsner. She was born in Pennsylvania in 1829 and is still living in Grant county. The family left Iowa when our subject was small and removed to Kansas, in which state he received his early education. As before stated, in 1862 they came across the plains to Oregon, being five months in making the journey. They settled in Lincoln county where two years were spent and then in 1864 they came to Canyon City, Oregon, and engaged in stock raising, continuing there until 1886. Then our subject removed to his present location and took a homestead in what is now Wheeler county. He has purchased land at different times since until he now has nine hundred and sixty acres, well improved and utilized as a stock farm. He handles about two hundred and fifty head of cattle besides some horses and is one of the well known and well to do stock men of the county. Mr. Carsner knows well the hardships, the labors and the self denials of the pioneer life, having come to Oregon when thirteen years of age, where he has been on the frontier ever since. His labors and wise management have brought him the good property that he now holds while his life has been such that he receives the commendation and esteem of his fellows.

In Wheeler county on August 4, 1903, Mr. Carsner married Carrie Anderson, who was born in Missouri and crossed the plains to California when two years of age. She has lived in this vicinity for twenty-five years. Her father, William Robinson, was a pioneer to California. Our subject has three brothers, Warren, John, deceased, and Walter, and two sisters, Sarah Combs and Minerva Reeves.

Mr. Carsner is a member of the K. P. and a good active Republican.

COE DURLAND BARNARD, who resides some three miles east from Fossil, where he devotes himself to stock raising, is a native Oregonian and a son worthy of this great state. His birth occurred in Douglas county, in 1873, and his parents are Timothy and Margaret (Harper) Barnard, natives of Illinois. The father was born in 1832 and crossed the plains twenty years later, being a pioneer in the state of Oregon. His death occurred in 1893 and the mother is still living in southern Oregon. Our subject received his early education from the public schools of Douglas county, then took a course in the Armstrong business college, graduating in 1893. Upon the death of his father, that year, he was appointed administrator of the estate, which is located where he now resides. He immediately engaged in the stock business and has continued successfully in the same ever since. He now has about eleven hundred and sixty acres of land, besides four hundred head of cattle and one hundred head of horses. He has been very successful in his labors and has also showed himself a man of integrity and industry.

On February 22, 1894, Mr. Barnard married Miss Nellie Rhea, who was born in Eugene, Oregon, in 1875. Her father was one of the pioneers of Oregon. The children born to this union are Alves and Gordon.

Mr. Barnard is a member of the W. W., K. P. and the Elks, while his wife is a prominent member of the Eastern Star and Women of Woodcraft.

Politically Mr. Barnard is a Republican and has always labored for the advancement of his party and its principles, being a man who takes an interest, not only in political matters, but in all public affairs and the development of the country.

ANCIL B. LAMB, the druggist in Fossil, is one of the earliest pioneers of the country now embraced in Wheeler county. He is at the head of a good business and is known as a representative citizen, well to do and progressive. His birth occurred in Wayne county, Indiana, on December 16, 1854, and his parents are Martin and Sarah (Starbuck) Lamb. The father was born in Wayne county, Indiana, on August 18, 1818, and died in 1899. The mother was also born in that county, on October 13, 1823, and died June 23, 1863. Our subject received his early education in the public schools of his native county, then matriculated in the college at Hillsdale, Michigan. After completing his course he taught school in his home county for a year, then went to Kansas, where he taught for two years. After that he read medicine with Dr. W. W. Woods of Springdale, Kansas. It was 1880 that he came to this country and entered the employ of J. H. Parsons on the John Day river. Following this he came to Fossil and taught school, then bought the stage line from Fossil to Heppner, continuing the same largely until 1882. Then he began work for George Thompson, a general merchant in this place, and continued in his employ until Mr. Thompson sold out. Then he again taught school in Fossil and in June, 1884, he engaged in the drug business in which he still continues. His is the only drug store in the town and he has given his attention to the building up of the business in all the intervening years. In addition to this property Mr. Lamb has twelve hundred acres of land adjoining the town on the south, which is utilized for a stock farm. He also owns about one hundred head of cattle. He has been prospered splendidly since coming here and is one of the well-to-do men of the county.

On January 29, 1883, Mr. Lamb married Anna Rose, who was born in California on December 25, 1863. Her father, Thomas Rose, was born in England on October, 1822. Two children are the fruit of this union, Abie, aged eighteen and Howard, twelve years old. Mr. Lamb is a charter member of the I. O. O. F. and the A. F. & A. M. of this place and also belongs to the K. P. Politically he is a strong republican, and for three terms has been county treasurer. His career has been fraught with wisdom, thrift and uprightness and he has well earned the esteem and confidence of the people, which is generously bestowed.

HARRY REED, who is an enterprising and up-to-date merchant of Twickenham, where he has won a good success in his labors, is one of the prominent men of Wheeler county and has so conducted himself here that he is the recipient of the confidence and respect of the people. He was born in England on June 17, 1867, the son of John and Mary A. (Ware) Reed, both natives of that country. The mother is deceased. The father is a prominent Methodist minister and is now holding a church in Winkleigh parish. He is a man of ability and is highly educated. In his native country Harry gained a good education and when eighteen, being led by a progressive and adventurous spirit, he sought for other fields than the congested centers of his birth place. He decided finally to come to America, and soon had made the trip, selecting Toledo, Ohio, as the place for location. For three years he wrought there and then he found the spirit of the west was again impelling him to newer fields. Oregon was enticing and after studying the resources of this great state, he decided to try it. He was some time in selecting a location, but Fossil appealed to him and here he came. Then he wrought for three years more, this time on a farm. After that he entered into partnership with Albin Buckingham and purchased the Fossil livery stable, a ranch on the John Day, the Fossil and Arlington stage line and the Fossil and Antelope stage line. They operated these until the contracts were expired, then Mr. Reed sold his interests and went to doing carpenter work. For two years of this period he was city marshall of Fossil. In 1902 Mr. Reed purchased a store at Twickenham and since that time he has continued doing business here. He is a man of good address, is keen to see the needs of the people and to supply the goods required, and the result is he has a fine patronage. He is a man of stability and has won the confidence of all.

In 1898 Mr. Reed married Mrs. Chambers Low, nee Stewart, a native of Scotland. Her parents were George and Mary Stewart, both natives of Scotia's rugged hills. Two children have been born to Mr. and Mrs. Reed, Harry and George. By her former marriage Mrs. Reed had one son, John Low, now with Mr. Reed.

JEROME H. PARSONS has passed a career well worthy the pen of the historian, and in it all he has displayed the same fortitude and bravery, coupled with wisdom, that characterized his ancestors when they assisted to open the new world for settlement and later fought its battles. Starting in life when very young, thrown on his own resources from the first, and having been on the frontier all his life, he has acquired that ruggedness and stability that characterize men of force and strong nerve. He bears many scars of battle with the Indians and on many a field he has shown his true grit and bravery. When young, he was not favored with an opportunity to attend school, and consequently reached manhood without being able to read or write. Seeing the mistake, Mr. Parsons applied himself and soon was well trained in these things. He is a close observer and is a well informed man.

Jerome H. Parsons was born in Randolph county, Virginia, on April 5, 1835, the son of George and Susan (Harper) Parsons, both natives of that county, also, and descended from prominent colonial families. The father brought his family to the territory of Iowa in pioneer days and located a farm near what is now the prosperous town of Newton. His father, James Newton, the grandfather of our subject, was a veteran of the War of 1812 and his people were from a strong English family. The mother's father, Adam Harper, was also a veteran of the War of 1812 and all his sons fought in the Civil War. In 1857, Jerome H. crossed the plains to the Sacramento valley, landing there with five cents in his pocket. He soon secured work as an apprentice to a blacksmith (and the five cent piece he still possesses) and for two years wrought as a horseshoer. Being kicked by a vicious brute, he lay thirteen months in the hospital and then he did a huckster business among the miners. In 1861, he decided to try the north and soon was in the Willamette valley. In 1869, he came east of the mountains and selected a location where he now resides, which is just west from Twickenham. The land was then unsurveyed. Mr. Parsons engaged in cattle raising and was favored with first class success and became one of the largest stockmen in this part of the state. He was one of the very first to locate here and his industry and progressiveness have done a large amount to develop the country. He is a respected citizen, a well-to-do man, and one of the builders of the county.

In 1870 Mr. Parsons married Miss Josephine Writsman, who was born in Andrew county, Missouri, on October 23, 1843. She crossed the plains with her parents, Frank and Lucinda (Officer) Writsman, in 1845. The father was born in North Carolina and became a prominent man in Oregon. The mother was born in Tennessee. Mr. and Mrs. Parsons have four children: Frankie, Stella, Guy H., and Cleve W. Mr. Parsons was in the Rogue river Indian war and participated in the Cow creek fight. He was in an Indian war of 1846, and besides that, he has had many fights in various places with the savages. Mr. Parsons has done well his work on the frontier and has so wrought that he has won the respect of the people, and is now passing the golden years of his life amid plenty and with the assurance of having spent a good life thus far. He and his wife are well known and have a great many friends.

CHARLES CARROLL, who resides about fifteen miles southwest from Mitchell, was born in Linn county, Oregon, on September 3, 1866. He has always resided in this state and has been on the frontier a good portion of his time. His father, Samuel Carroll, was born in Peoria, Illinois, crossed the plains with ox teams to Linn county in 1847 and there settled on a donation claim. Twenty-seven years later, or in 1874, he came to Wheeler county, Oregon, bought land and engaged in the stock business. He married Margaret Scott, also a native of Illinois, who crossed the plains with her parents in 1852. They are both dwelling now in this county. Our subject was eight years of age when the family crossed the mountains and since that time he has continued in central Oregon. He received what education the common schools offered and then engaged in farming and handling stock. In 1892 he took government land where he is now living and to the improvement of this, together with stock raising, he has devoted himself since. He is one of the well known citizens of this section and has displayed substantialty and industry during his career here.

In 1894 Mr. Carroll married Miss Emma Marvin, who was born in the Willamette valley, the daughter of Joseph and Clara (White) Marvin, pioneers of that country. Five children are the fruit of this marriage, Clara, Joseph, Bertha, Chester and Harry.

Mr. Carroll is a member of the M. W. A. and a good, substantial citizen.

GEORGE O. BUTLER, at present the clerk of Wheeler county, was appointed by Governor Geer, at the organization of Wheeler county and since has been kept in this position at the hands of his fellow citizens. He is a very efficient officer, a first class business man, and one of the real progressive citizens of the county. George O. Butler was born in Tennessee in 1852. His father, Hon. R. R. Butler, who was born in Virginia, in 1837, was one of the prominent men of Tennessee. He was a skillful and leading attorney, having a large practice. When twenty-one years of age, he was elected judge of Johnson county and then was a member of the legislature several times. At the beginning of the Civil War, he enlisted, receiving the position of lieutenant-colonel and served for the stars and stripes two years. Then, owing to poor health, he resigned his commission. Immediately after the war, he was appointed judge of his county and in 1866, was elected to the United States congress, where he served eight years. Shortly afterwards he was elected again, serving one term. At the times he was not serving in the United States congress, he was a member of the Tennessee legislature, having been in both branches of the house. At the time of his death, on August 16, 1902, he was a member of the state senate. Mr. Butler was widely known and respected as a man of ability, honor and integrity. He was very useful in the halls of legislature, and ever labored for those measures which benefit and build up. Fraternally, he was a member of the Masonic lodge, while in politics he was a Republican, and in religious persuasion, he was a Methodist. He had married Emmeline Donnelly, a native of Johnson county, Tennessee, the wedding occurring in 1833. Her people were well to do farmers and one brother, Alfred, was a captain in the federal army. Two of his brothers were physicians.

Our subject received his early education in the public schools of his native county, then studied in the Preston and Olan institute at Blacksburg, Virginia, and afterwards completed in the preparatory school at Sing Sing, New York. He engaged then in the iron manufacture business of Tennessee and also taught school some. In 1884, accompanied by his brother, John B., he came west to Grant county, locating in that portion that now forms Wheeler county. He immediately took up school teaching, while his brother herded sheep. They husbanded their wages carefully and began to purchase sheep and then took up stockraising for themselves. They have now over four thousand sheep and three thousand acres of land and are doing a very prosperous business.

In December, 1885, Mr. Butler married Miss Jessie Brown, who was born in Wasco county, Oregon, on March 12, 1868. Her father, Jonathan P. Brown, was born in Tennessee, in 1840. He was a pioneer to Oregon, crossing the plains in 1852, and died in 1890. Our subject's brothers and sisters are named as follows: John B., a stockman of this county; R. H., a business man of Johnson county, where he has constantly held some county office since he was twenty-one years of age, being now chairman of the county court; James G., a physician and surgeon in the home county; W. R., a physician at Butler, Tennessee; Samuel G., a farmer in Johnson county, Tennessee; Edward B., an attorney at law and revenue collector of the second district of Tennessee; Mrs. Virginia L. Church; and Mrs. Bessie Keys, whose husband, W. R. Keys, is post-office inspector at Cleveland, Tennessee. To Mr. and Mrs. Butler, three children have been born; Samuel J., aged seventeen; George Brown, aged seven; and Hollis, three years of age.

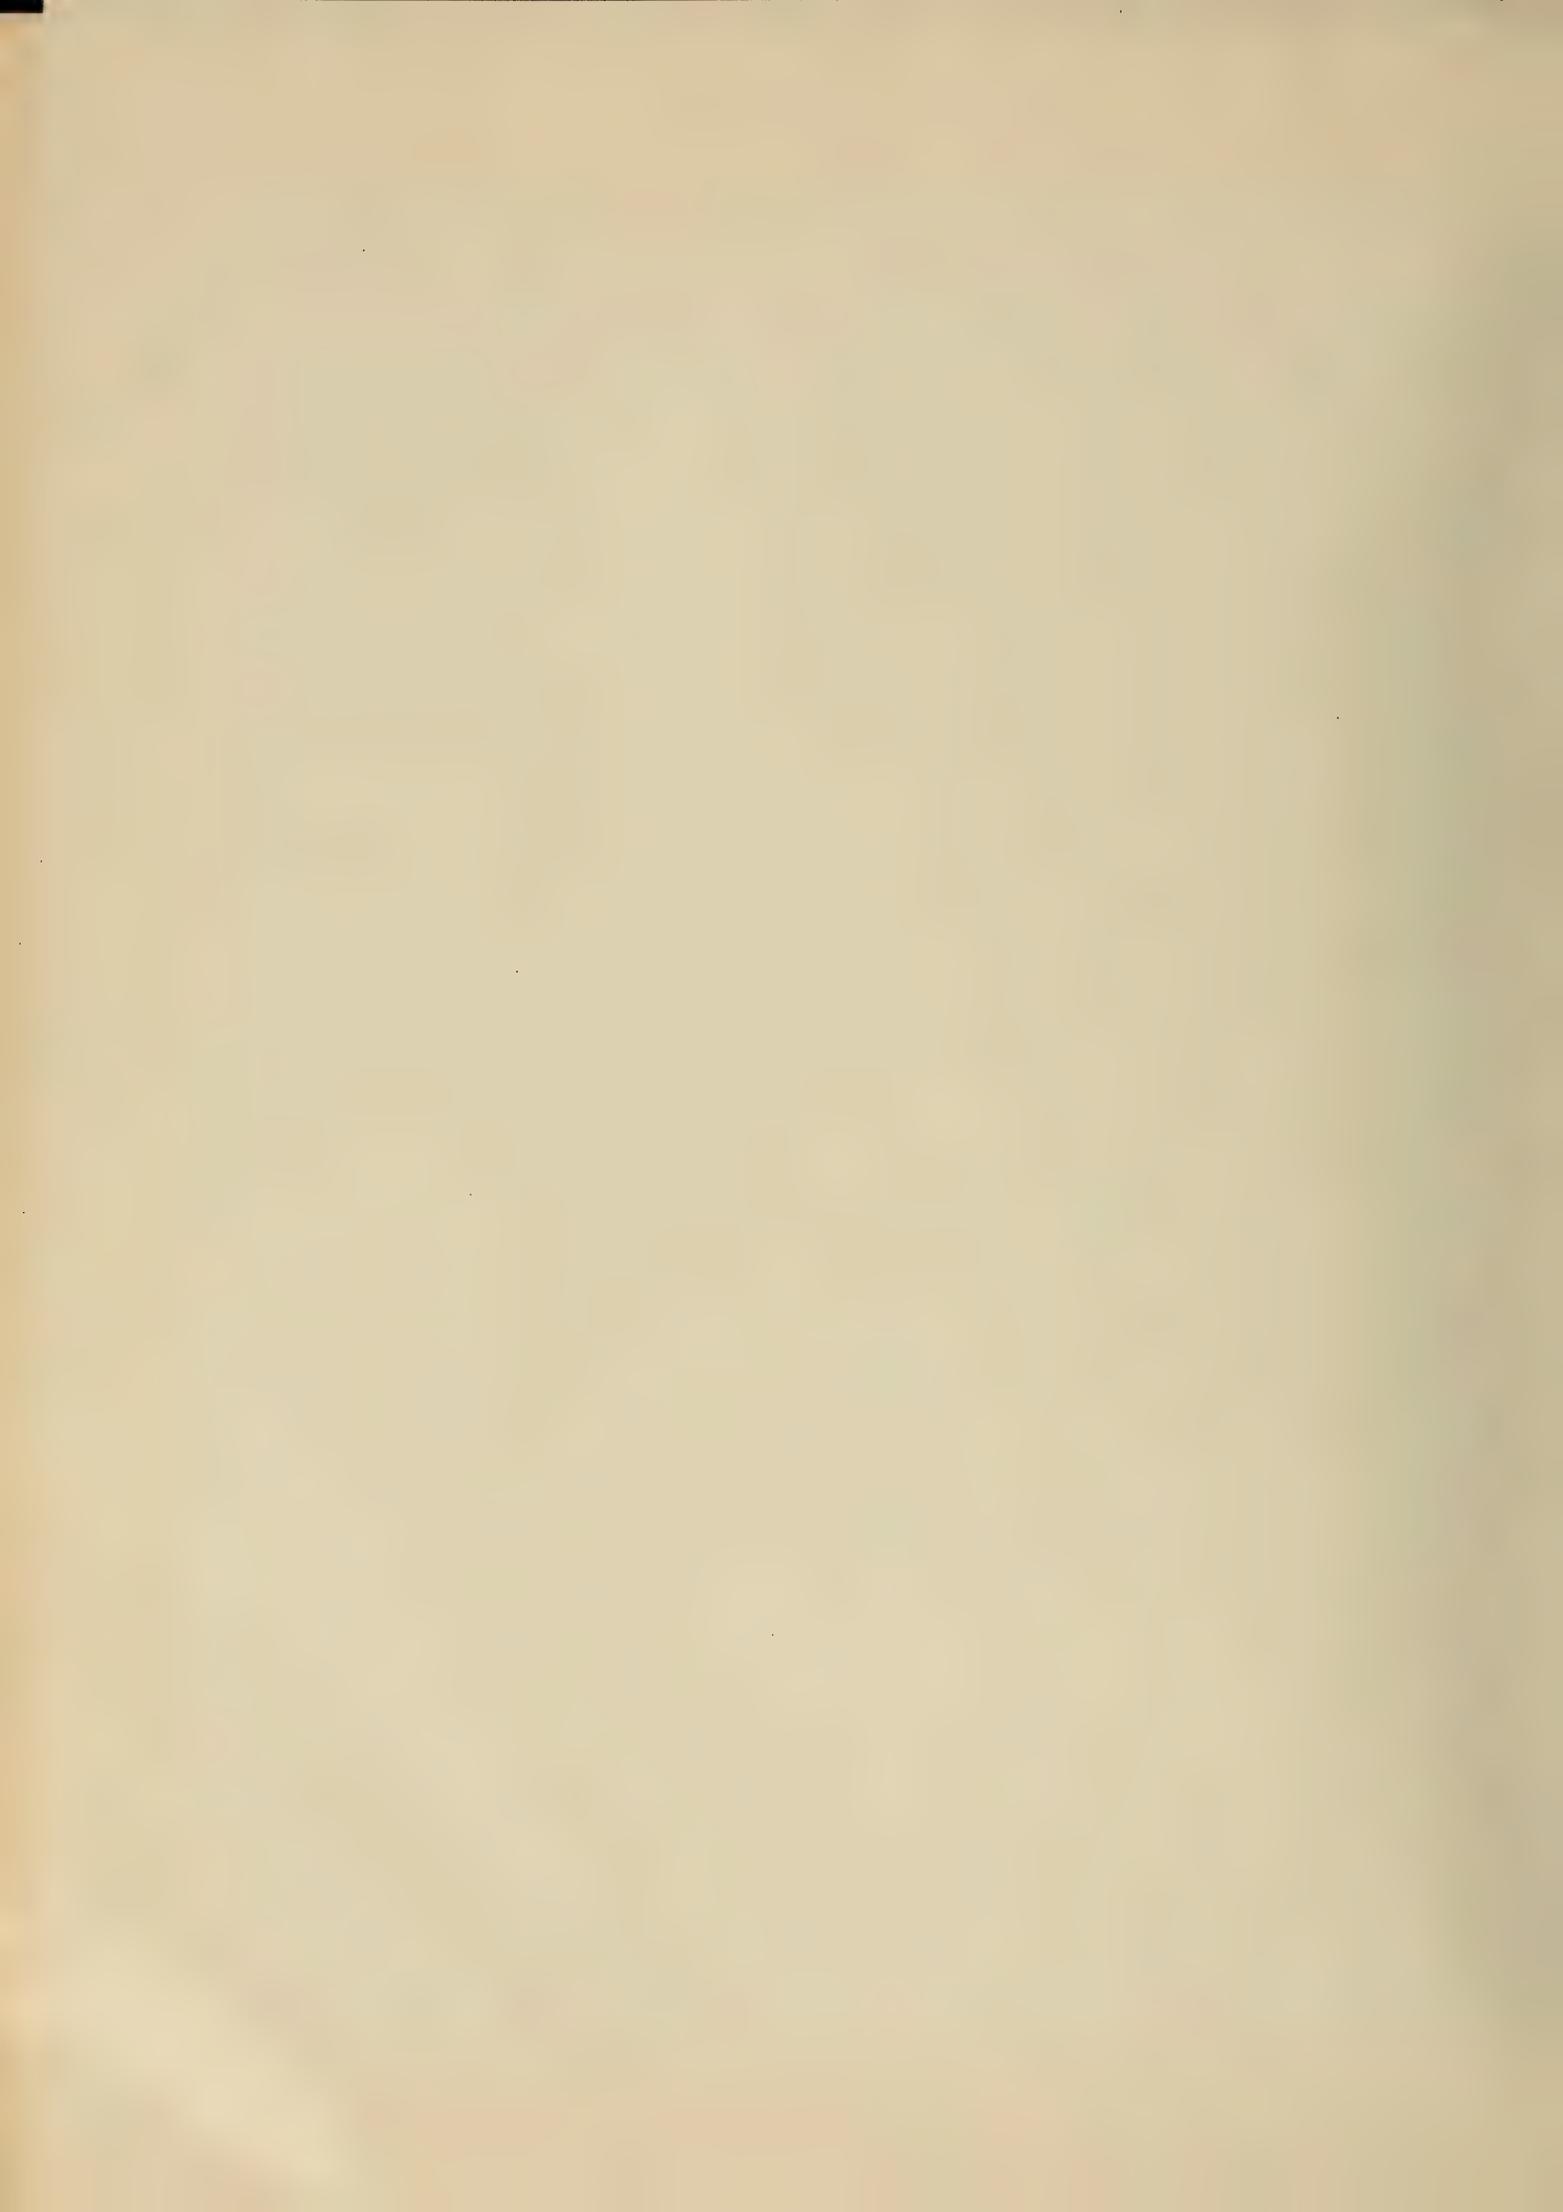

Fraternally, our subject is a member of the K. P., the A. O. U. W. and the I. O. O. F. Politically, he is a staunch Republican and during his career in Wheeler county has manifested ever those qualities of the upright man, the broad minded and progressive citizen, and the generous and faithful friend.

ISAAC BLANN was born in Missouri, in 1869, and now resides in the vicinity of Waterman, in Wheeler county, Oregon. He gives his attention to stock raising and has achieved a good success in his labors. John W. Blann, his father, was born in Missouri and there remained until his death. It was 1886 when our subject left Missouri, having secured his education previous to that time. He came direct to Wasco county and labored for wages for two years. In 1888 he came to his present location and commenced raising cattle, which he still continues. He has now two hundred head of cattle and about a thousand acres of land. He has acquired the entire holding through his own efforts and is considered one of the prosperous men of the country. Our subject's brothers are Robert, living in Baker county; John D., and Richard P., in Missouri; James P., in Canada and Mrs. Sarah E. Hall, in Missouri.

At Mandeville, Missouri, on September 6, 1883, Mr. Blann married Mary G. Wooden, who was born in Missouri. They have the following named children, Frederick, Sarah B., Elta J., William L., Gertrude, Lilly May, Leah, Isaac D., Robert R., and Bessie.

In fraternal relations, our subject affiliates with the A. O. U. W., the I. O. O. F., and the Degree of Honor. In politics, he is a Democrat.

Mr. Blann has displayed good energy and wisdom in the conduct of his business and the land and stock which he now owns are all the result of his own careful labors.

Mrs. Blann's parents were Isaac H. and Elizabeth J. (Sugg) Wooden, natives of Indiana and Tennessee, respectively. She has two sisters and three brothers named as follows: Mrs. Eliza Gilliland, Mrs. Martha E. Hayes, John F., James M., and William J.

J. W. DONNELLY, M. D., the present mayor of Fossil, is a well known business man of ability, who has a broad and extended experience in various lines in his professional career. He was born in Mountain City, Tennessee, on April 24, 1862, and was liberally educated in the Masonic Institute at that place. Following that, he entered the medical department in the University of Tennessee and after some study, commenced the practice of medicine, continuing that for four years. Then he returned to the university in Tennessee and received his degree in March, 1889. After that, Dr. Donnelly practiced in Tennessee until 1899, when he came to Mitchell, Oregon, remaining there about four years. On September 1, 1902, he transferred his residence to Fossil, where he has continued since. He stands now at the head of a good practice and is achieving the success that his ability and skill deserve. During the Spanish war he was assistant surgeon with the rank of lieutenant and assistant surgeon with the rank of lieutenant and served at Fort Mott, New Jersey, and Tampa, Florida. He was also president of the United States pension board situated at Mountain City, Tennessee, for three years. Our subject's father, J. D. Donnelly, M. D., was born in Mountain City, on December 23, 1823 and at the time of his death was the oldest physician of that country. He practiced there continuously for fifty-five years until his death in 1903. He married Frances Orr, who was born in Washington county, Virginia, and died in 1901. The older Dr. Donnelly was a very prominent man in Tennessee and held many responsible offices and was highly esteemed by all.

In 1890, Dr. Donnelly married Mary E. Kiser, who was born in Mountain City, Tennessee, on August 25, 1870. P. M. Kiser, her father, was born in North Carolina and was a furniture merchant in Mountain City. He was a prominent citizen of that place and held the position of magistrate for fourteen years and was provost marshal of the county during the war. He was very widely known and highly esteemed. His death occurred in 1901. Mrs. Donnelly's mother, Emily J. (Moore) Kiser, was born in Mountain City and died in 1894. Our subject has the following named brothers and sisters; Dr. Thomas R., a dentist; A. R., a merchant, and W. W., a farmer at Mountain City, Tennessee; Mrs. Sarah E. Wills, and Mrs. Ida M. Mitchell, both living at Mountain City; Mrs. Ada Hendrickson, whose husband, a commercial traveler, resides at Roan Mountain, Tennessee; and Mrs. Corda Shell, who also resides at Roan Mountain. To Doctor and Mrs. Donnelly, two children have been born, James Edgar, on October 25, 1890, and Nelly K., on March 30, 1897. Dr. Donnelly is a member of the K. P., the W. O. W., the I. O. O. F. and the A. F. & A. M. He has held responsible positions in all of these orders and is now noble grand of the I. O. O. F. Politically, he is a Republican and has always taken a keen interest in the campaigns. He has been several times delegate to the congressional conventions and in 1900, he was elected mayor of Mitchell. He was reelected the next year and has also served as school director and in March, 1904, he was chosen the mayor of Fossil, which position he is filling with credit to himself at the present time.

GEORGE J. METTEER. For more than thirty years the subject of this sketch has dwelt and labored in the territory now embraced in Wheeler county. This entitled him to be classed among the very earliest pioneers as well as among the representative men at the present time. His home place, ten miles south from Fossil, is one of the best ranches in the county. He has it well fenced and improved and enjoys a pleasant and beautiful home. Mr. Metteer gives his attention to stock raising, doing also some general farming, and in this industry he has labored during all the years in which he has resided here. He has shown excellent skill and consequently has been prospered. Like others during the hard winters, he has suffered losses but altogether he has made a good success. He has shown himself possessed of that sturdy quality which makes the good pioneer and the labors and hardships incident to this life have been borne with a fortitude commendable.

George J. Metteer was born in Wayne county, Pennsylvania, on October 31, 1837. His parents were George and Phoebe (Whittaker) Metteer, natives of New York. The father was raised on the border of New York and Pennsylvania and dwelt a part of the time in one state and a part of the time in the other. His father, Jonathan Metteer, the grandfather of our subject, was a native of Scotland and a veteran of the Revolutionary War. Both of our subject's parents crossed the plains with the Oatman family, who were massacred by the Indians on Gila river, in Arizona. The Metteer's escaped this dreadful calamity by stopping with a Mexican family. Then in 1850, they continued their journey to Tucson, Arizona, and the next year came to California. During his residence in California George J. followed mining and also prosecuted the same calling in Idaho. In the latter place he located the Healy creek mine, having also been the discoverer of the same, which proved to be a very valuable property, netting over six thousand dollars in three months. In 1858, they journeyed on north to Marion county, Oregon, and there the parents remained until their death. George J. was educated in the various places where the family resided during his younger days and after completing his studies he began farming in Marion county. This continued until 1873 when he came to the territory now embraced in Wheeler county. After selecting a good place, he engaged in the stock business and has followed it continuously since. He has given his attention, however, to various other industries, having erected the first sawmill in this part of the county. He has also owned a ferry on the John Day river.

In those early days, Mr. Metteer was obliged to go to The Dalles for mail and supplies and the hardships and labors incident to live then, required an iron constitution and firm will to enable one to continue. He has seen the country grow up around him, settlers coming in, the county organized and all the improvements of today completed and established. His labors have done a good part and his life has been such as to commend him to the esteem and confidence of his fellows.

In 1862, Mr. Metteer married Miss Mary Smith, who was born in Iowa, in 1844. To them the following named children have been born, Mrs. Alice Steiner, Mrs. Jerusha Griffiths, William T., Mrs. Phania Wilks, George W., Mrs. Mary McCrea, and Fred.

In 1872, Mr. Metteer joined the Masonic lodge and has since continued in affiliation with that order.

EDWARD F. HORN is a representative stockman of Wheeler county and resides about two miles west from Twickenham. He was born in Marion county, Oregon, on December 23, 1855, and has spent most of his days in the Webfoot State. His father, James M. Horn, was born in Orange county, North Carolina, and was a veteran of the Mexican war. In 1849, he came from Mexico to California and there engaged as a mechanic for a year. In 1850, he journeyed to Benton county, Oregon, where he married Miss Mary J. Writsman, who was born in Missouri and crossed the plains with her parents in 1847. From Benton county, the parents moved to Marion county and bought land where they engaged in farming until 1864. In that year they went to California and in 1881, they journeyed to our subject's present location, where they engaged in the stock business. They now reside in Malheur county, Oregon. Our subject was educated in California and the other places where the family lived and as soon as he had come to the proper age, he began to work for wages. In 1880, after having traveled about considerable, he came to what is now Wheeler county and spent one year in looking over the country. Then he settled on the ranch that he now occupies and which he has increased to four hundred and twenty acres. It is a choice piece of land, one of the best, and has been well handled and improved by its owner. Mr. Horn raises stock and has been very successful in his labors for the past twenty-five years.

On September 1, 1900, Mr. Horn married Miss Almira Moore, who was born in Polk county, Oregon. Her father, William S. Moore, was born in Missouri, crossed the plains when a boy in 1852 and was raised in Polk county, Oregon, where he has been farming since. His father died while they were crossing the plains. Mrs. Horn's mother, Sarah (Wren) Moore, was born in Illinois and crossed the plains with her parents in pioneer days.

Mr. Horn is a member of the I. O. O. F. and the A. F. & A. M. He is popular in fraternal circles and is a man of ability and excellent standing.

J. H. PUTNAM, a prominent merchant and wealthy stockman of Fossil, was born in Henry county, Missouri in 1855. His father, Newton Putnam, was born in Nashville, Tennessee, and was a veteran of the Civil War, having served three years in the union army. He was in Mexico during the struggle with that country and in 1872 crossed the plains with ox teams to Oregon. His death occurred twenty years later. He was a prominent man and a sturdy pioneer. He married Nancy Stockton, a native of Missouri, who is still living. Her father, Honorable D. D. Stockton, was captain of a company during the Civil War and was also a captain in a company during the Rebellion. He was wounded while in the service and died from the effects of the same in 1872. For a number of terms he served in the Missouri legislature and was a man of prominence and ability. Our subject rode a cayuse from Missouri to the Willamette valley in 1872 and there remained three years. Then he came to Sarvis prairie where he engaged in farming with Gillman French & Company and operated for these people for thirteen years. It was 1889 when Mr. Putnam came to Fossil and engaged in the contracting business, being in partnership with A. B. Lamb. In 1894 this partnership was dissolved and Mr. Putnam took up the general merchandising business for himself. He continued handling stock and owns about fifteen hundred acres of land in the Mayville country and two hundred and fifty head of cattle. This large estate and holding he manages from Fossil, in addition to conducting his mercantile business. He carries a stock of from seven to ten thousand dollars worth of goods of all kinds demanded by the trade here and he is known as a progressive and up to date merchant.

On October 12, 1891, Mr. Putnam married Ann L. Meek, who was born in Mound City, Missouri, in May, 1869. Her father, Eli Meek, emigrated to western Oregon in 1894 and died five years later. Mr. Putnam has the following named brothers and sisters; William, in north-west Montana; J. B., state librarian at Salem, having held the position for twenty-two years; W. W., a rancher in the Mayville country; Marion, a farmer near Salem; Otis, deceased; and Rosa D., who died in 1888. To Mr. and Mrs. Putnam, three children have been born; Wyatt, on August 15, 1892; Evangeline, on April 4, 1894; and Theodore, in August, 1899.

Mr. Putnam belongs to the Masonic fraternity, the M. W. A. and the Order of Eastern Star. Politically he is a strong Republican and always takes a keen interest in the campaigns.

PERRY LEWIS KEETON, who enjoys the distinction of being the only sheriff that Wheeler county ever had, is well known throughout the county and the adjoining country and is an upright, fearless and capable man, who has walked in the path of integrity, and is governed by principles of honor. He was born in Texas, in 1853, the son of Moses and Mary Elizabeth (Adams) Keeton, natives of Missouri and Virginia, respectively. In 1854, the family started west across the plains with teams and when they arrived at the Humboldt river, experienced the terrible bereavement of Mr. Keeton's death. The mother succeeded, however, in bringing the family the balance of the way with the train and located in Shasta, California, where she remained until the spring of 1855. Then they moved to Yreka, in the same state. They remained at Yreka until 1864, when they moved to Grant county, Oregon. Our subject received his education in the public schools and the Agricultural college at Corvallis in 1869 and 1870. Following that, the family moved to the vicinity of Mitchell, where our subject engaged in stock raising. The mother has since died. Mr. Keeton continued in the business of stock raising with success until 1898, when he was appointed by Governor Geer as the sheriff of Wheeler county at the creation of this political division. He has held the office continuously since, being the choice of the people at the expiration of each term of service. This alone establishes the fact that Mr. Keeton is a man worthy to be trusted and he is well known throughout the county. It also speaks very highly of him as, although the county is Republican in politics, he is, and always has been a Democrat.

On April 20, 1884, Mr. Keeton married Miss Mattie Gage, a native of Douglas county, Oregon. Her father, Edward Gage, is one of the pioneers of Oregon, was born in Missouri, crossed the plains in early days and was a veteran of the Indian wars of this part of the country. Mr. Keeton has the following named brothers and sisters: Thomas, who died in 1892; and Mrs. Annie Cavanaugh, still living at Edgewood, California. Three children have been born to our subject, Elizabeth Lucile, George T., and Jessie Pearl.

Mr. Keeton is a member of the A. O. U. W. and the I. O. O. F. In his public life as well as in private business, he has so conducted himself as to win the esteem of all and has justly earned the reputation for integrity and thoroughness which he enjoys.

W. W. HOOVER is well known as one of the leading business men of Wheeler county. For thirty-five years, he has been in this section and during this long residence, has ever wrought as a true pioneer and one deeply interested in the improvement and development of the country. At the present time, Mr. Hoover, in company with L. C. Kelsay, is operating an extensive merchandise establishment in Fossil. They carry a large stock of all kinds of goods that are used in this section of the country, including dry goods, groceries, crockery, gents' furnishings, boots, shoes, clothing, hardware, farm machinery and so forth.

W. W. Hoover, was born in Washington county, Oregon, on February 5, 1869. His father, Thomas B. Hoover, was born in Missouri and also was the pioneer merchant of Fossil. He married Mary J. Chambers, who was born in Washington county, Oregon, and is now living in Wheeler county, Oregon. She was the first white woman in this section of the country and knows well the pioneer's life, together with its hardships and trials. As early as 1870, the family moved from Washington county to Wheeler county and since that time, our subject has made this his home. During the winter seasons in his early life, he would go to The Dalles and attend school then return to his home and work in his father's store and on the farm. Upon the death of his father, our subject was appointed one of the executors of his will and succeeded to the management of the merchandise business, the firm style being then T. B. Hoover & Son. He handled the business for two years longer, then took in a partner, L. J. Gates, the firm being known as Hoover & Gates. This partnership was dissolved in 1900, by Mr. Gates selling to L. C. Kelsay, who is now operating with Mr. Hoover in the business. They are both well known men, who have built an excellent reputation in this country.

On March 10, 1895, occurred the marriage of Mr. Hoover and Daisy Kelsay. Mrs. Hoover was born in Lane county, Oregon, the daughter of Burton Kelsay, a pioneer of Oregon and now residing in Fossil. Mr. Hoover has one brother, Thomas B., residing in Wheeler county. He also has the following named sisters, Mrs. Annie J. Steiwer, of Fossil; Harriet Lyons, of Valdez, Alaska; Mary M. Reinacher of Condon; Lizzie Bowerman of Condon; and Maude, in Fossil. To our subject and his wife, four children have been born, Dorothy, Glenn, Mary Jane, and Thomas Burton.

Mr. Hoover is a member of the I. O. O. F., the W. O. W. and the K. P. He is a Democrat politically and has held the office of county judge since 1900, being reelected last June for four years more.

S. J. THOMPSON, a farmer and stockman of Wheeler county and one who has labored assiduously here for many years, is to be classed among the substantial and leading citizens and is entitled to representation in any volume that purports to speak of the progressive men of Oregon. He was born in Castle county, North Carolina, on January 1, 1871. His parents, Josiah and Minerva (Winstaird) Thompson, were also born in North Carolina, where the father followed merchandising. He was a veteran of the Civil War and in 1877, crossed the plains to the Willamette valley by team. He settled on a farm in Clackamas county whence in 1881, he removed to what is now Wheeler county and engaged in the stock business. He continued here until his death in 1900. Mrs. Thompson is now living with the subject of this article. Our subject was but a young lad when he first came to this portion of Oregon and a large part of his education was gained at Fossil. He has practically been reared here and consequently knows the country thoroughly. Being impressed with its resources, he selected a homestead where he now resides, some four miles south from Fossil, and began the work of improvement. He added various other pieces of land from time to time until he now owns nine hundred acres; a large portion of this is cropped and general farming together with stock raising; occupies Mr. Thompson's time and attention. He has made a good showing for his labors here, inasmuch as when he started he had no capital whatever and is now one of the prosperous men of the county. He has a faculty of managing his business in such a way that he has a substantial income and then his carefulness in expending his funds for improvements and investment have all combined to make him prosperous and well-to-do.

In 1894 Mr. Thompson married Miss Josie Holman, the daughter of Andy Holman, who crossed the plains from Illinois to Oregon in early days. Mrs. Thompson was born in Linn county, Oregon, and moved to the vicinity of Fossil with her parents some twelve years since. One child has been the fruit of this union, Sallie.

Mr. Thompson is a member of the I. O. O. F. and stands well both in fraternal relations and in the community. He takes a lively interest in political and educational matters, is a good neighbor, an upright man, and a first-class citizen.

LEONARD C. HOFFMAN, is a man of enterprise and good business ability as is testified to by the property he owns, which has been gained by his own efforts entirely. He is at the head of a prosperous butcher business in Fossil, also owns a good ranch in the immediate vicinity and is well known throughout the surrounding country as a man of energy and ability.

Leonard C. Hoffman was born in Buffalo, New York, on March 20, 1860. His parents, Leonard and Margaret (Deck) Hoffman, were natives of Germany where they were married. In 1852, they came to New York and the father followed tailoring in Buffalo, where he became a wealthy and prominent man. Our subject was educated in the city schools of Buffalo and there learned the butcher business. For three years he wrought at that trade in his native town and finally in 1883, determined to try his fortune in the west. Being of an adventurous disposition he explored various portions of California and other sections. Finally in 1884, he came north and being pleased with the country in the vicinity of Fossil, took government land on Butte creek. He at once made the necessary improvements to make it his home and then opened a buther business in the town of Fossil. He is now in partnership with T. S. Young in this enterprise and they have a very fine business. Mr. Hoffman has two hundred and ten acres of land adjoining the city of Fossil which is a very valuable estate. He oversees this and his other property in addition to attending to the butcher business and so wisely has he managed this enterprise that he has become well-to-do. When he started here an invoice of his possessions showed that he had very little capital so that everything he possesses has been the result of his own personal efforts.

In 1885 Mr. Hoffman married Miss Lillie Rose, who was born in California. Her father, Thomas Rose, was a native of England and came to the United States and in 1850, crossed the plains to California, where he ultimately became wealthy. To Mr. and Mrs. Hoffman four children have been born, George L., Margaret R., Gertha, and Katie, deceased.

Mr. Hoffman is a member of the A. F. & A. M., is popular among the business men of Fossil and is an enterprising and public spirited man.

CHARLES L. PRINDLE, a representative citizen of Wheeler county and one of the earliest settlers in the territory now embraced in this division, resides about three miles south from Fossil. In the early days, he corralled sheep where now stands the prosperous town of Fossil. In 1878, being then a young man of eighteen years, he made his way into eastern Oregon and after due research, he decided that this part of the country was most suitable for his business and he settled down. He immediately took up sheep raising and made a success of it for eleven years. Then he turned his attention to raising blooded horses, and cattle, and now has some of the finest specimens in the country. He makes a specialty of breeding road horses and his animals are well known throughout the country. Mr. Prindle is very successful in stock breeding and has done very much to stimulate this industry in Wheeler county. In addition to his stock interests, he does some farming and altogether is a very prosperous and thrifty man.

Charles L. Prindle was born in DeKalb county, Illinois, on December 30, 1860, the son of M. G. and Eliza Prindle, natives of Pennsylvania. In early days they pioneered to Illinois and shortly thereafter, traveled on to the prairies of Iowa, the year of their landing there being 1869. They were good substantial people and did a noble work of opening up and developing the country. Our subject received his primary education in Illinois and Iowa and completed the same in Fossil, Oregon. Mr. Prindle has eight brothers and sisters, Emma, Addie, deceased, Steven A., Frank B., Martha E., George A., Loyd B., and Lucinda, deceased.

In 1884 Mr. Prindle married Miss Annie T. Hamilton and they have six children, Milo W., Orland, Lora M., Lester, Mary M., and Eliza E. Mrs. Prindle is the daughter of David and Mary C. Hamilton, now residents of Wheeler county, and pioneers across the plains to Douglas county in the early fifties.

In fraternal relations Mr. Prindle is affiliated with the A. F. & A. M. and the I. O. O. F. There were very few settlers in this part of Oregon when Mr. Prindle came here and one had to travel many miles to get mail and supplies. In the Bannock outbreak of 1878 Mr. Prindle was with his sheep and close to the hostile Indians, coming on a camp-fire just as they had left it. He not only has seen the country develop from a wild prairie to one of the fertile portions of the northwest but has very materially assisted in this good work and he is to be classed as one of the leading men of Wheeler county. Mr. Prindle constructed the first telephone line in Wheeler county, the same being from his house to Fossil.

In political matters, he evinces an interest that is becoming to the patriotic citizen, while also in all things pertaining to the development of the county, he has been active. His standing among the people is of the best and he and his wife are valued members of society.

PART VI

HISTORY OF CROOK COUNTY

PASSING EVENTS—1843 TO 1889.

Aside from Nomadic trappers it is quite probable that the first white men to cross the territory now comprising Crook county were General John C. Fremont and Kit Carson. They explored a section of this country in 1843. The route of this party was as follows: Entering the county at the northwest corner, between the Warm Springs and Shilike rivers, they proceeded southward on the west side of the Des Chutes river, crossing the Matoles about three to six miles up from its mouth. Thence they continued in a southerly direction, passing about three miles east of the present town of Sisters, crossed Tornello creek and came to the Des Chuts river near the present site of Bend. They still continued on the west side of this river in their journey on south until reaching a point about opposite the present postoffice of Lava, when they crossed the Des Chutes and entered the Big Meadows. Continuing their journey southward they passed where Rosland now stands and entered the territory now embraced in Klamath county. About four miles above the town of Bend can be found to this day evidences of the visit of the Fremont party, where there are logs they used in building a causeway.

The Warm Spring Indian Reservation was made by a treaty between the United States and the Indians in 1855. In this treaty the Indians gave up all claim to the land between the Cascades and Blue mountains of Oregon. They also gave up their claims on the Columbia river. Another treaty was entered into between them in 1856 in which they gave up the fisheries on the Columbia river. This reservation was established as a home for the different tribes of Indians. By this the government could protect them from the encroachment of the whites, while it secured an undisputed right to the rest of the land claimed by the Indians. This reservation covers 464,000 acres which lies along the Des Chutes river. Much of this is farming land and already under cultivation while the balance is suitable for stock raising. There are parts of four different tribes living there, known as the Warm Springs, Wascos, Piutes and Teninos.

The principal occupations of these Indians are farming and stock raising while some go into western and southern Oregon for the purpose of picking fruit and hops. When the work is over they often go into the Cascade mountains to fish and hunt for their winter supply of meat. When there is any work to be done, the men direct it, while the women do most of the hard work. All that the men are required to do is to keep the family supplied with meat.

The population of the reservation is 855, including seven police officers and 116 school children. While the school of this place is the same as any public school, the children have different games from the white children. The boys enjoy the outdoor sports of fishing and hunting. They use bows and arrows and some are as good shots as the older ones. The religion of the Indians is United Presbyterian, although one may follow the old Indian religion known as the Shaker. Some of the people will not give up their old Indian customs. The most important buildings of the reservation are the one school building and three churches. There are many fine residences. Out in front of their houses they have their old wigwams in which they lived. These Indians are very patriotic. When the Fourth of July comes along they celebrate for a week at a time instead of one day at a time as do the white people.

Each year the government sets aside a sum of money with which they purchase rations for the Indians on the reservation. If the Indian fails to be there when the agent divides the goods he does not get his share. Many of the Indians do not, however, depend on the government for their clothing, but have taken up land and have become citizens with a right to vote. Some of the older men have done good service in the Indian wars when white soldiers have been unable to fight hostile tribes. Therefore it is no more than right that the government should support these Indians.

In the early sixties while the Civil war was in progress Major Stein of the United States army, built a road from The Dalles to Fort Harney, which crossed the present Crook county, in a northwesterly and southeasterly direction. This road passed east of Pilot to Butte and left the present Crook county and entered what is now Harney county at Buck's creek. The supply trains from The Dalles to Fort Harney passed over the road in the early days.

The first settler in Crook county was Marion Scott, who came here in 1863 and located on Trout creek. Scott's party crossed the Cascade mountains that year, carrying with them horses, wagons and a band of cattle. They stopped at Hay creek, and for a time lived in a cave, grazing their cattle on the surrounding hills. In 1867 Howard Maupin of Lane county, settled on Trout creek. He had fought in the Mexican war under Zachary Taylor, and became subsequently a brave pioneer and faced many perils from the Piute Indians. He was not allowed to enjoy his home until he had slain Paulina, chief of the tribes.

In 1868 Henry Coleman, also of Lane county, engaged in the cattle business in which he acquired quite a fortune and returned to his home. In 1869 and 1870 John Luckey, John Toms, Anthony Webdell and E. G. Conant came later and settled in Ochoco valley where is now the town of Prineville. In 1871 Monroe Hodges removed with his family from Benton county and laid off the present town of Prineville. He built the first hotel and engaged in the business five years.

A historical sketch of the territory now forming Crook county from its earliest settlement up to 1884 was published in the Crook County Annual of 1901 as follows:

The first white men who ever came to that part of Oregon now known as Crook county were Felix and Marion Scott, who crossed the Cascade mountains over the McKenzie Pass in 1863, bringing with them their teams, wagons and a drove of cattle. They located on Hay creek and it is said lived in a cave in the cliffs of the Hay creek canyon for a time, while they herded their cattle on the surrounding hills.

A short time afterward Howard Maupin, of Lane county, settled on Trout creek where he lived until his death a few years since. Maupin encountered many perils from the Piute Indians in those early days and he was a man of great personal courage and held his ground against the thieving and murderous savages. He was not, however, permitted to enjoy his wilderness home in peace until he slew Paulina, the war chief of the Piutes. He was a veteran in the Mexican war, and served under Zachary Taylor. He was at the storming of Monterey, and the battle of Buena Vista. Maupin was a typical western pioneer, brave as a lion and the soul of gentlemanly honor.

Some time in the latter part of the 'sixties Henry Coleman, also of Lane county, established himself on Hay creek, near its junction with Trout creek, and engaged in the cattle business. After many years of prosperity, through an unfortunate venture he lost his once princely fortune and afterward went back to his own home near Eugene where he still lives. In 1868 the first settlement in the Ochoco valley was made by Wayne Claypool, William Smith, Ewen Johnson and Lou Daugherty, near the mouth of Mill Creek and by Elisha Barnes, Thomas B. James and Abraham Zell, Ochoco Creek. Barney Prine also settled on the Ochoco in 1868, on the present site of Prineville, and after him Prineville took its name.

In 1869 John Luckey, John M. Toms, Anthony B. Webdell, Edward G. Conant, J. W. McDowell and J. H. Snodderly settled on the Ochoco. They were followed in 1870 by Alexander Hodges, James P. Coombs, S. R. Slayton, William Heisler and Lake Vanderpool, all of whom, with the exception of Coombs and Slayton, located on the present site of Prineville. With the advent of these people began the existence of Prineville.

William Heisler was the pioneer merchant of the Ochoco valley and Barney Prine the first saloon-keeper. Heisler established his store in Prineville in 1871 and continued in business for seven or eight years. In the fall of 1871 Monroe Hodges removed his family from Benton county and laid out the present townsite of Prineville. He also built a hotel and engaged in that business for five years. About 1873 a postoffice was established in Prineville and Daniel E. Thomas was appointed postmaster. Within a few years Prineville became a thriving business town and increased rapidly in population. It was then, as now, the center of trade for almost a hundred miles around and in fact was the only business point south of The Dalles in what was then Wasco county.

Among the earliest settlers of this county may be named Jerome LaFollette and Samuel M. W. Hindman, who took up claims on Squaw creek in about 1869. Hindman kept a station for several years and still lives on the tract of land upon which he settled over thirty years ago. Willow Creek was one of the earliest settled portions of Crook county. James Blakely, Perry Read, Can. Montgomery and S. G. Wood were among the first settlers there. Blakely was the first elected sheriff of Crook county, and served in that capacity two years.

Williamson G. Allen, formerly of Lane county, settled on Hay creek on a tract of land which he afterward sold to Dr. D. M. Baldwin, of Oakland, California, who engaged in the sheep business on a large scale. Dr. Baldwin sold his interests to the Cartwrights and Van Houtens, who organized the Baldwin Sheep and Land Company, now the most extensive concern of its kind in the state. Among other early settlers on Hay creek were S. G. Thompson, the first judge of Crook county, and his two brothers William and Duorey Thompson. William, or "Bud," as he was better known, was once editor of the Roseburg Plaindealer, and afterward editor of the Salem Mercury. He was a prominent character in the early history of Crook county, and was a colonel in the state militia in the Bannock war of 1878.

Some thirty years ago the first settlements were made along McKay creek. Among these settlers were David Templeton, Calvin Pell, B. F. Allen, J. A. Guilford, George Mellican, John Latta, Daniel Hale, Joel Long, James Mackey and Andrew Lytle. William Foster, who came from Benton county, was also one of the early settlers of this region. He became a wealthy stockman and was known as Crook county's cattle king.

The Crooked river valley was settled first in the latter part of the 'sixties. Among the first to locate there were John Powell, who took up a claim immediately west of Prineville, and Abe Kenkel, who settled on what is now known as the A. J. Tethrow place.

The southern and southeastern portion of Crook county was not settled until a few years after the settlements which have been mentioned. Among the pioneers of this section are Abe Hackleman, John Davis, John Jaggi, William Noble, James and Charles W. Elkins, and William Adams. Among other noted pioneers of Crook county was Dr. James R. Stites who took up a piece of land at Lone Pine in the Haystack country in 1875. He afterward lived at Prineville for many years, and then returned to Dallas, his old home, where he died. He was a veteran of the Mexican war and was with Colonel Doniphan in his famous march through New Mexico, known as the "Journey of Death."

Two young men who came to Crook county in 1878, who have since been very prominent in the upbuilding of the country were T. M. Baldwin and J. W. Howard.

The Dalles Times-Mountaineer of October 15, 1898, said:

Christian Myer and wife, of Alkali Flat, Crook county, were Saturday, on their way to visit their two married daughters in Portland. Mr. Myer is a California pioneer of 1849. He settled on his present home near Bridge creek in 1863, and for years had Frank Hewot (Alkali) Frank, of Eight Mile, for partner. At that time Myer & Hewot kept one of the only two stopping places between The Dalles and Canyon City. The other was Burnt Ranch on the John Day.

Every traveler over the long and wretched road between here and Canyon City made it a point to stop with Myer & Hewot. They lived in an adobe mansion which was a marble palace compared with some of the frontier residences of those days, and they had the reputation and deserved it, too, of furnishing the best meals to be had east of the Cascade mountains. Both were bachelors and as the years rolled on and household cares increased with increasing travel the hearts of the two bachelors felt an aching void for the touch of a woman's hand and the companionship and ministry that a woman alone can render. But which of them should go wife hunting? That was the question, for each was perfectly satisfied that the other should be the matrimonial victim. At last the controversy was settled by the two bachelors agreeing to play a game of seven-up, the loser to go and hunt a wife. The game was played and Mr. Hewot won and Mr. Myer a short time afterward started for California, where he found the woman that has shared the joys and sorrows of Alkali Flat for more than thirty years.

The Willamette Valley and Cascade Mountain Wagon Road Company was formed in 1865. This organization was conceived by A. Hackleman and the organizers were Jason Wheeler, the first president of the company, Luther B. Ellis and John Powell. This company was granted every other section for a distance of six miles on either side of the road across the state. This amounted to about 400,000 acres in Crook county. The company never attempted to build roads and the road that was constructed was the work of immigrants passing through the country. The road company did not carry out their part of the contract and it should never have been accepted or the charter granted. The United States government made the governor of the state receiving agent, but through carelessness or wilful neglect he did not do his duty and accepted the road as it was. In this manner the company received their charter for the immense amount of land which they have neither earned nor paid for. It is considered one of the most brilliant fakes ever perpetrated on the American public. The road was sold later to T. Edgerton Hogg, who in turn disposed of it to the present owners, a Paris banking house, with Charles Alchul, the nominal resident owner. They have a resident owner at Prineville who attends to the business of the company and sees that the road is maintained in good repair. The route of the road was through what is now known as Crook county, and was as follows: Entering Crook county about two miles south and about four miles west of Black Butte to Crooked river, it followed this stream to Prineville, thence almost due east up to the Ochoco Valley forty-eight miles to Paulina, thence south from Paulina thirty miles and leaving the country in the extreme southeastern corner.

Of Indians and Indian warfare Miss Gertie Sharp most interestingly writes:

Crook county's Indian history begins as early as 1867, when a band of Piutes raided the upper Ochoco, under command of their chief Paulina, and drove the inhabitants from the valley. With the sacking of this district as a whet to the savage blood, Paulina led his savage brothers to every white settlement to be found, and for the space of twelve months after the first plunder, lives were sacrificed, houses and barns burned, cattle stolen and driven away, and the country generally laid waste to the fiendish desires of a brutal and treacherous band of savages.

The memorable winter of 1867-8 has never been duplicated in Crook county so far as any authentic reports record. Evidence of a fearful massacre in the northeastern part of the county is found in Skull Hollow, where many human skulls have been hauled away at different times. But Paulina's record as a brutal devastator has always held the foremost place in the bloody annals of the county. Lest his name, which once struck terror to old and young alike, be forgotten, a range of mountains, a valley and a stream in Crook county are named for him. Paulina was killed by Howard Maupin, the year following the former's raid in 1867. With his death came a time of comparative peace and it was not until the gold rush to Canyon City several years later that any serious disturbances occurred. At that time many packers, traveling overland to the mines, were attacked and the parties killed. But whether these murders were the work of whites or Indians will never be known; although it is more than probable that the latter were as guilty, if not more so, than the former.

Prior to the murderous attacks attending the gold rush to Canyon City, a small detachment of the Hudson's Bay Company was massacred at Powell's Buttes, about eight miles southwest of the present site of the county seat and during many years following, both during and after the bloody career of Paulina, there were occasional outbreaks of the savages at which times the whites were mercilessly slaughtered. Such in brief is the early Indian history of Crook county. Today the former troublesome chiefs with their warriors are under the watchful and painstaking eye of Uncle Sam at the Warm Springs reservation. Here the major part of the older ones live a life of indolence, the younger ones attend the government schools for a short time, then if nature's call, which is strong in the breasts of many of them, does not take them back to the tepees and blankets, they enter into any of the various occupations for which the government endeavors to fit them.

But the old stock will never change. The deep seated aboriginal ideas, the superstitions that rule their lives, the implanted customs and rights handed down to them since the first generation of their kind, all of these form a part of their lives of too much moment to be entirely removed in a few decades of years by their white-skinned guardians. But the governmental influence of the whites, nevertheless, has had its effect and some of the more barbarous customs of these first inhabitants have been abolished through the enlightenment given them. On the Warm Springs reservation among the Piutes and Warm Springs, there is found no longer the custom of buying and selling women, nor is it now customary, as in earlier years, to kill the medicine men who fail to effect cures. These are perhaps the two most noteworthy changes that have been brought about in the ordinary lives of these savage races of people.

But neither time nor schooling can bring about a change in the minor details of their every day life. The ground is never too warm or too cold to squat upon; their faces are never so attractive as when smeared with oil and paint; the heavy labor of the camp is never done except by the hands of the squaws; the living still hire the howling, wailing mourners for the dead; the tiny papoose is better cared for strapped to a board than in the mother's lap—all these and a hundred more furnish food for the feeling that only with the total extinction of the race itself will there come an end to the primitive, and still barbarous methods and customs that have lived for centuries with these first inhabitants and are destined to exist as many more if the life of this peculiar race shall endure to that end.

The first "Indian fight" in Crook county occurred in the summer of 1866 on Dry creek, about thirteen miles from the present site of the town of Prineville. Dr. McKay, a half breed Indian, who afterward became quite noted as a surgeon, was camped on what is now known as McKay's creek, with a band of Warm Springs Indians. With him was "Billy Chinook," who had formerly served as a scout and guide for General John C. Fremont and Kit Carson, when they passed through this territory in 1843. McKay ordered Billy Chinook to take twenty-five men and reconnoiter for any other Indian bands. The following day they discovered a band of Piutes on Dry creek. After counting their fires and wigwams they decided that there was not more, so far as numbers were concerned, than they had themselves. Their orders were not to attack, but return and if Indians were found to give the alarm. But the opportunity, however, was too favorable and they disobeyed orders. The first fire in the morning was to be the signal for attack. Accordingly as the early fires appeared a rush was made. Although surprised the Piutes made a gallant defense and the whole band numbering thirty-two, bucks, squaws and children, were killed or captured.

The first house erected in Ochoco valley was built by David Wayne Claypool. He was married to Miss Louisa Elkins October 8, 1857, remaining in Linn county until 1867 when he removed to what is now Crook county. The Indians burned his home and run off his stock while he was out at work. But by indomitable will power he stayed with his claim, and eventually became one of Crook county's wealthiest and most respected citizens.

Paulina, a mongrel chief of the Piutes, who had terrorized residents and freighters between the Des Chutes and John Day rivers for many years, was killed by Howard Maupin, the details of which killing will be found in the "reminiscence" portion of this work. The tragedy occurred near Paulina Butte, about four miles northwest of what is now Ashwood, in 1867.

Henry Coleman, who settled on lower Trout creek in 1868, was the first settler who raised cattle extensively in what is now Crook county. In 1880, before the advent of the railroad, he drove 2,000 head of cattle over the mountains to Kansas and hired a man to winter them. During the winter they all died and Mr. Coleman was sued by the man who had charge of them for his pay. The court gave the plaintiff a judgment for $75,000 for wintering 2,000 head of cattle. This completely bankrupted Mr. Coleman and he abandoned the business.

Among the settlers on upper Trout creek in 1869 were Z. B. Offat, James M. Grater, John Atterbury and James Cox. It may be said that they were the first settlers on upper Trout creek.

In 1869 Lieutenant Watson with a party of soldiers and Stokatly, a Warm Springs Indian chief, with a band of Indians, soldiers and Indians numbering about 150, encountered a party of Piutes at what is now known as Watson's Springs. The Piutes hid themselves in the rocks on the hillside and Watson, finding he could get at them in no other way, decided to charge the whole band. In the preliminary encounter Watson was killed and his men retreated. Stokatly was attached to Lieutenant Watson and would not allow the Piutes to scalp him. Calling his men to follow he again charged and rescued Watson's body, but was so badly wounded himself that he died a few days later at the Warm Springs reservation.

In the Prineville News of June, 1887, Mr. George Barnes writes interestingly of the Ochoco valley:

Settlement was first directed to this valley by the report of a surveying party sent out by the S. V. & C. M. road company in 1863 or 1864, though the country had been visited by adventurous miners on prospecting tours, and Uncle Howard Maupin, the pioneer of Antelope Valley, and his boys had passed through in pursuit of the Snake Indians who, under the noted Paulina, were waging relentless war upon the early settlers of Wasco years before this. Major Stein, an officer in the United States army, had even built a road through the country connecting The Dalles by way of Camp Harney with the government post in the northern part of California, over which government supplies were hauled and troops passed from one post to another. Years before this the government, to keep the Indians in check, had dotted the country east of the Cascade mountains with military posts. One was located at Black Butte at the place that bears its name—Camp Polk; one near South Crooked river just above the fords of that stream, called Maury; one on Silver creek, called Curry, and one in the Harney Valley took its name, and many were the hard, bloody fights fought with the Indians on the valleys and plains now dotted with settlers' homes. In fact the country was well known long before the road company's surveying party passed through it; but the glowing report of this party of the beauty of the country, of the inexhaustible wealth of grass that covered it; the richness of its soil, and its pure, dry, healthful atmosphere first attracted the attention of the people of the Willamette valley who wanted homes and were willing to brave the dangers of the Indian country to secure them.

The first attempt at settlement was made in the fall of 1867 by D. Wayne Claypool, William Smith, Captain White, Raymond Burkhart, George Burkhart (then a boy), and Elisha Barnes, then residents of the vicinity of Lebanon in Linn county, who came to the valley that fall and selected lands upon which they proposed to build themselves future homes, and who remained here during the following winter. They occupied themselves in hewing house logs, making rails and building houses on their claims. One house was erected on Wayne Claypool's place near where his present dwelling stands; this was burned by the Indians the next spring. One was built on William Smith's place on Mill creek, and one in the timber where is now the old Swarts' sawmill. These last two are still standing, "Billy Smith's" doing service as a dwelling house, or perhaps more properly as a "bachelors' roost." It is historical as the oldest house in the county.

The Burkhart's selected the place where the Rev. C. S. Pringle now lives. Wayne Claypool and William Smith settled on their present homes; Captain White the land now owned by Mrs. E. A. Freeland, and Elisha Barnes the swamp land in the lower Ochoco. Although cut off from all communication with the outside world, and especially their families, these men passed the winter cheerily enough, enlivened once or twice by a visit from the Luckey boys—John and Jim—who were then employes on the reservation at the Warm Springs, and as the creek bottoms were swarming with mule deer, one could more easily guess that the sports of the chase were a part of their recreation that believe the yarns they told to their neighbors on their return home about the size of these deer. Burkhart owned a Henry rifle, one of the first ever made, and it had a surprising habit of "scattering." It was liable to hit anything under the sun except the object at which it was pointed, and its idiosyncrasy in this respect was apt to throw the shooter into a state of mind not altogether conducive to moral perfection. An Indian stole the gun and I ever afterward felt perfectly safe. He couldn't hit me with that gun if I were in sight, and if I were not he would not be apt to shoot. But the stories told of the surprising shots made by this gun, the size and number of the animals slain, are embalmed in my memory alongside with the tales of "Robinson Crusoe" and "Jack, the Giant Killer."

They broke some ground on the Claypool place, planted a garden and in April, I think, moved their remaining teams and personal property to Camp Polk, which they left with Captain White and the rest of the company. Returning to their families they crossed the mountains on snow shoes.

The Burkharts had had enough of Ochoco, and on their return home announced their intention of staying there, but Claypool and Barnes commenced making preparations to remove their families so soon as the mountains were passable. The flattering reports they gave of the country soon induced others to join them in their intention to make a home here. Two weeks after their arrival home, E. Johnson, William Elkins, myself and another man, whose name I have forgotten, started for this country bringing with us two horses. We had to cross over snow twenty feet deep, but we arrived at Camp Polk without any mishaps and found Captain White in good spirits and the cattle safe.

The following day we loaded up and started for Ochoco, arriving at Wayne Claypool's in two and a half days. This was, certainly, as fine a country then as a stock man could wish to see. The bottoms were covered with wild rye, clover, pea vines, wild flax and meadow grass that was waist high on horseback. The hills were clothed with a mat of bunch grass that seemed inexhaustible. It appeared a veritable paradise for stock. E. Johnson located the place now known as the James Elkins place, the little farm just across the lane north of Wayne Claypool's farm. Elkins and the other gentleman did not take places and after a stay of four years they went home, taking all the horses our little crowd had, leaving us afoot, in a manner, for we had only ox teams. Johnson and I went to hauling rails, and I have always believed that if untoward events and the Indians had not interfered I would have reached the top round of the ladder of fame as a bull whacker. For even now I look back with feelings of pride and longing regret to those bright sunny mornings when we arose with the lark and sage tick and joyously ambled down to the spring branch, bathed our expansive brows, scoured our pitch-covered hands and with appetites that passed all understanding, did ample justice to the ability of our cook, and blythly took our way to the rail patch with an ox gad in one hand, a trusty United States gun on one shoulder, and two Colt's revolvers swung to our belts, and let our fine soprano voices ring out on the morning air. Bull-whacking is not work; it is only recreation. But that is all over for me now; I can never be a bull-whacker. And, thinking of what I have missed, I can only moan, "It might have been."

As before stated, four days after our arrival here Elkins and the forgotten man left us, leaving three people in all this country, Johnson, White and myself. Johnson and myself were employed in making a trip to the timber each day. We were stopping at the Claypool place. Captain White worked the garden and did the cooking. On the sixth day as usual Johnson and I went to the timber, and while loading the wagons we noticed a huge smoke down the valley; but as the captain was almost daily engaged in burning the heavy crops of wild rye that covered the bottom, we thought but little of it. But when fifteen minutes later we saw the captain coming up the bottom, hat off, and as if he had half a notion of breaking into a run, we knew something was wrong. When we got within yelling distance he shouted, "Boys, the Indians have broke out and killed every d—d one of us and burnt the house," we knew exactly what was the trouble. And when the captain came up and gave us the particulars, how, while he was absent from the house they had taken all our guns, blankets and provisions, and what they could not carry off they had burned, leaving us destitute, we felt lonesome. That morning Johnson and I both, contrary to our usual custom, had omitted to bring our guns with us. We had only an old six-shooter of the cap and ball style, and this we had emptied at a bunch of sage hens, and as we had not brought any ammunition, it was about as valuable as a knot-hole. We held a council of war and then and there organized the first militia company ever organized in this county. We each got us a willow stick six feet long, which we shouldered as guns and marched down to where our house had stood. In fact they had burned up everything we had which they did not carry away. We were completely stripped and it looked to us that evening that the next bite we would get to eat would be found somewhere on the west side of the Cascade mountains. As we were afoot and would have thirty or forty miles of snow to wade through, the prospect did not seem very cheerful; in fact, to attempt to cross the mountains seemed so hopeless that we finally concluded to attempt to find the Canyon City road which we knew lay somewhere to the north of us. How far it was we did not know. In fact our ignorance was so dense that it seems foolishness now. So we gathered together a few traps, such as were not burned, hitched up our oxen and started for "grub."

Not a drum was heard, not a bugle note,
As our course down stream we worried;
But like a boy caught in a melon patch,
We whooped, and humped and hurried.

We perhaps looked very brave as we marched down the valley with our make-believe guns on our shoulders, but as a truthful historian I am compelled to say that we did not feel that way. Two days and a half afterward we found the Warm Spring Agency by an accident. There were no roads in the country then, and our course was guided solely by canyons and ridges. At the agency we were welcomed by one of the best women even Oregon ever knew, Mrs. Captain John Smith, wife of the agent of the reservation at that time. We were fed and made to feel at home. Two days afterward Johnson and I started for home. Mrs. Smith furnished us with enough provisions to run a small Methodist camp-meeting at least a week. We hired an Indian to guide us to Cache creek from whence we proposed to "hoof it" home. At Cache creek the Indian left us and Johnson and I started across the snow. Traveling was very slow and tiresome, and every few hundred feet we would stop and eat. In fact, we stopped and ate so often that the next morning we had only enough left for a scanty breakfast. That evening after a fatiguing day worrying over and through the snow we were so fortunate as to meet James M. Blakely who was camped on the Santiam at what is known as "The Elephant" with a band of cattle, which he was taking to Wild Horse, Umatilla county. Jim gave us our supper and breakfast, for which I am certain the pack horse was ever after thankful, for we certainly lightened his load. Next day we arrived home, safe and sound and hungry.

A few weeks later James McDowell, his two boys, Bill and George, Haley Anderson, Billy Smith and John Miller came here. The McDowells settled on the upper place now owned by J. P. Combs; John Toms and J. Miller taking claims up where C. S. Pringle now lives. Shortly afterward they were followed by James Slater, A. Zell, Uncle Jackay Rose, Harry Smith, William Pickett, Charles Brotherhead and James Mackey. A. Zell located on the place where he now lives; Harry Smith on the place that now bears his name on Mill creek; James McKay on McKay creek, the Millican ranch, I believe, and A. C. Belieu on the place Ewen Johnson now owns. Soon afterward Reason Hamlin moved here, bringing his family now with him. Mrs. Hamlin was the first white woman in the valley. They settled on the old James Bent place and built their house on the creek near the center of where the Stroud boys have their field. In October, E. Johnson, W. H. Marks and William Clark brought out their families, and they were followed a week or so later by the families of Wayne Claypool, Lew Daugherty and George H. Judy. Johnson moved his family into the cabin in the timber; Marks onto the place just above where John Claypool now lives, which he took up and improved. W. Clark settled on what is now the Freeland place—Captain White's old claim—Wayne Claypool into the house he had built in the place of the one burnt; Lew Daugherty stopped in the timber above the Jim Miller place and Judy took up what is now the John Todd place, building his house on the creek.

About this time Barney Prine and I. N. Bostwick came to the Valley bringing their families with them. Barney settled on the present site of Prineville; Bostwick took the place now owned by Dan Powell just above town. Later John Crabtree and his family, accompanied by John Claypool, moved here, and lived during that winter in E. Barnes' house, Crabtree taking up the place Webdell now owns.

That summer James McKay brought out a band of cattle, and E. Barnes, E. Johnson and W. H. Marks each a small band of sheep. These were the first stock brought here, and I have a painful recollection that the sheep had the doubtful honor of having the first case of scab in the settlement, though at that time we did not know what it was. We thought it was the mange, the same disease that the hogs have in the Willamette valley, and we lost all our wool and nearly all our sheep before we learned what ailed them. Greasing the measly things with a bacon rind did not cure them, and some of us retired from the business with disgust. Why, the scab is a native of this section. I have seen the coyotes perfectly naked with it; the rim rocks had it; the sage brush had it; it was in the grass, in the rocks, in the air and our sheep caught it and had it bad.

I think I omitted the names of Arthur Veazie, Joel Long and John Latta, who also came here during the summer of 1868. Veazie settled upon the place now owned by J. H. Miller; Joel Long upon the Powell place on McKay creek, and Latta on what is now known as the "old Millican ranch."

During the summer of 1868 the settlers were busy in building their houses; Johnson erecting the old house that now stands just north of the old Claypool school house; William Clark a log cabin near where now stands the Freeland residence; G. H. Judy on the creek south of where now stands the John Todd house; W. H. Marks near the point of rocks that juts out to the road on the place now claimed by John Claypool; Hamlin on the old Bent Jones place; the McDowells in what is now J. P. Combs upper field; E. Barnes on his meadow ranch; H. Smith on his place; Haley Anderson on the place known as the John Davis place, now owned by Billy Smith, and during the following winter John Crabtree the old log house that now stands on A. B. Webdell's place; A. Zell on the place he now occupies. During the summer J. Narcross and Vining located and settled upon the place now owned by S. J. Newson, now "Newson's Addition to Prineville," building two houses on the creek just east of the lane leading north from town. Vining did not long remain here, disposing of his interests to Narcross and moving away. He was afterward lost on the steamer General Wright when she foundered off our coast several years ago.

During the winter of 1868 the Vining cabin was occupied by M. B. Fry, now of Albany, whose chief ambition was to get up a race between a thoroughbred greyhound he brought out with him and one of the fleet-footed mule bucks that were then so numerous on our valleys and plains. But before he succeeded in this desire he made the grand mistake of turning his slim-waisted, long-legged racer loose after a mangy coyote that looked fully as hungry as his dog. There was an exciting race for about a quarter of a mile and the greyhound overtook the coyote who proceeded then and there to give it the worst whipping a high-bred town dog ever got. Then there was another quarter race back to where Fry stood in open astonishment, the greyhound in the lead, but the coyote a good second and every few jumps he would nip a piece out of the fleeing dog's hams. That race ruined the dog as a hunter, for from that day on Fry could never induce it to chase a jack-rabbit, and the howl of a coyote drove it under the bed. After that it pined away and died.

That winter was a busy one to all of us; making rails, boards, hewing house logs and, surprising as it may seem, I was inveigled into accepting the position of pitman in a whip-saw mill, where we sawed lumber for the floors of our cabins at the rate of fifty feet a day, working sixteen hours. Sundays we washed and patched our clothes, and right here I want to say that along toward spring our wardrobes got to be very threadbare; we thought we had come with clothes enough for a year, but three months' ranting around over the rimrocks and through the juniper trees after the mule deer had left us barefooted and naked. There were no stores that we could possibly reach where we could obtain a new supply and toward spring we were the nakedest lot of white men in Oregon. The makeshifts we utilized to hide our skins from the biting winds—we didn't care a cent for the public gaze—was but another illustration that "Necessity is the Mother of Invention." Newt Bostwick capped the climax in the footwear line by soling a pair of moccasins with a piece of bacon rind. We all wore moccasins and before spring buckskin breeches and shirts.

That winter Uncle Jim Slater who, with Abe Zell, had been stopping with the McDowells, becoming tired of bachelor's cooking and vension, went up and hired out to W. H. Marks, stipulating that he was to have beef once a day and a yard and a half of the first cloth woven to patch the seat of his pantaloons, provided the latter held together that long. The long winter evenings were passed in dressing buckskin, learning the copper trade under A. Zell's tuition, and in solving the most complex mathematical problem the fertile brain of Uncle Jim Slater could conceive, using a shingle for a slate. Once a week the settlers on lower Ochoco would meet, first at one cabin and then another, turn about, and have a debate. Even at that early day the W. V. & C. M. road company's claim to the lands in this section was questioned by the settlers, for we often had the company and its "road" as the subject of debate. Many were the eloquent denunciations of their staking out old Indian trails and calling them "wagon roads," but little did we dream that these same old Indian trails would become by the venality of two of Oregon's governors, a "Military Wagon Road," or that the improvements on which some of the settlers were working so hard that winter would be taken from them and given to this company, or perhaps our speeches might have rung with even yet more bitter denunciation that they did.

The forepart of the winter the young people had several "bussing bees" and dances. Along toward spring we let up on them; in fact we got skittish of the girls. Not that we were naturally diffident or bashful, but because our trousers were more conspicuous by what was absent than by what remained.

James McDowell was an odd genius; he went by the name of "Governor of Canada," derived by having been at one time the laziest man in that part of the Forks of the Santiam known as "Canada." Though it was told of "Bill," the Governor's oldest boy, married on the strength of his being a son of the "Governor of Canada," the girl had never heard of the Forks or seen the "Governor." If he could get enough to eat and plenty of tobacco, he did not care if he was ragged or dirty. He was always happy, and during our ragged period the Governor was in his element. He shaved once a week with a butcher knife, and stood ready to back his "mar" against any horse in the country for fifteen buck hides.

Jim and A. H. Marks, Uncle Buford's boys, were born hunters and this country was to them all that could be desired. Deer were plenty everywhere; not little, runty white tails like they have in the Willamette, but big, mule deer, animals as large as an elk. Elk and bear could be found in the mountains; wild sheep on the high, rocky buttes; big grey wolves once in a while and coyotes everywhere. And above all was a conscious feeling that one might find an Indian; just enough of this latter feeling to give a zest to a hunt away from the settlement. One evening night caught Jim and A. H. several miles from home, and the darker it got the greater their anxiety to get home. Finally it became so dark Jim could not see his way or feel over a rim-rock. He stumbled over one and after dropping some six or eight feet he caught on a narrow ledge that projected from the wall some two feet, just far enough for him to maintain a precarious footing. He soon ascertained by experimenting that it was impossible for him to climb back from where he had fallen, and it was too dark to see how far it was to the bottom, and how to climb down, his imagination conjecturing that it was hundreds of feet down and the wall perfectly smooth, that he would hold on to the narrow ledge until his strength was gone and then fall down and be dashed to pieces on the rocks below. He felt that he was doomed; he would hang there until starvation would loosen his hold, or perhaps an Indian would find him perched there, caught like a rat in a trap, and from the ledge above take mean advantages of him. Then he would think of home, and how they would miss and hunt for him and never find him. Amid such gloomy thoughts he passed the night and the first streak of light showed him that the ledge upon which he stood with within two feet of the bottom.

Charley Brotherhead was the son of a rich banker in New York; he had enlisted in the army during the war and after its close he had been discharged on this coast and had drifted here, why, I could never imagine. He did not need any of this country and it certainly did not need any of him. He wouldn't work, and could not if he had wanted to, but he could and did raise a quarrel with Captain White, and the way these two worthies laid for one another; how they quarreled; how Captain White to avoid meeting Charley would go across the mountains instead of traveling through the valley when he wished to go from one point to another; how Charley would lie on the old Captain and bluster about what he would do if he could only lay hands on him, gave evidence that even in frontier places where the settlers were mutually dependent upon one another for safety, they could be fools.

The winter of 1868 was a fine one; no snow or rain-fall. The ground and streams of water froze hard, and the settlers ran around over the country with only moccasins and with, comparatively, dry feet. The few stock in the valley kept fat, and the teams engaged in hauling rails and timber with no better feed than to be turned on the bottom at night kept in good working order. It did not storm any that winter; the days were clear and warm and the nights clear and cold.

I find it necessary to add another name to the list of settlers in the year 1868 that I inadvertently omitted in its proper place; that is George Millican. He came here in the spring of 1868 in company with John Latta and Joel Long, and brought out the first band of cattle driven here. He stopped awhile on Mill creek, the site of Prineville, he being some three months ahead of Barney Prine, but by the solicitation of Millican, he soon abandoned the place, and he, Millican and Latta went over on the McKay and took the place now owned by Millican and Powell.

In 1869 the little settlement here received quite an addition to its numbers, the Gulliford boys, Jake, William and Jasper came, bringing with them quite a band of cattle, and settled upon the head of the McKay, up where William Gulliford now lives. Albert Allen also that year settled on the McKay on the place B. F. Allen now owns. Then came J. C. Davis, Bluford Marks and his two sons, Jim and Att, Dr. L. Vanderpool, A. Hodges, Charley Hodges, the irrepressible "Bud" Hodges, Lizzie Vanderpool, now Mrs. Jake Gulliford, J. H. Snodderly and family, D. H. Hale and S. R. Slayton and family, the two Foster boys, William and "Jap," and their sister Mrs. Nancy Leach, A. B. Webdell and E. G. Conant; A. Zell brought out his family; Jake Narcross and wife; Hardy Holman, John Holman, John D. Lee, A. Hinkle, Bill Davis and Abbott.

John Davis moved on the place on Mill Creek that Haley Anderson had been holding for him. Uncle Bluford Marks took up the place where John Claypool now lives, and his two boys built the old log cabin that now stands on that place; it was one that Alex Hodges took up, and he and his boys went to improve the place he now lives upon. Dr. Vanderpool brought out a band of sheep and his first corral was about where Duncan's law office now stands. He afterward took up the place where he now lives. J. H. Snodderly took up the place where he now lives; the Foster boys the place now owned by Dan Powell. A. B. Webdell bought John Crabtree's right to the swamp land just above town and thereby bought a nineteen years' fight with the Road Company. He soon after left E. G. Conant in charge of the place and went to the Willamette Valley to buy horses, and while there married a Miss Wiley, whom he brought out next summer. But their wedded life was not destined to last long, for that dread disease, consumption, had her in its clutches and she died, May 6, 1871, I believe her death was the third in the valley, R. Streithoff who died in December being the first, and Emily Powell on March 9, 1871, being the second.

R. S. Slayton settled in the lower Ochoco on the meadow land he now owns; he also brought out quite a large band of cattle.

Jake Narcross settled upon the land just north of town, embracing the claims of S. J. Newsome and Mrs. Lafollette. Hardy and John Holman and John Lee and Orange Morgan settled on the creek above Abe Zell's place on the land now owned by E. N. White, and—yes, I have almost forgotten a Mr. Smith who settled somewhere near where Billy Tomlinson now lives. He should not be forgotten, for his wife that summer gave birth to the first child born in the new settlement. Though this child should be to this county what Virginia Dare is to America, I have forgotten whether it was a boy or a girl.

The settlers were dependent upon the kindness of John and Jim Luckey for an occasional letter from their former homes, as there was no communication with any mail routes, and the Luckeys, who were employes on the Warm Springs reservation, would always kindly gather and forward the mail that came by the way of The Dalles, and a letter was an event in those days. I remember that once the boys sent up a batch of mail, which came to Barney Prine's—the place was not then Prineville—and Joel Long who happened down that way undertook to deliver the mail to the upper Ochoco settlers and, on the way up he lost one for John Claypool and the whole settlement turned out to hunt for it. The search was continued until the letter was found. It contained the startling information that one of the Smith family had obtained a divorce. I do not now remember whether the divorcee wrote the letter or not.

In the spring of 1868, while these men were busy with their work, they were rudely startled by a raid made on them by the Snake Indians who captured and carried off three yoke of cattle and Billy Smith's only horse. This action was a rude reminder that their stay here would not be unmixed with danger. As the whites were few in number and without horses they, of course, did not follow the Indians very far, leaving the settlers to content themselves with keeping a better lookout, and more carefully guarding against a repetition of such a raid. At that period, 1869, there were no roads connecting this country with The Dalles, or in fact anywhere else. During the summer of 1869 William Clark and Lew Daugherty built a road from the valley of Bakeoven. The road went direct to Cow Canyon following the creek bed, and the reef of rocks that obstruct the creek was overcome by a bridge. These men were paid for their work by the merchants of The Dalles. At that time there were no houses between the valley and Bakeoven, except one at the Coleman ranch, on Trout creek.

C. C. Mailing came to Crook county in 1877 and located on Willow creek, where he erected a steam sawmill, the first one in the county. In 1863 Bristow Brothers were taking a pack train from Eugene to Canyon City, and they encamped on Trout creek, where they were joined by another pack train returning from Canyon City. At night they were raided by Indians and every horse was stolen. Until the following afternoon the freighters could do nothing when another pack train came along. The men at once mounted and gave chase, finding the Indians on the bank of the Ochoco, where now stands Prineville. Seeing them the Indians hid themselves in the tall rye grass and made no attempts to defend themselves. The freighters gathered in their horses and, naturally, those of the Indians, returned to their camping grounds and eventually gained their destination.

Camp Polk was named by Captain Charles La Follette, who in the early sixties camped there with a company of soldiers. It was located in Squaw creek, about forty miles west of Prineville and about four miles northwest of where Sisters is now located. A few log huts were thrown together to form a temporary camp.

The name "Ochoco," Indian for willow, was, in the days of the earliest settlement, given to nearly all the territory within the boundaries of Crook county. Present settlers limit it to the valley along the creek of that name. When the whites first visited the stream it was called Ochoco, pronounced O-chee-co, and such, since then it has remained.

Mr. Miller was a teacher at the Warm Springs, and during a visit to the future Prineville he preached at the old Claypool school house, about ten miles east of Prineville. It is considered highly probable that this was the first sermon preached in the county.

J. P. Combs, D. Wayne Claypool, S. R. Slayton and J. H. Snodderly were the first to raise grain in Crook county. This was in 1870. It was grown for hay in the Ochoco valley. The first notes of the "new county" symphony were heard September 16, 1880, when a Prineville correspondent of The Dalles Times wrote as follows:

The question of the division of Wasco county is being generally agitated here. This question was discussed to some extent two years ago, but at that time met with serious opposition, not only from your part of the county (The Dalles) but from many of the citizens here. Now, however, there seems to be but one unanimous opinion and that is, "A new county of our own we should have, and that immediately!" Citizens of The Dalles hardly understand how little real protection or advantage to this part of the county our present organization is. Were it not for our local officers crimes might be committed daily and the criminals escape long before the arm of justice could be stretched across the 125 miles that intervene between us and the judgment seat at The Dalles. And as it is, the few cases that we are compelled to take to The Dalles for trial cost the county such enormous sums that we are ashamed to make the balance against us any larger, and many offenses are allowed to shock the moral sense of the community without any attempt to visit punishment upon the heads of offenders.

In the fall of 1880 the conditions of the little town of Prineville were considered prosperous. Especially had it prospered during the two preceding years. At that period the principal industry was stock raising. The large droves of cattle which were driven from Crook county in 1879 greatly lessened the amount of horned cattle on the range, and since that time particular attention has been paid to horses and sheep, of which the farmers have the finest grades. So early as 1880 some of the best thoroughbred horses for all purposes had been imported; there is no kind of a graded animal of that species but can be found at, or near, Prineville. Large bands of sheep ranged the neighboring hills and kept fat the year round. The winter months were slightly more severe than at The Dalles, but the snowfalls were usually light. Large accessions to the population were made in 1879, and mainly of a thrifty, industrious class which is always acceptable to every community. Heretofore very little agricultural projects had been entered upon. Yet at that time it was popular opinion that the valleys of the Ochoco and Crooked river could be made quite productive. McKay creek, six miles from Prineville, had been farmed for a number of years and quite successfully. The quantity and quality of grain raised compared favorably with any section of Crook county. Such were the industrial conditions in 1880.

In the histories of other counties published in this work we have told of the severe weather prevailing in 1880-81, and of the hardships endured by settlers in caring for their stock. In that portion of Wasco, which is now Crook county, then known as the "Prineville country," this winter was not so severe as in the country further to the north. Large herds of stock were wintered on the Ochoco, beyond Prineville, and there was very little loss.

ORGANIZATION OF CROOK COUNTY.

Crook was created out of the southern portion of Wasco county in the fall of 1882. The bill was introduced by Hon. B. F. Nichols, then a representative of Wasco county. Prineville was made the temporary county seat. Following is the enabling act:

Be it enacted by the Legislative Assembly of the State of Oregon:

Section 1. That all that portion of the State of Oregon embraced within the following boundary lines be, and the same is hereby created and organized into a separate county by the name of Crook, to-wit: Beginning at a point on the western boundary line of Wasco county where the same is intersected by the line between townships eight and nine south; from thence east on said line to the John Day river; thence up the main channel of said river to the west line of Grant county; thence on the line between Grant and Wasco counties to the southeast corner of Wasco county; thence on the line between Wasco and Lake counties to the east boundary line of Lane county; thence on the line between Lane, Linn and Wasco counties to the place of beginning.

Section 2. The territory embraced between said boundary lines shall compose a county for all civil and military purposes, and shall be subject to the same laws and restrictions and be entitled to elect the same officers as other counties of the State: Provided, that it shall be the duty of the governor as soon as convenient after this act shall become a law to appoint for Crook county, and from her resident citizens, several of the county officers allowed by law to other counties of this state; which said officers, after duly qualifying according to law, shall be entitled to hold their respective offices until their successors shall be duly elected at the general election of 1884, and shall have duly qualified as required by law.

Section 3. The temporary county seat of Crook county shall be located at Prineville in said county until a permanent location shall be adopted. At the next general election the question shall be submitted to the legal voters of said county, and the place, if any, which shall receive a majority of all the votes cast at such election shall be the permanent county seat of said county; but if no place shall receive a majority of all the votes cast the question shall again be submitted to the legal voters of said county between the two points having the highest number of votes at said election, and the place receiving the highest number of votes at such election shall be the permanent county seat of said county.

Section 4. Said county of Crook shall for representative purposes be annexed to the 17th representative district. And for senatorial purposes said county shall be annexed to the 16th senatorial district.

Section 5. The county clerk of Wasco county shall send to the county clerk of Crook county, within thirty days after this act becomes a law a certified transcript of all delinquent taxes, from the assessment roll of 1882, that were assessed within the limits of Crook county; also a certified transcript of the assessment of all persons and property within the limits of Crook county for 1882, and the said taxes shall be payable to the proper officers of Crook county. The county treasurer of Crook county shall, out of the first money collected for taxes, pay over to the treasurer of Wasco county the full amount of state tax on the assessment of 1882, due from the citizens of Crook county, Provided, That the citizens of Crook county shall not be exempt from, but shall pay their due proportion of the indebtedness of said Wasco county for the year 1882. The said clerk of Wasco county shall also make out and send to the clerk of Crook county, within the time above limited, a transcript of all cases pending in the circuit and county courts of Wasco county between parties residing in Crook county, and transfer all original papers in said cases to be tried in Crook county.

Section 6. The county clerk of Wasco county shall, within forty days after the passage of this act, ascertain the proportion of the amount of money expended by Wasco county for building a court house in the year 1882; collected in taxes from the inhabitants now to be embraced in the county of Crook, and make a certificate thereof and deliver the same to the treasurer of Crook county; and that the treasurer of said Wasco county pay over to the county said amount so paid by the inhabitants of said district on the presentation of said certificate.

Section 7. The said county of Crook is hereby attached to the Fifth Judicial District for judicial purposes.

Section 8. The county court of Crook county shall be held at the county seat of said county on the first Monday of every alternate month, beginning on the first Monday of the next after the appointment by the governor of county officers as provided in this act.

Section 9. Until otherwise provided for the county judge of Crook county shall receive an annual salary of four hundred dollars, and the clerk and sheriff of said county shall be entitled to receive the same fees that are now allowed by law to the clerk and sheriff of Wasco county.

Section 10. The county treasurer of Crook county shall receive an annual salary of two hundred dollars.

Section 11. As early action in virtue of the provisions of this act is important, this act shall take effect and be in force from and after its approval by the Governor.

Approved October 24, 1882.

The first officers named by Governor Moody as officials of Crook county were the following:

County judge, S. G. Thompson; county clerk, S. T. Richardson; sheriff, George H. Churchill; commissioners, B. F. Allen, C. M. Cartwright; assessor, S. J. Newsome; school superintendent, H. A. Dillard; treasurer, G. A. Winckler; coroner, Richard Graham.

The fact that the senatorial fight of John H. Mitchell in the legislature of 1882 came near defeating the bill for the creation of Crook county is not generally known. Had it not been for the work of Hon. B. F. Nichols, at that time a member from Wasco county, the measure would have failed. Mr. Nichols went to the legislature pledged to the creation of Crook county and against John H. Mitchell for United States senator. Almost at the beginning of the session Mr. Nichols introduced house bill No. 65, which was for the creation of the new county. This measure passed the house by a large majority, but was tabled in the senate without discussion. This was done to force Mr. Nichols to vote for John H. Mitchell which he refused to do.

About this time an opportunity occurred for the state treasurer to pay out about $100,000 on the state's indebtedness, and thus save a large amount of interest. Edward Hirsch, the state treasurer, with the sanction of the governor and attorney general, paid out $100,000. A bill was introduced in the lower house to legalize this act. Through the efforts of Mr. Nichols it was tabled. Solomon Hirsch, senator from Multnomah county and brother of the state treasurer, was quite anxious that this bill should become a law. He was also chairman of the committee on counties. Mr. Hirsch interviewed Mr. Nichols and was informed that the bill to legalize his brother's act would be passed after the Crook county bill had become a law. Consequently the senate was compelled to pass the bill creating Crook county in order to legalize the payment of the $100,000 of state indebtedness.

During the second session of the county court, December 5, 1882, the members appointed Elisha Barnes justice of the peace, and T. S. Mealy constable for Prineville precinct. These were the first officers appointed by the new county court of Crook county. February 6, 1883, A. Aldridge was appointed road supervisor of District No. 1, also the first appointed in the county.

The area of the new county was about 8,600 square miles, and it contained a population of about 2,500.

March 15, 1882, a messenger arrived at Prineville from Willow creek, who announced the news of the killing of two men named A. H. Crooks and S. J. Jory, a son-in-law of Crook's. The name of the supposed assassin was Lucius Langdon. The murderous deed, by shooting, was committed just over a small knoll at the rear of Langdon's residence, and out of sight of the road. Mr. Garrett Maupin, passing the road at the time, heard two shots. He went immediately to the place and found the two men dead, and saw Langdon leaving on a horse and armed.

It appears that Langdon had had some difficulty with Crooks and Jory concerning a piece of land. (The land office afterwards confirmed Langdon's title to the property).

The coroner's inquest was held by Justice Powers and the following verdict rendered:

"We, the jury, empaneled to inquire into the cause of the death of A. H. Crooks and Stephen Jory, find from the evidence that the deceased came to their death by gunshot wounds inflicted by Lucius Langdon.

The following is a letter from Deputy Sheriff J. L. Lukey at Prineville to Sheriff Storrs at The Dalles on the lynching of Langdon.

Friend Storrs—I wrote you in my last of the beginning of a terrible tragedy, and to-day I will give you, as I hope, the end. The people turned out and went in several directions looking for Langdon. He had a brother working on Mill Creek, about seventeen miles from here, and six men went there the same night after the shooting. At one o'clock in the night they approached the cabin where his brother was stopping, saw a light, but before they could surround the house the dogs gave the alarm. Our boys were so near they saw him run, but it was very dark and he got away; so a runner was sent back to town and every available man able to bear arms turned out determined to get him if possible. They scoured that whole country and guarded all the avenues where it was thought he was likely to escape. J. M. Blakely and a party of men thought he would return home, as the boys at Mill Creek had captured his horse and gun. They were stationed just south of Langdon's house, when they saw a man approaching on horseback. They were not certain of their man, however. James B. covered him with his Winchester before he knew he was near any one. He surrendered and they started immediately for town. In the meantime Justice Powers had issued a warrant for a man by the name of W. H. Harrison who had been stopping at Langdon's, and when the inquest was held on the bodies of Crook and Jory, gloated over it and said it served them right, striking his breast and saying, “Big Ingin Me!” They were trying to make him accessory after the fact.

They all came over to town together, Harrison and Langdon prisoners, arriving here about two o'clock. Blakely woke me up, saying they had captured Langdon and wanted to turn him over to me. I went down to the stable office where they had him, put the shackles on him, took him into the hotel, had a good fire built and told Langdon to take some sleep on the lounge. I sat down by the stove to guard him. The town was soon aroused; at least quite a number of men came in to see Langdon, as I suppose through a morbid curiosity. Mr. W. C. Foren, deputy marshal, came in and stayed with me. Harrison went to bed and at about four o'clock got up and sat by the stove in charge of L. Nichols. At about five o'clock in the morning, as I was sitting at the stove with my back to the front door, the door was suddenly opened and I was caught and thrown backward on the floor and firmly held, while my eyes were blinded and immediately a pistol was fired rapidly five or six times. I heard some one groan just about the time the firing ceased. Harrison was hurried from the room. I could tell it was him by his cries. The doors were closed and I was allowed to get up. I went to Langdon and found him dead. I looked around and a masked man stood at each door, warning by ominous signs for no one to undertake to leave the room. So soon as they were satisfied that Langdon was dead they quietly left the room. At daylight I took some men and began the search for Harrison, and found him hanging from a banister of the Crooked river iron bridge.

The town is quiet today. Powers held inquests upon the bodies. I am not informed what the verdict in either case was. I feel conscious of having done my duty as an officer, so there I let the matter rest.

It is quite probable that the murders of Crooks and Jory were the incentives for the formation of a vigilantes committee, which organization was subsequently opposed by a party calling themselves “Moonshiners.” The latter, it is understood, represented an element standing for legality as against the court of Judge Lynch. At least the Vigilantes was organized, secretly, in the winter of 1881 and 1882, ostensibly for the protection of the county against outlawry and especially for the detection and punishment of horse thieves. It is not recorded that a horse thief was ever captured or punished by this organization, although a number of suspects were ordered to quit the range and leave the country.

But in addition to the various acts of illegal vengeance the Vigilantes are stated to have carried their operations to extremes. Through active or quiescent sympathizers they secured political control of the county government. It is stated also that few were punished legally, although evidence was overwhelming. Grand juries were hampered in their actions by active sympathizers of the Vigilantes who were picked upon for jurymen. The first act of this organization was the killing of Langdon and Harrison, as heretofore related. Their second enterprise was the shooting of Al Swartz while he was playing a game of cards in Burmeister's saloon. Swartz, it is reported, had openly defied them and was always in danger of an ambush. On the night of December 24, 1882, he entered the saloon and seated himself at the card table facing the door that he might not be taken unawares. At about ten o'clock some one walked up to the window behind Swartz and shot him once in the back of the head, killing him almost instantly.

The same night they proceeded to the house of W. C. and J. M. Barnes and shot and then hanged two young men named Sidney Huston and Charles Luster. The reason assigned for the killing of Huston was that he was planning to steal a band of horses. The real object in killing Luster was that he was a jockey who had agreed to throw a race, but had bet $60 on his own horse, which he rode and won. The next tragedy was the killing of Mike Mogan in Burmeister's saloon by J. M. Barnes. This was in the spring of 1883. As reported at the time Barnes walked up to Mogan and demanded $6 which, he claimed, Mogan owed him, stating at the same time that if he did not pay him he would shoot him. Barnes shot him through the lungs killing him almost instantly.

The last act in this series of tragedies was presented December 18, 1883, when Frank Mogan, a brother of Mike, was killed by Colonel William Thompson, colloquially known as "Bud" Thompson. Mogan had worked for Thompson and there was a disagreement between them in the settlement. They quarreled in Kelley's saloon and in moving about Thompson got behind Mogan and shot him in the back of the head causing instant death. "Not a true bill" was the verdict of the grand jury in the Thompson case; he was never punished. The widow of Mogan sued him for damages and received a judgment for $3,600, but this was never satisfied. Thompson was a bright newspaperman, and at one time was on the editorial staff of the Morning Oregonian, a newspaper published at Portland, Multnomah county. He had also been editor of a number of other papers throughout the state. He received his title of "Colonel" in the Modoc war.

The "Moonshiners" organized in the winter of 1883-4 for the purpose of putting a stop to the rather too industrious work of the Vigilantes and incidentally to gain political control of the county. Comprising it were some of the leading citizens of the county; organization was perfected in three precincts, but the party at Prineville was the leading one. Quietly they worked, but it was work that was noticeable in all portions of the county. Little, if no attention was paid to politics and they worked in unison against such men as were in sympathy with the Vigilantes. The "Moonshiners" were successful at the polls and elected nearly their whole ticket. A strong undercurrent exists among the old timers who still reside here, but it seldom appears on the surface. Some ex-members of the Vigilantes live in the county, honored and respected citizens:

February 6, 1883, the county court allowed its first bill. This was in the amount of $40 for chairs, and was in favor of Fried & Company. The members of the first jury empaneled in the new county were: T. B. James, J. Hampton, Stephen Staats, John Powell, H. Hennigan and Monroe Heisler. S. J. Newsome made the first assessment of Crook county in the spring of 1883, the amount of taxable property at that time being $1,263,000.

The first term of the circuit court was held in May, 1883, with Hon. A. S. Bennett on the bench and Hon. T. A. McBride prosecuting attorney. Elisha Barnes, one of the first justices of the peace appointed, performed the first marriage ceremony six days after the organization of the county, the high, contracting parties being Barney D. Springer and Miss Ann Todd. This ceremony was performed at the Occidental hotel. Justice Barnes also was the first mayor of the city of Prineville.

In October, 1884, the total assessment valuation of property in Crook county was $1,612,323, one-half of which was represented by cattle, horses and sheep in nearly equal proportions. It was then one of the foremost stock regions in the state. Beginning with the creation of the new county there was noticed a more permanent settlement. Strangers came into the county and secured valuable claims along the many streams debouching into the Des Chutes and Crooked rivers. Substantial buildings were erected and the agricultural and stock industries were rapidly increased. An unusual degree of prosperity prevailed and as taxes were low and the farming and stock business profitable, Crook county soon became one of the wealthiest according to population in the state.

At the general election of 1884 the following county officials were chosen: F. A. McDonald, county judge; A. C. Palmer, county clerk; J. M. Blakely, sheriff; J. H. Garrett and G. L. Frizzell, commissioners; M. D. Powell, assessor; J. T. Bushuett, treasurer; W. R. McFarland, surveyor; D. W. Aldridge, school superintendent; J. R. Stites, coroner.

Mr. McDonald was appointed register of the United States land office at The Dalles in 1885, and Charles A. Van Houten was named as his successor in the office of county judge.

In the autumn of 1885 the county court accepted the bid of H. A. Belknap of $5,474 to build a county court house under which contract the structure was accepted and completed

December 28, 1885. The bidders for this edifice were J. R. Marshall, $5,880; W. S. A. Johns, $5,667; H. Belknap, $5,474.

The legislature of 1885 detached the Beaver creek country from Grant, and made it a portion of Crook county. This district proved a very valuable addition and it is one of the wealthiest parts of the county, adding a large amount of taxable property. The severe winter of 1884-5 proved a severe blow to Crook county. Cattle, horses and sheep perished by the thousands from lack of food and shelter; financial losses to stockmen were enormous.

From the Ochoco Review of September, 1886, it is learned that the total valuation of taxable property in Crook county in 1886 was $1,347,722. September 8, 1887, a contract was entered into between the Crook county court and the Pauly Jail Building & Manufacturing Company for the construction of a county jail for the sum of $4,200. This building was accepted and paid for November 17, 1887. The taxable property for 1888 was $1,455,165.

Roads paved with wool may appear rather expensive in these days of economic industry. Yet such was the result of exorbitant freight charges in the spring of 1894. We read from the Antelope Herald of April 9th:

"We are reliably informed that the citizens of the Hay creek community are grading and repairing their public roads with wool, preferring to utilize it in this way rather than haul it to The Dalles and lose money on it. Three loads were emptied into a mudhole near Hay creek last week and covered with earth."

In April, 1894, many of the ranches along the Ochoco, especially in the upper valley, were more or less damaged by high water, in some cases largely impairing their value. In November, 1895, fire bugs appeared in northern Crook county. On the second the destructive torch was applied to about 180 tons of fine hay belonging to James Connolley on Cherry creek, and in a remarkably short space of time all of his winter's feed had ascended in smoke. This was the fourth lot of hay that had been destroyed in that section within a few weeks. It was plainly evident that unlawful efforts were being made by certain persons to drive the sheepmen out of business. The same year the population of Crook county, according to the Oregon state census, was 3,212. The livestock assessment of 1897 was: Sheep, 320,000; hogs, 1,500; horses, 10,500; mules, 250; cattle, 40,000. January 1, 1898, Mr. J. N. Williamson said:

"I will make the statement, truthfully as I think, and without any pretense of booming the county, that Crook county has withstood the pressure of the recent hard times as well as any community on the Pacific coast. There have been fewer business failures, less enforced idleness and want than elsewhere. This statement of facts simply proves the assertion that a stock raising country is the best country on earth for a poor man."

January 1, 1898, the population of Crook county was estimated at 5,000. September 10, the same year, Assessor Shown exhibited the following statement of the financial condition of the county:

Of all the Des Chutes river projects the Des Chutes Reclamation & Irrigation Company had, in 1898, proved the most successful in its aim to accomplish the purposes of its promoters. To this enterprising company must be given the credit of being the pioneers of irrigation on the Des Chutes river. The originators of the scheme were G. W. Swalley and James R. Benham. In 1898 they succeeded in interesting others in the project. In October of the following year the company was incorporated. At that period the stockholders were: W. H. Gaun, C. B. Swalley, W. R. McFarland, W. H. Birdsong, William Johnson, B. C. Low, G. W. Swalley and James R. Benham. Mr. Gaun later sold his share to the company, and some time afterward Frank Glass purchased it, making him one of the share holders.

C. M. Elkins of Prineville, also acquired a half interest in Mr. McFarland's share after an organization had been perfected. The original intention of the promoters was to select land under the Desert Land Act and encourage settlers to come in and acquire an interest in the canal by doing an equal amount of work, or by purchase of rights from the company. The appropriations of lands immediately contiguous to theirs by large concerns that afterward came in forestalled their plans, however, and caused the little company to select a small area of its own and carry out the work without further aid. They had a segregation of 1,280 acres.

CHAPTER II

PASSING EVENTS—1889 TO 1905.

Another prosperous year for Crook county was 1899. From the stock and wool sales of this year the people realized $1,010,000 which, divided among a voting population of 1,200 made $842 in money that came into the county for every male citizen over the age of twenty-one years, from the stock industry alone. During this year the county was for the first time connected with the outside world by telephone; a line was constructed between Prineville and The Dalles. Another element making for the good of Crook county was the extension of the Columbia Southern railway. This considerably lessened the distance to markets.

Nearly all the threshing done in the county in the fall of 1889 was of rye with about enough oats and barley to furnish seed for the following year. Nearly, or quite, all the flour was imported from Webfoot and other successful wheat growing localities. And yet this country was not in the midst of calamity or threatened famine. The inhabitants were as well, or better off than those of the most favored agricultural region of Oregon. They were not in an agricultural community and stock was their wealth. They had a sufficient number of horses, cattle and sheep to sell to purchase such breadstuffs they required for a decade to come. They had no worn out agricultural machinery that was not paid for, and but few were under mortgage. The poorest man in their midst could spare the price of a horse for flour.

Ten years subsequently, in 1899, it may be said that the great measure of prosperity was due to the marked conditional improvements of the past two years which had afforded ready sale for the products of the range. Probably 75 per cent of the business of the county was conducted on a credit basis, but it was a noteworthy fact that no business failures had been recorded in the history of the county. The money holdings of the people were 33 1-3 per cent greater since November 1, 1897, and fully 200 per cent greater than November 1, 1896. Gold was the principal medium of exchange; silver for change being nearly always scarce, continually making its way back to the centers of trade.

ELECTION PRECINCTS.

At a special meeting of the county court of December 11, 1899, there were present: W. C. Wills, judge; T. S. Hamilton and D. E. Templeton, commissioners; Arthur Hodges, clerk, and the following proceedings were had:

It was ordered that Crook county be divided into the following election precincts, with names and boundaries as follows:

Prineville No. 1.—The whole of that part of Crook county embraced within the corporate limits of the city of Prineville, shall be known and designated as Prineville Precinct No. 1.

Ireland No. 2.—Commencing at a point on the west boundary line of Crook county, where a line running due east and west through the center of township 18 south, crosses said boundary, running thence east to a point three miles north of the southeast corner of township 18 south of range 14 east, thence south to the southern boundary of the county; thence west to the western boundary of the county and thence north along the western boundary of the county to the place of beginning, and it shall be known and it is ordered by the court that this precinct be designated as Ireland Precinct No. 2.

Bend No. 3.—Commencing at a point three miles north of the southeast corner of township 18 south of range 14 east; thence north to a point three miles south of the northeast corner of township 16 south of range 14 east; thence west three miles; thence north three miles; thence north three miles; thence west along the township line between townships 15 and 16 south to the northwest corner of township 16 south of range 11 east; thence south six miles; thence due west twelve miles; thence south six miles; thence west six miles; thence three miles to the place of beginning, and it is ordered by the court that this precinct shall be known and designated as Bend No. 3.

Montgomery No. 4.—Commencing at the southwest corner of section 18 township 16 south of range 15 east of Willamette Meridian; thence east to the southeast corner of section 13; thence north to the northeast corner of the same section; thence west to the northwest corner of same section; thence north to the southwest corner of section 1, township 15, south of range 15 east, thence east to the southeast corner of section 6, township 15, south of range 16 east; thence north to the southern boundary of the city of Prineville; thence west and north to where the north and south line crosses Crooked river; thence down Crooked river to its junction with the Des Chutes river; thence south up the Des Chutes river to the township line between townships 15 and 16 south; thence east to the northeast corner of section 14, township 16 south of range 14 east; thence south three miles; thence east three miles to the place of beginning, and it is ordered by the court that this precinct shall be known and designated as Montgomery No. 4.

Black Butte No. 5.—Commencing at the southeast corner of township 16 south of range 11 east of Willamette Meridian; thence east to a point where the Des Chutes river crosses the township line between townships 15 and 16 south; thence north along the Des Chutes river to the mouth of the Matoles; thence at the Matoles at a point where the Matoles crosses the township line between townships 11 and 12 south; thence west to the northwest corner of township 12; thence south thirty miles to the point of beginning, and it is ordered by the court that this precinct shall be known and designated as Black Butte No. 5.

Haystack No. 6.—Commencing at the southeast corner of township 13 south of range 14 east of Willamette Meridian; thence west to intersection with Crooked river; thence down Crooked river to the junction with Des Chutes river to the mouth of Willow creek; thence up Willow creek to a point where the north and south line between ranges 14 and 15 crosses said creek; thence south to place of beginning, and it is ordered by the court that this precinct shall be known and designated as Haystack No. 6.

McKay No. 7.—Commencing at the southeast corner of township 13 south of range 14 east of Willamette Meridian; thence north four miles; thence east twelve miles; thence south seven miles; thence south three miles; west four miles; thence south three miles; thence west to the city of Prineville; thence around the city of Prineville, following the corporate limits thereof to Crooked river; thence down Crooked river to a point where the township line between townships 13 and 14 south crosses said river; thence east to place of beginning, and it is ordered by the court that said precinct shall be known and designated as McKay Precinct No. 7.

Hay Creek No. 8.—Commencing at the southeast corner of section 1, township 12, south of range 16 east of Willamette Meridian; thence north seven miles; thence west  $4\frac{3}{4}$  miles; thence north  $2\frac{1}{4}$  miles; thence west to line between range line of 14 and 15 E; thence north four miles; thence west to the Des Chutes river; thence down the Des Chutes river to a point where the said Des Chutes river crosses the boundary line of Crook county; thence west to the summit of the Cascade mountains; thence south on summit of Cascade mountains to a point where the township line between 11 and 12 crosses said line; thence due east on said line to where said line crosses Matoles; thence down Matoles river to its junction with Des Chutes river; thence down the Des Chutes river to the mouth of Willow creek; thence up Willow creek to where the range line between 14 and 15 east crosses said creek; thence north to the southeast corner of section 1, township 12 south of range 14 east of Willamette Meridian; thence east twelve miles to place of beginning, and it is ordered by the court that said precinct shall be known and designated as Hay Creek No. 8.

Willow Creek No. 9.—Commencing at a point two miles south of northeast corner of township 13, south, of range 16, east; thence north seven miles; thence west to southeast corner of section 1, township 12 south of range 14 east; thence south seven miles; thence east to place of beginning and it is ordered that said precinct be and is hereby known as Willow Creek Precinct No. 9.

Cross Keys No. 10.—Commencing at the southeast corner of section 33, township 10, south of range 16 east of Willamette Meridian; thence due north twelve miles to the boundary line of Crook county; thence west to a point where the boundary line crosses Des Chutes river; thence up the river to where the township line between townships 9 and 10 crosses said river; thence east to the southeast corner of township 9, south of range 14 east; thence south four miles; thence east  $7\frac{1}{2}$  miles; thence south  $2\frac{1}{2}$  miles; thence east  $1\frac{3}{4}$  miles to the place of beginning, and it is ordered by the court that said precinct shall be named and designated as Cross Keys Precinct No. 10.

Upper Trout No. 11.—Commencing at the southeast corner of section 1, township 12, north of range 16, east; thence due east six miles; thence due north to the county line nine miles; thence due west on the county line nine miles; thence due east three miles; thence due south seven miles to the place of beginning, and it is ordered by the court that said precinct shall be named and designated as Upper Trout Precinct No. 11.

Cherry Creek No. 12.—Commencing at the southeast corner of section 1, township 12, south of range 17 east, thence due east twelve miles to the east boundary of the county; thence north along the boundary of the county to the northern boundary of the county;

In 1873 Dr. Baldwin settled about twenty-five miles north of Prineville at a place now known as Hay creek and engaged in stock raising. At that period he owned 160 acres of land. From this small beginning there has grown up a stock ranch which is not only the largest in Oregon, but is famous the nation over for its accomplishments in raising thoroughbred sheep. Mr. Edwards was at that time manager of the company. He erected a residence costing about $7,000. In the year of the St. Louis Exposition two car-loads of the best sheep were sent there which received favorable consideration and were not brought back but were disposed of in the east. On the ranch is an extensive shearing plant the motive power of which is a gasoline engine. It has forty patent shearers and from twenty to sixty men are required to conduct it at the shearing season, and sometimes as many as a hundred men are employed.

In 1900 what was known as the "Desert country" underwent a marked and distinctive change in the way of developing into a thickly settled farming country. It was remarked by many retired owners that the days of wool growing were coming to an end; that it was then impossible to get them on to the summer ranges on account of fences. "We had to go out of our way to get through lanes" they said.

There was considerable truth in this pessimistic attitude. Sheep were increasing in numbers and fences were increasing on every hand. Yet they were only a forerunner of what soon took place in eastern and southern Oregon. While thousands of acres were barren and known as "desert land," yet within easy access to every section of this country were mountain streams with a sufficient flow of water to irrigate every section. There were every summer, prospectors, surveying parties, and capitalists looking over the field; irrigation companies were formed and ditches dug. There was scarcely a stream in the whole country that had not been explored. There were many filings on rights on streams purely for speculative purposes, and there were, also, many who had begun serious work and were already irrigating large areas of land.

Something like a stampede was made along the Des Chutes river in the western section of Crook county. This stream courses through a mountainous country and in many places on both sides, lie vast areas of rich valley lands that have been called "desert" along with all other vast sections of the country. The Oregon Irrigation company was organized in 1901 by C. C. Hutchinson. He obtained 35,000 acres of land under the Carey Act. This company afterward obtained another segregation making its holdings 56,000 acres.

In October, 1900, there was organized in Crook county and incorporated under the laws of the state, The Butte Development Company.

The main object of this corporation was to obtain water from the Des Chutes for the reclaiming a vast amount of what is commonly known as "desert" land; to lay out the two of Pilot Butte, thirty miles southwest of Prineville, on the Des Chutes; to build dams and in other ways develop the vast water power of the Des Chutes river which, at the present time, runs its entire course without turning a single wheel. At the head of this enterprise was Mr. A. M. Drake, formerly of St. Paul, where he had been interested for years with his father in railroad and land business. Ill health compelled Mr. Drake to leave St. Paul. Hearing of Central Oregon, its pure water, vast pine forests, clear, bracing air, they, Mr. Drake and his wife, passed several months in carefully looking over the advantages of Crook county. How well pleased they were may be taken for granted when it is known that they built a log house for their winter quarters at Pilot Butte.

The work, as planned by the company was thoroughly and carefully considered. An up-to-date sawmill with modern appliances for the manufacture of commercial lumber of all kinds was constructed; an electric light plant, general store and school house were among the plans for the future. The company had a segregation of 85,000 acres. Outside of the Cascade reserve Crook county contains over 6,000,000 acres of land. Of this at least 5,000,000 are vacant public lands.

Crook county has not a foot of railroad track within its borders. The nearest railroad point is Shaniko, the present terminus of the Columbia Southern, sixty miles north of Prineville, from which all goods and merchandise for the interior are handled by freight teams. Formerly all shipping was from The Dalles, 150 miles distant. This condition will not, however, long prevail. A road has been surveyed south from The Dalles following generally the course of the Des Chutes called The Dalles Southern. This would tap the best farming sections as well as the vast fields of yellow pine on the Des Chutes and further south.

After entering the Des Chutes canyon near the mouth of White River in Wasco county, it will follow up the Des Chutes to the mouth of Trout creek, thence up Hay creek to divide east of Agency plains and the Haystack country, thence south, crossing Crooked river at Carmichael's, thirteen miles northwest of Prineville, thence southwest across the "desert" back to Des Chutes river at or near Pilot Butte where it would strike the timber belt and from which point it could be extended south or southeast indefinitely to a southern or eastern connection. The Corvallis and eastern is more than a probability. It is now built to within ten miles of the western boundary of the county, at the summit of the Cascades from whence eastward through Crook, Harney and Malheur counties the route has been surveyed and definitely located, crossing the Des Chutes at Pickett island, twenty-five miles west of Prineville, thence taking a southeast course across the "desert."

This line, when built, will afford Crook the advantages of a direct route east for shipments of wool, cattle, sheep, horses and lumber. Either road will penetrate the great stretch of "desert" soon to be brought under irrigation, and the timbered portions of the county, thus opening up and aiding the development of two most important resources. With the completion of these roads as indicated and then extension of the Columbia Southern from Shaniko eastward up the John Day valley to the Sumpter and Grant county gold fields, and a connecting link between.

Shaniko down Antelope and Trout creeks to a junction with The Dalles Southern at the mouth of Hay creek, Crook county and the interior of eastern Oregon will have all the transportation facilities necessary for their proper development.

January 1, 1902, the estimated population of Crook county was 7,500. A history of the early days of the territory now within the boundaries would comprise a volume as interesting as these stories of the early settlement of the Atlantic states that have delighted the past generations and will continue to fascinate more strongly the generations yet to come. The trials, the vicissitudes, the thrilling adventures, of dangers from savage foe, and his brothers, the four-footed savages of forest and "desert" these themes will charm and warm and hold captive those who come after us as long as the love of adventure for hardy manhood and deeds of daring warm the blood in human veins.

In 1902 the total valuation of taxable property in Crook county was $1,852,281. In 1903 it had increased to $2,379,020. The Crook county census of 1903 showed 1,297 children between the ages of four and twenty years. It was claimed at the time that this signified a gross population of 6,985. This increase in the county's population was quite perceptible, especially in the eastern and central portions. In the year 1893 Crook county made a most substantial showing. The semi-annual statement of the officials showed that the county was wholly out of debt, owing liabilities of only $1,501.65, while it had in the treasury $39,378.61. The county owned a block of land on which the court house stands and all its improvements were warranted. Few counties in the state were in as good condition as Crook.

In 1903 the Columbia Southern Irrigation Company, capital $100,000, had been incorporated by W. H. Moore, E. E. Lytle, and W. A. Laidlaw. In May of the same year was incorporated the Central Oregon Irrigation Company, the capital stock of which was placed at $5,000. E. E. Lytle and Newton Killen were the incorporators. In 1904 was organized the Squaw Creek Irrigation Company, by William Wurzweiler, and it has a segregation of 11,766 acres. The Buck Mountain Irrigation Company was organized in 1904. After negotiating for the sale of its property for a period extending over a year, the Pilot Butte Development Company disposed of its contract to W. E. Guerin, J. O. Johnson, W. J. Turney, for a consideration of $70,000. The Hutchinson rights on the Des Chutes river were also included in the purchase and the sum received was about half that paid the Drake interests. The new Des Chutes Irrigation & Power Company, which now had charge of the work on the Des Chutes river had applied for 80,000 acres more land making a total appropriation of 210,000 acres. It is the intention of the present company to take out the main canal some eight miles further up the river than had been contemplated by the Pilot Butte company, thus securing 100,000 acres of land which is susceptible of cultivation. The total length of the main canal will be about 120 miles, and it is the precursor of a plan to bring 25,000 acres under these conditions.

June 23, 1904, a special meeting of the state land board apportioned the Des Chutes Irrigation lien for irrigation of the 84,600 acres of land lying under its ditches in Crook county, Oregon. This amount practically appraised the land. The rush of homeseekers had begun. About 12,000 applications for the land was made within a week by actual settlers.

In 1904 the total taxable property in Crook county was $2,688,783. In February, 1904, fire, beginning in the roof partially destroyed the second story of the court house at Prineville. The offices on the first floor and the county court room were not damaged. Damage to the upper story amounted to $2,000. It was in June, 1904, that a most desperate engagement begun in Crook county. The following letter from Prineville to The Dalles Times-Mountaineer is apropos to this subject Prineville, Oregon, June 17.—Conflicting range territory in Crook county led to the first open slaughter of sheep last Monday (June 13) when masked men shot and killed sixty-five head belonging to Allie Jones, a sheep owner residing about fifteen miles east of this city. The killing occurred on Mill creek in the vicinity of the "dead lines," the men threatening a greater slaughter if the herds were not removed instantly from the district.

The sheep were in charge of one herder who was taken unawares and was unable to offer any resistance to the attack. He was compelled to stand quietly a short distance away, guarded by one man, while the others went about their work. After sixty-five of the band had been killed the herder was told to turn the remainder back and keep them out of the territory in which they had been found.

The first outbreak in the sheep industry in this county recalls vividly the wanton slaughter which has recently occurred in Lake county and marks the first steps in the range difficulties which are likely to be encountered here during the coming season. The scene of the killing is in the territory where an effort was made a short time ago to establish lines for the sheep and cattle. Three weeks ago the district was visited by a party of sheep owners from Antelope and a meeting arranged between them and the cattlemen in the southeastern part of the county. The matter of ranging stock in the Blue mountains was gone over thoroughly, but a decision relative to the establishment of limits failed to be reached. The sheepmen went home and the slaughter this week is the result of their futile efforts to come to an understanding.

While it is not believed that open hostilities will break out between the sheepmen and cattle owners in this territory during the summer ranging months, it is asserted that an encroachment upon this disputed region by nomadic sheep will be the signal for forcible resistance. The "dead lines" of last year will be strictly enforced, which means that stockmen will not be occupying a peaceable neighborhood.

The Des Chutes Echo of June 18th, contained the following:

"The first depredation as a result of the conflicting territories occupied by the cattlemen and sheep owners in this county occurred last Monday, when sixty-five sheep belonging to Allie Jones were shot and killed on Mill creek by masked men, who threatened greater slaughter if the band were not removed from that locality. * * * * The first outbreak against the sheep marks the first step in the range difficulties. The scene of the killing is in the district in which an effort was made a short time ago to establish lines, but nothing definite was decided upon."

A meeting of the Oregon Wool Growers' Association, with a large attendance of prominent sheepmen, was held at Antelope, Tuesday, June 21st. The object of the discussion was the long continued range trouble between the cattlemen and sheepmen. As a result of the debate a reward of 500 was offered by the local association in addition to the $1,000 reward offered by the state association "For information leading to the arrest and conviction of any person or persons guilty of shooting, killing or maiming any member of the above association, or any employe of such member while engaged in his duties or the herds of such a member while engaged in his duties."

A committee consisting of J. D. McAndie and H. C. Rooper, president and secretary of the local association, and Joseph Bannan, a prominent sheepman, was appointed to go to the scene of the troubles in the Blue mountains, for the purpose of conferring with the cattlemen with reference to making lines for a summer range. The tone of the meeting was positive and emphatic. The Wool Growers' association was determined that the slaughter of sheep should stop, and each member present readily subscribed his quota of the reward offered, which was placed in the hands of the association.

These range disputes culminated in the summer of 1904 in the slaughter of 1,000 head of sheep belonging to Morrow & Keenan, owners of about 12,000 head of sheep, whose home ranch was on Willow creek, fifteen miles north of Prineville.

Morrow & Keenan were ranging a band of sheep on Little Summit Prairie, forty miles east of Prineville, and on Friday on that week twenty horsemen, with their faces blackened, overpowered the herder, bound him hand and foot and then began shooting sheep, continuing the slaughter until 1,000 were killed. The herder was alone when assaulted, but young Keenan was nearby and hearing the firing crawled through the underbrush at a safe distance, from which point he was an eye witness to the work of the mob. He made no attempt at retaliation, although it was understood that both he and the herder were armed with the latest automatic rapid-firing Colt's revolvers. No clue to the guilty parties could be obtained as the various disguises worn by the mob made identification impossible.

In default of a steam railway it was decided that an automobile route should be established in Crook county. Accordingly in January, 1905, the Central Oregon Transportation Company was established with the following officers: A. E. Hammond, president; D. P. Rea, general manager.

This company constructed a sixteen-foot roadway from Cross Keys, a stage station twenty-three miles south of Shaniko, the present terminus of the Columbia Southern railroad, to Bend, a distance of seventy-five miles. The largest automobile of its kind on the Pacific coast was especially constructed by a machine firm in Portland for use on this road, for the purpose of hauling passengers and freight. This machine will seat sixteen passengers and sometimes it, also, hauls a trailer in which about two tons of freight are carried.

This company was organized to provide means of transportation for the many settlers coming into Crook county to locate upon the newly irrigable lands of the Des Chutes Irrigation & Power Company. The latter company has selected some 300,000 acres of semi-arid lands in Crook county, lying contiguous to Bend, under the provisions of the Carey Act. Until the organization of this automobile company there were no means of egress into this region except by stage from Shaniko via Prineville, a distance of nearly 100 miles. The roadway was first plowed, then scraped, leveled and rolled with a ten-ton roller, after which it was treated with a coat of petroleum and again subjected to a thorough rolling. Up to June 1, 1905, the south half of this road from Forest, on Crooked river to Bend, a distance of twenty-three miles, had not been completed so that the automobile could run over it, but it is expected that by August the entire route will be in condition for travel. The company was capitalized for $50,000 and the seventy-five miles constructed cost in the neighborhood of $25,000. It is quite probable that when this chapter is read the remaining twenty-three miles of road to the northward will have been completed.

At the date of the completion of this work the terms of the Carey arid land grant, Oregon, applied for 424,616 acres of land in Eastern Oregon, of which 100,000 acres had been approved by the interior department. This, it is understood, will be reclaimed by private enterprise. In the Valley of the Des Chutes river, in Crook county, the most extensive works have been undertaken and the greatest progress has been made.

The federal law grants to the state not more than 1,000,000 acres upon condition that it be reclaimed. The state law authorizes the state land board to grant contracts to corporations for the reclamation of specified tracts to companies to secure their compensation from actual settlers. The total cost is fixed by the state land board for reclamation and this is apportioned among the forty-acre tracts according to their relative value, and becomes a lien upon the land in favor of the reclamation company. Persons desiring to secure this land must pay off the company's lien whereupon the state issues a deed conveying the state's title to the applicant. The title is derived by patent from the United States whenever reclamation has been proven and then by deed from the state to the settler.

As the state law accepting the terms of the Carey Act was not enacted until 1901 and considerable time was necessary to get it into practicable operation and secure contracts with the department of the secretary of the interior, very few irrigation enterprises have progressed so far that water has been turned upon cultivated land. About 5,000 acres have already been put under cultivation and water is available for the irrigation of over 60,000 acres the coming season. Twenty reclamation enterprises have been started in Oregon under this law ranging in area from 600 to 85,000 acres. The smaller tracts will be reclaimed by individuals who will take the land themselves. The larger enterprises have been undertaken by corporations. The state land board fixes the rate to be charged for the use of water. The cost of construction in the larger enterprises is placed at $10 per acre, and the annual charge is $1 per acre, which, also, goes to the company. When apportioned to the several forty-acre tracts the liens range from $2.50 to $14.75 per acre, the amount being determined by the area of irrigable land in each forty-acre tract.

In January, 1905, 500 more sheep were ruthlessly slaughtered. They were the property of Fred Smith, of Paulina. The event occurred New Year's day, and almost in Mr. Smith's doorway, and entirely without the limits of the cattle range of the country. The deed was committed by six masked horsemen. They surrounded the herder in the afternoon while the sheep were resting near Grindstone, and he was bound and blindfolded. The sheep were then driven a short distance away, and the horsemen began a terrific fusillade until 500 lay dead on the ground. About 500 more scattered in all directions to become food for coyotes, and other wild animals. July 16, 1905, the Morning Oregonian published the following:

The following anonymous communication was received yesterday from the "Crook County Sheep-Shooters' Association," with an enclosed report which it, to say the least, terse and to the point. Just who compose this remarkable organization or whether the communication is genuine is not known to the Oregonian. This is what it has to say regarding the enforcement of so-called laws in Crook county:

"Mr. Editor.—Seeing that you are giving quite a bit of publicity to the sheep-shooters of Crook county, I thought I would lend you some assistance by giving you a short synopsis of the proceedings of the organization during the past year. We have not been accustomed to making unusual reports of the doings of the 'order,' but we have made such a respectable showing during the closing year that I think a brief summary of some of the most important transactions of the associations will be of interest to your readers. Therefore, if space will permit, please publish the following report:

"Sheep-Shooters' Headquarters, Crook County, Oregon, December 29, 1904—Editor Oregonian: I am authorized by the association (The Inland Sheep Shooters) to notify the Oregonian to desist from publishing matter derogatory to the reputations of sheep-shooters in Eastern Oregon. We claim to have the banner county of Oregon on the progressive lines of sheep-shooting and it is my pleasure to inform you that we have a little government of our own in Crook county, and we would thank the Oregonian and the governor to attend strictly to their business and not meddle with the settlement of the range question in our province.

"We are the direct and effective means of controlling the range in our jurisdiction. If we want more range we simply fence it in and live up to the maxim of the golden rule that possession represents nine points of the law. If fencing is too expensive for the protection of the range, dead lines are most effective substitutes and readily manufactured. When sheepmen fail to observe these peaceable obstructions we delegate a committee to notify offenders, sometimes by putting notices on tent or cabin, and sometimes by publication in one of the leading newspapers of the county as follows:

Scene on the Deschutes

"You are hereby notified to move this camp within twenty-four hours or take the consequences.

"Signed: COMMITTEE."

"These mild and peaceful means are usually effective, but in cases where they are not, our executive committee takes the matter in hand, and being men of high ideals as well as good shots by moonlight, they promptly enforce the edicts of the association.

"We have recently extended our jurisdiction to cover a large territory on the desert heretofore occupied by sheepmen, and we expect to have to sacrifice a few flocks of sheep there this winter. Our annual report shows that we have slaughtered between 8,000 and 10,000 head during the last shooting season, and we are expecting to increase this respectable showing during the next season providing the sheep hold out and the governor and Oregonian observe the customary laws of neutrality. We have burned the usual number of camps and corrals this season, and also sent out a number of important warnings which we think will have a satisfactory effect.

"We have just received a shipment of ammunition that we think will be sufficient to meet any shortage which might occur on account of increase of territory requiring general protection. In some instances the woolgrowers of Eastern Oregon have been so unwise as to offer rewards for the arrest and conviction of sheepshooters and for assaults on herders. We have heretofore warned them by publication of the danger of such action, as it might have to result in our organization having to proceed on the lines that 'Dead men tell no tales.' This is not to be construed as a threat to commit murder, as we do not justify such a thing except when flockowners resort to unjustifiable means in protecting their property.

"Mr. Editor, please excuse the lack of systematic order in preparing this, our first annual report. Our office is not yet supplied with the necessary printed forms so useful in facilitating reports. We have thought of furnishing the names of our officers, and also those of honorary members of the order, but as your space will probably not admit of a supplementary report at this time, we will not be able to furnish a roll of honor that will be complimentary to the cause.

"(Signed.)"

"CORRESPONDING SECRETARY."

"Crook County's Sheep-Shooting Association of Eastern Oregon."

SUPPLEMENTARY REPORT.

"The New Year was duly observed by our brave boys by the slaughter of about 500 head of sheep belonging to a gentleman who had violated our rules or laws. The names of the active participants in this last brilliant action of the association have not yet been handed in. When they are we will take pleasure in recording them on the roll of honor above mentioned.

"The Crook county papers have recently said some uncomplimentary things about our order which may invite attention later on. Our work is now of too much importance to justify a diversion from the regular order of business.

"COR. SEC. C. C. S. S. ASSOCIATION."

Concerning the railway outlook the Cline Falls Press of April 22, 1905, said

"The prospects of a railroad being built into Crook county and Cline Falls looks brighter from day to day. Among the several roads which have their objective points centered in Crook county, the Great Southern seems to be the most likely to reach us in the least possible time. John Heimrick, president of this road, says it will be built from The Dalles to Bend with as little delay as possible, and as more than thirty miles of the road is already graded it would appear that he means what he says. But this is not the only reason why things are looking a bit brighter. The business men of Portland are getting in earnest and are using every means at hand to force those who are responsible for the delay in building into this county, to act. They want the trade of central Oregon and know that their only hope lies in getting it well established before others arrive to dispute it and direct it into other channels."

In April, 1905, the D. I. & P. Company had thirty men at work on the Pilot Butte flume, and would have hired more good carpenters at $3 a day if they could have been secured. The flume was intended to send water down the canal by May 1, 1905. Ten miles out on the desert it was found necessary to build a flume 720 feet long. Lumber for their construction was hauled there from the High-tower Smith Mill, beyond the Tumalo. The D. I. & P. Company has completed fifty miles of ditch and laterals and has under water about 50,000 acres. The Bend Bulletin of April 28, 1905, said:

"W. E. Guerin, Jr., Mayor Goodwillie, G. C. Stennemann and Tom Sharp drove over to Prineville Monday and set on foot there a scheme to irrigate 37,000 acres of rich land in the valley to the eastward of the town. About 6,000 acres are deeded; 15,000 belong to the railroad company, and the remainder, 16,000 acres is open government land.

"As outlined the plan is to dam the Ochoco river twice and Mill creek once. Surveys that have been in progress for some time show the feasibility of leading the water out of those streams to the thirsty acres that are now only half cropped at best. It will take between $600,000 and $700,000 to install the reclamation enterprise.

"The Prineville Business League has taken the matter up in earnest. There was a large attendance and free discussion of the project at a meeting held last Monday night and T. M. Baldwin, Thomas Sharp and C. Sam Smith were appointed a committee to visit Portland and see what can be done with the wagon road people in the way of securing encouragement for the work. Mr. Guerin will leave for New York next week in the interest of the new development project."

Meanwhile rumors had been freely circulated that the D. I. & P. Company had made arrangements to dispose of their enterprise in Crook county. The main portion of these pessimistic reports emanated from the columns of the Morning Oregonian, published at Portland. The appearance in Prineville of J. O. Johnston, of the D. P. & I. Company at once put a stop to these rumors.

"It is not an unusual rule," said Mr. Johnston, "for men who are financing a scheme of such proportions as that in the Des Chutes valley, to look over their ground thoroughly and know the exact amount which will have to be expended before an enterprise is brought to a successful termination. Our company is no exception to that rule, and there are ample funds to provide for everything in the undertaking. It is true that we laid off a force of men some time ago; but that was made necessary by the delay in the rock work at the end of the flume. Until that was finished it was necessary to haul water some twelve or fifteen miles on to the desert to the crew working on the ditch and we found it to be to our interest to lay off the latter force until the rock-work was completed and water flowing in the ditch so far as construction of it permitted. The report of a prospective sale may have gained ground by this action of ours, but it was, nevertheless, without foundation. We have paid cash and a lot of it for everything as we went along and we expect to continue this course in the future until every detail of the reclamation work is completed. There is a check ready and waiting for anyone who is dissatisfied."

May 4, 1905, the scheme promoted by the Citizens' Business League to irrigate 40,000 acres of land lying north of Prineville was practically assured. Sheriff Smith, who was a member of the committee appointed to confer with

Mr. C. E. S. Wood, the Portland representative of the Willamette Valley & Cascade Mountain Wagon Road Company stated that the conference was satisfactory in every respect, and Mr. Wood assured the road company's co-operation in the undertaking. This signified that the latter corporation would agree to a disposal of its lands as soon as water had been brought to them.

During the absence of the committee M. E. Guerin, Jr., who had been a prime mover in the project and who had assured the league financial backing in the event of favorable action by the road company, received a telegram from New York stating that the necessary funds were available with which to construct the reservoirs and canals necessary to reclaim the tract. The Crook County Journal said May 4, 1905:

Sheriff Smith while in Portland was approached by others who offered enough funds to complete the project, as it is certain that the money will be forthcoming with which to carry the scheme to a successful and early termination. The amount of money necessary for the reclamation work is placed at $500,000 and it is believed considerably less than that sum will eventually finish all details of the scheme.

Inside of a few days the financial matters will be definitely arranged and preparations will then be made for the engineering work, after which the reservoirs and canals will be constructed. Sheriff Smith expressed the belief that the final surveys can all be complete by the first of July, in which event actual construction will begin soon afterwards. With the latter work pushed ahead rapidly almost the entire tract can be brought under irrigation before the present year has elapsed.

The first definite move toward securing transportation facilities for the Crook county section of Eastern Oregon was the filing of a water right on the falls at the mouth of Willow creek. This was in May, 1905. Negotiations were then, too, pending with the Willamette Valley & Cascade Mountain Wagon Road Company to secure a lease or the right to purchase from them Steel Head Falls, below the lower bridge on the Des Chutes river. At these two points sufficient electrical power can be developed to supply a current capable of running electric cars from the Columbia to the Central portion of Crook county. The action taken was in line with the proposition outlined by Archie Mason some time ago when he visited the city. In representing Portland and eastern capitalists he was in a position to state that if the business men here advanced enough money to build the first ten miles of road south of the Columbia and secured right of way the balance of the distance to Prineville, the necessary funds would be forthcoming with which to take up the bonds. When here Mr. Mason stated that only the securing of right of way was now necessary to enlist the necessary capital, and steps were immediately taken to seal the agreement and advance along the lines proposed. This prospective line will touch the Columbia at The Dalles or some point on the Portage road and will continue southward through the canyon of the Des Chutes river to the mouth of Trout creek, thence eastward across the agency plains to Crooked river, and up the latter stream to this city.

Early in 1905 the Columbia Southern Irrigation Company, which succeeded the Three Sisters Irrigation Company, had completed about thirty-five miles of ditches and laterals, and had nearly all of its segregation of 30,000 acres reclaimed. They took the water from the Tumalo river and the land lies in the Tumalo basin, west of the Des Chutes river.

Tuesday, May 23, 1905, was the day set for opening to entry a large area of land south of Bend which had been withdrawn for forestry purposes. This land had been open to settlement since January 5, 1905, the purpose of the department being to offer every facility to those who wanted lands for homes—to give them every advantage over scrippers or others desiring the land for other purposes. Of thirty-five applications filed in the Bend office on the first day for 3,400 acres, all but six were homesteads. The homesteaders do not have to hurry. Those who have made bona fide settlements and improvements and occupied the land on the twenty-third had ninety days in which to get their application on record at the district land office.

PRINEVILLE.

The first question one naturally asks upon arrival at Prineville is "Where are all the tillable acres for the maintenance of the several hundreds of inhabitants of this inland town?" But let one remain a week or two and his understanding of conditions will have attained a much broader scope. Prineville cannot boast of long stretches of waving fields of golden grain in its immediate vicinity but she has much else of material value.

This pretty little city, the county seat of Crook county, is situated on a level plain at the junction of Crooked river and Ochoco creek, the greater portion of the city lying between them. Prineville has been called the treasure house of a "vast pastoral empire." In many respects this is true. A large area of country pays this city tribute and in consequence it is one of the best trading centers in the Inland Empire.

Mr. Barney Prine and his wife, Elizabeth, came to the Ochoco valley in 1868. They settled down upon the present site of Prineville, Mr. Prine building a small log cabin of willow logs near where Med Vanderpool's house stood in 1900. Mr. Prine at first opened a blacksmith shop and subsequently a small store. These two, Barney and his wife were followed by the Hodges, Vanderpools, Gullifords, Allens and W. G. Pickett, who built houses. Thus was started a small town named Prineville, after Mr. Prine. Having engaged in the blacksmithing, mercantile business, saloon keeping and stock raising, Mr. Prine sold out his property in Prineville and removed to Weston.

The capital of Crook is about as near the center of the county as possible and is, therefore, the natural location for the county seat with stage lines in every direction. Going into details more thoroughly concerning the early history of Prineville a writer in 1870 says:

During that summer Barney Prine started Prineville by building a dwelling house, store, blacksmith shop, hotel and saloon. I think he was all of one day building them. They were constructed of willow logs, 10 by 14 in size, one story high and all under one roof. His first invoice of goods cost $80; his liquor consisted of a case of Hostetter's Bitters, and the iron for the blacksmith shop was obtained from the fragments of an old emigrant wagon left up on Crooked river. In addition to his other business ventures Barney laid out and made a race track that ran from the banks of Crooked river up along where now is the north side of First street, and many were the bottles of Hostetter's lost and won over that track by the local racers of the period. Right here I want to tell of the first poker game played in this country which was also my first venture in that direction.

A few days before the game some one from The Dalles had brought out a wagon-load of apples which Barney had purchased. On this day I happened to go to the "town" and Barney took me out and very solicitously inquired if I was versed in the mysteries of "draw," stating that if I would go in with him we could make a "raise" out of some Warm Spring Indians who were camped on the river and wanted a game. I very frankly confessed my almost criminal ignorance in that useful branch of a boy's education; that my parents had not been able to send me to college, so my education was limited to a country school grade; but I was willing to learn; as he told me that if I would sit just to his right and "cut" the cards just to his "break" we would go through those Indians like a case of the itch in a country school. I consented and we soon had the game in full blast; Barney and I and two of the Indians. Barney would run up hands and I would "cut," generally using both hands to get the "cut" correct. My work was a little "coarse" but I got there "Eli" all the same. Those Indians could speak only two English words, "I passe," and every time Barney and I would get in a good shuffle and "cut" those confounded heathen would ejaculate "I passe," with a unanimity that was paralyzing to our hope as it was astonishing, and when it came their turn to deal, the surprising hands that would be out! But the most singular part of it all was, invariably one of the condemned Indians would have the top hand, and it was not long before the Indians had all of Barney's money, and I am inclined to believe that it was all the money in the settlement at that time. After our money had all been lost we bet apples at $4 a box, and it was not long before the Indians had won the entire load of apples. Then the game stopped. We were busted. We had nothing else the Indians wanted. I stood and watched them load their ponies with the apples and when they started off I turned to my partner and whispered, "Barney, I passe." He just snorted and said that any one was a blanked fool to play with a blankety blank "Stoten Bottle," though what resemblance there was between those Indians and a stoten bottle I couldn't perceive.

Barney was a good fellow; a man who stood by a friend and was always willing to divide the last crust with any one who needed it. I remember that one fall some strangers who were camped on the creek had the misfortune to lose everything they had by fire, leaving them destitute. Barney went down into his pocket and gave them $20, and I am certain that at that time he did not have a mate to that twenty.

The second store in Prineville was built and occupied by William Heisler, with a stock of general merchandise. This was in 1871. The first hotel in the town was erected by Monroe Hodges in 1871. The first Baptist church of Prineville was organized April 15, 1873. The first post-office in Crook county was established at Prineville in 1873, with Dr. L. Vanderpool as postmaster. The third store in Prineville was erected by Hodges & Wilson in 1876. It carried a stock of general merchandise. The Prineville flouring mill was built by James Allen in 1875. After operating it for a time, he sold the property to Breyman & Summerville, who conducted it until they sold to Stewart & Pett, the former one of the present owners. L. Senders & Company established a general merchandise business in 1882 and continued for five or six years. In 1884 the mercantile firm of Uren & Childs was established, who sold, in a few years, to W. F. Fuller & Company. This last firm bought out Hahn & Fried. M. Sichel & Company started business in 1881 and retired in 1881. In 1881 R. Rowan & Son opened a tin and hardware store and retired later. I. L. Ketchum started a shoe shop in 1877. The county court house was built in the fall of 1885 by H. A. Belknap. The Prineville public school building was erected in 1887. In 1887 D. E. Templeton & Son opened a drug store and still conduct the same. In 1887, P. B. Poindexter opened a restaurant in Prineville. In 1889 Ah Tye, an American Chinaman, opened a notion store which he conducted a number of years and then sold. M. A. Moore began business in Prineville in 1891, first doing harness work and later opened a drug store. Dr. C. A. Cline opened a dentist office in 1891. Mesdames Cline and Elliott engaged in millinery in 1892 and continued some time. In August, 1897, Will Wurzweiller and A. Thomson opened a general merchandise store, and in July, 1900, Arthur secured an interest in the firm. The initial drug store was built and conducted by Dr. L. Vanderpool in 1876.

Prineville's second hotel was erected by Oliver P. Jackson in 1876 and was conducted by him until about 1880, when the management passed into the hands of A. B. Culver. In 1876 Prineville contained a population of upwards of 200. The townsite plat of Prineville was filed for record in the office of the clerk of Wasco county March 28, 1877. It consisted of seventeen full, and five, half blocks. The blocks were 240 feet square and were divided into six lots each. The streets were eighty feet in width with the exception of Main street, which was 100 feet wide.

June 3, 1878, two desperadoes, Van Allen and Jeff Drips, came into Prineville and attempted to "run" it according to their own peculiar ideas. To this presumptuous proceeding the citizen's did not take kindly and a street fight was immediately precipitated. Following this row a warrant was issued for their arrest and Deputy Sheriff James T. Chamberlain was ordered to serve it. The desperadoes resisted. Allen was killed; Drips escaped but was captured the same night by Jerry Luckey, taken to The Dalles for trial and was acquitted.

The first religious structure erected was a union church built in 1879. The initial brick building was erected in Prineville by J. M. Powell & Company, in 1879, and was utilized as a general merchandise store. Prineville was incorporated as a town October 23, 1880, by special charter by the Oregon legislature. An amended charter was granted February 14, 1887. An amended charter incorporating Prineville as a city was granted February 16, 1899. A Prineville correspondent of The Dalles Times, September 16, 1880, wrote:

Prineville is becoming quite an important village and we naturally feel somewhat slighted to be ignored, neglected and overlooked by the newspapers of our own county. * * * * Our town is growing quite rapidly. Several more or less pretentious residences have been erected this summer and fall. Mr. Selling of Portland has a large store building nearly completed. This will make three dry goods establishments in the place. We, also, have a variety store, a drug store, furniture store, harness and saddlery establishment, several blacksmith shops, a planing mill, two livery stables and two first-class hotels, one of them kept by Oliver Jackson and the other by Dan Richards—than whom there is no more obliging and attentive hotel keeper extant.

The Prineville city council convened for the first time December 22, 1880, E. Barnes presiding. The members of this initial council were: F. E. Whittaker, Alexander Hodges, J. Wilson and D. Richards. The original town officers of the young city were: Elisha Barnes, mayor; S. J. Newsom, recorder; Richard Philhaber, marshal; A. H. Breyman, treasurer and George Noland, town attorney.

Prineville was visited by a disastrous blaze at four o'clock a. m., Saturday, November 10, 1883. The fire originated in the kitchen of the Occidental hotel, but was not discovered until it had burst into uncontrollable flames. Everything was as dry as tinder; the fire spread with wonderful rapidity through the rooms, and it soon became evident that the entire building was doomed. The flames were not checked until the principal business houses on one side of the street were destroyed. The losses were estimated as follows: William Circles, Occidental hotel, $9,000; R. R. Kelly, hotel furniture, saloon fixtures, etc., $1,200; H. A. Dillard's new building, $1,500; Mrs. M. A. Holbert, millinery, $400; News office, $300; A. Hodges, store building, partially insured $2,800. The stock of Selling & Winkler was damaged to a considerable extent.

At one o'clock, Saturday morning, January 19, 1884, another fire visited the place. The merchandise store of Selling & Hinckley, a vacant store building adjoining Kelly's saloon, T. Bushnell's harness shop, an unoccupied building in close proximity, S. Wilson's saloon and Til Glazes' livery stable were soon reduced to a mass of ruins. Here the flames were checked by an upon space. The total loss was estimated at $10,000, with insurance of $3,300. This blaze was undoubtedly the work of an incendiary.

The first bank in Prineville was opened in May, 1887, and was known as the First National Bank of Prineville. In 1899 Prineville was re-incorporated as a city with a mayor and six councilmen. January 1, 1900, the population of the town was estimated at 1,000. House Bill No. 275, which passed the legislature early in 1900, was for the re-incorporation of the city of Prineville; the corporate limits were as follows:

"Section 3—The corporate limits of the city of Prineville shall be as follows: Commencing at the northwest corner of the southwest quarter of section 31, township 14, south range 16, east of the Willamette Meridian, Crook county, Oregon, and running thence east one mile; thence south one mile; thence west  $\frac{3}{4}$  of one mile to the southwest corner of the southeast quarter of the northeast quarter of section 6, township 15, south range 16 east of the Willamette Meridian, Crook county, Oregon; thence north eighty rods; thence west one mile; thence north to the township line between townships fourteen and fifteen south; thence east on township line to the northwest corner of the southeast quarter of section 6 township 15, south, range 16 east; thence north one-half mile and to the place of beginning."

At a special meeting of the city council in July, 1899, an agreement was entered into with M. S. G. Howeson, representing Morris & Whitehead, bankers of Portland, to sell them $10,000 worth of water bonds. The amount of $5,000 was to be delivered August 1st; and $5,000 January 1, 1900. Mayor L. N. Liggett published the following in the Portland Morning Oregonian of January 1, 1900:

The past year has been an eventful one for Prineville. One year ago, isolated from the outer world—120 miles from railroad and telegraph communication—today we have a railroad building toward our city, and we are also in telephone connection with Portland and other cities. With the ushering in of the New Year we expect to have a system of water works and electric light plant in full operation. The city has issued bonds to the amount of $10,000. These have been sold and the amount turned over to H. V. Gates, who has part in this system.

During the past year thirty or forty buildings have either been remodeled or erected. Many more would have been built if sufficient building material could have been obtained. Next year the building will be resumed and the outlook is very flattering for another year. The population of Prineville is nearing the 1,000 mark. New-comers are constantly arriving in our city asking employment or looking for business locations, having heard of our city's thrift. The business interests of Prineville are in the hands of wide-awake, energetic and progressive business men. Good public schools are maintained and the city is well supplied with churches and newspapers.

The claim for a new charter enlarging the powers of the city council demanded the attention of this body at the beginning of the year 1900. Through the efforts of Hon. J. N. Williamson, legislative representative from Crook county, one passed the legislature and became a law February 16, 1899. The new charter legalized all existing ordinances except when they conflicted with the new charter. Consequently the city of Prineville was occasioned considerable expense in drafting ordinances in conformity to the new charter.

The First Presbyterian church of Prineville was organized in November, 1900, by the committee of the East Oregon Presbytery, with eleven members. David E. Templeton was elected and installed elder. Six trustees were elected and instructed to incorporate. B. F. Harper was called to become the permanent pastor of the new church. Lew Johnson was secured to assist in a series of special meetings beginning January 6th.

The following shows the number and amount of money orders issued at Prineville's postoffice from January 1, 1897, to and inclusive of December 15, 1900:

	No.	Amount.
1897.....	2,855.....	$29,924.99
1898.....	3,248.....	31,313.69
1899.....	3,475.....	33,632.36
1900.....	3,402.....	32,896.42

Receipts from the sale of stamps for the same years were: 1897, $1,820.72; 1898, $2,339.31; 1899, $2,540.01; 1900, up to November 30, $2,300.73.

This office is the distributing center for the following mail lines: Prineville to Burns, 162 miles, two round trips per week; Prineville to Sisters, 38 miles, three round trips per week; Prineville to Crook, 48 miles, two round trips per week; Prineville to Lamonta, 16 miles, six round trips; Prineville to Silver Lake, 102 miles, two round trips; Prineville to Mitchell, 55 miles, three round trips; total number of offices served on these routes, 26; total mileage routes terminating at Prineville, 496. Prineville was raised to a third class office July 1, 1900, with a salary of $1,200 and clerk hire.

The year 1901 was marked by unusual building activity. More structures were erected than for the preceding five years. There was, also, a noticeable change in the style and quality of the buildings in that those erected that year were of a substantial character and the architectural designs of the latest approved styles. Expenditures for improvements approximated $150,000. April 20, 1901, the Prineville Review published the following:

The question of water supply for irrigation purposes in the city was again agitated this week. On the arrival of Mr. Gates in Prineville he made a proposition to sell the Maling ditch to the city for $1,100. At a meeting of the council held Saturday afternoon he made his proposition to the city and a committee was appointed by them to canvass the city and ascertain the wish of the citizens in this matter, and as many had signified their willingness to give a bonus to the city in paying for the ditch, a subscription paper was circulated and about $450 was subscribed and the citizens were nearly unanimous in favor of the city purchasing the ditch.

Another meeting of the council was held Monday afternoon and these matters fully laid before the council and it was then on motion decided to purchase said ditch from Messrs. Gates and Forsythe for the sum of $1,100 and the judiciary committee was instructed to draft the necessary ordinance to authorize this purchase and report at a future meeting. A committee was appointed to make a report of the necessary repairs to be made to the ditch, and be in a condition to commence active work on the construction of a dam as soon as the necessary papers can pass between the parties interested.

The citizens of Prineville have asked that the council purchase this ditch and they have done so. It has been a good investment as we believe. The water right alone is worth the purchase price. This right takes 350 inches of the water and during the summer Ochoco does not carry more than that.

Mr. Pringle who owns the irrigating ditch north of the Ochoco has a ditch commencing in the city limits and extending on below town for several miles, and he was an applicant for the purchase of this right. But Mr. Gates gave the city the first chance and they took it, hence Mr. Pringle has a good piece of property in his ditch but the most important thing of all, has no water, which is to be regretted as his ditch passes along some very fine land.

A water and electric light plant was erected in Prineville, in May, 1900. The last charter granted the town in 1898, made provisions for these plants and the Prineville Light & Water Company was formed for the purpose of supplying them. The water is taken from a system of 22 wells, and is absolutely pure. Two duplex Dean pumps 14x12x7 inches are used, lifting eight hundred gallons per minute and discharging it into the reservoir situated north of the town, and about ninety feet above it. This reservoir has a capacity of 100,000 gallons, and is cemented and housed so that nothing can contaminate the water. The pressure for domestic purpose is 40 pounds, but in case of fire the valves of the pipes of the reservoir are closed and the direct pressure from the pumps is thrown into the mains. The pumps have a capacity of more than 1,000,000 gallons per day, while the average daily use is almost 50,000 gallons. They are used in the system 7,000 feet of 4-inch, and 4,000 feet of 2½ inch mains, besides the usual quantities of service pipes. For fire protection there are five patent hydrants and 20 Don muzzle hydrants, 2½ inch. The electric light plant is in the same building. It furnishes 500 16-candle power light. There is a provision in the franchise that the city, upon proper notice at the end of each term of five years may purchase the plant, otherwise the franchise runs for 15 years.

Evidently determined to keep in line with the steady march of prosperity, Prineville seems alert to the best interests of Crook county. To this end, in August, 1904, between 30 and 40 business men of Prineville met at Athletic hall and effected an organization to be known as the Citizens Business League of Prineville. The officers were as follows: T. M. Baldwin, president; C. M. Elkins, vice president; M. R. Elliott, secretary, and A. H. Lippman, treasurer. The board of directors consisted of Fred Wilson, C. Sam Smith and T. H. LaFollette. This meeting was called at the instigation of a number of the business men in the city who had felt for some time the necessity of a commercial organization, or promotive association of some kind which would run hand in hand with the rapid development of the county. Following his election as president Mr. Baldwin stated that for its foundation, progress and the betterment of civic conditions and the taking of an active part in the building up of Crook county, the league, through its board of directors and committees appointed by the president saw that Crook, and the business centers of Crook county, received a bountiful share of advertising. Its resources were made known to the outside world through the use of circular letters sent in reply to numerous inquiries concerning the county which were constantly received. Statistics and data concerning the agricultural, timber, mining and irrigation interests, were gathered and kept on file where publicity could at any time be given them. It was decided at the local meeting that the league should become a member of the Oregon Development League, with headquarters at Portland. Carl Abrams writes to the Prineville Herald under date of November 24, 1904:

The growth and development of Prineville has been slow, but it has never flagged; there never was a time in which any doubt existed as to the future of the city, and it has always been known as one of the best trading points in Eastern Oregon. Such a thing as a boom is entirely unknown, and today the city does not present the beautiful picture of fine buildings and picturesque avenues which might be expected, or which are possible, and the reason is apparent to the economic student. Men by the score have gone to Prineville and engaged in business only to reap a golden harvest for their efforts, and then move to the valley or some larger city, and the result is that some of the largest business houses in Oregon are transacting their business in wooden structures, some of them almost a makeshift. However, this is all now past. Merchants are recognizing the vast possibilities of the future for Crook county and hence for the city. They have determined to become permanent residents of Prineville, are almost without exception heavily interested in Prineville property, and last summer a building boom was inaugurated, with the result that the prediction is now made that within two years every business house on Main street will be of brick, and many of them will be erected next year.

As a trading center it stands alone, and holds almost undisputed control of the largest region of country in the United States not traversed by a railroad. In order to supply the needs of so large a territory for transportation, large stocks of merchandise are necessary, yet the necessity is always fully met and every want supplied by the energetic firms doing business in the city. No city in Oregon is better supplied with live business houses in almost every line, yet there is so far no exclusive cigar or confectionary stores, and the need of a steam laundry is keenly felt and this field offers enticing opportunities to one in that line of business. In November, 1904, the present houses included four general merchandise stores, three drug stores, two variety stores, one grocery, two meat markets, two jewelry stores, five saloons, two hotels, one restaurant, two barber shops, two public halls, three livery and feed stables, five boarding and lodging houses, a brewery, two dental offices, three physicians, five attorneys, three lumber yards, one planing mill and one flouring mill. There were three churches—Methodist, Presbyterian and Baptist denominations.

The bank statement for the quarter ending October 1, 1904, is a good index to the financial condition of the city of Prineville. The open deposits subject to check at that time amounted to $277,270.36, which takes into account none of the numerous time deposits.

In November, 1904, it was joyfully announced that Prineville was in communication by telephone with Shaniko and The Dalles, and had six stage lines running to Shaniko, Burns, Sisters, Crook, La Monta, Silver Lake, Mitchell and Bend. The total mileage of these routes was 476. A total of 26 offices were served by these stage lines.

During the year 1904 there were over 10,000,000 pounds of freight forwarded from Prineville. These figures did not, however, include the many tons of freight which have been hauled through Prineville to Burns, or the freight shipped in from the railroad by individuals, stockmen and others.

In May, 1904, a deed to the land lying south of the high school which is to be converted into a city park, was received and placed on record. This deed came from the Willamette Valley and Cascade Mountain Wagon Road Company, and was obtained only through the tireless efforts of Mr. Elliott. The land was easily worth $2,000 and the city owed its thanks to Mr. Elliott for the interest he took in the matter and his influence and work in securing the tract as a gift to Prineville. Probably in the future Mr. Elliott's work will be more generally felt than it is at present. Some of the results of the Citizens' Business League was a new $3,000 roadway, and final arrangements practically made for the reclamation of 40,000 acres of land in the immediate vicinity of which was directly traceable to a civic organization.

Prineville since 1873: Dr. L. Vanderpool; D. E. Thomas; T. M. Baldwin; J. F. Moore; A. C. Palmer; P. B. Howard; M. A. Moore; George Summers. The present city officials, 1905, are: William Wurzweiler, Mayor; F. W. Wilson, A. H. Lippman, J. W. Wigle, Walter O'Neil, D. F. Stewart, and W. F. Stewart, councilmen; J. L. McCulloch, treasurer; M. H. Bell, recorder; R. P. Harrington, marshal.

During the early days of 1905 the population of Prineville was quoted at 1,000. It is located 200 miles southeast of Portland and 64 miles south of Shaniko, the shipping point. It is the center of a fine stock raising country and has two live weekly newspapers, the Prineville Review and the Crook County Journal; electric lights, water works, two banks, flouring mill, brewery and fire department, long distance telephone connections, daily stage to Shaniko and six other stage lines to interior points and a daily mail. Religious denominations are represented by the Methodist Episcopal, Baptist, Presbyterian and Christian churches.

Following is the Fraternal Society directory of Prineville:

CHAPTER IV

OTHER CITIES AND TOWNS.

BEND AND VICINITY.

The town of Bend is situated on the Des Chutes river on the line between the desert and the vast yellow pine belt about 25 miles southwest of Prineville. Its altitude is 3,618 feet above sea level. In May, 1904, the ground upon which now stands the city of Bend was a portion of the great Central Oregon Desert. Nine months later $100,000 had been expended in the construction of business blocks and residences.

The townsite of Bend was platted May 31, 1904, by the Pilot Butte Development Company, A. M. Drake, president, and is situated in section 32, township 17, south range 12 E. W. M. Under the management of this company the town came rapidly to the front. Bend is headquarters of numerous irrigation enterprises that are now reclaiming hundreds of thousands of acres of rich land in Central Oregon. It is connected with other points by long distance telephone and there is, also, a local exchange. The roadway for an automobile line between Bend and Shaniko has been completed.

In the "front yard" of Bend lie half a million of acres of irrigated land, and its "back yard" holds about forty billion feet of merchantable pine. There is no chance elsewhere for a mill pond between Bend and the Columbia river, nor can a location for one be found for many miles to the south of the town. That is one reason why manufacturing interests will, eventually, center here. Moreover the configuration of the country makes it peculiarly easy to railroad logs to this point, and lumbering concerns that will employ 7,500 men have already arranged for manufacturing sites at Bend. The Pilot Butte Development company which owns the townsite, controls a total of 125,000 horsepower at three points on the river within twenty miles of the town.

Bend has had about the most rapid growth ever seen in the northwest. Later A. L. Goodwillie came out from Chicago and became associated with Mr. Drake in ownership of the townsite and allied interests.

Bend is not North or South Bend or Horseshoe Bend—just Bend, Crook county, Oregon. It was known as Farewell Bend in pioneer times, when travelers followed down the river to the ford near Pilot Butte, bidding farewell to the Des Chutes and broke across the desert to the eastward. The name, too long for busy moderns, has been felicitously shortened to "Bend," the only Bend in the United States.

The conveniences of modern business and social life, are multiplying rapidly. September 4, 1904, a bank capitalized at $25,000 was established.

In January, 1903, Bend has been wiped off the map of Oregon, and "Deschutes" duplicated by the third ex-postmaster general. This, however, proved a temporary arrangement, as a remonstrance was at once forwarded to the postmaster general by the people of Sherman county, as they, already, had a postoffice by that name in Sherman county. Consequently it was renamed Bend a short time subsequently.

The First Presbyterian Church of Bend was organized Monday evening, July 20, 1903, but the society has not, so far, erected a building. The thirty miles of telephone line between Bend and Prineville was completed Wednesday morning August 17, 1904. Th officers of the company were W. E. Guerin, Jr., president; A. L. Goodwillie, vice president, secretary and treasurer;

Gerald Grosbeck, manager. During the year 1904 up to November 11th eighty buildings had been erected in Bend at a total combined value of $75,000. The Baptist church of Bend, a comfortable building, was completed in December, 1904 at a cost of about $2,800. The same year the question of incorporating the town came up before the people and the election was held at Bend with the following result: For incorporation, 104- against incorporation, 3; Mayor, A. L. Goodwillie; council, C. W. Merrill, C. H. Erickson, J. S. West, D. McMullan, C. M. Redfield, and F. G. Shonquest; recorder, J. W. Lawrence; treasurer, F. O. Minor; marshal, E. R. Lester.

The Bend Light, Water & Power Company was incorporated early in December, 1904, with a capital of $100,000.

In December, 1904, the Methodists of Bend organized a church society and Sunday school. In January, 1905, a contract was awarded to Brasterhous Brothers by the city council to build a jail. The contract bid was $292.32.

In April, 1905, a crew of 25 men were put to work laying water-mains. This work was completed from the river up to Wall street and along Wall nearly to Oregon. From that point south a number of rock points were encountered which made progress slower. The pipes were put down three feet, the trench being left open only long enough to lay the pipes when it was immediately filled. Most of this rock was picked out; some of it blasted. By July the water system was in operation.

In May, 1905, the city voted to buy from the A. G. Long Company, of Portland, a full fire-fighting apparatus for Bend. It consisted of 11 street hydrants; 1,000 feet of best quality fire hose; two hose carts; one 27-foot ladder, one 16-foot roof ladder and two 16-foot ladders; four nozzles each with a 1-inch and a three-quarter inch tip; six hydrant wrenches and six hose spanners. The entire cost of this plant was $1,395.50, besides freight. It was paid for with six per cent. warrants on the fire fund, half to be redeemed in 1906, and half in 1907.

In 1905 the city of Bend marked a new era in the development of Central Oregon, and is a fine example of what can be accomplished when energy and capital unite in the development of vast resources. Prineville, the county seat, lies 30 miles northeast and Shaniko, the shipping point, eighty miles northeast.

MADRAS.

This young community is situated in the Willow Creek basin, thirty miles north of Prineville. This basin is about three miles long and three-quarters of a mile wide. Madras is the center of the farming district of Crook county. There are about one hundred and fifty thousand acres of tillable land surrounding the town, and in the districts of Haystack, Lamonta and Agency Plains. The Indians of the Warm Springs reservation as well as the Hay creek country, with its countless sheep and fine cattle make Madras their trading point. It is only a short distance from the yellow pine belt of the Blue Mountains, and this circumstance makes lumber for building purposes comparatively cheap. Within the past two or three years many people have come from the middle west to settle upon the government lands of this part of the county. There are about one thousand families now settled there and most of them make Madras their center of trade. The soil of this country has been found to be very fertile and the people who have set out orchards and shrubs have met with good success. Sugar beets have been planted and found to produce as much as ten tons per acre.

In the Prineville Herald of November 4, 1904, Timothy Brownhill wrote:

Situated in a graceful curve of willow creek is what is commonly known as "the basin," a flat area of land shaped similar to a basin. In the center of this country surrounded by slight hills, and lying along a small creek is the growing city of "Madras." This town is on the line of the proposed extension of the Columbia Southern railroad, thirty miles north of Prineville, and forty miles south of Shaniko, the present terminus of the Columbia Southern railroad.

Madras is in the center of the great agricultural district of Crook county, comprising the Agency Plains country, with its 150,000 acres of the finest wheat land in Oregon, and the Haystack and Lamonta districts, which furnish the greater part of the wheat and grain now consumed in Central Oregon. Madras is, also, the trading point for the Hay creek stock country, with its sheep upon a thousand hills and countless herds of the finest range cattle in the northwest. Just twelve miles west is the Warm Springs Indian reservation, with about 800 Indians, who are all farmers and stock growers, and who will bring all their business to Madras. The reservation contains many thousands of acres of fine farming and timber lands, and the day is not far distant when it will be thrown open for settlement by the white men.

In the past two or three years many homeseekers from the middle west who have grown tired of the uncertainty of crops and the certainty of drouth and flood in Kansas, Missouri, Iowa, Nebraska and other Mississippi valley states, have taken up government lands in this favored locality, and it can be safely stated that there are about 1,500 families living there, who will do all their bartering and buying in Madras. The yellow pine belt of the Blue mountains is a short distance only from Madras and prices for good lumber for building purposes prevail about the same as along the Columbia river. Willow creek basin, where Madras is located, is a wide place in the Willow creek valley, about three miles long and an average width of three-fourths of a mile. The soil there is of light, loamy quality, very fertile and underlaid with gravel and sandstone. Water is easily obtained in wells averaging from ten to fifteen feet in depth, and is of a very fine quality, containing no trace of alkaline substances.

There are fine openings in Madras for business men who have some capital to invest in stores, mills, etc., and as the country develops many branches of legitimate business will be opened. This country has grown and developed wonderfully within the past few years, although it has been quite a distance from the railroad; and now, that the extension of the Columbia Southern from Shaniko to Bend is an assured fact, business of all descriptions will increase and grow beyond all expectations. Madras is well represented along business lines, having two general merchandise stores, one blacksmith and wagon shop, a drug store, hardware store, meat market, two physicians, a good public school system, a weekly newspaper, United States commissioner, harness shop, barber shop, two hotels, livery and feed stables, contractors and carpenters and other smaller lines too numerous to mention. A number of churches are also represented.

The First Baptist Church of Madras was organized Sunday, April 30, 1904, with a membership of twelve. The population of the town is estimated at fifty.

PAULINA.

The altitude of Paulina, named after an old Indian chief of the Piutes, is 2,444 feet above sea level. There is established a postoffice and in its vicinity are located many residents.

It is located in the center of some of the finest natural meadow country in the northwest. It is situated on the north bank of Beaver creek, on what is known as the Paulina flats, five miles from where Beaver creek empties into the Crooked river. The Paulina flat is a part of the wonderful Beaver creek valley, the entire length, nearly twenty miles, being one great natural meadow, yielding from one to three tons of the very finest hay per acre, and the section of Crook county of which it is the trading center includes the valleys of Beaver, Grindstone, Indian, Little and Big camp and the north and south forks of Crooked river are indeed a stockman's paradise and the day is not far distant when it will be known for what it really is, the best dairying and stock farming country in the Indian Empire. Not only shall it be known as a great dairying section, but lately there have been discovered in the foothills near the Grant county line rich croppings of gold ores, both base and free milling; also several prospects of cinnabar have been lately discovered, but it is not known whether or not they are in paying quantities.

ASHWOOD.

The population is given at 100. A village was first settled in 1898 on Trout creek, twenty-five miles south of Shaniko, its railroad point, and forty miles north of Prineville, the county seat of Crook county. Gold has been found in its vicinity and the town now contains two general merchandise stores, and is connected by long distance telephone line and stage with Antelope. Trout creek flows through the center of the town. The townsite of Ashwood was platted June 16, 1899, by James Woods and Addie B. Woods and consisted of fifteen blocks in section 36, township 9, south range 16, E. W. M. In 1905 Lester Cohrs wrote of Ashwood as follows:

The town of Ashwood is situated on Trout creek in the northern part of Crook county, near the Wasco line. There are many fine ranches near Ashwood. One ranch, about three miles above the place, is owned by T. S. Hamilton who runs sheep on it. Mr. Hamilton puts up about 600 tons of hay each year. Another ranch about nine miles above Ashwood is owned by the Baldwin Sheep & Land Company. The ranches below Ashwood are small compared with those above. Alfalfa hay is raised along Trout, as well as Hay, creek. When the news spread over Crook county that gold had been discovered on Trout creek there was a great rush to the mining district. James Woods, one of the present residents of Ashwood, took the land where the town of Ashwood stands today as a homestead. During the rush to the mines the town of Ashwood was laid out in town lots. The town has grown rapidly since 1900.

Judging from the amount of developments already done in the mines the camps of Ashwood will rank among the first of the gold and silver producers of Oregon, and possibly, copper and lead. Most of the mining experts of the county consider the formation to carry precious metals and the same formation exists in other mining districts where thousands of tons of ore have been obtained.

There is only one mine in the district that has been developed to any extent, and that is known as the Silver King mine. It is owned by the Oregon King Mining Company. They have a shaft on one of these ore chutes that is 600 feet deep, showing large bodies of low grade ores which are generally found on the hanging wall of the vein. Since the development of this mine began a large quantity of ore has been extracted and shipped to the Tacoma smelter. From this there has been a report of very good returns. The principal object of this company has been to block out the ores, or rather to place the ore in sight, without extracting it and have it in shape so that it can be extracted at any time.

Besides the Oregon King Mining Company's prospects, there are many others that show good values at the surface and will probably be good properties with proper development. There are a number within ten feet of the surface that are reported to carry values from $10 to $45 per ton. The ore is generally base, and is found in the oxide zone of the Oregon King mines which runs to a depth of about 125 feet. The silver ore is in the form of a chloride and carbonate. Then comes the sulphide ore which carries gold, silver, lead, copper and zinc. The development work of these mines is retarded and has been retarded since the discovery of the mines by different litigations. Whenever these lawsuits are settled and cheaper transportation for the ores provided, these mines will be one of Crook county's best resources.

March 30, 1901, the Prospector said:

Where now stands the beautiful and thriving little city of Ashwood with its score or more business and dwelling houses, its elegant school house and level streets was, years ago, the well improved farm of James Woods. The fertile Trout Creek valley had long been inhabited by a class of people, thrifty and industrious, who turned their entire attention to the stock and farming industries. For many years thousands of sheep, cattle and horses had roamed over the hills adjacent to the valley and were a source of great profit to the owners. The people were fast becoming well-to-do; were happy and contented.

In 1896 a petition was circulated and signed by everybody in the community asking for the establishment of a postoffice. After some delay their request was granted and James Woods appointed postmaster and the office christened Ashwood. The petition asked for the establishment of a postoffice to be called Ash, after Ash Butte just across Trout creek, and for the naming of James Woods as postmaster. For some reason (doubtless a good one) the Washington authorities did not give the name Ash to the new postoffice, but instead added the name of the postmaster, and the office was christened Ashwood. In April, 1898, the town was surveyed and platted and lots put upon the market.

In August, 1898, the large general merchandise store of J. W. & M. A. Robinson was built and a complete stock put in. The following month O'Neil Brothers, of Prineville, opened the Ashwood saloon, and after conducting it for a time sold out to Benton & Grater. H. Y. Huston started a blacksmith shop and W. H.

Grater a hotel and several other business enterprises were established. Upon the discovery of gold in the new town it took on new life, becoming a lively and prosperous mining center; not of the type of a pioneer camp in California or Colorado, but in a modern sense, the living and other expenses being as cheap as in other towns of the interior, the comforts of home life being within the reach of all miners and prospectors.

CLINE FALLS.

The altitude of Cline Falls is 2,875 feet. The city is located on the Des Chutes river in Crook county, about twenty miles west of Prineville. It lies in the center of a vast tract of land under irrigation during the past three years and sold under the Carey act. Through this means 400,000 acres of land has become available for cultivation, and a large portion of it is now producing crops. The land is now admirably adapted to the growth of alfalfa, and sugar beets. The Cline Falls Power Company owns immense water power at this point and at the lower falls, several miles below, 40,000 horse-power being available for manufacturing and other purposes. The falls, forty feet high, are of unceasing interest; its climate is mild; summer days are warm and the nights are cool. The winters are generally mild, the temperature seldom falling below the zero mark. The Eastern Oregon Transportation Company has built an automobile line from Shaniko to Bend.

The wonderful cataract of Cline Falls rivals the Willamette falls at Oregon City. A petition for a postoffice at Cline Falls was favorably considered by the department at Washington, D. C. The official papers giving notice of the fact were received in November, 1904, and Mr. Meredith was appointed postmaster. Cline Falls was then on the map. Late in November, 1904, the following was published in the Pacific Homesteader of Salem, Oregon:

One of the most promising of the cities springing up as if by magic in the western part of Crook county is Cline Falls, situated near the great waterfall which bears that name in the Des Chutes river. The townsite was only recently platted, and lots offered for sale less than two months ago, yet the sale has been enormous.

The Cline Falls Power Company of which D. J. Harris is president, and F. T. Hurlburt, of Shaniko, secretary and treasurer, was organized about two years ago, and at that time secured control of all the water power of the Des Chutes river at that point. The company now owns 2,500 acres of land, 1,500 acres of which lie on the west, and 1,000 acres on the east side of the river at Cline Falls. Of this land 1,800 acres are tiltable and all can be irrigated. The soil is very fertile and with the application of water abundant crops are produced. At present about 250 acres are cultivated by the company.

July, 1904, the company platted eighty acres of land into a townsite containing 500 lots, which were offered for sale to the public at from $60 to $250. The rapidity with which the lots were sold was a surprise to the townsite company and to all other persons interested. In the first three weeks of selling, and with scarcely any advertising sixty lots were sold, a portion going to speculators who could look into the future and see a great increase in the valuation of Cline Falls property, but most of the lots are owned by people who will in the near future become bona fide residents of that city.

When the writer called there in September, forty families had signified their intention of becoming residents of Cline Falls before winter sets in, and the following are the business houses now being erected and to be completed within thirty days: Meredith Brothers; Walla Walla general merchandise store; R. M. Bishop, feed stable; F. W. Hanna, store; F. M. Donaldson, meat market; J. W. Broen, hotel; Thomas R. Rayburn, hotel; Louis McAllister, commission house. A printing office has been established for some weeks, and the Cline Falls Press, a weekly newspaper, devoted to promoting the welfare of the country, is now published with a circulation of 1,000 copies. A school house is now being erected 24 by 32 feet in dimensions, and a large attendance is expected as many of the farmers of the surrounding country are planning to move to the city and send their children to school. The question might with impunity be asked, "What advantages are there to make a city spring up at Cline Falls in the midst of a vast wilderness?" But transportation facilities with the outside world such as are enjoyed by other cities, will make Cline Falls complete. This cannot be delayed any great length of time.

The great features of Cline Falls are pure water—cold as ice—electric lights, and cheap power, and surrounded by a tract of nearly half a million acres of land which are now being irrigated by strong companies under the Carey Act, with water taken from the Des Chutes river and tributary streams. A portion of this is already settled and will in the next five years support an average of one family to each eighty-acre tract.

In addition to this might be mentioned an ideal climate, beautiful scenery, fertile soil and abundant crops. Very simple, yet what more could be said of any city in the world; in fact it is doubtful if any city was launched on the road to success with as many natural advantages as Cline Falls possesses. At that point the angry Des Chutes river plunges over the rocks for a distance of forty feet giving 15,000 horse power easily developed. By damming and fluming this can be doubled and with the lower falls, also controlled by the company, bring the total available power up to 40,000 horse power, far greater than the power that has made Spokane such a thriving city.

LYTLE.

The townsite of Lytle was platted by the Lytle Townsite Company, John Steidle, president, September 1, 1903, and consisting of sixteen blocks in section 29, township 17, south range 12 E. W. M. The altitude is 3,600 feet at the eastern base of the Cascade mountains, and its climate is sans reproche.

Articles for the incorporation of Lytle were filed in the office of the county clerk in April, 1903. The incorporators were H. W. Reed, John Steidle and Charles J. Cotter. The capitalization was $50,000, with 500 shares of $100 each. Lytle is in a peculiarly favorable location to control the vast volume of trade which is sure to be drawn in that direction from the broad areas of arid lands now being reclaimed by irrigation. It is, practically, surrounded on all sides by irrigated lands upon which homes and farms are springing up as if by magic in the midst of a wilderness solitude.

SISTERS.

This town was platted by Smith Brothers, Alex and Roberts, July 10, 1901, and consists of ten blocks in section 4, township 15, south range 10, E. W. M. The location of the town is so unlike that of any other municipality in Eastern Oregon that it is conspicuous to those who are fortunate enough to make a visit to that section of Oregon. It is situated on the main highway to the Willamette valley, a feature which alone makes Sisters prominent and a profitable location for the merchant. The little town is situated in the midst of one of the most delightful pine forests to be found anywhere. It is only a short distance from the foothills of the three snow-capped peaks known as the "Three Sisters," and from which the town bears its name. The stately pines shade the village from the burning summer sun and protect it from the cold blasts of midwinter.

A stage from Prineville reaches Sisters every afternoon. It is the last stopping place until the station of Garrison, eight miles west and in the foothills is reached. The main road to the Willamette valley via Eugene—the McKenzie road—and the Santiam road pass through the town, making it an important stage point. The altitude of Sisters is 3,050 feet. It is twenty-five miles from Bend. In the Prineville Herald, of November, 1904, F. C. Welch wrote as follows:

There are two good stores, a hotel, blacksmith shop, saloon, real estate office, livery barn and a splendid school house, costing $1,800, and a short distance from the town is a fine lumbering mill. The largest store in the town is owned by Smith & Wilt. The store building is 25 by 40 feet, while in the rear there is a large warehouse 20 by 40 feet. The company carries a $5,000 stock of groceries, hardware, harness, stationery, a small drug department, etc. The townsite belongs to this firm. The only other store in the town is owned by Alex. Smith. This building is 20 by 60 feet. A large stock of some $4,000 of gent's furnishings, boots and shoes and dry goods is carried. The year's business aggregates to about $12,000. Real estate has been changing hands so frequently of late that an office has been opened. The real estate and insurance business is run by W. B. Booth, who is an experienced business man and well able to handle such an important business. The only saloon on the place is run by George A. Stevens.

The only industry belonging to the town of Sisters is the saw mill owned and managed by Mr. W. F. E. Wilson. The mill is four miles west of the town and is run by water of twenty horse-power, taken from Pole Creek. This mill has a capacity of 5,000 feet of lumber a day.

LAIDLAW.

The townsite of Laidlaw comprises the west half of section 31, township 16, south range 12, E. W. M. It was laid out by the Laidlaw Townsite Company, B. S. Cook, president, and A. W. Laidlaw, secretary, August 8, 1904. The post-office was established January 20, 1905, with W. G. Stiles, postmaster.

This town was named after its founder, A. W. Laidlaw, of Portland, and was chosen with peculiar regard to the natural conditions of the country and will not, doubtless, fail to become a city of some importance. Seldom it happens that new towns enjoy a more favorable outlook from the start than did Laidlaw. It is situated eight miles below Bend, on the angry Des Chutes, and it is surrounded on all sides by rich prairie land which is being reclaimed by irrigation, while to the west as far as the eye can reach is a vast stretch of fine yellow pine timber, with the Tumelo river affording a well-regulated flume for bringing down the logs, and a natural millsite and unlimited water power at Laidlaw.

The town of Laidlaw was surveyed and carefully laid off into streets and avenues and the townsite filed September 7, 1904. Headquarters of the Columbia Southern Irrigation Company are at Laidlaw. The company is composed of the following officers: E. E. Lytle, Portland, president; Walter H. Moore, Shaniko, vice president; A. W. Laidlaw, Portland, secretary and manager. This company has been operating for three years past, having purchased the interest of the Three Sisters Irrigation Company. Their segregations of land from the government for irrigation was 27,700 acres.

HAY CREEK.

This Crook county valley along the creek bearing its name was settled in 1873, lies twenty-five miles north of Prineville, the county seat, and thirty-six miles south of Shaniko, its shipping point. The town has long distance telephone service, daily mail and stages to Shaniko and Prineville. The business of the place is represented by the Baldwin Sheep & Land Company; C. M. Cartwright and J. G. Edwards, general merchandise and blacksmiths.

Fire, starting from an overheated stove set fire to the interior of the Baldwin Sheep & Land Company's general merchandise store at Hay creek, Friday, May 6, 1904. The store and contents were totally destroyed, and the loss approximated $5,000.

FOREST.

The altitude of this place is 2,313 feet above sea level. The store at Forest is owned by the Lone Pine Company. The store is located at the junction of the roads leading to Prineville, thirteen miles; Bend, twenty-two and one-half miles; Cline Falls, twelve miles; Shaniko, sixty miles; Sisters, Silver Lake and the Willamette Valley. There is no prettier point in Crook county than Forest, where numerous freighters daily stop for refreshments and rest. Shade and fruit trees are abundant. There are two stables for accommodating horses and one chop mill with a capacity of twenty tons daily.

HAYSTACK.

This is one of the earlier of Crook county towns, the postoffice of which was established in 1882. It lies twenty-five miles north of Prineville and fifty miles southwest of Shaniko, its shipping point. It has a tri-weekly stage and mail to Prineville. It derived its name from the Haystack Butte, which looms up within its borders and resembles a hayrick of great size.

The first settler in the valley was H. C. Belknap, father of Dr. Belknap, of Prineville, who came in the year 1876. The second settler was Thomas Jenkins, in the year 1878. A few years later when the possibilities of that country became known it was rapidly settled by eager home-seekers. In the vicinity of the Haystack country there are several places of great interest. One of them is the "Cove." It is located about a mile from the Des Chutes, on the Crooked river, and reached by a very narrow grade one and one-half miles in length. Looking up on the upper portions of the grade, one sees the rocky cliffs which are almost perpendicular. Looking down one sees the river which appears to be a tiny stream in the distance. When the bottom of this grade is reached it appears to be one of the most delightful of places. An abundance of all kinds of fruits that are grown in temperate latitudes are raised there. Colloquially all the country around the postoffice is known as the "Haystack country," as there is no "town" of any importance. Another place of interest is the opal spring, situated in the Crooked river canyon, 800 feet below the surrounding country. This can be reached only by a very steep and dangerous trail leading down the canyon. The spring coming out of the rock is sixty feet wide and six feet deep. Opals are constantly boiling up from below. From that country many snow-covered mountains can be seen including Mounts Hood, Jefferson, Washington and the Three Sisters.

LAMONTA.

John C. Rush, in April, 1905, laid out the townsite of Lamonta the lots of which are now on the market. This action was taken because of the development of the Haystack country, and to the automobile line through that locality. The townsite was platted April 3, 1905, by J. C. Rush, in section 3, township 13, south range 14, E. W. M. and contains twenty-four blocks. The postoffice was established in 1896, seventeen miles northeast of Prineville, and sixty-two miles south of Shaniko, its shipping point. It has a tri-weekly stage between it and Prineville.

LAVA.

Lava is a postoffice on the Des Chutes river, fifty miles southwest of Prineville, and 115 miles south of Shaniko, its shipping point. It has a stage to Prineville and daily mail. Mrs. Sadie Vandervert is postmistress and proprietor of a general merchandise store, hotel and restaurant.

HOWARD.

This is a postoffice established in 1897 on the Ochoco river, twenty-eight miles northeast of Prineville, and eighty-eight miles southeast of Shaniko, the railway point. Hydraulic mining is the principal industry. It has a tri-weekly stage to Prineville, daily mail and one general merchandise store.

POST

This is a country postoffice on the Crooked river, twenty-eight miles southeast of Prineville and fifty miles south of Shaniko. It receives a semi-weekly mail.

CULVER.

Culver is a postoffice established in 1899, twenty-four miles northwest of Prineville, and fifty-five miles south of Shaniko, the railroad point. It contains a school house and Baptist and Christian church organizations, a general store and daily stage and mail between it and Prineville. In October, 1900, Q. G. Colver erected a store building at this place which bears his name (with a slight difference in orthography) and stocked it with general merchandise.

OTHER TOWNS.

Desert postoffice was established in the Haystack country with S. S. Pringle as postmaster. This point supplies a large settlement with mail and is a great convenience to the people. It is on the line between Prineville and Warm Springs.

In 1887 the postoffice of Mowry was established at the residence of M. A. Carson in the Beaver Creek region. Mr. Carson was postmaster. The precinct in which the postoffice was established was formerly known as Maury. In organizing this precinct in 1886 a petition was circulated for the establishment of a postoffice at M. A. Carson's to be called Maury in honor of Lieutenant Maury who had a small command of soldiers near the place. In the petition the name was incorrectly spelled "Mowry" and after the establishment of the postoffice everything went by the name of Mowry. The mountain at the base of which Lieutenant Maury had his camp has always been called Maury on all maps. So, in deference to that gallant officer, and with a desire to have the name accord with facts the Crook county clerk, in making the record of the boundaries copied the name of the precinct "Maury" as it should always have been.

Crook is a discontinued farmers' postoffice on Bear Creek, thirty miles southeast of Prineville.

The postoffice of Crater was established in 1888 at the Big Meadows. C. H. Findlay was postmaster. There has, also, been established a postoffice in the Meadows at C. W. Clark's place, his wife, Mrs. Clark, was postmistress.

In 1889 a postoffice was established on what was known as west Branch, a tributary of Bridge Creek.

• The Columbia Southern Railroad Company's surveyors laid out a townsite in the Agency Plains which was known as Tallman. There are indications that the place will be the center of a section of country admirably adapted to the cultivation of immense wheat crops.

Tremalo postoffice was ready for business in September, 1904. Its initial postmaster was George W. Wimer who was authorized to employ a carrier to take up the mail below Bend.

The altitude of Heisler, according to the United States Geological Survey is 1,875 feet above sea level. A postoffice was established here with A. R. Lyle as postmaster, and a mail from there to Madras is now in operation.

Fife is another foothills postoffice with an elevation of 3,375 feet.

Grizzly is a country postoffice sixteen miles north of Prineville. It has daily stages to Prineville and Shaniko.

The population of Warm Springs is given as thirty. The postoffice is at the Warm Springs Agency on the Des Chutes river, eighty miles south of The Dalles, its shipping point, and sixty miles north of Prineville, the county seat. It contains a Presbyterian church and a general merchandise store.

CHAPTER V

DESCRIPTIVE.

Larger than many states in the union is the territory embraced by Crook county. It is about 108 miles across from east to west and 84 miles north and south. In round numbers it contains about 8,000 square miles. From this it will be seen that it is six times as large as the state of Rhode Island, four times as large as Delaware; about as large as Massachusetts. This vast area had a population in 1900 of 3,896. Massachusetts, had a population of 2,846,670. Had Crook county been as densely settled as Rhode Island it would have sustained a population of 3,500,000.

Concerning the climate of Crook county it may be generally observed that for at least four-fifths of the year the skies are cloudless, with occasional rains from August to November. During the "heated term" the temperature ranges in the 90's for a week or so, and about zero generally for four or five days along about holiday time. These are the extremes, and between them the climate of Crook county is not excelled in Oregon. In the lower altitudes snow seldom falls to a greater depth than one foot, and rarely remains more than a week at a time until dissipated by a gentle "chinook" wind. Plowing is in progress every month of the year, except January and not infrequently in that month. Cattle and sheep are fed from one to three months owing to locality.

As a summary it may be said that the climate of Crook county is very much the same as that of the entire Inland Empire with few exceptions. In the northern portions of the county the climate varies. On the higher hills in the Blue Mountains the winters become very cold, considerable snow falling, which drives the cattle to the lower levels. Along the creek bottoms it is quite different. Little if any snow falls during the entire year. The climate is very much the same as that west of the Cascade mountains, stock running out without shelter during the entire year. On the desert lands south of Prineville, the cold, bleak winds make it very disagreeable and unpleasant as a place of residence. However, the stock remains on the range the entire year.

Along the Crooked and Ochoco rivers the summers are very beautiful, while the winters are quite similar to those of northern California. The greatest elevation of Crook county above the sea is 3,500 feet. It lies in the geographical center of the state, and exclusive of the Warm Springs Indian reservation contains in round numbers 7,000 square miles, the Cascade mountains timber reservation lopping off a slice of its western territory. To the northwest of Prineville for a distance of ten miles there is a stretch of semi-desert, about five miles wide on an average, comparatively level land; soil classed second rate; it is raised from 30 to 150 feet above the creek and river bottoms. The soil is largely mineral and very productive when irrigated and the longer it is cultivated the better it becomes. There are but few claims taken in this stretch,

To the north of this Grizzly butte, a spur of timbered mountains, pushing westward, rises nearly two thousand feet above the country around it. To the west of this butte is the Haystack country, near 300 square miles of good farming land, soil number 1, but the want of water bars settlement, except near the hills, where springs are plentiful. To the north of Grizzly butte, Willow Creek valley, about forty square miles, is a rolling, excellent farming country. Although some 3,000 feet above the sea, cereals of all kinds grow and ripen to perfection. This region has been the best grain section of the country, but the Haystack country now claims the honor. All through the northern portion of the county there are deep gorges, with sometimes small, rich spots of bottom land. When clear, or cleared of stones they produce the finest apples, peaches, pears, plums, prunes, melons and tomatoes.

Passing on northward over rolling bunch grass hills, Hay Creek next attracts the view. There in the widening bottom lands of Hay Creek and its tributaries the B. S. & L. Company have a vast expanse of alfalfa fields, the hay piled in numerous stacks and barns to insure the wintering of their stock that graze on a thousand hills. Hay Creek is a lower country than Prineville, six or eight hundred feet.

Northward from Hay Creek, over a series of hills eight miles lower Lower Hay Creek and part of Lower Trout Creek come into view. This being lower, rolls in its wealth of alfalfa, vegetables and fruit. Here we are near the north boundary line of the county. Thence eastward up Trout Creek seven miles the creek emerges from a huge gorge, or crack in mother earth, perpendicular at times, rock bound, rock tumbled, impassable to man or beast, for eight or nine miles Trout Creek boils and bubbles then Upper Trout opens out, the valley extending southeasterly ten miles wide, average over a quarter of a mile wide, produces grain, alfalfa, fruits, berries, vegetables, the yield being enormous. To the north of Upper Trout Creek amid rough hills and buttes high and sharp a few very small, but very rich valleys are located and cultivated. Eastward, three-quarters of a mile from Trout creek, and two miles from where it enters the canyons, the King mine is located which bids fair to be one of the mines of the world. A mile further upward is the town of Ashwood, a new but thriving village. To the southwest of Upper Trout Creek for eight miles the hill rises in a series of benches. Upon many of these claims are taken and immense crops of grain and vegetables are raised without irrigation, there being a clay subsoil and springs abounding everywhere.

Old Brokentop

Northeasterly from Trout Creek, and nearly parallel to it, from four to six miles distant, is the divide between the waters of the John Day and the Des Chutes rivers. A high, rough and rocky ridge with a few claims taken on the benches and in the small valleys. Current and Muddy creeks drain a large part of this slope and Cherry creek the remainder. These creeks, with immense grade, fall rapidly toward the John Day river. Their narrow, rich bottoms produce wonderful crops of alfalfa, corn, melons, peaches and grapes, this being by far the warmest portion of the county. Throughout the whole region from Grizzly Butte to the John Day river the soil is first-class, where it is clear from stone and level enough to be plowed. There are many small benches and little bottoms yet unoccupied. Good springs abound through the whole region.

Following the divide between the Des Chutes and John Day rivers southeasterly we enter fine timber in the northeastern portion of township 11, south range 17 east Willamette Meridian. This is an extensive timber belt composed chiefly of yellow pine, but fir, black pine and tamarack are plentiful. This timber belt extends southeasterly to the eastern boundary of the county and beyond.

Forty miles east of Prineville is Summit Prairie, of 25 to 30 square miles area, about 4,000 feet above sea level. It produces a vast quantity of wild grass; hay and summer pasture. It is all owned and fenced by prosperous stockmen. This prairie is surrounded by timber. The north fork of Crooked river has its source near Summit Prairie. First it flows eastward, thence bearing southward it describes a semi-circle and forms a junction with the south fork nearly due south of its source. The Beaver Creek country is situated in the most easterly portion of the county. Beaver Creek has two branches. The north fork has its source in Grant county, and the south fork in Harney county. They come rapidly down to a point about four miles west of the eastern boundary of Crook. There the bottoms widen out to about a mile in width, nearly twenty miles long, the creek falling only two feet to the mile. Here are the largest natural meadows in the county. To the north of Beaver creek, Wolf creek, a tributary, is rich in meadow land and alfalfa is grown to some extent.

Elevated and surrounded by low hills, Paulina and Rabbit Valleys lie between Beaver Creek and the north fork of Crooked river. These valleys are as beautiful as they are isolated, rich in their abundance of hay and produce. Passing south from Beaver Creek near the county line we come to Little Camp creek. With a rich, narrow valley here, near the lower end of the valley, is the Red Rock soda spring, destined some time to become famous. This spring comes sparkling out of a rock, red with oxide of iron, covered with a low bank of alluvial earth, one dwarfed, mangled, cattled-twisted willow constituting all semblance of timber near it.

Then comes Little Trout creek, noted for large herds of sheep. On southward, over not a very rough country is old Harding, at one time a postoffice on Twelvemile creek, a tributary of the south fork of Crooked river. Twelvemile and its tributaries are principally devoted to the sheep industry. Thence, southeasterly, a half day's journey—for be it known that this is a country of "magnificent distances"—we come to Buck creek. Here is plenty of limestone; down Buck creek valley, which is narrow, but rich, some five miles the creek disappears—such they call it—merging into a very extended, very level sage plain of some two hundred square miles in area, bounded on the north by a range of low hills; on the east by Buck mountain, which is timbered and a low gap passing southeasterly to the rest of the world, to the south by Glass butte, a mountain, sharp topped by vitrous rock, on the west by Hampton butte, and near the center of this alkali-impregnated sage bush plain, the south fork of Crook river rises boldly, but quietly out of the earth and creeps off northward with no tree nor bush to betray its presence for several miles.

There are level bottom lands for ten or twelve miles in its northwesterly course, then it enters a rock-bound canyon in which is the White Sulphur springs—the "stinking springs"—of the early emigrants. Ten or twelve miles further it emerges from the canyon, jumps a perpendicular fall, opens out in a rich bottom, picks up Beaver creek and winds its tortuous course along in a general northwesterly direction; about twelve miles from the confluence of Beaver creek it forms a junction with the north fork. The latter, after emerging from Summit Prairie, plunges, roars and foams through a very rough, rocky gorge, commonly called canyon, for most of its course, to the junction with the south fork, with places for only two farms in the entire distance. From the junction of the two forks, northwesterly, tortuously it winds its way for about eighty miles and empties into the Des Chutes. For little over half the distance there are bottom lands of various widths, no place exceeding one mile, all in cultivation. The other part is canyon, rough, ragged and rocky; for many miles rim rocks from two hundred to three hundred feet high, stand guard over the river on one side or the other, and for long stretches on both sides, appearing as if the rock had cracked in cooling and drawn a part the indentations on one side matched by protuberances on the other.

To the north of Crooked river from the north fork to Pilot Butte, fifteen miles south-east of Prineville, is a rough, rugged hilly country, with splendid grass; the name "Horse Heaven," given to it expresses it well. A few ranches are located on the creek bottoms and branches. To the south of the river Camp Creek, running nearly east for about fifteen miles, turns north around the eastern base of Maury mountain, and empties into Crooked river. Maury, or Mowry, mountain could properly be termed an island mountain. It is surrounded by streams; Crooked river on the north, Camp creek on the east and the south and Bear creek on the west. On his mountain there is a body of good timber pine, about fifteen miles long, averaging three or four miles wide. There is a saw mill there supplying the local demand with lumber. Camp Creek bottoms are level and good and there are several large ranches, with hay in large quantities and horses, cattle and sheep grazing on the rough and rugged hills for many miles around. Here in the Camp Creek valley are the notorious soap holes that, some years ago, were thought to be rich in silver, held in liquid form. In one of these soap holes there is a pipe out of which flows the only artesian well of the county. Westward Bear Creek rises and flows, thence northward into Crooked river. This, like all other mountain streams, has its small farms and vast expanse of hills in all directions.

Hampton buttes, some twenty-five miles south of and nearly parallel to Maury mountain, about twenty miles long, terminating with Glass butte, on the east, and bounded on the west by the desert, or great sage plains, stands sentinel over the great desert near the south boundary line of Crook, and north boundary of Lake counties.

The agricultural possibilities of the desert are claimed to be great. The river bed and belt around the base of the butte are the better part of it, but other large tracts will be good if thoroughly irrigated. But little of it is good without water. The waters of the Des Chutes river are available to most of it, and companies are now at work constructing water ducts to reclaim the desert.

Now the most wonderful river in the world in some respects attracts our attention. Its sources are near the snowcapped peaks, Diamond Peak and Mt. Thielson, of the Cascade range. All the branches have but little fall, with level, grassy, meadow-like bottoms bounded by dense black pine forests, with at times yellow and sugar pine; for about fifty miles, where at the Big meadows all the streams join their feeders and form a "big river." Deep and slowly it flows along, dammed by a comparatively recent lava flow, over which it pours, bubbles, boils and roars for three-quarters of a mile, when it reforms into a very mannerly, well-behaved river from 200 to 300 feet wide and from two to three feet deep, it flows rapidly to the northward for about forty miles to its junction with Crooked river. This part of the river, no matter how much the precipitation, never rises eighteen inches above low water mark. On account of this houses and barns are built near the water's edge, and bridges resting on trestles only a few feet above the water never float away. It is also, a wonderful stream for fish; for quality and quantity. To the west of the Des Chutes, Tornello creek, or river, comes tearing down from the Cascades. Its waters are available and work is progressing to utilize them in reclaiming a large area of sage brush, semi-desert, lying west of the Des Chutes river.

Northward about twenty miles, through scattering yellow pine and juniper timber, is Squaw creek, a large stream with low banks and a level country, sparsely timbered for miles around, and most of it located. This is the home of red clover and the best adapted to irrigation of any part of the county. Rye and the hardier vegetables grow to perfection here. Passing over the Des Chutes northeasterly, raised above the river about 300 feet is the country called the "Agency Plains." It is a continuation of the Haystack country northward, but cut off it by the Willow creek canyon, a very deep, ugly, rocky gorge. These plains are devoid of water, from 60 to 80 square miles in area, very level and soil very good, but little sage brush; one vast stretch of waving bunch grass. Water is available from the Des Chutes river, but the cost would be immense. Once there, in proper shape, it would be the garden spot of Crook county.

As has been previously stated Crook county, geographically, lies in the center of the state of Oregon. The county's 220 townships may be divided as follows: 26 in Cascade reserve, timbered; 12 in Warm Springs Indian Reservation; 48 timbered; does not include above; 30 "desert" lands; 104 rolling hills and valley. Crook county is bounded on the north by Wasco and Wheeler; on the east by Wheeler, Grant and Harney; on the south by Harney, Lake and Klamath; on the west by Lane, Linn and Marion counties. The headquarters of the Baldwin Sheep & Land Company are situated on Hay creek, about twenty-five miles north of Prineville. The eastern and southern parts of Crook county are chiefly farming and grazing lands.

Outside of the Cascade Forest reserve Crook county contains over 6,000,000 acres of land, of which at least 5,000,000 acres are vacant, public land, subject to homesteading or for sale as school land, the minimum price being $2.50 per acre for the latter. The cost of filing on a homestead in Oregon is $16. The price of irrigated land under the Carey act is averaged at $10 per acre. A price is set on every 40 acres ranging from $5 to $15. All of the above are good propositions and worthy of the homeseeker's investigation. The amount of public land open to settlement in Crook county on January 1, 1905, was 2,006,847 acres. A. C. Palmer writing in the Morning Oregonian of date January 9, 1902, said:

The so-called "desert lands" cover an area of about 30 townships in the south central part of the county. The term "desert" is not properly applied to these lands. It is not a desert under the ordinary acceptation of the word. The land is generally level, broken here and there by low ridges and occasionally a volcanic butte or crater extinct ages ago, and sloping to the northward with the general watershed of the Des Chutes and Crooked rivers which bound the desert on two sides of this triangular form. A large part of it produces a scattering growth of red juniper, valuable for fire wood and fence posts; thousands of acres of black sage and chemise, valuable for nothing except as an indication of the fertility of the soil, and above all, that which makes Crook famous for its live stock—bunch grass being in profusion everywhere. Except a few springs near the hills there is absolutely no water to be found in the section. Hence the name "desert."

During the year 1899 the long contemplated floating of logs down the Des Chutes and from within the county has been demonstrated to be possible. One million feet of pine logs were cut on the Matoles in the western part of the county, hauled to that stream and from there floated or driven down to a boom on the Lower Des Chutes. Crook county has immense tracts of fir suitable for lumber of excellent quality and easy of access. It produces annually several million pounds of wool. It has extensive water power. Situated about 25 miles west of Prineville, and extending a distance of more than forty miles along the Des Chutes river are numerous falls ranging from 6 to 20 feet, where the fall equals if not exceeding 100 feet per mile. Fall river, a tributary of the Des Chutes is five miles long. It has its source in three large springs, any one which would turn a mill. Near its mouth is a beautiful millsite at a fifteen foot fall that will some day be valuable. Other streams afford some power, but these are the most important.

As the present and prospective plans concerning the subject of irrigation subdivide into so many important considerations, it is difficult to treat the matter under one general head.

The farmer in an irrigated country has many advantages over the one who has to depend upon the capriciousness of the weather. Having water available in his ditch or reservoir the irrigation farmer can control it and distribute it where it is needed and in such quantities as experience has taught will produce the best results. Furthermore, the local conditions making irrigation necessary to the production of crops practically insures immunity from damaging storms during the harvest season and, other things being equal, a crop is insured beyond all doubt every season.

Among the number of companies whose sole attentions are directed to the irrigation problems may be mentioned the Des Chutes Irrigation and Power Company, at Bend, the Three Sisters Irrigation Company, and many others of smaller proportions. In March, 1904, the company became interested in the projects of the Pilot Butte Development Company, by purchase of their rights and ditches. Since then they have steadily pushed ahead until today, thousands of acres are rented. The Pacific Homestead, Salem, Oregon, November, 1904, said:

This company has undertaken to reclaim 215,000 acres of land in the Des Chutes valley as their first segregation and to do this will be required the expenditure of over $2,000,000. The company is capitalized at $2,500,000.

The Hay creek ranch, owned by the Baldwin Sheep and Land Company, is more extensive than any other such enterprise in the county. It was originated in 1873 by Dr. Baldwin who came from California and took up 160 acres of land 40 miles from Shaniko and 25 miles from Prineville. From this it has grown to be the largest stock ranch in Oregon, and, although there are larger ranches in the world, this is the largest of its kind and stands alone before the world unchallenged in its products and accomplishments in sheep breeding.

The main ranch is located in a valley, and a village formed by the settlements of the owners and employees, which is a well-planned city, adorned with shade trees and is surrounded by waving fields of alfalfa, so that to the traveler approaching from either direction, from the wild and rock-ribbed mountains and sandy deserts which the road passes, it appears as a charming oasis in the desert, and gives one a feeling of rest, and the close proximity of paradise. The business of this mammoth company is breeding fine sheep, and from the establishment money has not been spared in securing the best the world produced in sheep. The present owners are C. M. Cartwright, president; J. G. Edwards, general manager, and J. P. Van Houten, secretary and assistant manager. The company is making a good showing by exhibiting animals at all the world's great shows. They sent 83 head of pure bred animals to the St. Louis exposition, making two carloads. This shipment included Delaines, Rambouillets, and Spanish Merinos. Most of these animals were sold to eastern breeders so soon as the exposition closed. The annual amount of wool sheared and sold for market is about 500,000 pounds, which, considering the fact that the highest market price is always realized and usually something above the market price is realized on account of the excellence, makes a fine income.

The chain of ranches has a regular system of water works supplied from mountain springs. The proprietors are men who have worked themselves up in the world, and being of the class not hampered with bigotry they are always commonplace and sociable and well liked by everybody with whom they come in contact.

The Crook county lands are of a volcanic loam of unknown depth, and need nothing but water to grow anything in abundance that will grow in this latitude. Grain, hay, vegetables, fruits and everything of a temperate climate grows here in abundance. The soil is so rich that it will be years before any fertilizing will be used. It needs but one thing and that is water. The rivers and mountain streams carry an abundance.

Along the banks of Crooked river in Crook county, lie a series of rich valleys rarely ever equaled for their beauty and fertility of soil. From the mouth to the source of this stream a continuous unbroken chain of rich meadows greet the eye of the traveler. The broad areas of alfalfa, natural meadows and wild rye higher up in the foothills, dotted here and there with beautiful homes, surrounded with shade trees and green lawns, make one grand, serpentine panorama of beauty, wealth and comfort, such as is rarely seen in any other place in eastern or central Oregon.

While stock-raising is the grand chief resource that goes to make Crook county the wealthiest in the state, the hay raising of Crooked river is one of the great auxiliaries. But higher up the stream at its very source is the greatest of all institutions on Crooked river. The back bone of the stock industry in Crook county is sheep-raising, and the back bone of sheep-raising in Crook is the natural advantages of the section, including climate, soil and water, grazing grounds and topography.

At the source of the river, on the very summit of the mountains, is a broad area of prairie land known as Summit Prairie, 35 miles east from Prineville, the capital of the county. This prairie contains at least 40,000 acres of natural meadow as fine as the sun ever shone upon. Down among the foothills of the mountains not very far away are Muddy and Current creeks. The valleys of these streams are sheltered from the wintry winds and all through that season the grass continues to grow here and the valleys and hillsides are as green as the tender vegetation of a well-kept park.

Upon Summit Prairie and in these valleys is located the entire system of ranches of the Prineville Land & Livestock Company. This is one of the important institutions to which the people of Crook county point with pride. It was organized back in 1887 by Henry Hahn and Leo Fried on a smaller scale and like every thing else in this section of the state has grown with rapidity. The well-known capitalist and business leader, Henry Hahn, is the president of this company. Among all the leaders of commercial life on the Pacific coast the names of Hahn and Fried stand out as beacons of success. They began business several years ago in Prineville on a small scale, and with good judgment and splendid management grew with the rapidly developing country. Besides their large stock interests they are connected with one of the largest businesses in the city of Portland, the firm of Wadhams & Company, who conduct one of the largest wholesale grocery establishments in that city of large business enterprises. Besides, they have many other interests than their main line of sheep raising.

About 24 townships bordering the Cascade reserve and in the Paulina mountains, 20 townships in the Blue mountains and four in Maury mountains make up the timber area covered principally by yellow pine of excellent quality, free from undergrowth and easily available. A fair estimate of the stumpage per section would be not less than 6,400,000 feet, making a grand total of more than 1,000,000,000 of feet of merchantable lumber. Practically all of these lands in the Blue and the Maury mountains and about one-third of that along the reserve is government land open to settlement or purchase. In all this area, however, the school sections have been sold and are held generally by eastern capitalists and lumbermen.

About fifty miles from Prineville, in a southwestern direction, is one of the greatest wonders of the Pacific coast. On account of its isolation from railroads and other means of convenient public conveyance it is but little known. It is practically on a mountain top and towers above the Des Chutes river, upon whose banks it is situated the raging waters rolling and surging among the rocks and boulders 1,400 feet below. It is known as The Lava Butte. The main butte is symmetrical. From the main level it extends 1,000 feet in the air to a sharp point barely large enough for the crater, which is of shallow depth. This cone is of pure volcanic ashes, with a yellowish cast, tinged with red, that gives it the appearance at a distance of still possessing internal fires. And below the sight is more awe-inspiring. An area of several square miles is covered with great heaps of lava piled up in irregular form. This lava, or rock, is full of cells which are surrounded by a reddish dross that gives them the appearance of still being hot. To climb over them is almost impossible; the irregular surface, the sharp points that cut almost like a knife, make it hazardous for the shoe and trying to the feet. The whole surface of the lava beds looks as if the fire were smouldering beneath and one can scarcely content one's self to remain alone in the solitude of this ruin.

In the immediate vicinity of the Des Chutes there are other attractions for the tourist. None are more interesting than a succession of caves which are found here. Some caves have as yet been only partially explored, some of them as far as a mile, but the main length and depth of the main ones are yet unknown. They are comparatively smooth as far as they have been explored, and travel in them is easy, but the attractions here are so numerous, and the people who have visited the spot so few, that no account has been given of a thorough examination. One of the most wonderful phenomena of these caves is that most of them are natural icehouses and have ice in them the year around. The few ranchers in the vicinity regard the caves as commonplace and go into them in the summer time and supply themselves with ice to save fresh meats and make ice cream and think nothing of it, but investigation has shown that these are the only ice caverns in the United States, and that they are among the wonders of natural phenomena in the world. A few such discoveries have been made in European countries but they are rare.

On the upper Des Chutes there are a number of lakes from one mile in length to ten miles. They are fed by springs and mountain streams and fairly teem with every species of trout. When one tires of mountain climbing, sight-seeing, killing bear or deer, he may stop here and camp beneath the tall pines on the shore of some clear lake and catch fish to his heart's content. In proper season these lakes are also the home of wild geese, ducks, brants, swan and every kind of water fowl. They are seldom molested and shooting here is good enough even for the amateur sportsman and a "picnic" for the professional. Most of the streams flowing into the Des Chutes and Crooked rivers, are good fishing waters and some of the finest "catches" in the country are made here.

Than the warm springs and rivers that boil from the earth, there are no more interesting features in Crook county. Near the headwaters of the Des Chutes are cold springs that boil up out of the earth—you might say out of the sage brush. In the parched sands, as if neglected for centuries, these streams shoot forth with a rush and flow away through the valleys, giving life to vegetation along their way. In the southeastern part of the county is a chain of warm springs. These springs have a large flow of water, and the medical qualities of the water are said to be equal to any in the world.

In the week of May 25, 1905, final arrangements were made for the organization of a furnace company to burn the cinnabar ore from the New Alamaden, Quick Silver and Gold Mining Company's property on Lookout Mountain. E. W. Elkins went to Portland to arrange such details as were necessary to the project. C. Fitzgerald, who came from San Francisco to erect the structure stated that he was highly pleased with present indications and that there was sufficient ore on the dump to justify an expenditure of $8,000 or $10,000 for the erection of a furnace. The furnace was completed in the fall of 1905.

The cinnabar mine is located about thirty miles east of Prineville, on the north slope of Lookout mountain, near the headwaters of Canyon City creek. It was located in the fall of 1899 by Carl Sitterly and H. S. Cram. The following Portland capitalists were interested in the property and it has since been developed as extensively as means of transportation would permit. It was incorporated in 1901 under the name of the American Alamaden Quicksilver and Gold Mining Company, with a capital stock of 1,500,000 shares. The principal stockholders were Levi Tillotson, H. S. Cram, vice-president; E. N. Wheeler, secretary; J. S. Silcox, treasurer; William Tillotson, and John Combs, board of directors. The general topography of the country is rough and broken, being well timbered with several varieties of fir, pine, tamarack and spruce. The property is well watered by several large springs.

Of the many and various resources of Crook county none is more noteworthy than the quartz and placer deposits of the Oregon Mayflower Company, at Howard, on the Ochoco, twenty-eight miles from Prineville. The company since making its first purchase here has acquired all the holdings of any consequence in the camp, so that the property is made up of twenty-seven claims, five lines of ditch, a large storage reservoir and all the available water rights. Timber is abundant for all, the district being in the Blue mountain district. The mines of the camp are found in a tract of porphyrite making up Gold Hill Bunco and Inda Hills, and covering portions of the main Ochoco and Scissors creek. The veins are fissures, cutting through the porphyrites and generally have a northeast strike. On the Gold Hill system the Mayflower vein is the chief one as in depth all others on the hill will unite with it. The placer deposits at the camp, worked spasmodically, and without system since the '70's have yielded large amounts of gold. The Oregon Mayflower Company, owner of this property, is a Washington corporation formed by Thronson Brothers. J. A. Thronson is secretary; C. J. Thronson, treasurer, and Thron Thronson, an assayer, geologist and mining engineer of repute and reliability, is president and manager with address at Howard, Oregon.

The Oregon King, formerly known as the Silver King, the first claim located in the Trout creek district, was discovered by a Walla Walla man named Wilson, in 1898. Soon after the discovery Wilson organized a company composed of John Kirby, Thron Thronson, J. T. and John Hubbard, and John Knight, and this company after sinking the shaft to a depth of about 100 feet, sold out their claims, twelve in number, to the Oregon King Mining Company, which company was organized by P. J. Inealy, of Krummerer, Wyoming, and J. G. Edwards and C. M. Cartwright, of Hay Creek, the original company retaining a controlling interest in the stock of the new company.

In the north central part of the county lies an extensive mineral belt upon which hundreds of mining claims have been located and a few of which were actively developed in 1902. At the head of Ochoco creek, east of Prineville, is another district containing some good prospects. During the summer of 1901 indications of petroleum were found over a large territory to the south and east of Prineville, and several companies were formed for the purpose of boring for oil and several thousand acres of so-called oil land filed on, but further than this nothing was done.

Crook county is quite rich in minerals, but owing to the lack of transportation facilities it has been held back until within, say, 1902.

CHAPTER VI

POLITICAL.

The first county officers of Crook county were appointed by Governor Moody, who was at the time of Crook county's separation from Wasco county, chief executive. These officials were: County Judge, S. G. Thompson; County Clerk, S. T. Richardson; Sheriff, George H. Churchill; Commissioners, B. F. Allen and Charles Cartwright; Assessor, S. J. Newson; School Superintendent, H. S. Dillard; Treasurer, G. A. Winckler; Coroner, Richard Graham. These appointments were made in September, 1882.

EDUCATIONAL.

The first school taught in Crook county was by William Pickett, who had formerly been an editor of some paper in Albany, probably the Herald. He was a man of superior editorial and literary ability, but somewhat dissipated and his friends had located him at Ochoco, where he could be more remote from temptation. But Mr. Pickett was not of the hardy build of western pioneers, and could not emulate, or even compete with the results of the strong muscles of his neighbors; he was unequal to either the tasks of driving oxen, chopping logs for house building, cooking, or splitting rails. But he made friends with everyone, and the settlers decided it would be best for him to teach a pioneer school. To this end a school was built, the old log house that now stands in the fields just north of Wayne Claypool's residence.

Here, in the fall of 1869, William Pickett taught Ochoco's first school, and if he could not earn his salt by mauling rails he certainly more than earned his salary at school teaching. The house was floored with puncheon, and seated with benches of hewn logs and lighted by numerous "chinks" between the logs. A blackboard was entirely beyond the "reach" of the school directors; no two children had books alike; some had none, and taken altogether they were the wildest, most mischievous, fun-loving set of youngsters who ever were taken in hand by a fatherly editor. But he did it somehow to the complete satisfaction of all the patrons and went away respected by his neighbors and their children. Perhaps the names of those who were matriculated to this primeval curriculum may prove interesting. They were: Jake Johnson, Virgil Marks, Arthur Judy, Al Judy, John Marks, Henry Marks, William Daugherty, H. D. Davis, H. J. Anderson, Margaret Johnson, Geneva Marks, "Boz" Daugherty, Tiney Johnson, Clara Clark, Ann Clark, Nettie Marks, Luther Claypool and Clara Claypool.

The toddlers of that school are the men and women of today, and are sending toddlers of their own to some other school. Let us earnestly hope that the today boys and girls are enjoying life to the full extent of that of their parents and pioneer students of Crook county.

The second school in the county and the first in Prineville, was conducted in an old log house. The teacher was Andrew M. Allen, of Polk county. In 1872 when O. D. Doane was superintendent of schools for Wasco county which is now Wasco and Crook counties, the present Crook county had but three school districts. This second school building was subsequently enlarged, in 1876, and two more teachers added. The present school house, however, in Prineville, was erected in 1887 and is a four-room frame building. Following is the report of County Superintendent William Johnson for 1888:

January 28, 1898, the Prineville Review published the following:

Those interested in the permanent organization of the Prineville Academy met last Tuesday at the Review office and adopted the following articles of incorporation.

"Know all men by these presents that we, J. H. Gray, W. A. Booth, and D. F. Stewart, all of Prineville, Crook county, Oregon, for the purpose hereinafter mentioned, and under and by virtue of the general laws of the state of Oregon, have incorporated ourselves and our successors and interest together, and by these presents do incorporate, and to that end and for that purpose have made and formed the following articles of incorporation, to wit:

"Article 1. The name assumed by this incorporation and by which it shall be known, is and shall be 'The Prineville Academy,' and the duration of the said incorporation shall be perpetual.

"Article 2. The enterprise, business, pursuit and occupation in which the said corporation purposes to engage in are to build, equip, maintain and carry on an academy or place of learning in the town of Prineville, Crook county, Oregon, in every respect as academies are carried on and maintained for the purpose of affording a means of higher education for the people of Oregon and their children; and to that end the corporation shall have power to buy, hold, own, lease, rent and sell real property; to hire teachers; to make rules for the government of the said school; to receive money and legacies; to own, buy and sell personal property, and to do all things necessary to be done in order to carry on such an undertaking.

"Article 3. The place where the said corporation purposes to and will have its principal offices and place of business shall be Prineville, Crook county, Oregon.

"Article 4. The amount of the capital stock of the said corporation shall be $1,000, to be divided into 100 shares of $10 each."

The incorporation above mentioned are now soliciting stock for the new corporation and are meeting with liberal support. There is no excuse for any one failing to take a share or two in this laudible enterprise. This corporation should be broad in its management and this the incorporators desire. No one shall be refused stock in the corporation and no one should neglect this opportunity.

For a time the affairs of the prospective academy "dragged" in a business sense. At a meeting held in September, 1897, it was decided to go on with the school. The following officers were elected to manage the work for the ensuing year: Trustees, G. W. Barnes, W. A. Booth and J. H. Gray; treasurer, Dr. H. P. Belknap; clerk, L. N. Liggett. Professor I. L. Ullery, of Canfield, Ohio, had been engaged to officiate as principal of the new educational institution. Formerly he had been successfully at the head of a number of educational enterprises. The fall session of 1898 marked the beginning of the second term of the Prineville Academy, of Crook county. Professor Ullery remained at its head. This academy ran several years and finally suspended.

In 1901 the capital of Crook county, Prineville, had an excellent graded school of 165 pupils under the management of Professor F. M. Mitchell and three assistants. Throughout the county generally these schools were being graded, or classified according to the course of study prescribed by the state board of education. The schools were well supplied with apparatus and a number had installed libraries consisting of books of reference and supplementary reading. There were forty-two teachers, nine of whom held state certificates or diplomas. It should be noticed that at this period, 1901, the Crook county teachers received better salaries than ever before. In 1897 the average salary paid male teachers was $34.25; female teachers, $25.15; in 1898 we find this raised to $38.40 and $33.50; in 1899 to $41.65 and $34.60, and in 1900 to $42.20 and $38.66.

In September, 1901, the Prineville schools fall term began with 121 pupils, by October 26th it had increased to 191. The school was in a most healthy condition and the discipline excellent. There was a demand for higher grade work and the ninth grade could now be organized.

March 12, 1904, the contract for building the county high school was awarded to C. A. Gray, a contractor of Salem, his bid being $19,998. It was specified that the material of the building should be brick and stone. The following general history of this structure, written by Prof. A. C. Strange, is of interest to all residents of Crook county:

Owing to Oregon's very limited railroad facilities a large area of the eastern section of the state is thinly settled and given over to a considerable extent to the stock business. As a consequence this portion of the state, until within the last few years, has been almost entirely without institutions of high school or academic rank. Residents were compelled to send their children at an early age away from home to remote sections of the state to procure desired education. To provide means of supplying this need the legislature of 1901 passed an act authorizing counties so desiring to submit to their voters the question of erecting buildings and maintaining county high schools, to be supported by a special tax and to be under the supervision of a board consisting of the county judge, the two county commissioners, the county superintendent of schools and the county treasurer.

Accordingly the matter was submitted to the people at the biennial election, June, 1902, and the vote was favorable by a considerable majority. Throughout the campaign the measure received the hearty support of the leading citizens of the county. But to no one is more credit due for the success of the movement than to William Boegli, at that time county superintendent.

The furtherance of the project then devolved upon the High School Board, consisting of Judge W. A. Booth, Commissioners M. D. Powell, and M. D. Healy, Superintendent Boegli and Treasurer M. H. Bell, to whom must be given the credit for its successful establishment. As the county possessed no suitable building an agreement was entered into with the school board and Principal E. E. Orton, of the Prineville public schools, to have the first year of the high school work taught in connection with the Prineville public school work. At the opening of the session about one dozen pupils presented themselves, of whom eight completed the year's work. It is quite probable that more would have completed had not an epidemic appeared in the community near the end of the school year compelling adjournment of schools.

During the year Judge Booth resigned on account of ill health, and M. R. Biggs was appointed by the governor as his successor and to him much credit is due for the upbuilding of the school. For the second year a room in the postoffice building was secured and A. C. Strange employed as teacher. Sixteen pupils enrolled in the two years' work, of whom six in the second and seven in the first completed the required branches.

During the year a contract for the erection of a $20,000 building, as has been stated, was awarded to C. A. Gray, with the result that the county now possesses a brick and stone building that would be an ornament to any city. It contains four well-lighted class-rooms, of which two are separated by a sliding door which makes possible their conversion into an assembly hall, besides two smaller rooms adapted for use as library and office. A basement for use as a gymnasium extends under the entire building and furnishes an abundance of room for all forms of indoor athletics. The building is heated by steam and is perfectly ventilated by the foul air shaft system. The campus is large and with proper improvement can be made very beautiful. The structure is located in a slightly spot where it meets the eyes of all entering the city from any direction.

At the biennial election in June, 1904, an almost entirely new board was chosen; County Judge W. A. Bell, Commissioner S. S. Stearns, Superintendent C. B. Dinwiddie and Treasurer O. C. Gray. However, these men are all public spirited citizens and the interests of the school did not suffer at their hands. The third year's enrollment increased to 40, a class of 24 having entered the first year. Another teacher, Miss Sarah Marshall, an alumnus of an eastern normal, was secured and she has conducted classes in English and Latin, leaving the work in mathematics, science and history to Mr. Strange. The school offers two regular courses: Scientific and Latin, covering the following studies: History, English, Science, Mathematics and Latin. In English; grammar, rhetoric, English and American Literature; English readings and themes are studied; in history, Greek, Roman, European, English and American; economics and citizenship; in science, physical geography, hygiene, botany, geology, zoology, physics and chemistry; in mathematics, algebra, higher arithmetic, plane and solid geometry and bookkeeping; in Latin, Cornelius Nepos, Cæsar and Virgil. Besides this required work classes in bookkeeping are maintained for those who desire it, who may not have completed the eighth grade examination necessary to admit them into the school.

At the close of the session of 1904-5, the first class in the history of the school was graduated. The members were Misses Gertrude Sharp and Iva Booth, and Charles O. Christiani who had completed three years' work, it being thought best by the board to limit the course to three years until attendance was sufficient to warrant the expense of maintaining the full four years' work. The future of this school appears bright. The county is large, wealthy, and of unlimited resources, and is having marvelous growth. With the incoming of many new homeseekers will come a great increase of attendance; additional apparatus will be secured, more teachers employed as needed, and there should grow up in Prineville one of the best institutions of high school rank in the state of Oregon.

We cannot more appropriately close the educational chapter of Crook county than with the following comprehensive and interesting article on the present condition of the schools of Crook county, written by County Superintendent C. B. Dinwiddie:

The schools of Crook county are in a state of rapid development in every way. The old rough, lumber-school houses are fast giving way to new painted and belled school houses, and the home-made, back-breaking instruments of torture called "seats" are being replaced by patented seats, and a general interest is being taken in the appearance and comfort of school houses and surroundings.

Nor is the outward improvement the only one. We have a better class of teachers than ever before, or rather the same class have attained a greater degree of excellence, for many of our teachers have been at work in the county schools for some time, and as a result are prepared to do much toward aiding the proper development and grading of schools. Nearly all our new teachers are persons of broad experience and exceptional ability.

Another is in the way of salaries paid teachers, the average having risen nearly $10 per month during the present year. Salaries range from $40 to $75 per month in country schools, and from $40 to $80 in city schools. Prineville public schools employ six teachers with an enrollment of over 200 pupils. Bend public school employs two teachers with an enrollment of over 100 pupils. Both city schools expect to build new additions. Prineville's graduating class numbered 31 for the closing term of 1904-5. Crook county's high school building is something of which to be proud. It is a brick and stone two-story building. The school itself is in a flourishing condition with two teachers.

There are in the county 54 districts, in running order, with an enumeration of over 1,500 pupils. The-present year will see a probable increase of 300 or 400 on account of the rapid settling up of some parts of the country. The schools of the county are fairly well graded according to the course of study, and the teachers are making a strenuous effort to get them in better condition. The average length of the school term has also increased during the present year and bids fair to increase during the coming year.

We believe the schools of Crook county will compare favorably with any interior county where natural school conditions, distances, settlements, etc., are no more favorable than here.

BIOGRAPHICAL SKETCHES

CROOK COUNTY

VAN GESNER, M. D., is one of Crook county's wealthy stockmen and resides about thirty miles out from Prineville on the Burns stage road. He is a native Oregonian, his birth place being Salem and the date of that event July, 1852. R. A. Gesner, his father, a native of Illinois, crossed the plains with ox teams in 1845 and settled on a donation claim near Salem. He became a wealthy and prominent man of that section. He married Mary E. Bartlet, a native of Indiana, who moved to Illinois with her parents when a girl, where her wedding occurred. She accompanied her husband across the plains and was one of the pioneer women of the Willamette valley. Our subject was well educated in the Salem schools and then entered the Willamette University where he spent one year. After that he matriculated in the Jefferson Medical College of Philadelphia and graduated in 1883 with the degree of Doctor of Medicine. In the same year Dr. Gesner located at Prineville and opened an office. From the outset he was favored with a good practice which grew rapidly and steadily while he remained in the profession, but the strain of such an extensive practice wore on his health and he was forced to retire for recuperation. He tried the salubrious climate of San Jose, California, but later it was found that he must abandon his practice entirely or pay the forfeit of death. Consequently in 1891 he laid aside his office life entirely and invested his money in sheep. Later he entered partnership with J. N. Williamson and they now have a very extensive holdings in Crook county in both land and in stock. The same splendid success that attended the doctor in his professional life is now being enjoyed by him in the stock business, which manifests him a man of thoroughness, of splendid judgment and of industry.

In 1886 Dr. Gesner married Annie Fields, a native of Brownville, Oregon. Her father, William Fields, was among the earliest settlers to Oregon and was a well to do and prominent man. To the doctor and his wife two children have been born, Maude and Van.

Dr. Gesner is a member of the A. O. U. W. and a very popular man, while he and his wife are among the leading citizens of the entire country.

O. G. COLLVER, a merchant at Culver, Crook county, was born in Douglas county, Oregon, in 1854. His father was Alfred B. Collver, a native of Cuyahoga county, Ohio, and one of the very early pioneers to Oregon, having crossed the plains in 1852 to Douglas county. The mother of our subject was Ruth (Rice) Collver, also a native of Ohio, who came across the plains with her husband. In 1857 our subject was taken by his parents to where Marshfield, Coos county, is now located, Marshfield then being unknown. They moved thither over a pack trail as no roads were then in the county. Our subject gained his education from the public schools and from Wilbur Academy of Douglas county, from which institution he would have graduated six months later had not his health failed. Being obliged to quit study on account of failing health, he then took charge of a fruit evaporator and conducted the same for three years. In 1880 he came to The Dalles and was there engaged for five years. Then he sought out a location in Crook county, taking a homestead, pre-emption and bought a quarter section besides. He gave his attention to farming this land and stock raising and with a good degree of success until 1900, when he sold out the entire property and opened a general merchandise establishment at Culver. He succeeded in getting the postoffice established there and since that time Mr. Collver has prosecuted the mercantile business with splendid success. He carries a well assorted and complete stock of all kinds of goods used in this section of the country and is building up a splendid trade.

On October 16, 1881, Mr. Collver married Margaret Barnett, who was born in Linn county, Oregon, on December 24, 1856. Her death occurred on January 21, 1900. Her father was E. M. Barnett, one of the early pioneers of Oregon, having crossed the plains in 1852. In 1901 Mr. Collver married Virginia (Prentice) Foster of Kansas City.

Fraternally our subject is a member of the A. O. U. W., the Artisans and the Degree of Honor. He also belongs to the Christian Science church and takes a marked interest in educational and religious affairs. He has done the work of a pioneer well and has assisted materially in building this part of the west.

A. W. BOYCE is a farmer and stockman residing at Haystack. He was born in New York state in 1860, the son of Aldis Boyce, a native of New Hampshire. His education was received in Massachusetts, and when eighteen years of age he came to California where he worked for wages for a short time. In 1879 Mr. Boyce came on to Oregon and sought employment on the John Day river, where he was engaged for two years. Then he went to Trout creek and still worked for wages. After that he took up the sheep business for himself and continued in the same for ten years. Then he sold his bands of sheep and engaged in cattle raising which he still continues. He and his wife now have some fifteen hundred acres of land and a beautiful residence, besides considerable stock. Mr. Boyce is a man of thrift and good taste and everything connected with his place indicates these qualities. He has been favored with good success, owing to his industry and careful management and, therefore, is one of the leading men of this part of the county.

In December, 1896, Mr. Boyce married Mrs. Mary Weber, the daughter of S. S. Brown, who is mentioned in another portion of this work. To this union one child, Mamie, has been born, who is six years of age.

Mr. Boyce is a member of the A. O. U. W. and the Artisans, while in politics he is a good active Republican. He is a man of good standing and has many friends throughout the county.

To illustrate some of the hardships of the early settlers of this country had to contend with we mention the winter of 1884-5, when the snow lay five feet deep on the level. Before that it was the general opinion that it was safe to run sheep without putting up hay for the winter. That was the second year after our subject had started in the sheep business. He had as a partner his younger brother, and out of two thousand six hundred sheep they lost twenty-two hundred. They had no hay and no way of moving the sheep to it if they had possessed it. In the spring they bought more sheep and paid for them all in due time, paying ten per cent interest both on the price of them and on a large debt hanging over the dead ones. Still they perserved and came out all right in the end.

JAMES M. STREET is now one of the substantial men of Crook county and has been a typical frontiersman in this and other western sections. He is one of the hardy, fearless men whose pleasure it was to take up the hard part of pioneer living and fight back the savage until the way was open for the more timid class from the east to settle in this country. Mr. Street follows farming and stock raising at the present time and resides about thirty-seven miles out from Paulina on the Burns stage road. He was born in Putnam county, Tennessee, on January 4, 1860. John Street, his father, was born in Charleston, South Carolina, on January 12, 1812. When a young man he removed to Tennessee and engaged in farming. Also he gave considerable attention to teaching school both in South Carolina and in Tennessee. He enlisted at the time of the outbreak of the Mexican war and was an orderly sergeant under General Scott. After serving during that entire struggle he returned to Tennessee and married in 1851. Upon the outbreak of the Civil war he enlisted to fight throughout. In 1870 he journeyed to California and there remained until his death, on August 30, 1884. He was a prominent, well educated and leading man. He had married Martha A. Roberson, a native of Putnam county, Tennessee. She was the mother of ten children and accompanied her husband in his various journeys, and is now living in California. Our subject was but a lad when the family came to California and there he received his education. When eighteen years of age he came to what is now Harney county, Oregon, and engaged as a cowboy. For two years he followed that business steadily, becoming one of the most expert horsemen and ropers in the country. Then he returned to California and farmed for a couple of years. He

Mr. and Mrs. James M. Street

George W. Noble

traveled about considerably until 1884 when he journeyed to Crook county and wrought for wages two years before taking the government land where he now resides. He has ridden the range in Nevada, California and Oregon and is thoroughly acquainted not only with the country but with the dangers and hardships of cowboy life. Starting in life with no capital whatever, Mr. Street has become a wealthy man and has gained it all by his own efforts.

In 1897 Mr. Street married Miss Emma Hamilton, who was born in Lane county, Oregon, and came to Prineville with her parents in 1876. Her father, William C. Hamilton, was born in Indiana, raised in Illinois and crossed the plains to Oregon in 1852. He married Jane Gholson, a native of Illinois, who was raised in Iowa and crossed the plains to Oregon in 1853. Mr. and Mrs. Street have one child, Eva G. During the Bannock war Mr. Street was a scout for Colonel Bernard and did much excellent service. During this time he made one of the most famous rides on record. Being pursued by Indians, he started for help at three o'clock in the afternoon and the next morning at nine o'clock reached his destination, after riding one hundred and twenty miles. He escaped his pursuers and arrived in safety. He held the office of orderly sergeant of the home guards during this Indian war and his fearlessness and excellent service were well known to those who participated in that struggle.

GEORGE W. NOBLE lives on Beaver creek ten miles up from Paulina, and follows farming and stock raising. He was born in Linn county, Oregon, on September 30, 1851, the son of William and Sarah (Sulesberger) Noble. The father was a native of Ohio, came to Iowa in 1845 and remained there until 1850, in which year he crossed the plains with ox teams to Linn county, Oregon. During the trip they had a great many battles with the Indians and lost a good deal of their stock. Finally when they reached the Cascades their teams were so depleted that they were forced to yoke in the milk cows to assist in pulling the wagons across the mountains. Even then they were obliged to abandon one wagon in the mountains. Mr. Noble settled on a donation claim in Linn county and remained there until 1871. In that year he came to Crook county and located a ranch on Beaver creek. That was his home until just prior to his death when he returned to the Willamette valley. Our subject's mother was born in Germany and came to Ohio with her parents when nine years of age. There she grew up and was married and accompanied her husband across the plains and was a faithful helpmeet to him in all the pioneer labors that he performed. She is still living in Prineville.

When fifteen years of age George W. began to assume the responsibilities of life for himself and about that time went to California and remained in that state nine years. In 1875 he came north again and finally took government land where he now resides. He purchased land in addition until he has a fine large estate well fitted up with everything for a first-class farm and fruit ranch. He has displayed splendid ability in business lines and every move that he has made has been one of success. The result is that he is today one of the wealthy men of Crook county and one of its leading citizens.

In 1885 Mr. Noble married Miss Etta Stewart, who was born in Benton county, Oregon, the daughter of John and Cordelia (Hobb) Stewart. The father, a native of Indiana, crossed the plains to Oregon in 1845 and became a very prominent man in this state. He was a member of the legislature from Douglas county and did much to promote the settlement and the upbuilding of the state. His wife was born in Boone county, Missouri, and crossed the plains with her parents in 1860. To our subject and his wife two children have been born, Albert and Elme.

Mr. Noble is a member of the A. F. & A. M. and the I. O. O. F.

CHARLES T. LILLARD, an enterprising farmer and stockman of Crook county, resides about twenty miles south from Paulina on the south fork of Twelve Mile creek, where he does a fine business and has a well improved place. He was born in Santa Clara county, California, on April 11, 1865, being the son of David B. and Hetty (Allen) Lillard, natives of Kentucky and Missouri respectively. The mother died when our subject was a child. The father was born on May 13, 1827, and when six years of age moved to Missouri with his parents where he was reared and educated. In 1846 he enlisted in the Mexican war and spent two years under arms. After that he returned to Missouri, married and in 1853 crossed the plains with ox teams to California. He started to ranching there, continued in that business ever since and is living now on the same place. He has always taken a prominent part in public affairs and was a sturdy pioneer both of Missouri and California. Charles T. was educated in the schools of his native country and when grown to young manhood engaged with Miller and Lux, very large stockmen of that section, where he wrought for a number of years. In 1887 he came to Harney county, Oregon, and spent one winter. The next spring he journeyed on to Crook county and finally selected his present place, taking it through government right. He has bought other land since and has a good farm, well laid out and improved. Mr. Lillard immediately engaged in stock raising and he has continued in that business very successfully since. He handles cattle, horses and mules. His horses and mules are all first-class draft animals and he does a fine business in this line. When Mr. Lillard started out in life he had no capital of his own and all he gained was by his own individual labor. Owing to his thrift and sagacity he has accumulated a fine property. His ranch is a large and valuable one. His stock is first-class and he has lots of it. Also he owns other property. He is one of the representative and substantial men of Crook county and has a splendid standing among his fellow men.

In 1894 Mr. Lillard married Miss Grace S., the daughter of A. O. and Mary A. (Calvert) Bedell, natives of Missouri. They crossed the plains in early days to Montana and were pioneers in the west. Mrs. Lillard's parents both came from prominent and well to do families and were leading people. Mrs. Lillard was born in Montana, and when still a child was brought to Oregon by her parents. To Mr. and Mrs. Lillard two children have been born, Joe Alvin and Dorothy.

Mr. Lillard is a member of the I. O. O. F. and the A. F. & A. M., while his wife belongs to the Eastern Star. He is a man who takes a lively interest in political matters and in educational affairs and in addition labors for the upbuilding and improvement of this country.

STEPHEN W. YANCEY is a farmer and sheep raiser residing on the Adams ranch, eight miles southeast from Prineville. He was born in Kansas on February 18, 1870, the son of J. P. and Susannah (Hegler) Yancey, natives of Illinois. In 1852 they crossed the plains to California where the father tried farming for some time. In 1857 he went to Nevada, followed various occupations and finally, with others, discovered the famous Walker mines in 1858. It was 1881 when he came to Crook county with his family, and in 1897 he removed to Lakeview where he engaged in freighting and also conducts a feed stable. He is well known for his honesty and sagacity. Our subject was educated in the public schools of Prineville and early engaged in sheep shearing. He also raised stock for himself and followed various other occupations until he entered the sheep business in which he has now got a fine start, owning nearly three thousand head.

On October 22, 1893, Mr. Yancey married Miss Sarah Adams, the daughter of William Adams, a pioneer of Crook county and now residing at Prineville, who also is mentioned in another portion of this work. Mr. and Mrs. Yancey have three children, Orville, Adrian and Hazel.

SAMUEL R. SLAYTON, one of the venerable pioneers of Oregon and well acquainted with the various sections of the Pacific coast, is now living a retired life in Prineville, Oregon. He was born in Windsor county, Vermont, on August 27, 1830. Leland Slayton, his father, was also born in the same county and there remained until his death, being a farmer all his life. He was a very prominent man in religious matters, being at first a Universalist and then a member of the Adventist church. The original Slayton family came from England to America among the earliest colonists of Massachusetts. A little later they located in Vermont, being the first settlers in Woodstock. The father married Cassandana Ransom, who was also born in Woodstock. She came from a very prominent family of a distinguished martial record. Her brother, Truman B. Ransom, was president of the Norwich Military Academy in Vermont and later was a colonel in the Mexican War and was killed during the battle of Chapultepec. His son, Greenfield Ransom, was a brevet major general in the Civil War. Our subject began his education in his birthplace, then entered the Kimball Union Academy, New Hampshire, but before completing the course he decided to come west and accordingly journeyed across the plains in 1852 to Sacramento, California. A few weeks later he started for Linn county, Oregon, and there took a donation claim near the present city of Harrisburg. He made several trips to the mines in California, then he sold his donation claim and took another piece of land in what is now Douglas county, Oregon. He improved that well, taught school and did mining, and in 1863 sold out and came to Polk county, Oregon. In 1869 we find him in what is now Crook county, Prineville then being composed of one building. He located in the vicinity of Prineville and took some stock on shares. Notwithstanding his early labors, fortune had not smiled upon him and he started here with very little means.

The constant and industrious efforts brought their due reward and he began to prosper and has become one of the wealthy and leading stock men of central Oregon. Recently Mr. Slayton retired from active life and simply attends to the oversight of his business from Prineville.

In 1858 Mr. Slayton married Eliza J. Savery, who was born in Mississippi, the daughter of Seaborn and Massie Savery. The father died in Iowa. Mrs. Slayton, who died October 31, 1901, came across the plains in 1852 and settled in Douglas county, where she met and married the subject of this sketch. Mr. Slayton took part in the terrible Indian struggles and saw three months' service in the Rogue River War. The children born to our subject and his wife are Edgar T., a rancher in Crook county; George S., a rancher in Cottonwood, Idaho; Mrs. Virginia U'Ren and Mabel Engs. For many long years Mr. Slayton has labored here and has achieved a success of which any one would be proud. He is now enjoying the fruits of his labors surrounded by many admiring friends. He certainly is to be classed among the leading citizens of the county and has done well the extended labors which he has performed.

EDWARD NEWTON WHITE, an horticulturist and farmer of Crook county, is now living five miles southeast from Prineville. He is to be classed as one of the early pioneers of this county, and, in fact, has been on the frontier all his life. He was born in Hancock county, Illinois, on April 28, 1828, the son of Edward White, one of the earliest pioneers of Illinois. He was reared in the wilds of Illinois, being among the Indians a large portion of the time, until March 13, 1845, when he was seventeen years of age. He was then taken as interpreter for a train which was to make its way across the plains to the Pacific coast. When they arrived at the Boise river they were surrounded by hostile Indians, but Mr. White, owing to his skill and knowledge of the savages, succeeded in extricating his train without bloodshed. They settled in the Willamette valley and remained until 1849, when he went to the California mines. A year later he returned to Linn county. While going to California in 1849, on the Rogue river, he, with fifteen companions, was suddenly met by a large number of hostile Indians. Owing to his coolness and knowledge of Indian ways, customs and language, he was enabled on this occasion also to avoid bloodshed. Much is due to him on this occasion and especially at this last time for it was very evident that a massacre had been planned.

In the spring of 1855 he went to Colville, Washington, on account of his health, and in the fall, when he returned to the Willamette valley, he enlisted to fight the Indians. He was in the service for three months and then returned to the valley, where he farmed until 1871. In that year he came to Crook county and settled on the upper Ochoco, eight miles east from where Prineville now stands. He engaged in stock raising for ten years and then purchased a place one and a half miles from Prineville, where he remained about fifteen years with the exception of three years, which he spent at Dufur, for the benefit of his health. Three years since he came to his present location and secured one hundred and sixty acres of land. He has put out one of the choicest orchards to be found in eastern Oregon and doubtless the best one in Crook county. He also retains his farm near Prineville, but pays especial attention to the home place. Mr. White has taken great pains to beautify and improve his place and is very skillful in horticulture.

In 1848 Mr. White married Catherine J. Burkhart, a native of Greene county, Illinois. Her father, John Burkhart, was a pioneer of 1847. After her death Mr. White married Anna Woodsides, the latter wedding occurring in 1860. This Mrs. White was born in Ohio. Her father, Thomas Woodsides, was a pioneer of 1847. He started across the plains in that year with his family and he and four of his children died before they reached the Willamette valley, the last one being buried at The Dalles. To Mr. and Mrs. White the following named children have been born: Mrs. Cynthia L. Harshler, of Dufur; Mrs. Adelia A. Baker, of Benton county; Mrs. Jane McCullo, of Prineville; Mrs. Udosica Zeace, of Boise; Grant, of British Columbia; Aaron W., in Harney county; Mrs. Grace E. Cham, and Edward C. Mr. White has passed a long and eventful career and is now hale and hearty and has the great privilege of spending the golden years of his life supplied with the competence that his labor and thrift have secured, while he has the esteem, confidence and good will of all who know him.

JOSEPH H. DELORE, a farmer and stock raiser residing in Prineville, who was born in Marion county, Oregon, on May 21, 1849. His father, Peter Delore, was born where LaGrande Oregon, now stands, in 1821, and is one of the historical characters of the Webfoot State. He now resides in southeastern Crook county, and a detailed history of his career will be found in another portion of this work. Joseph H. obtained his primary education in Marion county, and also attended school in Wasco county, where he remained until 1874, when he went to Nevada and rode the range for fourteen years. He came to Crook county in 1889 and selected a place on Beaver creek where he engaged in horse and cattle raising until 1900. In that year he sold his land and bought his present place, consisting of one-fourth section of fine agricultural soil. This lies six miles north of Prineville and is well improved with house, barn and other buildings and is all under cultivation, producing the cereals and hay. Mr. Delore also owns a residence in Prineville where the family dwell during the school months of the year.

In 1902 Mr. Delore married Virginia Bertrand, the widow of Scipion Bertrand. Mrs. Delore and her former husband were born in France and came to the United States in 1893, settling in Connecticut. There Mr. Bertrand died in 1899. Five children survive him, three of whom are living with our subject and the other two in Connecticut. In 1901 Mrs. Delore came to Prineville and there occurred her marriage to our subject as stated above.

Mr. Delore is a hard working man and is fast laying the foundations for wealth and independence, being considered one of the well-to-do farmers of this section. During the Indian troubles he was engaged as a scout with his brother, Peter, who was captain of the scouts and who is also mentioned in this history. Mr. and Mrs. Delore are members of the Catholic church.

SAMUEL RUSH, a farmer residing at Lamonta, Crook county, was born in Jackson county, Alabama, on April 24, 1829. His father, Jacob Rush, was born in North Carolina, in 1806, and married Malinda Satterfield, who was born in Jackson county, Alabama, in 1813. Our subject received his early education in the common schools of Alabama, but owing to the fact that the country there was very new, he had little opportunity for schooling. However, he studied books and periodicals that he could secure outside of school and became well read. He went with his parents to Crawford county, Arkansas, in 1846, where they settled on a farm and remained until March 15, 1852, when they started with an ox team across the plains. Our subject's father was the captain of the train and the company consisted of twenty-one wagons and one hundred and five people. Their first difficulties were encountered when they got to the Big Blue, as there the cholera broke out and one man died. In a very short time the disease spread throughout the train and to other trains on the road and when they reached the Little Blue our subject's father died. Our subject, one brother and his youngest sister took the disease and just at the critical stage a doctor came along and gave them medicine, which with good care pulled them through. So terribly fierce were the ravages of this disease that a cavalry captain in the United States army who came along at that time counted eleven hundred graves inside of ninety miles. As the Indians were hostile, our subject was urged to push on and they finally got to Fort Kearney, overtaking five wagons of their train that had gone on. There six people from these wagons died in seven days. Then the little train pushed on up the Platte valley and everything went well until in the Rockies, when Nancy Rush, a sister of our subject, took mountain fever. She lingered until they crossed the John Day and then died. At Willow creek, in Morrow county, they had exhausted their provisions and our subject purchased from a man who was camped on the road, seventeen pounds of flour for eighteen dollars. On Fifteenmile creek, in what is now Gilliam county, they came to a settler's place, named Nathan Olney, who sold them a few potatoes for thirty-seven and one-half cents per pound. When they arrived at The Dalles, our subject had no money but he sold a yoke of oxen and bought a little flour which cost three bits a pound. As Mr. Rush could get no passage on the boats on the river, he hired Indians to take him and the balance of the family to Cascade Falls. His brother, Richard, drove the cattle down, and took the typhoid fever. Then they hired another party to take the cattle on to the mouth of the Sandy and the family went down the river on a flat boat owned by Joseph Stephens, who, owing to their terrible troubles, suffering and shortage of cash, took them down free of charge. At the mouth of the Sandy, the mother died and was there buried. They had left one wagon on the Malheur in Eastern Oregon and one with Parker & Elliott at The Dalles, who agreed to deliver it at Portland by December 25. Afterwards, Mr. Gates, an attorney at The Dalles, said that the wagon was carried away by a freshet so our subject sustained that loss. At Sandy, he secured a wagon from Mr. Smith to carry their effects to Oregon City with the agreement with Mr. Smith that the wagon was to be delivered in Linn county by December 25. They were very short of provisions on this trip to Oregon City and on one occasion he met a man who had a little sugar who kindly divided with them as they had almost nothing. Out of one hundred and five souls starting on this memorable trip across the plains, but forty-five reached Oregon, the others having all succumbed to disease. Many times the train was threatened by the Indians, but they had no serious trouble with them. Mr. Rush saw Mr. Smith from whom he had gotten the wagon and told him it was impossible for him to bring it to Linn county but that he would pay him for it if he would sell it. Mr. Smith said to bring the wagon or one hundred dollars by December 25. This agreement our subject carried out although nearly at the cost of his life. He took the money on foot from Oregon City through snow and ice to Mr. Smith's place. Heavy amounts of water had fallen and every swail was full. This was frozen and deep snow had fallen over it. The ice was not heavy enough to bear his weight up and he was constantly breaking through. It was a most exhausting trip, and often wet, entirely worn out at night, he was unable to find a place to sleep. On some occasions, he fought with the people to secure entrance within their doors. At one time, he was two days without food. Finally, he reached Mr. Smith's place on December 24, but this man refused to give him a receipt in full as he had failed to bring a chain that belonged with the wagon. Young Rush was not to be put off thus and finally Smith yielded and gave a receipt in full. Mr. Rush came back, arriving in Oregon City on January 10, 1853. He was then brought face to face with the gloomy outlook of caring for his five brothers and sisters with scarcely no means in hand and provisions terribly high, flour being thirty-five dollars per barrel. Finally his money run out and our subject applied to Dr. McLaughlin of the Hudson's Bay Company, who then owned the flouring mill at Oregon City, for work to buy flour, saying that he had a yoke of oxen and would do him good work. The doctor replied that he had no need of any work. Mr. Rush pushed his case, showing that they were starving and must have provisions. Still the doctor refused and Rush said, "If you do not let me have flour, I will go down to the mill and take it." The doctor perceiving his resolute spirit and desperate condition, invited him to his house and gave him money with which to buy food. The next year Mr. Rush had earned money enough to repay the doctor and brought it to him, much to that gentleman's surprise, who complimented the young man for his sterling integrity, saying, "Keep the money, a man with your grit can always get flour from me." The next move for Mr. Rush after the flour incident was to take a contract from William Barlow to cut fifteen thousand rails at one dollar and fifty cents per hundred, taking flour at twenty-two and twenty-five cents per pound for pay. His brother was still weak from the fever and unable to work. Mr. Rush remarks that Mr. Barlow was very kind to him in many ways at this time and he continued in his employ until August, 1853, then the family made its way into Lane county, where our subject took a donation claim, the date being September 3, 1853. He lived there fifteen years and then in 1867, moved to Jackson county, where he remained until 1884. Then he journeyed to Crook county. Here he purchased land and has continued farming since. He has done pioneer work both in the valley and here and deserves much credit as a frontiersman and pathfinder.

On March 12, 1857, Mr. Rush married Elizabeth Breeding, who was born in Missouri, on December 25, 1838. The children born to this couple are Jennie, the wife of J. R. Bennett; Malinda, married to J. W. Robinson; J. C.; Mrs. Ella Springs; Belle, wife of James Wood; and Mamie, wife of J. T. Robinson.

Mr. and Mrs. Rush are members of the Christian church and are worthy people. In politics, he has always been a Democrat. Everything that is for the betterment of the country finds in Mr. Rush a hearty support and he is well known and highly esteemed.

It is of interest to know that Dr. Benjamin Rush, who signed the Declaration of Independence, was a brother of the grandfather of our subject.

DAVID E. TEMPLETON, a prominent citizen and an early pioneer of Crook county, is engaged in overseeing his interests in stock raising and farming and in the drug business. He was born in Indiana, on May 4, 1831, the son of William T. and Elizabeth (Ramsey) Templeton. The father was born in Rockbridge county, Virginia, in 1809, and descended from one of the prominent colonial families. The Templetons first came from England and settled in the wilds of the new world with the Jamestown colony. They were identified with the American cause before there was a United States and were sturdy and substantial people. The father moved with his parents to Indiana and settlement was made on a farm in Henry county. In 1837 he came to Missouri, where he remained until the spring of 1847, then he journeyed across the plains, being accompanied by his wife and nine children of whom our subject was the oldest. They used oxen to make the trip and finally landed in Linn county, where the father took a donation claim and remained until his death. He was one of the leading citizens of the country and became wealthy before he died. The Templeton family was among the first settlers in Virginia, in Indiana and in Linn county, Oregon. The mother of our subject was born in Greene county, Pennsylvania, and came with her parents to Indiana when young. There she was married. Her ancestors were of Irish extraction. Our subject received his early education in Missouri and then completed his studies in Rev. Spalding's missionary school in the Willamette valley. He labored on his father's donation claim until of proper age, then took one for himself adjoining. That was his home until 1870, when he came to the vicinity of Prineville and took government land and engaged in stock raising. He soon became one of the large stock owners of the county and now owns five quarter sections and much stock. With his son, he is operating a drug store, under the firm name of Templeton and son.

In 1855, Mr. Templeton married Lavinia Pell, who was born in Ohio and came with her father to Missouri in 1852 and then crossed the plains to Oregon. Her parents were Calvin and Mary (McCarren) Pell, pioneers of Oregon. Our subject was county commissioner of Crook county for four years and has always taken a keen interest in political matters. He has always done a great deal to advance the interests of Crook county. He is a man of sterling worth and integrity and is well known in central Oregon. Mr. Templeton and his wife belong to the Presbyterian church, he having joined when he was twenty-one years of age. He started in life with very little funds and in 1849 went to the mines of California where he was very successful. It is of interest to know that our subject was the clerk of the first election held in Linn county. Being then eighteen years of age he distinctly remembers that there were but seventeen votes cast at the election.

WALLACE POST is one of the industrious and capable men of Crook county and has labored continuously here for the past twenty years and has accomplished very much in the line of improvement and building up which is the strength of any community. He is a man with a deep sense of honor and has so conducted himself that he has won the admiration and respect of every one who is acquainted with him. At present, he is engaged in general farming and stock raising and resides about twenty-six miles out from Prineville on the Burns stage road. His birth occurred in Illinois, on November 19, 1847. Stephen Hoyt Post, his father, was born in Pennsylvania and moved to Illinois in very early days with his father, Joseph Post. There he grew to manhood, followed farming and in 1850, crossed the plains with ox teams to California. He remained one year in that new country then returned home and in 1852 he crossed the plains with ox teams a second time, landing in California. In 1854, he returned to Illinois and the next year moved to Blackhawk county, Iowa, where he remained a year. His next move was to Missouri, where he purchased a farm and remained until 1857. In that year, he brought his family across the plains to Siskiyou county, California, being captain of the train. In 1859, they settled in Polk county, Oregon and in 1864, they went to Benton county, Oregon. There he remained until his death. On both trips from the Pacific coast back to the states, he went by water. He married Ursulia Wells, a native of New York, where also the wedding occurred. She crossed the plains with her husband in 1857. Our subject received a little education in states before he was ten years of age, but after that, as the family were on the frontier all of the time, all he gained from reading at home. He was reared on the farm and labored with his father until the latter's death, then he supported his mother until she married a second time. After that, he began farming for himself and bought and sold several farms in the Willamette valley. In 1885, Mr. Post came to his present location and took government land. He immediately began raising sheep but later exchanged them for cattle. Now he has a fine ranch with one hundred acres under ditch and considerable stock. He has been prospered in his labors here and is considered one of the well-to-do men of the county. Although Mr. Post started in life with absolutely no capital he has won his way by his own labors to a place of competence and has gained for himself the entire confidence and esteem of his fellows. Although he himself was not permitted to enjoy the privileges of school, he is a very warm advocate and supporter of educational institutions. He has a very active mind which has been gathering information all these years and he is a man well posted on the questions and issues of the day and is a first class reasoner.

In 1866, Mr. Post married Lucy E. Herbert, who was born and reared in Benton county, Oregon. Her father, Joshua Herbert, was born on Lake Erie and followed the trade of the millwright during his life and came in 1844, to the Willamette valley. He located the first flour mill south of Oregon City. He married Elizabeth Smith, who crossed the plains in 1846. Mr. and Mrs. Post have nine children: Mrs. Annie M. Crosby, Mrs. Ida Young, Mrs. Emma J. Gillmor and Mrs. Estella E. Boardman, whose husbands own fruit ranches in the Hood River country; Frank M., and William H., ranchers in Crook county; Joseph R., Clarence and Nelly B., at home.

Since he was sixteen years of age, our subject has been a member of the Christian church and has always been very active in his labors for the spreading of the gospel and the upbuilding of the churches. He has labored much in Sunday school work and has been superintendent of the school for years. He and his wife are devout Christians and are constantly on the alert to set forth those principles taught by Scripture for the good of all mankind.

JAMES M. FAUGHT has been a pioneer of the Pacific coast for a great many years and various sections of the country bear evidence of his industry and thrift. He now resides on the Burns stage road, ten miles out from Prineville, where he has a good place and follows farming. He was born in Indiana, on November 4, 1834 the son of William M. Faught, a native of Shelby county, Kentucky. The father came to Indiana in early day and settled on a farm twenty miles west from Indianapolis. In addition to handling his farm, he operated a flourmill, a sawmill and a distillery and became very wealthy. In 1840, he lost his wealth by going security for other parties. Following that, he disposed of what property he had left and moved to Davis county, Iowa, and took up government land. In 1850, he and our subject crossed the plains to California where they were engaged in mining for three years, then they returned to Iowa with a pack train. The next year the father brought his family to the west, accompanied by two brothers. They located on land which they supposed belonged to the government but which afterward proved to be a Spanish grant. Upon ascertaining that point, Mr. Faught sold his improvements and the remainder of his life, lived with his children. He had married Nancy Sears, a native of Virginia, the wedding occurring in Indiana. Our subject was but ten years of age when the family moved to Iowa but as there were practically no schools in that then wild country he had very little opportunity to gain an education. As before stated, he accompanied his father on a trip across the plains then journeyed with a pack train back to the states and in 1854, came a second time to California. When twenty-three years of age, he started for himself, having as his capital a Spanish horse and a change of clothing. He began by renting land and during the harvest seasons operated a threshing machine until he finally secured sufficient money to purchase a farm in Mendocino county, California, in 1865. Twelve years later, he sold that property for eight thousand dollars and moved to Trout creek, Crook county, taking up the sheep business. He handled the first sheep in that part of the country and in 1882, moved to Prineville, where he remained two years, handling sheep. Two years later, he purchased a ranch on Bear creek which was the headquarters for the sheep business, until 1895. In that year, he sold all his stock and purchased the ranch where he now resides, which has been his home since.

In 1860, Mr. Faught married Mary F. Stuart. She was born on a tract of land which was in dispute between Missouri and Iowa and which afterward became a part of the former state. With her parents, Abel and Elizabeth (Peal) Stuart, she came across the plains to California in 1849. The father was born in New York and was a veteran of the War of 1812, having participated in the battle of Lundy's Lane. He was a well known forty-niner to California, and a prominent man. The mother came from German ancestry. Following are the children born to our subject and his wife: William, a cattle raiser in Wallowa county, Oregon; Cora I.; Elmer J., a stock raiser on Bear creek; and Elam C. Mr. Faught enjoys a good reputation and he and his wife have so conducted themselves that they have won the admiration and esteem of all, have achieved a splendid success in financial matters and are best known as progressive and first-class people.

JOHN WAGONBLAST has lived in Oregon for half a century which is the larger portion of his life. He was born in Buchanan county, Missouri, on October 24, 1848, and now resides at Madras, Crook county, Oregon. His parents were Gottlieb and Christina (Rieff) Wagonblast, natives of Germany and now deceased. Their marriage occurred in their native land and in the early thirties they journeyed to the United States. In 1855, with ox teams, they crossed the plains and spent the first winter on Willapa creek in southwestern Washington. After that the father bought land six miles southeast from Oregon City where they remained until 1871. At that time our subject started out for himself and worked for a time at various places. In 1873 he bought land and three years later sold out and settled four miles east of Vancouver, Washington, just across the river in Multnomah county. In 1878 he left that place and rented land in Wasco county, then purchased one hundred and twenty acres of land on Threemile creek just out from The Dalles. Mr. Wagonblast made that one of the finest farms in Wasco county and in March, 1904, sold the same for fifty dollars per acre. Then he took a homestead at Agency Plains in Crook county, where we find him at the present time.

He is planning extensive improvements on his homestead and will raise grain and handle stock.

In Clarke county, Washington, in 1873, Mr. Wagonblast married Miss Mary C. Payne. Her parents were Almon and Minerva Payne, natives of Illinois. They crossed the plains with ox teams in 1852 and now reside in Clarke county, Washington. Mr. Wagonblast has the following named brothers and sisters: Jacob, William, Henry, Charles, Frank, Margaret, wife of W. S. Douthit; Caroline, wife of John S. Simmons; Alice E., wife of Henry Johnson. Mrs. Wagonblast has one sister and three brothers, Jane, wife of Sidney Stamp and Charles, Ben and Harvey.

Our subject is a member of the United Artisans and in politics is a Republican. He has several times been a delegate to the conventions, is active in the campaigns and is a respected and popular citizen. He is a representative man in his community, liberal and public minded and has always labored for the upbuilding of Oregon.

JOHN W. ROBINSON, a merchant of Ashwood, Oregon, was born in St. Johns, New Brunswick, on September 23, 1857. His father, James T. Robinson, was born in the northwestern part of Ireland and settled in St. John, New Brunswick, where he followed ship carpentering and building. While thus occupied, he took a voyage to England and many other parts of the world. He married Susan Wiggins, on December 23, 1847, who was of English and Irish parentage. Our subject was left an orphan when quite young, his mother dying in 1867 and his father in 1868, leaving him to be cared for by relatives. He was educated at Canterbury, in York county, New Brunswick, by his cousin, the Hon. Robert Robinson, M. L. C. In 1874, he returned to his native city and went to sea as ship steward, which he followed for two years. During this time, he had one of the most thrilling experiences of his life. In the fall of 1875, while steward of the schooner, Rubina of St. John, Captain James Secord, while on a voyage from Pictou, Nova Scotia, to Boston, Massachusetts, loaded with coal, they were caught in a southeast gale off Cape Sable, Nova Scotia. The little vessel was driven before the gale, the sails being "wing and wing," shipping heavy seas, one of which broke over the stern, carrying away the only boat, snapping the three inch iron davits like pipe stems, unshipped the wheel causing the vessel to broach too, jibing the mainsail, which threw the vessel on her beam end nearly capsizing her. The main boom broke in two at the jaws. The vessel was now laboring very hard in the trough of the sea and it took prompt and heroic work to save her. The wheel was put in place and orders given to cut away and let the main boom and sail go by the board. The foresail was also blown into ribbons, watercasks and everything were swept off the decks, the main boom was carried along the deck, tearing off the hatch bars and tarpaulins, leaving the hatches perfectly loose, which had not been caulked down as is customary, as they had not anticipated such heavy weather. It looked for awhile like the voyage would end, using a sailor's phrase, "In Davy Jones' Locker." They got the hatches nailed down, but the seas sweeping the decks poured lots of water into the hold through the uncalked hatches. Their wooden pump heads had been split by the main boom, which were repaired with difficulty. They had to keep the pumps running constantly to keep afloat while driven before the gale "under the gib only" across the mouth of the Bay of Fundy toward the coast of Maine. They made Owls Head harbor. Striking a reef going in caused the ship to spring a leak. They were then towed to Rockland, Maine, where the cargo was discharged and the vessel repaired. After this voyage, our subject shipped before the mast, following the coasting trade. On March 19, 1877, he shipped from New York and sailed around Cape Horn on the ship Freeman Clark, under James Dwight, captain, having a rough and tedious voyage encountering many gales and much head wind. The principal mishap occurred during a gale in the South Pacific when the block on the foreweather brace broke. The foreyard carried away, causing the loss of the foresail and fore lower topsail. The seas were so rough it was over a week before a new yard could be rigged up. They arrived in San Francisco September 5, 1877, being at sea five months and sixteen days, having put into no port on the voyage and sighting no land after rounding Cape Horn until they sighted the Golden Gate. He settled in Jackson county, Oregon, and followed farming and mining until 1891, when he engaged in the mercantile business at Wimer in that county, until 1898. In that year he took up mining, following that for a year. In 1899, he came to Ashwood, Crook county, Oregon, and erected the first building on the new townsite. Here he has been engaged in general merchandising. He has a large store and carries a complete line of general merchandise and is a leading and prosperous business man.

Mr. Robinson is a member of the Woodmen of the World, Circle of Woodcraft, and Ancient Order of the United Workmen. In politics, he is a Democrat, but not radical, while in church relations, he and his wife are members of the Christian church.

Mr. Robinson married Malinda A. Rush, November 13, 1878, who was born in the Willamette valley, October 11, 1859, the daughter of Samuel Rush, whose biography appears in this work. The fruit of this union is two children, James C. and Lenna B., wife of Lee Wood. His only brother, James T. Robinson, resides on his farm near Culver, Crook county, Oregon.

HOWARD MAUPIN, deceased. Many brave and noble men have labored to open this western country and few have displayed greater courage and more genuine pioneer equalities than the subject of this memoir.

Howard Maupin was born in Kentucky, in 1815, and during the first fourteen years of his life was reared there and received his education. Then the family went to Missouri, where he remained until 1852. Then he brought his family across the plains to the Willamette valley, where they lived until 1863. At such early days as that, he came to Antelope valley, then Wasco county, and engaged in stock raising. He had a fine band of cattle and some twenty-two horses. Chief Paulina and his renegade band stole all his horses shortly after Mr. Maupin settled in the Antelope valley. This was a terrible calamity but Mr. Maupin was never able to recover his horses nor did he ever get any remuneration. Their nearest trading point at that time was The Dalles, many miles distant. They kept a stopping place for travelers and engaged in the stock business besides. Later, they journeyed from that place to the juncture of the Little and Big Trout creeks where Mr. Maupin took a ranch, being one of the first settlers in that section of the country. He erected buildings, provided corrals and was giving close attention to the stock business and farming. However, he had been there but a short time, when one night Chief Paulina and six of his band came to the corral and started off with Mr. Maupin's horses. Although single handed, Mr. Maupin was not a man to be deterred, so seizing a pistol he started after the band. He killed one Indian near the house but his companions packed him away. Also they ran the horses off. Mr. Maupin, although alone, pursued the band and surprised them in Paulina Basin, about two miles from the present site of Ashwood. He fired upon Chief Paulina and wounded him in the leg. The other Indians fled, leaving their chief and another shot from Mr. Maupin's trusty weapon killed another of the band. Then he returned to the chief and dispatched him as he was terribly wounded. Paulina had been the terror of the settlers and Mr. Maupin took his scalp and his bones as trophies of one of the most renegade Indians the country produced. It certainly was an act of great bravery on the part of Mr. Maupin to pursue this band of thieves and secure his property, for he got back all his horses. It was bloody work, but it was a great benefit to the settlers for there were no more raids from these savages. They never even returned to get the body of their chief. Mr. Maupin preserved the scalp and bones of Paulina until his house was destroyed by fire when they were destroyed with it. In 1878, Mr. Maupin passed the way of all the earth and his remains rest in the land that he had assisted so materially to open up for the settlers.

In 1841, in Platte county, Missouri, Mr. Maupin married Miss Nany McCullum. She was born in Clay county, Kentucky, in 1821. She spent her childhood days in her native state, then went to Missouri where she was married. To this union were born five children, Perry, Elizabeth, Rachel, Garrett, and Nancy.

Mr. Maupin was a veteran of the Mexican War, enlisting in 1846 and serving until the close of the struggle. Mrs. Maupin is now eighty-four years of age, well preserved and vigorous and is passing the golden years of her life in the country which she has seen grow from a wilderness to its present prosperous conditions.

COLUMBUS FRIEND, deceased. It is very proper in a work of this character to include a memoir of the esteemed gentleman whose name appears at the head of this page, since he wrought well here, was known as a staunch citizen, a man of integrity, and a kind and loving husband and father. He was born in Iowa, on May 23, 1846, and came to Oregon in 1870, receiving his education in his native state. He remained in the Willamette valley for a few years and then came to what is now Crook county and engaged in the cattle business. After a few years in that line, he took up sheep raising and continued in that until his death in 1901. He acquired a fine property and left his widow with a splendid ranch besides much other property. He was known as a very successful man in his labors, being a skillful stock raiser and a first class farmer who always performed his labors in such a manner as to bring about the best results.

In 1888, Mr. Friend married Henrietta (Crooks) Hale, the daughter of Aaron Crooks. The father was born in Iowa and came as a pioneer to Oregon in 1852, making the trip with ox teams. Mrs. Friend was born in Linn county, Oregon, in 1863. Mrs. Friend's first marriage was to John Brown. After that, she was married to Daniel Hale and finally to the subject of this sketch. Mrs. Friend has the following named children, Anna and Lenna Brown, Aaron and John Hale, and Angie, Edith, deceased, Roy, Ethel, and Bennie Friend.

Mrs. Friend has shown excellent skill and fortitude in attending to the business since her husband's death and has so handled the estate that it has increased in value, which demonstrates her capabilities in this line. She has a lovely home, a very valuable farm and is well known and a lady of many virtues.

THOMAS S. HAMILTON is one of the leading stockmen of Central Oregon and he has gained this position through his untiring efforts since the early pioneer days of this country. During all his labors, he has shown an energy and carefulness, coupled with skill that could but win the smiles of Dame Fortune. At the present time, he is living two miles south of Ashwood and in addition to handling his extensive real estate and stock interests has a one-half interest in the mercantile firm of Irvin & Hamilton.

Thomas S. Hamilton was born in Clay county, Missouri, on March 10, 1850. His father, Anderson Hale, was born in Missouri and there married Mrs. Elliott and in 1853, brought his family across the plains. Our subject was but two years of age when he accompanied his parents on that weary journey which ended in the Willamette valley. The father made settlement sixteen miles south of Eugene in Lane county. There are subject was reared and educated and in 1870 he came to Lake county in this state and worked for wages for one winter. Then he herded sheep near Reno, Nevada, one winter and in this way got his start. He returned to the valley and remained during the winter of 1872 and 1873 and then came to Summer Lake in Lake county, Oregon, and settled down on a ranch. He had forty head of cattle and thus he began really, his career of ranching and stock raising. In 1874 he traded his cattle for sheep and four years later came to his present location. Since that time he has steadily followed the business of stock raising and farming with such splendid success that he now owns two thousand eight hundred and forty acres of land, seventy-five hundred sheep, two hundred head of cattle besides much other property. Twenty head of his cattle are fine registered Short Horn animals and Mr. Hamilton has the distingtion of being the first man to introduce blooded stock in this part of the country. He is certainly deserving of much credit for his efforts in this line for it has resulted in very materially improving the quality of stock. As stated above, in addition to this property, Mr. Hamilton has a half interest in the firm of Irvin & Hamilton and is well known as a thorough, conscientious business man.

In January, 1889, Mr. Hamilton married Loretta Crooks, who was born in the Willamette valley, her father being Aaron Crooks. Two children have been born to this marriage, Arena and Josephine.

Mr. Hamilton is a member of the Masons, the Odd Fellows, the Eastern Star and the Maccabees. The success that Mr. Hamilton has won in the financial and business world, speaks volumes of the man's ability and carefulness and in addition are a great incentive to others to strive well in the business world. He has done a great work in opening up and building up the country and is to be classed as one of the county builders, while he receives at the hands of his fellows, unstinted confidence and esteem of which he is eminently worthy.

CHARLES CLYDE HON was born in Linn county, Oregon, on July 8, 1871 and now lives about twenty-three miles east from Prineville, where he owns three-quarters of a section of land and is engaged in stock raising. His father, John Wesley Hon, was born in Iowa and crossed the plains to Oregon in company with his mother in the early fifties. She took a donation claim in Linn county and he wrought on the farm until grown to manhood. The mother had crossed the plains with four children, the oldest being but a small boy. The elder Hon married Olive Coyle, a native of California, who came to Oregon with her parents in pioneer days. She died when our subject was two years old. Charles Clyde was educated in the Willamette valley and as early as 1886, came to Crook county and settled on a ranch. Since then, he has given almost his entire attention to stock raising and has gained very good success in his labors. Mr. Hon has identified himself with the interests of Crook county and this portion of Oregon in a decided manner and has always displayed an industry and progressiveness that stamp him one of the substantial men of the county. His ranch is a good one, well improved and fitted for stock raising and he has a good many animals on the range. He selected a choice location when coming here and has made it much more valuable by carefully improving it and in addition to doing stock raising, his place is admirably fitted for general farming and dairying.

In 1894, Mr. Hon married Miss Daisy Zevely, who was born in Union county, Oregon. She came to Crook county with her parents, James and Elizabeth (Boyle) Zevely, in 1886. Her father was born in Missouri and crossed the plains to Oregon with his parents when a child. Her mother was born in California and came to Oregon in pioneer days. To our subject and his wife one child has been born, Olive. Mr. Hon is a member of the M. W. A. and a man of good standing in the community.

JOSEPH P. HUNSAKER is one of the substantial and well known citizens of Prineville. He was born in Illinois, on February 11, 1827, the son of Jacob and Elizabeth (Brown) Hunsaker. The father was a native of Pennsylvania and descended from Dutch stock. He came to Illinois as a pioneer and settled near Quincy and there grew to be a prominent and well-to-do man. Our subject was educated in a little log school house in Adams county and there grew up on a farm. It was 1850 that he crossed the plains, first coming to Oregon City in an ox team train. The next year, he returned to Illinois and in 1852, crossed the plains with ox teams a second time, landing in Oregon City. Then he journeyed on to Linn county and took up a ranch, which occupied his attention until 1873. In that year, he put into execution a plan he had formed previously, that of exploring central Oregon and afterward selected a ranch on the Ochoco. He immediately began the good work of building a home and opening up a farm. Since that time, he has given his entire attention to stock raising and general farming and now he has splendid property some nine miles out from Prineville on Combs Flat. He also owns a residence in Prineville, where he makes his headquarters and resides most of the time. He has achieved success in this country and has gained his property through his wise labors here. For over thirty years, Mr. Hunsaker has dwelt here and during all that time he has shown an industry and ability to build up and improve the country, second to none. Much credit is due him for his labors and he certainly deserves a conspicuous place in the front ranks of pioneers.

In 1854, Joseph P. Hunsaker married Elizabeth Campbell, who crossed the plains in 1852 with her parents, being in the same train with Mr. Hunsaker. Her parents are John and Nancy (Shook) Campbell, natives of Kentucky. To our subject and his wife, the following named children have been born: Mrs. Alice Oman, living in Portland; Mrs. Annie Gray, living on a ranch in Crook county; and Mrs. Ida Maredth, in Prineville.

Mr. Hunsaker has so conducted himself in his long residence in Crook county that he today enjoys a splendid reputation and is known as a man of uprightness and integrity.

THOMAS N. BALFOUR is rightly classed as one of the early pioneers of Crook county. His residence is forty miles out from Paulina on the Burns stage road where he owns a fine ranch and follows farming and stock raising. His birth occurred in Fifeshire, Scotland on March 28, 1855. Robert Balfour, his father, was born in Scotland and was a prominent and wealthy man. He married Elsbeth Nicholson, a native of Scotland who died when our subject was very young. Thomas N. was educated in Scotland and while he was still young, his father also died. He and his sister being the only ones of the family, they remained together for some time and Mr. Balfour learned the German language and took a position as German correspondent and translator for the firm of A. Bruntsch and Company. He continued in that position until 1874, when he came to Oregon and accepted a position on a farm in Linn county. Later he rented a ranch and afterward purchased a farm in that county. In 1882, he came to his present location and took government land, then sold it and purchased his present place and engaged in the stock business, and has continued steadily in that. When Mr. Balfour settled here, his closest neighbor was twelve miles distant. He and his family were forced to undergo much hardship and deprivation in their determined stand to open this country and make for themselves a good and comfortable home, but they were not the kind of people to give up at every little obstacle, but on the other hand with every rising difficulty and hardship their determination and spirit increased according and the result is that they have not only overcome but have gained for themselves a fine property.

In 1876, Mr. Balfour married Mattie Wilson, who was born in Linn county, Oregon, where also she was reared and educated. Her parents, Thomas and Martha (Smith) Wilson, were natives of Indiana and Illinois respectively and crossed the plains to Oregon with ox teams in 1847. The father took a donation claim in Linn county and has become a very prominent citizen. He was a well known breeder of fine stock and was a leader in that line. He died in 1892, in Linn county. The children born to Mr. and Mrs. Balfour are Mrs. Maude Bixby, Mrs. Zoe Gibson, Bruce B., and W. Stanley.

Mr. Balfour established Fife postoffice and gave the name to the same. For ten years he was postmaster and was an efficient public officer. For four years past he has been justice of the peace and has always taken a very prominent part in educational matters and in the political affairs of the country. It is worthy of note that in 1884, when there was an uprising of the Indians so serious that most of the population of the country housed themselves up in the forts, our subject and his family remained on their farm between Prineville and Burns and one other family besides his were the only people who were not in the fort. It is evident, as we stated before, that Mr. Balfour and his family were not made of the material that gives way to difficulties and they came to this country to stay and open it up, to make themselves homes and they have succeeded admirably.

HARDY ALLEN, a stockman, blacksmith and general business man, resides at Sisters, Crook county, Oregon. He was born on Ochoco creek, four miles from Prineville, April 13, 1874.

His father, Albert Allen, born in Missouri in 1844, was taken by his parents in 1845, when he was one year old, across the plains, in a wagon drawn by oxen. They were in the Meeks party, and it is claimed that Meeks deserted them in what is now Lake county. Then his father's father, the great-grandfather of our subject, assumed charge of the train. The family settled in Polk county, Oregon. Mr. Albert Allen lived in Polk county until February 12, 1865, when he enlisted in Company A, First Oregon Volunteers, under Captain LaFollette, and served until the close of the war. In 1868 he came to what is now Crook county, being among the first settlers. He lived here until 1880 when he left and returned in 1895. At present he resides near The Dalles.

Our subject was among the first white children born in the territory now comprising Crook county. In 1880 he removed with his parents to The Dalles. Here he received his education, remaining until 1897, when he came to Crook county. He located a homestead near the mouth of the Matoles river, and engaged in cattle raising until last spring, when he came to his present location and became the proprietor of a hotel, and also did a considerable amount of blacksmith work. He retains his ranch and about one hundred head of cattle.

In 1900 Mr. Allen was married to Miss Daisy Davidson, born in Wasco county, Oregon. She is the daughter of W. J. Davidson, a native of Canada, who located near The Dalles. Our subject has one brother, Marion Allen, living at Boyd, Wasco county, and two sisters, Hattie Thompson, residing at Prineville, and Clara Eggbert, of The Dalles. Mr. and Mrs. Allen have one child, Harold, three years old. Politically he is a Republican.

JAMES H. HAWKINS is a lumberman and stockman of Crook county, who has achieved prosperity in his labors since coming here. His mills are located about twenty miles above Prineville on the Ochoco. His father, Thomas D. Hawkins, was born in Memphis, Tennessee, and removed to Arkansas when a lad of twelve years of age. Being left an orphan when quite young, he had to make his own way in the world and early learned to meet adversity. When the Rebellion broke out, his sympathies were with the union and the result was that he had to leave that portion of Arkansas where he was living. On account of this, he lost all his property. He joined the First Missouri Cavalry and served during the entire war, being under General Blunt much of the time. He was in seventy-two regular battles, among them being Pea Ridge and Vicksburg. He had two horses shot from under him, three bullets through his hat and many through his clothes. However, he escaped injury. For two years he was a scout and rendered invaluable services to the army in this capacity. In 1886, he came to Oregon and remained here until his death. He had married Cynthia Hughes, a native of Tennessee, who had journeyed to Arkansas with her parents when a child. In 1862, she went to Missouri and there remained about a year, then returned to Arkansas. Our subject was educated at Rockbridge Missouri, then engaged in lumbering in the same state. In 1886, he came to Union county, Oregon, and the next year, went to Boise county, Idaho, where with his father and brother, he built a saw-mill. For three years they operated that plant, then came on to Oregon and in 1894, erected a mill on Combs flat and also bought the Marshall mill. In 1895 he bought another mill. In 1899 he sold out this property and came to his present location and erected a new mill. Shortly afterwards, he purchased another mill located nearby and in company with his brother, W. J., he has continued in the operation of this since. They own a section of fine land and have two hundred head of cattle in addition to the two mills. They supply Prineville and the surrounding country with lumber and are doing a splendid business.

In 1893, Mr. Hawkins married Miss Mary Thomason, a native of Arkansas. She came to Oregon with her parents in 1886. To this marriage seven children have been born, Andrew, Alta, Mamie, Henry, Roy, Willie and Pearl.

J. H. Hawkins

Mr. Hawkins is a member of the I. O. O. F., the M. W. A. and the R. N. A. In addition to his other qualifications, Mr. Hawkins possesses a splendid ability in the mechanical line and is a machinist of much skill. He has been able to meet and solve all the various and intricate problems that arise in frontier and commercial saw-milling. He has shown himself a master of the business through and through for he has won a splendid success and is becoming one of the worthy and well-to-do men of the country. He stands well, has many friends, and is a representative man.

WILLIAM HUBBARD PECK follows blacksmithing and farming and resides two miles west from Culver. He was born in Shiawassee, Michigan, on June 4, 1853, the son of John Peck, a native of Canada. The father was an early settler in Michigan and died in 1856. Our subject received his education in his native country and in 1870, went to Missouri, where he dwelt four years. In 1875 he journeyed on west to Santa Barbara, California and remained there four years. On August 27, 1879, he started with teams overland from Santa Barbara to the Willamette valley in which latter place he spent two years engaged in farming. He came to his present location in 1881 and took a preemption to which he added, later, a homestead adjoining. He engaged in stock raising and freighting and other enterprises and in 1885 built a blacksmith shop and began work at his trade. He had followed the same in Michigan, Missouri, and California and was a skillful mechanic. Mr. Peck was the first blacksmith in this vicinity and has continued at the same work more or less since. He has a good farm which is well handled and does a good business in the shop.

On September 12, 1872, Mr. Peck married Mary Elizabeth Newman, who was born in Warren county, Kentucky, on December 17, 1852. Her father, Alexander Newman, was a native of Virginia. To our subject and his wife the following named children have been born: Mrs. Vena M. Merchant, in Missouri, on July 11, 1873; David W., at Santa Barbara, California, in 1875; Mrs. Hattie Cyrus, in California, on December 15, 1877; Lee Oscar, in Yamhill county, Oregon, on December 29, 1879; John Alexander, in Crook county, then Wasco county, on July 23, 1882; Euretta, in Crook county, on December 8 1884; Ralph W., in this county, on March 30, 1888. The children are all settled nearby, on homesteads, except the two youngest, who are at home.

Mr. Peck is a member of the A. O. U. W., he and his wife are members of the Degree of Honor and the United Artisans. Politically, he is a Socialist and takes pleasure in keeping himself well informed on the questions of the day.

HENRY T. GRIMES has long resided in Crook county and been known as one of the substantial and industrious stockmen and farmers of this part of the state. His home is now five miles northwest from Prineville, where he lives retired from active business, having accumulated a competence sufficient to warrant this pleasant change. He was born in Indiana, on January 1, 1844, the son of John Grimes, a native of Kentucky. He remained in Indiana until fifteen years of age, receiving his early education there, then removed with his parents to Iowa, where he lived until the spring of 1864, in which year he crossed the plains with mule teams, consuming six months in the journey. He settled near Salem, Oregon and followed farming there until 1877, when he came to Crook county. He first took a homestead where he resided for six years, then he sold out and leased a large quantity of state land which he made his headquarters for the stock business. He handled cattle and horses for a number of years there, then came to his present location, where he purchased two hundred acres of land and continued in the stock business. About one year since he sold his entire stock holdings and is now living a retired life.

In 1871, Mr. Grimes married Samantha Eliott, a native of Missouri. They have become the parents of the following named children: Willie, Maggie, John, Mary, deceased, Dave, Addie, Fred and Frank.

Politically, Mr. Grimes is a Democrat and always takes a keen interest in the campaigns. He and his wife are members of the Methodist church and for many years have labored faithfully for the spread of the gospel and the advancement of church interests, also they have been ardent workers for the progress of education and the betterment of educational facilities wherever they have resided and have endeavored faithfully to accomplish everything in their power for the upbuilding of this worthy cause. They are highly respected people and have hosts of admiring friends.

AMOS FISK THOMPSON is in real truth a genuine pioneer, for he has lived on the frontier nearly all his life. He now is retired from active business and resides four miles north from Prineville. His birth occurred in Ohio, on December 24, 1824, and his father was Daniel Thompson, a native of Vermont. Our subject was brought by his parents to Indiana when quite young and remained there until 1828; then they moved to Illinois and settled about twenty miles from the present site of East Springfield. That was their home until 1831, when they journeyed to the western part of Illinois. There they remained two years, then the family made another move into Iowa. Our subject was one of the first white children in that territory and this move to Iowa was made shortly after the Black Hawk War. He remained in Iowa for some time but moved many times, so that he was always on the frontier. In 1847 he started from St. Joe, Missouri, with an ox team outfit in a train of forty-nine wagons and a carriage. They were six months in crossing the plains and he finally selected a place on the Santiam, ten miles above the present site of Lebanon. He wrought for wages until 1849, then he went to California to seek his fortune. For two years he delved in the golden sands of that territory, then he went to Yreka and mined one summer. During his journeys he was shipwrecked at the mouth of the Rogue River but escaped with his life. Finally, Mr. Thompson returned to the Santiam and in 1852 began farming. For twenty-two years he was on that place, then he moved to Ochoco in Crook county. His house was the last one east of the mountains, as one journeys west and therefore, by virtue of the position, became a natural stopping place for travelers. For twenty-five years Mr. Thompson entertained the travel on the old Santiam road, then sold the property and moved to town. Later he sold his town property to John Luckey and then bought two houses and five lots in Prineville, which is a valuable property. He also owns a ranch on McKy creek.

In 1852, Mr. Thompson married Elizabeth Nye, who was born in Ohio, in 1821 and crossed the plains in 1851. She died July 25, 1901. Her father, Jacob Nye, was a pioneer of 1850 and a native of Pennsylvania. He also was a veteran of the War of 1812. The children born to Mr. and Mrs. Thompson are Susannah, the wife of Silas Hodges; Riley; Mrs. Jane Coyle; Minta Allen, deceased; Mrs. Victoria Powell; Preston, and Frank, deceased.

In politics, Mr. Thompson chooses the man rather than the party and reserves for himself the settlement of all issues, regardless of party lines. He is a consistent member of the Methodist church and has always labored ardently for the advancement of the gospel and the betterment of educational facilities. He has been a pathfinder on the frontier all his life and has done a splendid work in this capacity. He has so conducted himself that he has won the esteem and confidence of all who know him and is one of the venerable and respected men of the county at this time.

EWEN JOHNSON is not only a pioneer but comes from a family of strong and hardy pioneers who have labored in various parts of the country on the frontier in the great work of subduing the wilderness and blazing the path for others to follow. He and his estimable wife are now enjoying the golden days of their life in retirement at Prineville, have been blessed with an excellent abundance of this world's goods as the result of faithful labor in long years past. Our subject was born in Kentucky, on November 24, 1838. His father was William Johnson, also a native of the Blue Grass State and the Johnson family were among the very earliest settlers in Kentucky. In 1855 the father came on west to Missouri and there settled on a farm which was his home until death called him hence. Our subject's grandfather, also William Johnson, came to Kentucky among the very first settlers in the state and was personally well acquainted with Daniel Boone. On one occasion he was accompanied by a brother and sister and all were gathering wood. Upon looking up, they saw the door yard full of Indians and being afraid hid under the bank of the creek. The father and mother, who were the grandparents of our subject, and the children who were in the house, were all killed. The mother of our subject was Polly (Calavan) Johnson, also a native of Kentucky, who came to Missouri with her husband and there remained until her death. Ewen Johnson received what education could be obtained from the early schools of his native state but was well instructed in the lore of the pioneer. He remained with his father until September, 1855, and then went to Missouri and took a preemption. For ten years he labored there, after which he decided to come west. Accordingly he bought an ox team and joined a train to the Willamette valley. Two years were spent in that location and he journeyed to what is now Crook county, Oregon, locating a ranch on Mill creek. Mr. Johnson's family were the first to settle in the precincts of what is now Crook county. Some unmarried men had settled here before, but his was the first family and Mrs. Johnson was the first white woman to enter these wilds. Mr. Johnson immediately began stock raising and the good labor of building up a home here. In these lines he continued steadily until 1898, achieving the success that honest industry and esteem are bound to bring forth. In the year last mentioned, Mr. Johnson rented his farm and stock and removed to Prineville, whence he oversees his property, being retired from the greater activities of life.

During the Civil War, Mr. Johnson was a member of the Missouri Home Guards and was twice called out to defend the country from the ravages of opposing soldiers.

The marriage of Mr. Johnson and Nancy S. Stinson, a native of Kentucky, occurred in Williamsburg, Kentucky, on September 20, 1854. Mrs. Johnson's father, Jacob Stinson, was born in Kentucky from one of the earliest families settled in that country. He married Elizabeth Wells, also a native of the Blue Grass State and the daughter of pioneers in Kentucky. To Mr. and Mrs. Johnson, twelve children have been born: W. J., a farmer nearby; Mrs. Margaret J. Cadle; Sillistina; John J.; James; B. F., the assessor of Crook county; and six, who are deceased.

Personally, Mr. and Mrs. Johnson are genial and kind people and have won the friendship and the good will of all who know them. In business affairs, he has always conducted himself in such a manner as to win success and at the same time keep unsullied the honor of his name. As a citizen, he is broad minded, progressive and takes a lively interest in all that is for the welfare of the community. He and his wife are to be commended for what they are and have accomplished and that they have sought for the good of all.

D. P. ADAMSON is one of the younger business men of Prineville and is blessed with a prosperity and success which are very gratifying. His birth occurred in Harrison county, Indiana, on December 13, 1870 and he is now a first class druggist of Prineville. Mr. Adamson is a self made man in every respect and in the words of the noted Mark Twain, "he did not stop until the job was completed." Our subject's father, Elisha Adamson, was also a native of Indiana and came to Oregon in 1883. He made settlement in Linn county and is now living near Oregon City, occupied in farming. Our subject's mother, Sarah (Turley) Adamson, was born in Indiana and came to Oregon in 1884. D. P. studied in the common schools of Indiana and Linn county, Oregon, until 1890, when he entered the state Agricultural College at Corvallis. He graduated with the degree of B. S. A. and one year later completed a post graduate course for which he received an additional degree of Bachelor of Sciences. In 1895, we find Mr. Adamson in Prineville, teaching school and there he remained until 1899. In that year, he started in the drug business and with such an energy and wisdom has he practiced the same that he owns today one of the most complete establishments in this part of the state. He has a splendid patronage, which is fully merited by his promptness, his accuracy and his deferential treatment of all. His establishment is one of the finest business places in Prineville.

In 1898, Mr. Adamson married Miss Tillie Lafollett, the daughter of Thomas and Margaret J. (Allen) Lafollett, who are mentioned in another sketch in this volume. Mrs. Adamson was born in Crook county, Oregon, and educated at Prineville. It is very interesting to know in this connection that Mr. Adamson started in life without any means whatever and everything that he now possesses and the labors he has achieved are the result of his own unaided efforts.

Fraternally, he is associated with the Masons and the order of the Eastern Star. Mr. Adamson is a close student and keeps fully abreast of the advancement of science and is a well informed and an up-to-date man.

ARTHUR HODGES. There is something in the career of success which shows the marks of true worth and stimulates others to better efforts, that is exceedingly interesting to follow. It is our pleasure and privilege at this time to chronicle the salient points of the life of one who has demonstrated beyond a peradventure, that he is made of the stuff which climbs to the top round of the ladder. Although still a young man, Mr. Hodges has demonstrated his popularity and ability in the business and commercial world in such a manner that gives him unstinted approval and the commendation of all who are acquainted with him. His has been a life of hard work and close application to the business in hand and the success that is now crowning his efforts has not come by itself but has been honestly earned by him.

Arthur Hodges was born in Benton county, Oregon, on March 14, 1865. His parents are mentioned in another portion of this work. When but five years of age, he came to what is now Prineville and since that time, has made this the field of his labors. The tenacity, stability and integrity of the man have been abundantly shown in all his efforts in this place. The public schools of this county gave him his primary education but not being contented with that, he entered the agricultural college at Corvallis in 1882 and completed a course. Then he entered the Columbia College in Portland and graduated in 1884. Returning then to Prineville, Mr. Hodges taught in the city schools one year. In 1886 he was appointed deputy county clerk and served in that capacity four years. In 1890, he was elected county clerk and for five consecutive terms he held that office, a record that is hard to beat. In 1888, Mr. Hodges was elected mayor of Prineville and held that chair for two terms. In 1900, Mr. Hodges determined to enter the commercial world and accordingly bought an interest in the business under the firm name of Wurzweiler and Thomson. Since that time, he has been steadily engaged with this firm, which carries the largest stock of general merchandise in Crook county. They have a fine selection of everything that is needed in this country and are among the leading merchants of eastern Oregon.

On January 17, 1900, Mr. Hodges married Miss Stella Gesner, who was born in Salem, Oregon, where also she was reared and educated. Her father, Hon. Alonzo Gesner, came to Marion county, Oregon, in 1845, having crossed the plains with teams. He became a very prominent citizen, held various offices, among which was that of state senator and followed his profession, that of civil engineering. He married Rhoda Neal, a native of Marion county, Oregon. Mr. and Mrs. Hodges have one child, Rhoda.

Mr. Hodges is a member of the I. O. O. F. and a popular man in fraternal circles. He and his wife are leading people in society, are genial and kindly hosts and their home is a center of refined hospitality.

B. F. JOHNSON is holding the important position of assessor of Crook county. He resides at Prineville and is one of the best known men throughout the county. He was born on the ranch about twelve miles east from Prineville, on November 5, 1872, being one of the first white children born in Crook county. His father, E. Johnson, was an early pioneer to Oregon and settled east of the Cascades in 1867. Our subject was educated in Crook and Sherman counties and has spent the major portion of his life in Crook county. He has seen the country develop from the wilds to its present condition and has assisted materially in bringing about this good end. Mr. Johnson well remembers the days of the "vigilance committee" and also one morning that he saw two horse thieves dangling from a tree where they had been left by these executors of the law. As soon as he was able, he was more or less in the saddle and has been identified with the stock industry from the earliest days until the present time. He owns a ranch of two hundred acres of fine deeded land on Mill creek and has ninety head of cattle, besides horses and improvements for the place. In June, 1902, Mr. Johnson was elected to the office of county assessor on the Republican ticket but has refused renomination. In this office he has given entire satisfaction and displays a conscientiousness and skill very befitting.

On May 5, 1898, at Burns, Oregon, Mr. Johnson married Jennie McPheeters, who was born in Missouri, on September 21, 1873. Her father, C. M. McPherson, a physician and surgeon, came to Oregon in 1886 and died on June 22, 1901. Our subject has three brothers, W. J., a rancher and stockman in Crook county; J. J., a cattle man in Malheur county; and J. E., a sheep raiser in Harney county.

Mr. Johnson is a good active Republican, belongs to the Masons, is a member of the K. P., the W. W. and the circle.

WILLIAM A. BOOTH, who has shown himself one of the leading commercial men of Crook county, was born on September 6, 1849, in Lee county, Iowa. Robert Booth, a native of England was his father. He came to America when young and settled in New York and as early as 1852, crossed the plains to Yamhill county where he took a donation claim and in 1867, he moved to Douglas county and soon after to Josephine county, all in the state of Oregon. He was a preacher of the gospel in the Methodist denomination and was a man of prominence. Our subject's mother, Mary (Minor) Booth, was born in Indiana and came to Iowa when a young girl. She crossed the plains in 1852. After studying in the common schools, our subject entered the Wilbur Academy in Douglas county, Oregon, and there completed his education. In 1871, he came to what is now Crook county and engaged in the stock business. He was especially successful in this line and was soon one of the leading stock raisers of the state of Oregon. Being thus prospered, he gained wealth rapidly and at the same time, demonstrated his ability to handle it very successfully. From 1894 to 1899, he embarked in the mercantile business and gained an equal success in his labors to that in stock raising. Twice Mr. Booth has been sheriff of Crook county and gave the people a splendid administration. In 1902, he was chosen county judge. At the present writing, Mr. Booth is the moving spirit in the establishment of a Bank in Prineville. With several others, they have secured the incorporation papers and will soon elect their officers and open the doors of the institution. He is a man abundantly fitted to take charge of an enterprise of this sort and we may expect the same careful business dealing as has been pursued in his life heretofore. The people have great confidence in Mr. Booth and it is well merited by his life.

In 1877, William A. Booth married Lucy S. Carey, a native of Marion county, Oregon, and the daughter of Abijah Carey, one of the earliest pioneers of the Willamette valley. Two children have been born to this union, Luren A. and Iva E.

Mr. Booth is a member of the A. F. & A. M. and the K. P. He is deservedly classed as one of the earliest pioneers and is a leading citizen and one of the substantial and representative men of Central Oregon.

W. J. JOHNSON is one of Crook county's substantial farmers. He has the distinction of being one of the earliest pioneers of central Oregon and his name is rightly embraced in any line of this worthy class of people. His father's farm is located on Mill creek, about eleven miles above Prineville and W. J. has made it his home for many years, and is now operating the entire estate. W. J. Johnson was born in Mercer county, Missouri, on February 3, 1857, the son of Ewen Johnson, a native of Kentucky. A detailed sketch of Ewen Johnson's life is found in this work elsewhere, therefore we need not repeat it here. Our subject came with his parents across the plains in 1865 and soon thereafter they located in central Oregon where he was reared and educated. His brother, James, was the first white child born in Crook county and the Johnson family is well known among the pioneers here. Our subject assisted materially to build up the country, has labored here steadily, has held various offices and is one of the substantial men of the county. He was the first deputy sheriff of Harney county.

He is a member of the A. F. & A. M. and has been for twenty years, and for the last twelve years has been affiliated with the I. O. O. F.

WILLIAM H. CADLE follows the dual occupation of farming and stock raising, his headquarters being on the Ochoco, nine miles above Prineville. He has a splendid ranch, well kept and properly improved for the business and is one of the prosperous and well-to-do men of the country. He was born in Iowa, on May 9, 1858, the son of James M. and Ellen (Stalcoup) Cadle, natives of Tennessee. They came to Iowa in early days, later crossed the plains, having then a family of five children, and settled on a ranch in California. There the father remained until his death in 1901. Our subject was educated in the Golden State and in 1880, came north to Oregon. He soon selected a location on the Horse Heaven mountain in Crook county and there remained until 1902. Then he came to his present place, purchased a farm and engaged in stock raising and general farming. As stated, he has a fine place and knows well how to handle it in the best manner. He raises cattle and some horses and has good stock.

On October 29, 1882, Mr. Cadle married Margaret J. Johnson, who was born in Missouri and crossed the plains with her parents in 1865. A more extended sketch of her parents is given in another portion of this work. To Mr. and Mrs. Cadle, two children have been born, Alpha W. and Ruby M. Mr. Cadle is one of the successful men of central Oregon. He has gained this distinction all through his business ability and the thrift and thoroughness with which he manages his affairs. He is not only entitled to the prosperity he has achieved but is worthy of the esteem and confidence bestowed upon him by a large circle of admiring friends.

MICHAEL CHRISTIANI, a retired farmer now residing in Prineville, has had a most remarkable and adventurous career. He was born in the old country, in 1831 and twenty-two years later, left his native land for the United States. He landed in New York and worked in a meat market for a while after which he went to Sheboygan, Wisconsin. Shortly after that he went to Greenbay and then to Menomonie in the same state. Lumbering occupied him for a while and at the time of the Pike's Peak excitement, he came on to Colorado. He mined there until the Salmon River excitement broke out, when he came to that point. He located the second cabin on Grasshopper creek, Montana, in the fall of 1862, and secured a claim. This claim yielded him about eight thousand dollars. In the spring of 1863, we find him in the Yellowstone park. That was before the government had set apart that for a national park. He traveled all over Montana and Wisconsin and was in one hard Indian fight on the Big Horn, when the miners defeated the Crowe Indians. Next we see him in the famous Alder Gulch in Montana and in the spring of 1864 he went to Kootenai, British Columbia. He remained there until September 5th of the same year, then journeyed on down to Walla Walla. From that point he came to Portland and after spending two weeks in the city went to the adjacent country and remained during that winter. The next spring he went to the mines and this occupation, in various sections of the country, engaged him until 1873, when he came to Prineville with a band of sheep. He purchased a ranch and settled down to raising sheep which he followed for a short time, then tarmed until 1894, in which year he came to Prineville, bought a comfortable home and since that time has been retired from business. He still owns his ranch, which is valued at ten thousand dollars, and also has considerable other property.

On April 6, 1882, Mr. Christiani married Malinda Jane Barnard, who was born in Linn county, Oregon, on February 6, 1866. Her father, James Barnard, was born in Tennessee and crossed the plains in early days. Mr. and Mrs. Christiani have two children, Charles O., aged twenty and Malinda Caroline, aged eleven.

Mrs. Christiani is a member of the United Artisans. Our subject and his wife are respected and esteemed people, have shown an industry and carefulness in their labors here which have met with their proper reward and they have done a good part in developing the country.

JUDGE WELLS A. BELL, a prominent and successful attorney at law, now residing at Prineville, Oregon, was born in Benton county of the same state on April 22, 1872. His father, Matthew H. Bell, crossed the plains as early as 1852, making settlement in Benton county. He married Elizabeth C. Wells, who also crossed the plains to Oregon in 1852. Our subject was reared on a farm and educated in the early schools of his native county and then entered the college at Corvallis. In 1890, he went east and completed his literary training in Monmouth college, Illinois. Then he entered the Oregon law school and in 1894, was graduated with the degree of Bachelor of Laws. In the same year he located at Prineville and commenced practicing. For ten years he has continued steadily in this field, winning splendid success. His standing in the community is of the best and he is esteemed as a leading citizen. Mr. Bell has been a thorough student during his life, which, added to his natural ability, makes him a professional man of merit and standing. Among his colleagues he is recognized as a forceful and keen lawyer, devoted to the interests of his clients and a hard fighter. He has won, step by step, a fine practice and presaging the future by the past, we may look for even much greater things from Mr. Bell. He was deputy prosecuting attorney for the seventh judicial district from 1894 until June, 1904, when he was chosen judge of Crook county.

In 1895, Mr. Bell married Effie D. Vanderpool, who was born and raised in this county. Her parents are William and Elizabeth (Templeton) Vanderpool, pioneers to Crook county. Two children have been born to our subject and his wife Fayne C. and Don A.

Judge Bell is a member of the K. P. and the W. W. and the Maccabees. He and his wife are leading members of society, are devoted supporters of everything that tends to build up this county and are highly esteemed people.

PERRY B. POINDEXTER is the owner and proprietor of the hotel Poindexter one of the choicest places of entertainment in eastern Oregon. Owing to his business management and his kind and constant care for his large number of guests Mr. Poindexter has made his hotel one of the most popular places in this part of the state and it is constantly crowded. Being one of the leading business men of Prineville and also a very successful man it is quite fitting that a detailed account of his life should appear in this volume.

Perry B. Poindexter was born in Eugene, Oregon, on August 26, 1858. James Newton Poindexter, a native of Illinois, was his father and he came across the plains in 1852. He was prominent in political matters and sheriff of Lane county, Oregon from 1874 to 1878. He was also a pioneer blacksmith of Lane county. His death occurred in Prineville, on March 20, 1903. Elvira McCord, a native of Missouri, crossed the plains in the same year as James N. Poindexter and they were married later in Lane county. She is still living. Our subject was educated in Eugene and there remained until 1878, then he went to Portland and worked for wages until 1881. In that year he came to Prineville and worked for wages in a livery stable and hotel until 1888. Then he opened a restaurant, having at that time very limited capital but possessed of sagacity and aptness that could win success. He began to have a fine patronage from the start and continued in handling the restaurant until 1901. Then he built the hotel Poindexter and the original restaurant is his dining room at the present time. The hotel is one of the best in the eastern part of the state and is a model of comfort and neatness. In addition to this property, he owns a fifth interest in the Bernolia mining property, owns one hundred and sixty acres of land at Pickett Island and two pieces of property in Prineville, one worth ten thousand dollars and one worth five thousand dollars. In addition to this, he and his wife have a half section of fine timber land, besides considerable other property. Mr. Poindexter has accumulated these holdings since starting in business in Prineville and it bespeaks a man of superior business ability.

On November 22, 1885, Mr. Poindexter married Isabella Wilson. Her father, Robert Wilson, crossed the plains in 1854, settled in Lane county and later removed to Clackamas county, where he died February 10, 1877. Her mother had come across the plains in 1849. She was a pioneer of Crook county in 1877 and is still living in Prineville. Mr. and Mrs. Poindexter have five children, Ralph Victor, Bernola, Robert Newton, Dot, and Gerome Vernon.

Mr. Poindexter is a member of the A. O. U. W., the W. W., the Degree of Honor, and the Circle. Politically, he is a Democrat. Mr. Poindexter is very widely known throughout the county and is very highly respected. In addition to laboring faithfully to secure the personal success that has crowned his efforts, he has always shown a very marked interest in the welfare of the community and is one of the progressive, public minded men of the country.

JAMES LAWSON, who follows the substantial calling of the agriculturist and farmer, being located some thirteen miles up from Prineville on Mill creek, was born in Kentucky, on August 28, 1828. From worthy ancestors, he inherited a name untarnished and honorable and has kept it in the same way during a long and eventful life. He is one of the sturdy pioneers of the great state of Oregon and has done a lion's share in making it what it is today. Nathan Lawson, the father of our subject, was born in Georgia and came to Kentucky with his parents when a small boy. He followed farming all his life and died in the Blue Grass State, being prominent and wealthy. He married Amy Smith, a native of Virginia, who came with her parents to Kentucky in pioneer days. From the public schools of the Blue Grass State, our subject received his education and grew up on a farm. When of the proper age, he married and moved on west to Missouri. In 1863, he joined the tide of emigration to the Pacific coast and with his wife and two children, crossed the plains with ox teams. After an ordinary trip, they found their way to Linn county and there he purchased land and engaged in farming. In 1870, he decided to try the country east of the Cascades and accordingly sought out a location in Crook county. The same year, he purchased a quarter section of land and has since added another quarter, having now a half section of choice agricultural land. The same is well improved and displays the thrift and sagacity of our subject. In Missouri, Mr. Lawson was a member of the state militia during the Civil War.

In 1849, occurred the marriage of Mr. Lawson and America Calavan, who was born in Kentucky, the daughter of James Calavan, a native of Tennessee. Mr. Lawson and his wife have labored long and hard in this western country and have not only accomplished much for themselves but have inspired many in the same good work. They are estimable people, have many friends and have earned the honorable position which they have occupied in this community.

MICHAEL L. BROWN, of the firm of Meyer and Brown, is a well known stockman of Crook county. The business and holdings of the firm are particularly mentioned in the sketch of Mr. Meyer, which appears in another portion of this work. Michael Brown, was born in Erie county, Pennsylvania, on April 7, 1861. His father, Joseph Brown, was born in Baden, Germany, and came to America when a young man, making settlement in Erie county. There he became a wealthy and prominent citizen. He married Lena Delanter who was born in Baden, Germany, and came to America when a young girl. Our subject received his education in his native county and when twenty years of age, came to Oregon. Since that time, he has been associated with Mr. Meyer and in the early eighties they entered into partnership in the stock business in Crook county. They have continued in the same ever since and are now among the leading stockmen of this county. He started here with no capital except his hands and everything that he now possesses is the result of his wisely bestowed labors.

Mr. Brown is one of the representative men of the community and is respected and esteemed by all.

MRS L. ROSE LAWSON resides some ten miles out from Prineville on the Ochoco, making her home with her children who own considerable property and are occupied in general farming and stock raising. She was born in Marion county, Oregon, the daughter of James Miller, a native of Missouri. He crossed the plains by teams with his father in 1847 and settled where Silverton now stands. Then he went to California, where he received his education and later returned to Silverton, Oregon, and became a prominent and well to do man. His father, Charles Miller, owned the first drug store at Silverton. Mrs. Lawson's mother, Julia (Smith) Miller, was born in Arkansas and came to Oregon with her parents in 1847, being then but two years of age. Mrs. Lawson was educated at Silverton, Oregon, and in 1873, married J. J. C. Lawson. The following year, they came to Crook county where Mr. Lawson taught school and later did stock raising. He spent twenty-five years of his life as an active educator and was very successful in that calling. For two years, he was superintendent of schools for Crook county and was a well known and prominent man. To Mr. and Mrs. Lawson, four children have been born, Una, Douglas, Gilbert and Louise. Mr. and Mrs. Lawson were pioneers in Crook county and have done a great deal to assist in its development.

DAVID F. STEWART is one of the best known men in Prineville, being one of the pioneer business men there, who is still in active business, and having been intimately associated with the interests of the town and county since the early days. He is a miller and is also interested in other lines of business. David F. Stewart was born in West Virginia in 1853. His father, Joseph Stewart, was a native of Ohio. Owing to the disturbance of the schools by the Civil War, our subject was not favored with as good opportunities for education as he desired, still, by improving what he had, he secured a fair education and in 1871, left West Virginia and came to Nebraska. He worked for wages there until 1872, when he engaged in the milling business remaining there until 1876. Then he came to the Willamette valley, where he stayed until December 25, 1879, at which date he came to Prineville. He took charge of the flour mill owned by Breymann and Summerville in which capacity he remained until the following year, when he and Mr. Pet bought the property. Mr. Pet sold later to Mr. Fuller and the firm was known as Fuller & Company. In 1899, Mr. Hodson bought an interest and the firm became Stewart & Company. Upon the death of Mr. Fuller, in 1900, our subject purchased his interest. Since October, 1902, the firm has been known as Stewart & Hodson. Our subject was also engaged in merchandising for a number of years with Mr. Fuller and later he was with Mr. W. A. Booth and at the present time is associated with the firm of Michel & Company. Mr. Stewart was here during the reign of the vigilance committee and was one of the five who organized the Moonshiners, a political organization to put down the terrors of the vigilance committee. They succeeded in bringing in law and order and much credit is due this stalwart and intrepid man who was assisted to establish the law.

In 1875, Mr. Stewart married Miss Plummer, a native of Ohio. To them three children have been born, Grace, James E. and Una E. Mr. Stewart is a member of the A. O. U. W. and the W. W.

Politically, he is a Republican, while in church relations, he and his wife belong to the Baptist denomination. Since 1872, Mr. Stewart has been continuously engaged in the milling business besides the mercantile and he is considered one of the leading and substantial business men of the country. He has won and retains the respect and confidence of all the people and has done a good labor towards building up the country and is a leader in society.

JOHN D. LAFOLLETTE, a stockman residing seven miles north from Prineville, was born in Iowa, in 1858. His father, Jerome B. LaFollette, was born in Indiana and was one of the business men of Crook county, coming to the territory now embraced in the county, in 1871. He took an active part in politics and at one time, was nominated for the legislature, from Wasco county. His death occurred in 1884. John LaFollette, his father, the grandfather of our subject, was born in Kentucky and his brother was the grandfather of Robert LaFollette, who served three terms as governor of Wisconsin, and is now United States senator from that state. Our subject came with his parents to Marion county, in 1862, crossing the plains with horse teams on a six months' journey. They settled near Salem and three years later moved to Linn county, where our subject received his education. In 1871, as stated before, they came east of the Cascades and settled near where Prineville now stands, being among the first pioneers of the section. At that time, the nearest postoffice was The Dalles, distant one hundred and twenty miles. For about five years they were on that location and then sold and moved to Camp Creek taking up the stock business. Five years later the father sold his cattle on Camp creek and moved to Prineville, where he bought a blacksmith shop and a livery barn. In 1881 he disposed of that property and moved to the place where our subject now resides, and there he was killed in the fall of 1884, by the accidental overturning of a load of hay.

Mr. and Mrs. David F. Stewart

John D. La Follette

Thomas H. La Follette

Then our subject engaged in the stock business and has continued thus since, with the exception of four of five years spent in Prineville. He owns a ranch of three hundred acres and fine bands of cattle and horses. The brothers and sisters of our subject are T. H., of the firm of Allen & LaFollette; Edgar A. P., a stockman on Dry creek; Charles F., a lumberman at Highland, California; and Elma L., the wife of Benjamin F. Allen, a miner at Grant's Pass, this state.

In 1903, Mr. LaFollette married Mrs. S. N. Tetherow, a native of Nevada. Her parents were both born in Illinois.

Politically, Mr. LaFollette has always been prominent and influential and in 1900, was chosen county assessor on the Democratic ticket, receiving next to the highest majority of any man elected, which speaks very strongly in his favor since the county is strongly Republican. In 1904 he was re-elected to the same office, receiving then the highest majority of any county officer. He has shown himself a man of sterling worth and ability in both public and private capacities and is highly esteemed throughout the county. During the Indian troubles of 1867 and 1868, our subject's uncle, Captain Charles LaFollette, came across the Cascades with a command and established Camp Polk, on Squaw creek in the Black Butte country. The LaFollette family embraces many men of prominence in various capacities and is a strong and old American family.

THOMAS H. LA FOLLETTE. Crook county has some of the leading and most wealthy stockmen of the state of Oregon. Among this number we mention the gentleman whose name appears above and who has labored here for years and won that success which industry and practical wisdom merit. His residence is in Prineville, where he oversees his interests and he is considered one of the leading citizens of the county.

Thomas H. LaFollette was born in Indiana, on March 1, 1853. His father, Jerome B. LaFollette, was also born in Indiana. And his father, the grandfather of our subject, came to Indiana from Virginia in very early days. In 1862, our subject accompanied his parents across the plains with ox teams to Marion county, Oregon, and in 1871, they came to Crook county and the father took land where Prineville now stands and engaged in the stock business. He became a prominent stockman in this vicinity and is one of the leading citizens of Central Oregon. He married Sophia J. Howard, a native of Tennessee who went with her parents to Indiana in early days. The marriage occurred in Indiana and Mrs. LaFollette accompanied her husband across the plains. The mother is still living in this vicinity, but the father died in 1884. The common schools of Oregon furnished most of the educational training of our subject and about 1871 he commenced operations for himself in what is now Crook county, taking his father's stock on shares. He continued in that business until 1896, when he formed a partnership with B. F. Allen and together they are making a specialty of fine blooded sheep. They now have eight thousand first class Merino sheep, some of them being from the best strains known. They keep constantly on hand young blooded animals that sell for breeding purposes and the firm is well known among the leading sheep men of the northwest. In 1876 Mr. LaFollette married Margaret J. Allen, who was born in Illinois and came to Oregon via the isthmus when ten years of age. The children born to this union are Mrs. Tillie Adamson, Leo B., Guy, and Frank. Mr. and Mrs. LaFollette are among the leading people of the country, have showed those qualities of substantiality and worth which are so indispensable in building up the country and their efforts have always been valuable in bringing about the consummation of movements that are for the benefit and advancement of the community. They are kind, generous people, well liked and have hosts of friends.

ISIDOR B. MEYER, of the firm of Meyer and Brown, stockmen of Crook county, is one of the representative citizens of this part of the state. The headquarters of the firm are twenty-three miles above Post on Crooked river, and there they own one thousand acres of good land, besides a large quantity of stock. Isidor B. Meyer was born in Erie county, Pennsylvania, on April 30, 1859. His father, Dennis M., was born in Elsass, France, and came to Buffalo, New York, when a young man. Soon after, he went to Erie county, Pennsylvania and settled on a farm and became a wealthy and prominent citizen. He married Barbara Kraus, a native of Bavaria, Germany. She had come to the United States with her parents when a girl. Our subject was educated in the district schools of his native county and when twenty-one years of age, came to the Willamette valley. His first occupation was bridge carpenter on the railroad and the next summer was spent in searching over the great state of Oregon for a location. In 1882, he selected a place on Hay Creek, Crook county, and worked for wages for a short time. About that time, he and M. L. Brown formed a partnership and they have wrought together since. At first they bought sheep and later gave their attention to raising cattle which they are engaged in at the present time.

In 1894, Mr. Meyer married Philippina Berz, a native of Germany. She came to America in 1889 and her parents are Jacob and Anna Berz, who are prominent and wealthy people. The father has held many offices of public trust and is a well known man. To Mr. and Mrs. Meyer two children have been born, Edward D., and Marie E.

Mr. Meyer is a member of the A. O. U. W. and is an advocate of good schools and roads and general improvement. The success he has achieved has been due to the industry and sagacity which he has manifested and he well deserves the generous competence he has secured and the enviable position which he holds in the community.

J. J. SMITH is a highly respected citizen of Crook county and at the present time is holding the office of county clerk. He was elected to this office in 1900 on the Democratic ticket and twice since then he has been chosen to the same office, which speaks very highly of Mr. Smith's integrity and ability as the county is Republican by two hundred majority.

J. J. Smith was born in Linn county, Oregon, on October 15, 1854. His father, Hon. I. N. Smith, was a native of Illinois and crossed the plains in 1852. He was a prominent citizen of Oregon and was a member of the territorial legislation in 1853. He followed the practice of law and was one of the first lawyers in the Willamette valley. In 1865 he journeyed to Idaho and practiced in the various courts there, being also clerk of Ada county. He was one of the first attorneys in Boise and later moved to Crook county, where he died in 1886. John Smith, the grandfather of our subject, was one of the pioneers of Linn county and crossed the plains in 1852. He was sheriff of Linn county for ten or twelve years. He was also a member of the territorial legislature in 1861, and was a very prominent man. For twenty years, he held the position of Indian agent at Warm Springs and died while an incumbent of that office. The mother of our subject was Josephine S. (Gray) Smith, a native of Indiana. She crossed the plains with her parents in 1852, being a member of the same train as her husband. Her death occurred in 1880. Our subject received his early education principally in Boise and completed the same in the Episcopalian Academy there. After that he was salesman in several mercantile houses and in 1886, located the Sisters postoffice and opened a mercantile establishment. He continued there until 1897, then came to Prineville. In 1900 he was elected, as stated before, to the office of clerk of the county and has made himself an efficient and capable man in this position.

In 1887 Mr. Smith married Olive A. Forrest, who was born November 17, 1865, near Eugene, Oregon. Her father, Richard Forrest, was one of the pioneers of the Willamette valley and followed stock raising until his death. To our subject and his wife, four children have been born, Newton F., Verna O., Edith, and Paul J. In fraternal affiliations our subject is connected with the A. O. U. W., the K. P. and the Maccabees. He is a man of excellent standing and is very widely known in this part of the state.

GEORGE ROBA, who resides some eight miles north of Paulina, is engaged in the stock business and has achieved a splendid success in his labors in Crook county. It is much to Mr. Roba's credit when we understand that he came here in 1889 and began working for wages. Since that time he has secured a fine estate and a large amount of stock besides other property, which achievement has manifested his ability as a business man and a financier. In the meantime Mr. Roba has so conducted himself that he has won the admiration and respect of all who know him and is a man who has hosts of friends.

George Roba was born in Austria-Hungary, on March 15, 1862. His parents, John and Mary (Badner) Roba, were born in the same place as our subject and were well to do farmers. George received a first-class education in his home place and when nineteen came to Pennsylvania and secured employment in the factories and mines. He wrought thus until 1889 when he decided to try the west. He journeyed on seeking various locations until finally he landed in Crook county, where, as stated before he labored for wages. Shortly after coming he secured a homestead and then soon went into the stock business, starting in a very small way. From that time until the present he has been very successful in his labors and has come to be one of the representative men of the country.

In 1886 Mr. Roba married Miss Mary Sojka, who also was born in Austria-Hungary. She came to America with her parents when a young girl. To Mr. and Mrs. Roba eight children have been born, Joseph, Annie, Mary, George, Ula, Kose, Andrew, and Nellie.

Mr. Roba is a man who has not only been successful in his labors but has shown a first-class industry and has also manifested scholarly ability. He has made a special study of the English language until he reads and writes it with ease and pays considerable attention to reading. He is a respected citizen, a good business man and one of the successful stockraisers of Oregon.

JOHN M. ELLIOTT, one of the industrious and wide awake farmers of Crook county, resides five miles northwest from Prineville and was born in Nebraska, in January, 1866. His father, Kenman Elliott, was a native of Missouri and brought his family across the plains in 1867. Our subject was then an infant one year old and remembers little of the journey. The family settled in Polk county, Oregon, where they remained until 1876, when a move was made to the territory now embraced in Crook county. Settlement was made at Powell Butte where they remained eight years. Then our subject came to his present location and engaged in farming, which he has followed since.

On September 21, 1891, Mr. Elliott married Miss Frances Backus, who was born near Albany, Oregon. Her father, Aaron Backus, crossed the plains to Oregon in 1851. Mr. and Mrs. Elliott have seven children, Harry Morgan, Fred Layton, Rova Leone, Elbert Aaron, Fay, Helen, and Violet.

Fraternally Mr. Elliott is affiliated with the M. W. A. and he and his wife are well known people and have labored faithfully here during the years of their residence.

CHARLES M. LISTER, a farmer and stockman residing about nine miles up the Ochoco in Crook county, is one of the first settlers in the territory now embraced in this county and has labored here since, assiduously and wisely. The result is, he has achieved a splendid success and is now enjoying the fruits of his labors here. He has seen the country grow from the wilderness that prevailed everywhere when he came, to its present prosperous condition and has assisted very materially to bring about the same.

Charles M. Lister was born in Kentucky, on January 22, 1852. His father, Thomas Lister, was born on the Atlantic ocean between Liverpool and New York and spent his boyhood days in Boston. Then he journeyed west to Kentucky, being a young man and there enlisted to fight in the Mexican War. He served all through that struggle with Taylor and at the close of the war, returned to the Blue Grass State. In 1853 he crossed the plains to Oregon, using ox teams for the trip and made settlement in Lane county. His train was the noted one which started on the Meeks cut off and nearly perished in crossing the barren plains of Central Oregon. By almost superhuman effort, however, they finally reached the Cascades and sent three men on over the mountains to secure aid and assist the others along. In due time assistance came and what was left of the train finally made its way into the Willamette valley. The father remained on his donation claim in Lane county until 1870 when he came to what is now Crook county, bought land and engaged in the stock business. This occupied him until his death. He became a very prominent and well to do man in this country and was widely known. The mother of our subject is Mary E. (Geter) Lister, and was born in Kentucky, where she was reared and married. She participated in the labors and successes of her husband and was a true helpmeet to him all through the trying pioneer days. Our subject was educated in Lane county and came with his father in October, 1870, to what is now Crook county. He bought land and engaged in the stock business which he started in a very modest way, having practically no means, but has gradually increased his holdings until he now has twelve hundred acres of choice land and a large number of live stock. He is one of the representative men of the country and is justly entitled to the position which he holds.

Mr. Lister has been twice married. His first wife was Clara Claypool, who died on January 16, 1888. To them were born three children, Clarence, Warren, and Kenneth, deceased. The second wife was Miss Mary Miller, a native of Marion county, Oregon, and one child has been born to this union, Laddas. Mrs. Lister's father, James F. Miler, was a native of Missouri and crossed the plains to Oregon in 1849, accompanying his father, Charles Miller. The Miller's were a very prominent and wealthy family and enjoy an excellent and extended reputation. Mrs. Lister's mother was Julia (Smith) Miller, a native of Arkansas and she crossed the plains with her parents in the early forties. Mr. Lister has every reason to take pride in the success that he has achieved and his example is a worthy one to emulate.

JOSEPH H. CROOKS is one of the pioneers of Crook county and is well known all through this part of the state. At the present time, he is handling a fine butcher business in Prineville, having been occupied in this for the past nine years. He was born in Mercer county, Illinois, on May 6, 1844. Hon. John T. Crooks, his father, crossed the plains from Illinois to the Willamette valley with ox teams in 1848, bringing his family with him. They were six months on the road. He was a prominent man in the valley, being one of the very first settlers, and was a member of the first territorial legislature for two terms. He died in 1898, aged eighty-six. He married D. Everyman, who accompanied her husband in his pioneer journeys. There were no schools in the Willamette valley when our subject arrived there with his parents and he had little opportunity for education except what he could gain by his own personal efforts. He remained on the farm with his father until 1865, when he went to Helena, Montana, where he spent one summer. Returning to his old home, he continued there until 1872, then came to Prineville and engaged in stock raising. He followed that successfully until 1896, when he opened his present business which has occupied him since. He does a good business and stands well in this community.

In 1873 Mr. Crooks married Miss America Warren, who was born in the Willamette valley in 1855. Her father, Andrew J. Warren, crossed the plains from Missouri in 1855 and settled in the Willamette valley. He had married Eliza Spalding, who was born on the Nez Perce reservation in 1832, the daughter of Reverend H. H. Spalding. She was the first white child born west of the Rocky mountains so far as is known. However, there is a rumor that there was a white child born in 1819 in the vicinity of Spokane Falls. Mrs. Warren was captured by the Indians during the Whitman massacre. She is now living at Wenatchee, Washington. To Mr. and Mrs. Crooks five children have been born, Mrs. Robert E. Simpson, Mrs. Granville Clifton, Charles A., John Warren, and Beulah.

THOMAS J. POWELL, one of the representative stockmen of Crook county and a leading citizen, resides four and one-half miles northwest from Prineville. He was born in Missouri, in 1845. His father, John Powell, was born in Tennessee, in 1818, and was a man of great religious zeal, and a deacon in the Baptist church for fifty years. Although a man without education, still he was well taught in the scriptures. His father, Joab Powell, the grandfather of our subject, was a noted preacher, and a very powerful and commanding speaker. In 1852, our subject was brought by his parents across the plains to Linn county and there the father remained until 1870, then removed to Prineville, where he resided until his death in 1891. The mother of our subject was Millie (York) Powell, a native of North Carolina. Her mother lived to be ninety years of age. The family settled on a farm in Linn county and there this son remained until 1872, when he came to the western part of what is now Crook county and settled on Beaver creek, taking a preemption. He also bought state land and engaged in stock raising, handling horses, cattle and sheep. For fifteen years he prosecuted that business and then moved to his present location, where he took a homestead and also bought five hundred acres. He retains his ranch of thirteen hundred acres on Beaver creek, and his estate on McKay creek, an alfalfa field of four hundred acres, the choicest in the entire country. Mr. Powell is one of the leading stockmen of the country, both in numbers owned and in the success he has achieved in the business. He has wrought many years faithfully and has not forgotten during that time to always forward with zest and interest the measures for the benefit and upbuilding of the county. He has hosts of friends and is an influential man. Mr. Powell married Amanda J. Ritter, a native of Missouri. Her father, Jackson Smith, was a pioneer of this state in 1852. Mr. and Mrs. Powell have the following named children: F. A., a stockman in Crook county, who owns four hundred and fifty head of cattle and a large body of land; R. M., a sheepman in the county, who has about sixteen hundred head of sheep, besides a nice farm; Mrs. Lettie A. Miller, living in Manila, Philippine Islands. She went thither alone to meet her husband, Lieutenant Miller, who was in the military service. She was forced to travel three hundred miles from the town of Manila through a country inhabited by vicious savages but yet her pluck was equal to the occasion. Lieutenant Miller died ten days after her arrival.

Politically Mr. Powell is a Republican. He always takes a keen interest in these affairs, as also in educational matters and the general improvement and building up of the country. Thomas J. Powell died April 21, 1905, at his home on McKay creek.

PETER DELORE was born on January 1, 1821, where LaGrande, Oregon, now stands. He now lives sixteen miles north from Suplee and follows farming. He is a venerable man who has had some of the most thrilling experiences possible on the frontier and is well known not only in Crook county but in various other parts of the northwest. He is highly esteemed both for his personal worth and as a pioneer and it is a pleasure on our part to be enabled to give somewhat in detail an account of his life. His father, Joseph Delore, was born in Montreal, Canada, and when yet a young man entered the employ of the Hudson's Bay Company as a hunter and a trapper. He came right on to the west and there were no white people anywhere in this country except the very few connected with this company. His business being hunting and trapping he was forced to adopt the customs and habits of the Indians and lived as they lived. During the time he was trapping he married a Spokane maiden, the daughter of a noted chief in that tribe, and she accompanied him on all his journeys and was a faithful helpmeet to him during his life. Finally during the early forties, he, with several other French people, settled on the prairie in the Willamette valley, now known as French prairie, and they did the first farming in Oregon. Mr. Delore secured an old plowshare and supplied the other parts of wood and with that instrument did the first plowing in the state of Oregon. This was on French prairie in the Willamette valley. He died there at the old place in the valley when he was ninety-seven years of age. Much of the time in his early connections with the Hudson's Bay Company, Mr. Delore lived on meat entirely, with what berries the family could gather. Occasionally they would get a little flour, two or three times a year and after that they were allowed the generous stipend of one sack of flour in a year. The marriage ceremony of Mr. Delore and the Indian maiden named was celebrated according to the custom of her tribe but upon the arrival of Catholic priests in the Willamette valley, they performed the ceremony according to the church. Her name was Lizzett, which was given by the French people, the Indian name not being remembered. Our subject was born on the trail while they were on a trapping expedition and spent his entire early life on these trips. He early learned the art of hunting and trapping but had no schooling as there were no schools in the country. Later he learned from instructions privately but never had the advantage of school training now supplied to the youth. On many, many occasions, they were attacked by hostile Indians and were forced to fight vigorously for their existence. About the hardest battle that Mr. Delore remembers participating in, in those days, occurred on the head waters of the Missouri. In his father's company were about forty Frenchmen besides their wives and children, and twelve lodges of friendly Flathead Indians. The American Fur Trading Company, through jealousy of the Hudson's Bay people, inveigled the Blackfeet Indians to attack the employes of the latter company. The battle commenced at daybreak and our subject's father with his compatriots and all they could muster, fought vigorously against the overpowering numbers of the enemy. During the battle, the elder Delore was shot through the breast, the bullet coming out through his shoulder blades. He was assisted back to his lodge, where Peter, then a young lad, was awaiting him. Immediately upon coming to the lodge the elder Delore instructed his son to bring a sharp knife so that in case the Blackfeet gained the day, he would be prepared for them. While he was thus obeying his father's instructions, the bullets began to pass through the lodge and young Peter was instructed by his father to lie down flat on the ground and place a camp kettle over his head. Thus they remained until the battle was over, the French people gaining the day and slaughtering the Blackfeet greatly. Among the killed was the Blackfeet chief. The Hudson's Bay people lost four of their number and two of the friendly Flathead Indians. Our subject continued with his father, spending the entire time in hunting and trapping. As his mother spoke the Spokane language, he became very familiar with it and from his father learned the French thoroughly. Also he learned to speak the language of every Indian tribe in the northwest so that he could easily converse with them. Not until the white people began to come in from the east, did young Delore learn the English. Finally his father decided to abandon this roving and dangerous life and settled on the prairie now known as French Prairie, as stated previously.

Our subject well remembers the first Catholic priests to come in. They needed some assistance to erect their church and he was detailed by his father to haul the logs. After completing the job the priests paid him in gold coin. He supposed they were buttons and wrapped them up in his handkerchief and brought them home. His father asked him if he had finished the job and was paid. He replied that he had completed the job and the priests gave him some buttons. His father at once asked for the buttons and upon examining them remarked very emphatically to his son, "always bring such buttons home to me." As his father and mother were forced to do, so our subject lived upon meat and berries, occasionally upon Christmas and New Year, getting a taste of flour. Yet they were seldom sick, being vigorous and hearty. For years they had no salt and Peter well remembers when he first saw his father put salt on his meat. He supposed it was good to eat and put a handful in his mouth but found he had no taste for such food. He remembers the first peas that he saw and thought they were beads and was afraid to eat them. For dishes they would hollow out the quaking asp chip. For spoons, they used pieces of buffalo horn. After our subject grew to manhood, he took a donation claim in the Willamette valley near his father but it was contested on the ground that he had Indian blood in him and it was taken away from him. Not being discouraged however, he went to oak grove and settled on and improved another piece of land. He was the first person to settle on and improve land at Oak Grove. In the early eighties, he came east of the mountains and settled in the eastern part of what is now Crook county. He gave his attention to stock raising and farming and now owns two fine farms. He was engaged in all the early Indian wars and was especially active with General Crook against the Paiutes, being a scout for that personage. Mr. Delore has passed a long and eventful career and from the wildness of the uninhabited country he has seen the change to the prosperous and thrifty condition at the present time. He has done well his part in bringing it all about and has also won the esteem and confidence of all who know him.

MONROE HODGES, a farmer and stockman of Crook county, is also one of the earliest pioneers of the northwest and one of the first settlers in what is now Crook county. He resides at the present time in Prineville. His birth occurred in Allen county, Ohio, on December 18, 1833, his parents being Monroe and Catherine (Stanley) Hodges. The father was born in South Carolina, on December 8, 1788, and was a veteran of the War of 1812. He served during that entire struggle and participated in many battles and skirmishes, including the battle of Horseshoe Bend and New Orleans. In 1847 he brought his family across the plains with ox teams and made settlement in the Willamette valley. He died in Benton county, Oregon, in 1877, aged eighty-nine years. The mother was born in the same place as her husband and accompanied him in the pioneer journeys and died in Benton county. Our subject drove an ox team across the plains from Missouri, Platte county, to Benton county, Oregon, being then but fourteen years of age. They were six months making the trip and when they reached their destination, they sought out a claim in the wilderness nine miles north of the present site of Corvallis. The country was wild and almost entirely uninhabited and it was a great undertaking to carve out a home in such a place. Our subject was raised in this locality and completed his education as best he could. He remained with his father on the farm until 1854, then went to the mines at Jacksonville, where he was employed for one year, then returned to the old home place and took up farming, continuing in that until 1871. Then he came to the present site of Prineville and took a homestead. He soon moved his family there and engaged in stock raising. In 1873 he built the first hotel and livery stable in Prineville which he operated for a number of years. In 1876 he made final proof on his property and platted the town of Prineville. One line of his homestead is Main street at the present time and all west from that is built on his former homestead. He still owns forty acres of the original piece. Mr. Hodges has seen the entire growth of Crook county and Prineville and not only has seen it but has materially aided in the unbuilding of the country. He has always been a progressive man and has labored hard and wisely for the good end of making a fine county and a good town. He was here during the reign of the vigilance committee but took no part in such dealings, being a law abiding citizen.

On January 13, 1855, Mr. Hodges married Miss Rhoda Wilson, who was born in Missouri, on March 6, 1837. Her father, Samuel Wilson, was a native of Rockbridge county, Virginia, and was shot by a white man in 1853, while crossing the plains. He had married Sarah Delaney, a native of Kentucky. After her husband was killed, she succeeded in bringing the family across the plains and made settlement in the Willamette valley about nine miles above Corvallis. There she married Mr. Charles Johnson and moved to the vicinity of Corvallis. Her death occurred in Prineville. Mrs. Hodges died July 12, 1898. Mr. and Mrs. Hodges had the following named children, Lewis, Marion, Mrs. Sarah Luckey, Samuel, deceased, Arthur, Mrs. Carrie Wright and Eddie deceased.

Mr. Hodges is a Democrat and always takes a keen interest in the campaigns. He and his wife were members of the Baptist church for forty years and always labored faithfully for the advancement of church interest and education as well as for the promotion of all good enterprises. It is of interest to note that when Mr. Hodges' train was crossing the plains they met the Pawnee Indians at Ft. Laramie and had a pitched battle, defeating the savages. The next battle was on the Snake river with the Snake Indians.

On June 4, 1905, Monroe Hodges died at his home in Prineville. He had lived continuously here since 1871, in which year he filed on a homestead claim, which land is now where Prineville is situated. He was one of Crook county's oldest settlers and was largely instrumental in the establishment and upbuilding of Prineville.

LUTHER D. CLAYPOOL is rightly classed with the early pioneers of this country. His birth occurred in Linn county, Oregon, on September 13, 1858, and he now resides five miles north from Paulina and is devoting his attention to farming and stock raising. D. Wayne Claypool, his father, was born in Hendricks county, Indiana, on October 8, 1834. He came with his parents to the vicinity of St. Joseph, Missouri, when three years of age and in 1846 accompanied them across the plains with ox teams to Marion county, Oregon. Later they moved to Linn county where his father took a donation claim. Wayne Claypool remained there until grown to manhood, when he took land for himself and engaged in farming. D. Wayne Claypool joined the Oregon Volunteers in the Indian War of 1856, being enrolled in the Linn County company, captained by John Suttle, in the regiment commanded by Col. Thomas R. Cornelius. They were out about three or more months and traveled east to the mouth of the Palouse river. Their provisions becoming exhausted, they were forced to live on horse meat for three weeks. In the fall of 1867, in company with William Smith, Captain White, Elisha Barnes, Raymond Burkhart and Calvin Burkhart, Mr. Claypool came to what is now Crook county and made location on Mill creek. They were the first settlers in the country and the only white men who spent the winter of 1867-68 in Crook county. That same winter a band of outlaw Indians camped at what was known as Gesner station on Crooked river, learned of the settlers being there and in the spring made a raid on them. They succeeded in capturing a good portion of the stock belonging to the settlers and getting away with it. The men gathered up the balance and moved to Camp Polk, a deserted government post. Captain White remained to care for the stock while the balance crossed the Cascade mountains on snow shoes to Linn county. In a short time they returned with other settlers and began to establish themselves in this county. During the summer of 1868, the Indians burned the house of Mr. Claypool. It was the headquarters for all the old settlers and their blankets and provisions were there. The fire consumed everything and the men were obliged to make their way to Warm Springs station without any food. However, they were not to be deterred by such things as this and came back again with supplies, the distance being something over fifty miles. The house was rebuilt, other houses were erected and the country began to be opened. Mr. Claypool took the first homestead in what is now Crook county and had the first house built in the county. He was very prominently connected with early settlers of the country and was a broad-minded and sturdy pioneer. He married Louisa Elkins, who was born in Belmont county, Ohio, February 2, 1835. She crossed the plains from Ohio with her people in 1852. Our subject came with his father to Crook county in 1868, being then but ten years of age. He had secured some education in the Willamette valley and finished that important part of life's training here in this county. In 1874 he came to his present location with a bunch of cattle and when he became of age, he went into the cattle business for himself. His present home place has been his headquarters since 1879 and during that time he has been farming and stock raising. He owns five hundred and twenty acres of land and some considerable stock.

In 1892 Mr. Claypool married Helen Douthit, who was born in Linn county, Oregon, on May 12, 1867, and came to Crook county in 1883. Her parents, James O. and Louisa J. (Thompson) Douthit, were born in Indianapolis, Indiana, and Missouri, respectively, and crossed the plains with horses and ox teams in 1853. To Mr. and Mrs. Claypool four children have been born, Roscoe D., Thurman D., Luther E., and Winfield W.

Mr. Claypool is a member of the W. W. and the A. O. U. W. He takes a lively interest in politics and school matters and is a good substantial citizen.

THOMAS H. BRENNAN, a stockman and farmer of Crook county, lives on Grindstone creek, fifteen miles from Suplee. His birth occurred in Ontario, on January 13, 1861, and his parents, John and Mary (Hennesy) Brennan, were natives of Ireland and died when our subject was eight years of age. Being thus early in life thrown on his own resources he has learned a great deal of the hardships connected with the world and knows well what it is to stand against trials and obstacles of life. He began to work for wages when very young and also worked for his board and attended school. In this way he continued until 1880, when he journeyed to Auburn, Indiana, remaining there until the following spring. Then came a trip to San Francisco and he wrought there until 1882. That was the year that he traveled overland to Prineville, Oregon, and began working for wages as he had done in other places. In 1888, he selected a location on the south fork of the John Day river, in Grant county, where he remained until 1902. Then he came to his present location, purchased a ranch and has been devoting himself to cattle raising and farming. He has made a reasonable success and has shown splendid industry here.

On November 28, 1889, Mr. Brennan married Polly Hinkle, who was born in Wasco county, Oregon. Isaac Hinkle, her father, came to Oregon in very early day. He had married Margaret Mozier, a native of the Willamette valley. Mrs. Hinkle's father was one of the early settlers in the state of Oregon. Four children have been born to our subject and his wife, Joseph H., Mary M. E., H. Ruth, and Claude.

PERRY READ, who resides at Culver, in Crook county, was born in Benton county, Oregon, on May 11, 1849. Thomas M. Read, his father, was born in New Hampshire, in 1812 and was reared in Massachusetts. He operated a flat boat on the Mississippi for a number of years, then in 1845, crossed the plains to Oregon. At The Dalles, the people of the train were sent down the river on rafts, while the wagons and teams went over the Cascades. Mr. Read located a donation claim in Benton county, six miles north of the present site of Corvallis. He married Nancy White, a native of Ohio, the wedding occurring on November 10, 1846. She had crossed the plains in the same train as her husband. Our subject was one of the first white children born in Benton county, Oregon, and he received his education from the common schools of that county and there remained until he had grown to manhood. In 1871 he came to the present site of Prineville and was occupied there variously for two years. Then he went to Willow creek, where he took a homestead, preemption and timber culture. He purchased other land until he had all told, eight hundred acres and engaged in general farming and stock raising. He had a fine herd of cattle and a splendid location, but the trying times of 1888-89 broke him up financially as that did many another good man and he was forced to begin life over again, practically. However, his courage and spirit were equal to the occasion and he took hold with a will and soon was on the high road to prosperity. In 1897 Mr. Read came to his present location and purchased four hundred acres of choice land. In 1904, he erected one of the most beautiful houses in the county and all the other improvements on the estate are commensurate therewith. He is a very thrifty man and although he has met with many reverses during his life, he is still favored by the goddess of good fortune and is one of the prosperous men of the county today.

On December 16, 1873, Mr. Read married Hattie E. Montgomery. She was born at Brownville, Oregon, on May 15, 1856. Her father, Kennedy Montgomery, was a native of Iowa and crossed the plains in 1852. He made settlement in Linn county and became one of the prominent men there, being one of the early pioneers. He is now living on Willow creek in this county. He married Ellen Blakely, a native of Tennessee, who crossed the plains in 1846. Her father, James Blakely, was one of the most prominent men of Linn county. He was captain of a company in the Cayuse War and was a member of the state legislature. At the present time, he is ninety-one years of age, is very active and retains all his faculties. He raised a family of ten children all of whom are prominent and substantial people. The boys take a leading part in politics and James M. is at present sheriff of Wallowa county, Oregon; William is ex-sheriff of Umatilla county. To our subject and his wife, the following named children have been born: Lilly May, on May 21, 1875; and Pearl and Perry, twins, on January 15, 1882; Lilly is a graduate of the agricultural college at Corvallis and is now engaged in teaching. Mr. Read has two sisters and three brothers, Thressa, born in Benton county, Oregon, in 1847, being one of the first white children born there, and being now deceased; Clara, born in 1851; Columbia, Sumner, and Charles.

Mr. Read is a member of the A. O. U. W. and the Artisans. He has always taken a very active part in building up the country and in promoting every enterprise for the public good. He is always found ready for any enterprise that is worthy and is known as a progressive, public minded and substantial man.

MRS. MARTHA J. SPALDING WIGLE, who lives at Prineville, Oregon, was born at Lapwai agency, twelve miles above Lewiston, Idaho, on March 20, 1845. She was educated at Forest Grove, Oregon, then moved to Walla Walla, where she married William Wigle in 1859. Soon after their marriage, they journeyed to eastern Oregon where Mr. Wigle engaged in the stock business. In 1886, he came to Prineville and here they have resided since and are known as substantial and good people.

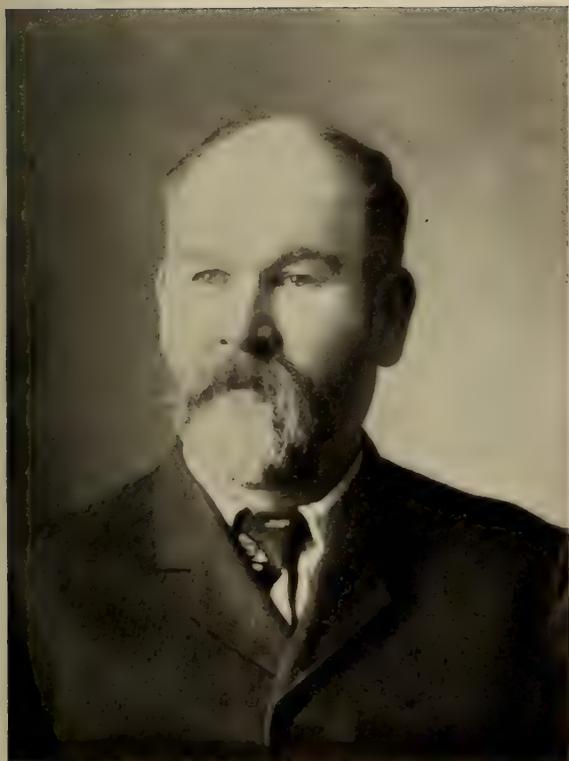

Mrs. Wigle's father was the well known missionary, Reverend H. H. Spalding. This historical character is one of the best known men in the northwest and certainly did a work the like of which there are few to compare in the United States. It is quite in place that a brief review of his life should be embodied in this article. H. H. Spalding was born in Steuben county, New York, on November 26, 1803. He received a college education and then graduated from Lane Theological seminary, being ordained a minister in the same year, 1835. He was also appointed that year as missionary of the Nez Perce Indians by the American board. In 1833 he had married Eliza Hart of Oneida county, New York, and in 1836 together they started on their journey to the then trackless west. It required no small amount of courage for a man to take his wife and leave civilization and travel over unbroken wilds and mountains for two thousand miles to a land amid savages, where there was no assurance of any welcome or freedom from hostilities. The Reverend H. H. Spalding and his lovely wife were not Christians in name only but Christians in reality and they could trust the God who had brought them from darkness to light to guide their steps through the desert and across the mountains and even protect them amid the savages to whom they were longing to bring the precious gospel. It would give us great pleasure were more details furnished both of this trip and of the life they spent afterwards but it is necessary to content ourselves with what has been furnished. In due time, the little party arrived at their destination and found the Nez Perce Indians. They selected a proper place to settle and erected the rude buildings necessary for their shelter and began the task of teaching the Indians and preaching to them the gospel. As early as 1839, so vigorously did Mr. Spalding prosecute his work, he succeeded in establishing a printing press, the first on the entire Pacific coast. This press is now the property of the historical society at Portland, Oregon. He translated portions of the New Testament into the Nez Perce language and printed it for distribution among the Indians who were taught to read. He also taught the Indians to farm and before the Whitman massacre they had progressed so well that they were producing twenty thousand bushels of grain annually. He brought in sheep, cattle, and horses and taught the Indians how to raise them. While he was engaged in these labors, his wife would gather the Indians, sometimes her school would amount to five hundred in number, and teach them to spin and weave. Thus they labored on until 1845. Their station was some one hundred and twenty-five miles east of the ill fated Whitman station and at that time one of Mrs. Wigle's sisters was at the Whitman mission. Mr. Spalding was on the journey to the Whitman mission to take his daughter home from her visit and just before he reached it he was met by a Catholic priest who was fleeing and who informed him of the awful tragedy and urged him to flee for his life. It seemed best for him to return to his family at Lapwai as he was not sure but that his own Indians would be on the war path as well. What trial of heart and terrible suffering this good man passed through as he hurried back over the one hundred miles and more to his loved ones we are not told but the God who had guided him safely thus far protected him and his and although the excitement ran so high that he was even afraid to show himself to his own Indians, still he was enabled to get his family and make his way in safety to the Willamette valley. Colonel Olney, one of the Hudson Bay people, learned that Miss Spalding, who was attending school at the Whitman mission, had not been killed but was held captive with others by the Indians. He immediately entered into negotiations for her release and advanced the money necessary to secure it. So that three weeks after she was captured, her parents had the satisfaction of having their beloved daughter with them and the family circle unbroken. This young lady is now Mrs. Eliza Warren and lives at Chelan, Washington. The work of H. H. Spalding and his faithful wife was not without fruit as is evidenced among the Nez Perce Indians to this day. He is a character well known in history and his life has been written many times. Suffice it to say that to such men as he and to such brave women as his wife the people who dwell in this favored country now, as well as the savages to whom they brought the good things of civilization and the precious gospel of the grace of God, owe a debt of gratitude which may never be fully paid.

Mr. and Mrs. Wigle are parents of five children, named as follows: John H., born in Linn county, September 9, 1861; Ida, deceased, born in 1863; Minnie L., born in Linn county, July 15, 1865; Albert Lee, born June 10, 1868; Eliza L., born May 2, 1875, in Umatilla county.

GEORGE W. BARNES, a leading attorney of Prineville, is also one of the earliest pioneers of this part of Oregon. He was born in Andrew county, Missouri, on March 10, 1849. His father, Elisha Barnes, was born in Kentucky and was one of the forty-niners crossing the plains to California. After two years spent there mining, he returned to Missouri and then in 1852, he brought his family back west across the plains, our subject being then but three years of age. In the fall of 1860 he settled in Linn county, where he remained until the fall of 1866, when with five others, he came to the Ochoco and spent two years. Then he returned to the Willamette valley and moved his family to a place about three miles distant from the present site of Prineville. There he remained until 1898, when he returned to Missouri and died there in the same year. Our subject's mother, Susannah T. (Glenn) Barnes, was born in Missouri and is now living in Prineville. George W., as stated above, came across the plains in 1852 and received his early education in the schools of Linn county. In 1867, he joined his father in Western Oregon and with him took up the stock business. There were no range difficulties here at that time and they were monarchs of all they surveyed which made the stock business a splendid occupation. When our subject became of age he took a homestead two and one-half miles distant from the present site of Prineville and engaged in farming. For seven years he conducted that occupation, then sold out and removed to Prineville, where he prosecuted further, the study of law, which he had been taking up for some time previous. In 1880 he was admitted to the bar and at once began the practice of his profession. From that time, until the present period of twenty-five years, he has steadily attended to this occupation and has won many distinct and brilliant triumphs. Mr. Barnes has seen the entire development of the country, and remembers the first house built in Prineville, and has seen the growth and improvement of everything that makes the wealth of Crook county today. He was the first attorney in Prineville and has made an indelible mark in the history of this county. He has assisted very materially in all the forward enterprises and is a man whose labor and life speak much. Mr. Barnes well remembers the vigilance committee of the early days and is as intimately connected with the history of the country as perhaps any man here today. Being one of the earliest pioneers and a leading man, he stands in a position to view the progress of the years and the achievement of his own life with a satisfaction at the gratifying results in both cases.

In 1870 Mr. Barnes married Miss Ginevra Marks, a native of Linn county, Oregon, her father, William Marks, being one of the early pioneers of that county. To this union the following named children have been born: Mrs. Mattie Nickelsen of Hood river, Mrs. Mary Miller of Brandon, Mrs. Susie Helms of this county, widow, Bert, Arthur and Valdie.

Mr. Barnes is a strong Democrat and takes a keen interest in political matters. He is well known through the country as a man of influence and worth and is one of the leading professional men of this part of the state.

W. R. McFARLAND, an educator, a civil engineer and one of the representative men of his county, is now residing at Prineville. He was born in Johnson county, Missouri, in 1848.

His father, William Alexander McFarland, was a major in the United States army. Our subject was well educated in Missouri and there kept his residence until 1875, when he came to the Willamette valley. Settlement was made in Yamhill county and he gave his attention to teaching school. He taught in Eugene and various other places of the valley until 1886, when he removed to Canyon City and taught there at John Day, in Prairie City and at other parts of Grant county. In 1896 Mr. McFarland settled on a farm in the Ochoco, where he resided three years. Then he taught at the Prineville school and has held various county offices, among them county superintendent of schools, surveyor, assessor and so forth. In 1864 Mr. McFarland took a trip to Colorado and there enlisted in the First Colorado Cavalry and saw much hard service in fighting the Indians. It was 1898 that he took up his permanent residence in Prineville and in addition to holding the positions above mentioned he has maintained an office for civil engineering and has done much in that class of work. He is very skillful in the profession and is a man whose reliability and integrity are well known.

In 1874 Mr. McFarland married Lucy Jane Masterson, who was born in Lane county, Oregon. Her father, William Masterson, was a pioneer of Oregon. The children born to this union are Etta, Blanche, deceased, Pearl, William A., Walter and Edward.

Mr. McFarland is a member of the I. O. O. F. and the Maccabees, while he and his wife both belong to the Methodist church. Politically, he is a life-long Democrat and is always able to give good reasons for his position. He is an aggressive, capable man of good standing, who has won and retains the friendship of many people.

CHARLES A. GRAVES, who is the efficient surveyor of Crook county, is also a pioneer of this portion of Oregon, having come to Crook county in 1881. He was born in Benton county, Oregon, on July 16, 1855, the son of James and Melvina (Pyburn) Graves. The father was born in Ohio and in his youthful days learned the stone mason's and the carpenter's trades. In 1852, the year of the terrible cholera ravages, he crossed the plains with ox teams to the Willamette valley. He followed his trades in various portions of the valley and became a very prominent and well to do man. He and his wife are now living at Hillsdale, Oregon. The mother of our subject was born near Independence, Missouri, and was left an orphan at an early age. In 1852 she accompanied some relatives across the plains and located at Corvallis, Oregon. Our subject was educated in the common schools of his native county and in the Agricultural College, at Corvallis, and made a practical study of surveying and civil engineering. In 1902 he located a homestead in the Powell Butte country. In 1886 he was elected county surveyor of Crook county and is now serving his sixth term in this office. He has demonstrated his ability to cope with the intricate problems of this important branch of county work to the entire satisfaction of his constituency, while also he has manifested himself a progressive citizen, a good man and a generous and faithful friend.

In 1889 Mr. Graves married Miss Monia Lewis, a native of California. She came to Oregon with her parents when a child. Frank Lewis, her father, who was born in New York, was a pioneer to Wisconsin and then to California in 1850. For years he was mining in the Golden State. His mother was, in maiden life, a Miss Clark and her father, Abraham Clark, was a signer of the Declaration of Independence. The Clarks were a very early colonial family and prominent in those pioneer days.

Our subject is a member of the A. O. U. W. and is deeply interested in everything for the welfare of his country. When living in the Willamette valley, his father's first neighbors were M. H. Bell, D. E. Templeton, and Joseph Hinkle, with others who are now residents of Prineville, Oregon. Mr. Graves has shown himself a genuine pioneer and has done a great deal for the advancement and building up of Crook county.

WILLIAM ADAMS is to be numbered with the stockmen of Crook county and has done faithfully the work of the pioneer in this place. He now resides in Prineville. His birth occurred in Missouri, in 1838 and his father, Elijah Adams, was a native of Kentucky. While William was very young the father died and so he remained with his mother until twenty years of age, receiving his education in the public schools. In 1859, being strongly attacked by western fever, he determined to try mining and accordingly went to Colorado during the Pike's Peak excitement. For three years he freighted and mined then came to Idaho and spent three years more in mining. After that he went to the Willamette valley, married and settled on a farm. That was his home until 1871, when he came to Beaver creek in what is now Crook county. He settled on school land and took up cattle raising. In 1878, during the time of the Indian troubles, he was forced to flee with the other settlers and sought safety for his family near Prineville and one year later settled on McKay creek. Some time thereafter he sold his farm to Thomas Powell then moved to a place eight miles southeast of Prineville. There he engaged in the sheep business and has followed the same steadily since. He owns an estate of eight hundred acres and also a residence in Prineville, where he now lives.

In 1867, in Lane county, Mr. Adams married Nancy A. Maupin, who was born in 1850. She died in 1901. Her father, Boyd Maupin, was a pioneer to Lane county in 1853. To Mr. and Mrs. Adams the following named children have been born: R. B.; George and John, in Alaska; William, deceased; Mrs. Manda Boegli, in Prineville; Mrs. S. W. Yancey; Silas, a sheepman in this county; Charles; Oliver; and Effie.

Mr. Adams and his wife are members of the Christian church and he is one of the staunch pioneers and substantial citizens of this county. During his long career here, Mr. Adams has always labored for the spreading of the gospel, has taken a keen interest in forwarding educational matters and is allied with everything that is for the benefit and upbuilding of the country.

CHARLES WILLIAM PALMEHN, who is one of the pioneers of the Pacific coast, now resides one mile west from Grizzly. He was born in Washington county, Minnesota, on March 2, 1858, the son of Peter and Helen Christeen (Lund) Palmehn. In 1866, the family left Minnesota and came via the Isthmus to Polk county, where the father bought an interest in a sawmill. He operated the same until his death and our subject received his education at the home place in Polk county. Until 1881 he remained there, then came to Eastern Oregon, taking a homestead where Madras now stands. He and his brother are engaged in the sheep business there and as they prospered, bought more land until they owned the entire basin. In 1892 they bought the place where our subject now resides, which consists of four hundred acres. Mr. Palmehn gives his attention to general farming and also raises stock. He has shown industry and thrift in this occupation and is reaping a good reward for his labors. He has one brother, John, and one half brother, Walter Waymire. The latter lives in Whitman county, Washington.

He also has the following sisters and half sisters: Mrs. F. J. Waymire, in Wilcox, Washington; Mrs. Clark Randall, Pulman, Washington; Mrs. Abram Robinson, Waverly, Washington; Mrs. J. A. Waymire, Mt. Idaho; and Mrs. Clide Hale. The last named one is the half sister.

Mr. Palmehn's father came from Northern Sweden in 1846, or thereabouts, and worked in a sawmill somewhere on Lake Michigan until he became head sawyer. In 1856 he purchased a piece of land in Minnesota. His death occurred in 1873, eight miles south from Dallas, Oregon. The mother came with her parents from Southern Sweden about 1845 and settled in Illinois. A few years later they removed to Minnesota and there she married Mr. Palmehn. After his death she married Mr. Waymire, and is now dwelling at Wilcox, Washington.

Our subject went to work in a sash, door and furniture factory and continued at that business until 1879. Then he tried farming and in 1880 he was teamster for the surveying party that was running the narrow gauge in the Willamette valley.

FRANCIS FOREST, a representative stockman of Crook county, residing twelve miles northwest from Prineville, was born in Polk county, Oregon, in 1857. Mose L. Forest was his father; his father, the grandfather of our subject, was one of the early pioneers of Oregon and from him the well known town of Forest Grove was named. Francis was reared and educated in Polk county until completing the common schools, then he took a course in the Columbia Business College at Portland. In 1876 he came to what is now Crook county and took up the sheep business. Later he sold his sheep and bought cattle and from that time until the present has steadily pursued the occupation of raising cattle. However, during this time Mr. Forest was engaged some in the mercantile business at Forest, Crook county. At the present time he owns a fine estate of twelve hundred acres of good land and one hundred and forty head of well bred cattle. He devotes his attention both to stock raising and general farming, and is considered one of the successful and substantial men of the county.

In 1885 Mr. Forest married Rebecca M. Rodman, who was born in Iowa, the daughter of William Rodman. Four children are the fruit of this union, Celia, Earl, Mark and Florence.

In political matters Mr. Forest is a strong Republican. He always takes an interest in the campaigns, keeps himself well posted in the questions of the day and thoroughly abreast of the times. He is a man of excellent standing and is to be classed with the builders of Crook county.

WILLIAM J. SCHMIDT, one of the leading stockmen of Crook county, resides eight miles east of Howard. He was born in Pennsylvania in 1850, the son of Peter Schmidt, a native of Germany. He was raised and educated in his native place and in 1871 went to Pittsburg and served his time at the machinist's trade. Then he followed steamboating on the Mississippi river, returning occasionally to his old home in Pennsylvania until 1878, when he journeyed west to San Francisco. For five years he was engaged there in the Union Iron Works, then traveled about some until October, 1885, when he located his present place. He took a homestead and resided there a short time, then being dissatisfied he left the country and was occupied for wages in various portions of the west. In 1892 he returned to his present location and took up stock raising. He started in a very modest way, having one horse and two cows, but Mr. Schmidt was not a man to either to despise the day of small things nor become discouraged at the paucity of his holdings. He carefully took up the good work of stock raising with the intention to succeed and with such wisdom and industry did he prosecute the calling that he has won splendid success. He now owns three hundred and fifty head of cattle, forty head of horses and a ranch consisting of sixteen hundred acres of good land. Mr. Schmidt is achieving success in which he may well take pride and which has stimulated many others to good efforts in this country.

In 1900 Mr. Schmidt married Sarah Lowrey, who was born in the east. They have four children, Ira, Alice, Mary and Glennie.

Mr. Schmidt is a member of the Masonic order and is a man of good standing and rated as one of the substantial property owners of the county.

JOHN T. FAULKNER, who has for twenty-three years been the efficient and faithful postmaster at Paulina, where also he handles a fine mercantile business, is one of the leading citizens of Crook county. In addition to the affairs mentioned, he oversees a farm of five hundred acres and a fine stock business. He was born in Ohio on January 8, 1846, the son of Thomas J. and Mary M. (Keener) Faulkner, natives of New York and Ohio respectively. The father came to Ohio as a pioneer and in 1850 started from that country with ox teams to the Pacific coast. He arrived in Marion county, Oregon, in 1851 and soon thereafter moved to Linn county, where he took a donation claim eight miles southeast of Albany. That was his home until his death and he was known far and near as a substantial and good man. Our subject was educated in Linn county and after growing to manhood he engaged in farming. It was November 21, 1877, when he came to the territory now embraced in Crook county, making settlement near Warm Springs. In 1881 he came to his present location and took a homestead. He has since purchased land until his estate is of the dimensions mentioned above. In the spring of 1878 Mr. Faulkner with the other settlers of the country, was obliged to flee from the Indians, who were on the war path, and the property that the settlers left behind was confiscated by the savages. He has labored faithfully during all the intervening years from the time of settlement until the present and he has accomplished a great deal for the upbuilding of the country. He knows well the hardships of the pioneer and the arduous labors and dangers incident to such life, having experienced them all. He is to be classed with the worthy pioneers of Oregon and is known as a splendid business man and an excellent neighbor.

In 1871 Mr. Faulkner married Charity E. Foster, who was born in Marion county, Oregon, the daughter of Henry Foster, a pioneer to Oregon in 1842. Three children have been born to this marriage, Orla B., Malissa A. and Henry J. Mr. Faulkner has always taken a deep interest in educational matters and in everything that tends for the improvement and building up of the country, and is liberal in the support of every public institution. He is a member of the A. O. U. W., and is considered one of the representative men of the country.

WILLIAM SMITH. No record could be written of the pioneers of western Oregon that could claim any measure of completeness if it did not contain the name of the gentleman mentioned above. He is well known as the earliest pioneer of the country now embraced in Crook county and has been here through all the history making epochs since before the county organization. In all this he has taken the part of the good citizen and is certainly deserving of much credit for what he has done. Mr. Smith's home is some twelve miles up from Prineville on Mill creek. He was born in England, the son of James and Catherine (Baxter) Smith, both natives of the same country. After receiving his education in his native place he came to America in 1850 and spent one year in New York, then he went to Ohio and worked on a farm for wages for two years. The next move was to Rock Island, Illinois, and then with mule teams he crossed the plains in 1864 to Stockton, California. He wrought for wages for some time there and in the spring of 1865 came to Linn county, Oregon. In the fall of the same year he journeyed east of the Cascades to Camp Polk, a military post in what is now Crook county. He remained there until 1866, when he returned to the Willamette valley and stayed one summer. In 1867 Mr. Smith came east of the mountains again, took land by squatter's right and built the house where he is now located. There were no settlers here then and he, as far as we have any record, is the first permanent settler in Crook county. The land was all unsurveyed and the wilderness uninhabited, save by the savages and the wild beasts. Warm Springs Post, a small military station some fifty miles away, was the nearest white man's abode and The Dalles, distant one hundred and thirty miles, was the nearest postoffice. Mr. Smith had to devise all sorts of plans to maintain himself in this new country and it was with difficulty that he secured the necessities of life. His flour had to be made in a coffee mill and it was no small task to raise wheat, cut it with a sickle, thresh it with a flail, winnow it by the breezes of heaven and thus gain bread for his subsistence. However, despite the adversities and the exceeding hard work that was necessary to gain all this, Mr. Smith continued. In the spring of 1868 six settlers located in this vicinity where Mr. Smith was residing. The Indians came in and stole their work oxen and one horse and the entire settlement buried their provisions and left the country. The next spring, however, Mr. Smith returned and since that time has made his home here. His is the oldest house in the country and his place is one of the abiding land marks of this part of Oregon.

KNOX HUSTON is a well known pioneer of what is now Crook county and resides at Prineville. He was born in Washington county, Indiana, on March 10, 1839. His father, Samuel B. Huston, was a native of Kentucky and moved to Indiana in 1825, being one of the early settlers of Washington county, that state. He followed farming and distilling and was a substantial and prominent citizen and was recruiting officer during the Mexican War. Margaret (Kennedy) Huston, our subject's mother, was born where Louisville now stands, on December 31, 1799, and came from a prominent and wealthy family. Six of her uncles were in the Battle of the Thames. The Kennedys were a strong race of hardy pioneers and Mrs. Huston's father came from Pennsylvania to Kentucky among the very early settlers in that country. Being strong
